Bluewall workers would like the Lombardi's to know they are welcome anytime, once the bar is open, but only if the Chancellor can learn to hold his liquor.

"We would love to allow him to come back," Bluewall manager Ivanna Sandwich said. "We have his glasses safely waiting for him. We only hope he can learn to overcome his obvious problem with the bottle."

Lombardi has been a key proponent of the Bluewall bar, which opens on Friday. Earlier in the week, Bulger, Lombardi, Interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Jo-Anne Vanin, and Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney made an unusual public pact together. They said they planned on attending opening night at the Bluewall bar and playing flipcup with any of interested students. Lombardi and Bulger also promised to take on any challengers in the card game "asshole."

Lombardi complimented the SGA last month for keeping a slush fund this semester, saying that it was OK with him as long as half of the $40,000 in hidden funds went to beer pong tables for the bar once it opens.

The SGA was not available for comment.

Sex dormitory to be added in fall

By THE RUTHLESS SQUADRON
ERRATIC SEX ADDICTS

UMass Housing Services announced yesterday its plans for the addition of a Sex Dormitory for the 2003-2004 school year. The move comes in direct response to a recent study by Health Services, which proved sexual intercourse on campus is at an all-time low.

"Crabs. The clap. Herpes. Syphilis. They're scared," says Nurse Klatoruz, a 40-year Health Services veteran, who claims to have diagnosed 783 cases of gonorrhea in her time here. "Sex has changed since I stopped riding cock."

Despite the drastic increase of warts, puss, and intense genital scratching on campus, UMass students will surely fuck more next year. At press time, Housing Services reported that 10,000 students had already requested rooms in the sex dorm.

"The response has been overwhelming," says Frederick Johnson, director of student placement at Housing Services. "We knew it'd be a popular proposal, but we didn't think it'd be this great. It's too bad we only have room for 3,000."

But according to Johnson, picking those lucky students won't be as difficult as it seems. The sex Dorm, dohnson promises, will open, "with a bang. Pun intended."

"No virgins will be allowed in the sex dorm," says Johnson, who lost his virginity to a pregnant Hungarian prostitute at the age of 13. "You wouldn't believe how many students haven't caught a bone on this campus. It disgusts me, actually. I bet only half of our applicants have had sex before."

It's an interesting, but valid conclusion. According to the latest Health Services study, the person sitting (or standing) next to you right now hasn't had sex. That person will not be allowed into the sex dorm.

UMass student and sex expert, Dan McPhee – the mastermind who runs the nationally acclaimed Scandal of the Week (updated weekly in his profile (Ohdocta12 on AOL Instant Messenger), says the campus' relative lack of vagina-poking is the blasted result of the abnormally cold winter and the fact that the Bush Administration shows no signs of sexual deviance, which has effected society as a whole. But that's not all.

"This tragic reality also has a lot to do with the combination of Republican propaganda and students who don't drink," says McPhee, a non-virgin. "These students, who deny the pleasures of the flesh, have quite simply succumbed to the advertisements of special interest groups who will say that sex and alcohol have negative consequences. It's a shame, a true shame."

Still, McPhee backs Housing Services' decision to exclude virgins from the sex dorm.

"We have to view the sex dorm in the same light as we do with any other specialized dorm area," says McPhee, who has probably fucked a woman you know. "Just as we wouldn't want Fankie the Failure living in honors housing, we wouldn't want Irene Ironpanties in an environment devoted to harboring sex."

But McPhee wonders how Housing Service will be able to tell who has fucked, and who is a schmuck. He doesn't even know how many virgins

Continued on page A2

Bush proposes pistol duel for Cheney and Hussein

By RENE GONZALES
COLLEGIAN BALLBUSTER

WASHINGTON, D.C.– In a change of events, President George W. Bush promised to call off the war with Iraq yesterday, as long as Saddam Hussein meets Vice President Dick Cheney at high noon in Kuwait City for a pistol duel.

"Regardless of how many things we seem to blow up, we just can't seem to find Saddam," Bush said from a bar in the downtown area of Washington yesterday. "I've had enough. We're flying Dicky in. He had the quickest gun in the west back in the day."

Bush advisors called the strategy smart, saying Cheney is more spry than he may appear.

"Don't let those 17 heart attacks fool you," Secretary of State Colin Powell said. "That man is a tiger."

Bush appears to have had enough of Saddam.

"The man is obnoxious," Bush said, choking back beer and pretzels. "He wears stupid hats and has a stupid mustache. I hate him!"

Democrats were split on the decision. Democratic presidential hopeful and Massachusetts Senator John Kerry said the plan lacks precision.

"Did they forget the last time Dicky used a gun he was still packing a musket?" Kerry asked.

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer revealed that Cheney's relative disappearance from the political scene in the past few months has occurred because he has been undergoing vigorous training for his mission and meeting with Saddam.

"The dude used to look like Uncle Fester," Fleisher said yesterday. "He's been whipped into shape with a combination of rodeo riding and mud wrestling in his home state of Wyoming. We know he's ready. He's become a babe magnet. The Bush daughters, dirty hoes that they are, can't keep their hands off of him."

Gen. Tommy Franks, leaders of ground forces in Iraq, said Cheney would be a welcome addition to his troops.

"I don't care how pasty he looks, if Bush says he's ready, he must be ready," Franks said. "Operation Kuwait City O.K. Corral is now in effect. Let's give this bad boy a roll."

Iraqi Defense Minister Sultan Hashim Ahmed said he was unsure if Saddam would consent to the duel.

"Are you shittin' me?" he said. "We haven't seen the asshole in weeks. We've been considering getting a Saddam signal like the Bat signal you evil Americans have in your comic books. Maybe them he'll come out of his freakin' hole."

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE A5
ARTS & LIVING PAGE A6
SPORTS PAGE A8
COMICS PAGE A7
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE A7

INVADING CANADA
A WAR FOR SYRUP IS WRONG
PAGE A5

DYLAN, NELSON & CASH
HEADLINING ANNUAL FOGEY FEST
PAGE A6

OLD GUYS SUIT UP
CHANCELLOR, ATHELTIC DIRECTOR WILL PLAY
PAGE A8

Police dog Max speaks out on new job

GRANCICA LOVECRAFTIEV CHIMUNE

Police dog Max says he will smoke up with any students interested.

By MICHAEL JACKSON
COLLEGIAN BABYSWAYER

One of the most celebrated employees to join the University of Massachusetts Police Department in years has a bone to pick.

In an exclusive, UMPD drug-sniffing dog Max sat down with The Collegian recently and explained his feelings for his new job.

"I'd like to make this perfectly clear to everyone:" Max said. "I've been given a bad rap for being a drug-sniffing dog, and I don't like it. The SGA is a bunch of idiots. I'd smoke up with any of you! GAWDAMN! I love weed!"

Max feels like he has been rushed into service at too young of an age.

"I'm not ready for this, and quite frankly, it's bullshit," he said. "The cops can call me whatever they want to. They can dress me up with my own shiny little badge all they want. I haven't even taken the job yet and I already want a break."

"I'm still young," he said. "I want to piss on hydrants and chase squirrels. I want to chew on houseslippers until I deserve a rolled-up newspaper upside the dome piece. I want to sniff the ass of every single cute girly dog out there. I'm not ready for this."

Max admits that he will have great difficulties if and when he is called in for a drug bust.

"Dude, if you toss me in a dorm room with several pounds of weed and thousands in cash, it's gonna freak me out," he said. "If they expect me to sniff all that out for them and then not even give me an ounce for an evening with the girly pooch, they've got another thing coming. I earned that shit."

Max blames the department for turning him into the raving party animal that he has become.

"Back when I was a puppy, I had no interest in it," he said. "You just had to give me a Frisbee or something. Think about it though, I've been sniffing at drugs in training for months now. I know the stuff, I breathe the stuff, I taste the stuff. Now I like the stuff. Get me a bong and a scooby snack and I'm set for life. Screw Snoop Dogg, I'm the real Doggfather around here!"

Max said it's frustrating to be working in a law enforcement role when there is so much partying he could be doing.

"It ticks me off," Max said. "Back at the police academy, me and some of the other dogs used to head out at night and get wrecked on 40s of Red Dog. There's just way too much responsibility for me here. Sometimes a dog has got to just let loose and bark at the moon, you know what I mean?"

For now, Max is content to give the job a try, but isn't hopeful. He said that if they expect him to be sniffing out the drug dealers on campus, he had better see a huge raise within one calendar year of taking to the streets.

"I'll tell you straight out, right now – milkbones and bellyrubs are only going to get the chief so far," he said. "If they want to hang on to someone with the kind of talent that I have, then they better realize I'm worth some serious money. They better be hookin' me up with some fly bitches and some mad cheeba, yo."

Lady Liberty: 'Back to France'

United States adding Rumsfeld head to statue

By Denver
The Daily Collegian

Congress passed a bill yesterday calling for an alteration to the Statue of Liberty and its dismantled pieces returned to France.

Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert said the head of Lady Liberty will be replaced with a replica of the head of Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld and then will be transported overseas back to France.

"Lady Liberty no longer represents the relationship between the United States and France, and we hate France anyway," Hastert said. "They are a bunch of pants-crying, tight jean wearing, cheesiest and snotty accent speaking, B.O. ridden hypocrites. They are the cowards of Europe, and frankly, Rumsfeld is the man. He deserves a statue made of his."

A law group formed by right wing activist Pat Buchanan pushed for this measure. The group, the French Defamation League, called not only for the removal of the Statue of Liberty, Paris L'Soeul, but for an invasion of France following the War in Iraq.

"France people have a bunch of cowards up there," Buchanan said. "And we decided that the French aren't any scared white anymore because of their inability to like keep public subway bathrooms."

How Congress was echoed among republican leaders. In a press conference held last night President George W. Bush said it would make a bold statement to the rest of the world regarding what might happen to them if they speak out against the United States.

"Ladies and Gentlemen, Spain is kissing us in the back by refusing their support in the conquering, uhhh, I mean the liberation of Iraq," Bush said. "And may God continue to bless America."

Press Secretary Ari Fleischer then quitely corrected the president.

"France, that's right. Those dirty bastards are still giving us trouble? Do they remember World War II? Do they realize that Paris would be a kitty litter box run by Nazis if we hadn't stepped in and saved their fondue worshipping asses? What about every time the Franc was deemed more worthless than a hooker in Utah? Fuck France. They're next," Bush said in a rare display of emotion.

Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld has already begun outlining a plan for the de-truction of France following the war in the Middle East.

"I think beating France will be so much easier than Iraq. Saddam Hussein could kick the shit out of Jaques Chirac," Rumsfeld said.

"French people are too lazy and arrogant to defend their own country. They're too busy chewing on caviar, smoking cigarettes and not shaving or taking showers. We wouldn't see any resistance at all. The only thing that might work in their defense is the horrible collective body odor of the French. Troops would go in with full gas protection gear."

Tom Blair said he fully supports these initiatives in the dehumanization of France and looks forward to a possible invasion of the rank and worthless country after the conclusion of Operation Iraqi Freedom. After crawling out from under Donald Rumsfeld's face peers out from the newly remodled Statue of Liberty.

President Bush's desk in the Oval Office, Blair spoke about relations with France.

"Those bastards will finally learn that the Chunnel is for the English people, not the French, and they will stop traveling the train and spoiling our land. Bastards," he said while sipping Earl Grey Tea and eating a meat pie.

"We could do so many things with the waste of space that is France now like turn it into a giant parking lot, or just simply expand Euro Disney," Blair added.

Mayor of New York, Michael Bloomberg, came out in support of returning Lady Liberty to France, as he believes that replacing the statue with something more worthwhile will only increase economic activity in the city.

"There's so many better ways to use that area," Bloomberg said. "First of all, you have to climb a bunch of stupid stairs to get up to the top of the statue, and really, who wants to do that? And for Christ's sake, it's so damn ugly. Only the French would come up with something like that. They have no taste."

Converting Liberty Island into a strip club/gambling casino has been suggested, as well as a giant telescope, which can spy on anyone in America at any given time.

Faculty Senate worried about loss of cheeba

By Mary Jane Patchouli
Collegian Goddess

Faculty Senate members addressed concerns brought to the floor yesterday that the smoke-free campus motion passed by the Senate in February involves not only cigarette smoke but smoke from marijuana as well.

Professors from the Plant and Soil Sciences, Biology, Philosophy and English departments presented a special report to the Faculty Senate yesterday concerning what the prohibition of all smoke, specifically marijuana smoke would cost their specific departments.

"The use of marijuana in interpreting literature has long been accepted," said English Professor Jenny Jones. "This is especially true when discussing the generation of beat writers, who remain crucial to our department's studies."

Jones went on to explain that to understand the atmosphere in which the writing took place, and the state of mind that beat authors had, she encouraged her students to "poke the smoke" while delving into their readings.

Adam Sandler supported Jones's statements. He added that students scanning poetry, including Shakespearian and works of Chaucer, often greatly improved their ability to articulate in the vernacular of the times when "high as kites."

The biological sciences, represented by, Doctor Frank Frankenstein insisted that "at no time has smoke from marijuana hurt others walking around campus." Frankenstein explained that because the use of marijuana was generally confined to offices, dorm rooms, library carols, and closed meetings of the Rules Committee, the smoke would not irritate non-smokers in the area as cigarette smoke does across campus.

Plant and Soil Science professors Bert and Ernie Gaymen brought samples of their research work to the meeting to prove to the voting body what would be lost if a Smoke-Free Campus also meant a Ganja-free campus. The professors are researching the effects of a variation of the plant that could eventually be used as a new form of turf for golf courses. Other professors in their department, according to Bert and Ernie, use the plant for studies representing different types of plant medicinal traditions.

Massachusetts Society of Professors President Ron Story, a professor of History, supported the special report's message.

"As professors at the University of Massachusetts we have had our rights dismissed by state budgeters, the number of our ranks is dwindling and our students are appallingly lazy," Story said. "Shall this pleasure, one of our remaining few be taken from us too?"

At this, Senate members rose from their seats applauding Story's question and the presenters' report. Senate Secretary Bill Cosby moved to amend the Smoking ban on campus to include only smoke from tobacco products. Several rowdy senators, including voting member and SGA representative Imes High, seconded the motion before it was unanimously passed.

Chancellor Lombardi, following the meeting's conclusion, said he supported the motion if it would relieve tension among faculty ranks and raise moral.

Hammered

This student will be first in line when the Bluewall bar opens Friday.

Sex dormitory to be added for fall

Continued from page A1

he's conquered.

"I can't even be sure of that," he says. "I mean, look at the diversity of the word virgin in today's world. You have people who just haven't had sex, you have 'born-again' virgins, you have virgins 'at heart' and then you also have straight out liars. There's also that faction of romantics, who will tell you, if/when you're in a relationship, 'it feels like you're the only one I've ever been with.' It's a crock of shit of course, but it's out there."

To spot a real, impenetrate, tight-as-an-8-year-old virgin, McPhee says is difficult. But he always gives it his best effort.

"It takes a great deal of probing, a sense of trust, or in some cases just a half-bottle of Bacardi and some psychological tact, but it can be done," he says. "There's also a physical test, I suppose."

McPhee says that if you get a girl back to your room and she's looking at you with the intensity of a 4th-and-long-to-stay-alive-in-the-AFC-playoffs, you're probably not dealing with a virgin. The converse of this, he says, is if she's in your room, you offer her a drink, and she pulls a "squirrel move."

"You know." McPhee explains. "If she's not sure if she's going to take what's in your hand or run back with the other squirrels (her friends), she's probably as fresh and ripe as mom's apple pie."

In any case, Housing Services says virgins caught in the halls of the sex dorm will be deflowered.

SGA sees nosepicking as solution

Continued from page A1

accomplished by looking into the proverbial pockets and digging deep," he said. "Here I was digging deep myself and that just so happened to be exactly what we needed."

Environmental Health Services got wind of the plan late last week, and met it with harsh opposition. In an emergency meeting addressing the issue, they decided that the SGA was "way out of line." In an official statement, members of EHS strongly condemned the plan and chastised the SGA for its "foolish decision."

"We see no way that cutting back the meal plan in exchange for other alternatives is an acceptable manipulation of the budget," EHS said in their official statement. "We are putting the health of the students at risk in order to free up what amounts to a miniscule pile of cash."

"[The SGA] needs to work on coming up with a more acceptable solution. Nose picking is not an option, and EHS is appalled that the SGA would condone an activity of this nature at their meetings, let alone hail it as a solution to budget cuts and food quality problems."

Some students around campus say that they are no longer adequately represented by the SGA. Some even say they feel betrayed.

"The food situation at UMass is a problem. We all know that," said senior Elizabeth Moore, a Food Sciences major.

"What we need to do is find an appetizing option that is also appealing from a nutritious perspective."

The nutritional content of the proposed solution is negligible, she said. She also finds that the taste is unappealing. Because of this, she feels exploring the option will only bring resentment toward the SGA and the University on behalf of the student body.

The SGA will meet again several times over the next few weeks to iron out logistical details and to see if the idea is possible to implement.

"We still have a few technical items we need to work on," Carr said. "We will know soon whether or not we should keep digging."

www._____.com
bet you thought we were going to say "dailycollegian," huh?

THE BLUEWALL Cafe

FOOD FIT FOR ANY PET!!!

MENU

Pizza Taste the rich cardboard flavor of our thin crust pizza by the slice!
Anyone up for Antonio's? - 1.50
Improved. You sure you don't want Ammoni's? - 1.75

Subs Some fate and eyes will be asking yourself why didn't I take a ride to Subway.
Really a train not but who is counting - 1.50
Where is the beef? - 4.50

Hot Lunches Your High School lunch ladies would feel jealous. They only wish they could stop such mouth-gnarling flavor.

Coffee Nothing like washing it up with coffee without a lid.

McDonald's
BILLIONS AND BILLIONS SERVED
Food, Folks, and Fraud
BURRITOS .99
NOW HIRING LOSERS
$6 A HOUR

The Daily Collegian
We at The Collegian would like to thank all of our readers. As a token of appreciation, we are giving all of you a coupon for one free ride on the PVTA. Have Fun!
This Coupon is good for one free ride on any PVTA bus, choose wisely. Applies only for one way, not both. Expires April 2, 2003
PVTA
BUT OF THIS WORLD SERVICE

NEW AND IMPROVED

56 Easy installments of....
$95.99
Coming to a dorm near you. Look for the beat up Ford Pinto with the tinted windows and 27" rims. Ask for Ando. We are not responsible for other unlisted side effects. Absolutely no refunds. Check out our website www.ugonnadie.com. Sorry, no CODs, columbian nickels, or food stamps. TTYL

Matthew F. Sacco — Editor In Chief

Scott Eldridge II — Managing Editor

Matt Despres — Night Copy Editor

Jennifer Eastwood — Arts Editor

Jamie Loo — Ed/Op Editor

Dan Lamothe — News Editor

James Schaffer — Photo Editor

Jim Pignatiello — Sports Editor

Lizzy Nielsen — Assistant Arts Editor

Nick Markantonatos — Assistant Arts Editor

Regan McKendry — Assistant Ed/Op Editor

Amy O'Neill — Assistant News Editor

Courtney Charles — Assistant News Editor

Gerald Ling — Assistant Photo Editor

Andrew Merritt — Assistant Sports Editor

Mike Marzelli — Assistant Sports Editor

Special powers

Super Name: Darth Bueno

Super Power:

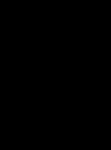
A close associate of Lord Rao, Bueno maintains a balance of all things coffee, comics and chicken (tacos).

Special powers

Super Name: Bob Eldreedylan II

Super Power:

Two knives, a bottle of scotch and a fly...any questions?



Special powers

Super Name: Spot

Super Power:

Spot has the power to slap shots ... with the force.

Special powers

Super Name: The Danimal

Super Power:

When news breaks, he fixes it.

Special powers

Super Name: Draculoo

Super Power:

Super speed. And the ability to create stories wherever she goes.

Special powers

Super Name: Minnie Westmetal

Super Power:

Resistance is futile. You will be Disneyfied.

Special powers

Super Name: Markant anopolot auropolo polis

A modern day Zeus. Able to offend anyone... in Greek.

Special powers

Super Name: Liznatch McGuire

The ability to piss anyone off in 30 words or less.

Special powers

Super Name: The Flying Pig

Super Power:

Rapid-"fired!"

Special powers

Super Name: Schaffnation

Super Power:

The fastest shooter in the basement.

Special powers

Super Name: The Diehard

Ability to allow a loss to ruin his day ... every-time.

Special powers

Super Name: Mert Windu

Ability to screw up a news-paper in a single bound

Special powers

Super Name: Gling

The power to take pictures of Shakira's crotch.

Special powers

Super Name: Charles in Charge

Courting everyone from here to the Bahamas.

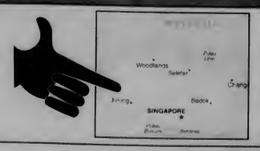
Special powers

Super Name: April O'Neill

The power to talk and write hella good.

Special powers

Super Name: Sir Talks-a-Lot



The ability to keep going and going and going...

GAP

LOOKING FOR A SUMMER JOB?

The Gap is now hiring in its Singapore office. Paying up to 5 cents an hour for making clothes you'll never wear! Get the experience of earning much less than minimum wage, and use as a great resume builder!

You could be here this summer!

GET PRE-APPROVED

•TO SPEND EVEN MORE MONEY YOU DON'T HAVE
•RECEIVE ENOUGH MAIL TO FEED YOUR BONFIRE NEEDS
•GET UNLIMITED PUSHY PHONE CALLS A DAY WITH BONUS HASSLE-U MINUTES
•RECEIVE ANY NUMBER OF USELESS GIFTS THAT YOU CAN CONTRIBUTE TO THE OVERFLOWING LANDFILLS
•AND BEST OF ALL... AN INTRODUCTORY APR OF 9.9%
INTRODUCTORY RATE APPLIES FOR THE FIRST 24 HOURS. AFTER THAT IT GOES UP TO AN APR RATE OF 99.9%

To Apply: call 1-800-HASSLE-U or actually don't bother calling, we will call you anyway.

HASSLE-U CREDIT CARD

The Daily Collegian

Tuesday, April 1, 2003 New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890 Volume CIX Issue 108

Students offered one more chance to join HASA talent search

By Amy O'Neill
Collegian Staff

The National Haitian Student Conference (NHSC) will offer one last chance to audition for the Wyclef Soul Survival Talent Search on Friday, April 4 from 6 to 7 p.m.

Competition however, will be tough, as they will only be picking between three to five people to participate in the actual talent show being held at 7 p.m. that evening.

Pre-auditions for the Talent Search began on March 29 and finalists who came out on that day will be notified tomorrow as to whether they have been selected for Friday's event. People who audition on Friday will be notified through a posting that will be placed before the show begins if they have selected to be in that evening's show.

In order to audition, a registration fee of $45 must be paid before 6 p.m. that day. The registration fee includes all of the weekend events as well. People who do not want to enter the search but would like a chance to share their artistic abilities will be given the opportunity on Friday if time allows. However, Nelson Acosta of AI ANA Affairs must be notified by April 2 via e-mail at nelson@stuaf.umass.edu by anyone interested in doing so.

The Talent Search will kick-off the sixth annual three day conference being held by the NHSC entitled "Blood, Sweat, Tears, The Spirit of Survival," which will include several events throughout the weekend including a talk and performance by Grammy winning Hip-Hop singer, Wyclef Jean.

The winner of the Talent Search will receive an all expense paid trip to New York to work on a demo with a record label.

The conference will end Sunday, April 6, after a weekend of speakers and entertainment including the nationally acclaimed Haitian Motivational speaker Rene Godefroy who will speak on "How to be Happy in Spite of All Your Troubles," on Saturday, April 5 at 9:20 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Before his Saturday evening performance, Jean will give a detailed presentation on "How to Break Into the Music Industry" from 2:50 p.m. to 4:20 p.m.

Speaking on Sunday will be the first Haitian State Representative Maire St. Fluer at 9:45 a.m. The conference will end at approximately 3 p.m.

The NHSC predicts that this year's turnout will be the largest they have had in the history of the conference, which has grown from an event just being held at colleges in New York City to one that is attended by people all over the world.

For more information or to register for the conference, visit the website at www.haitianstudentconference.com or contact the Haitian American Student Association (HASA) at 546-5926.

Doctor says cultures should share information

By Kelly Farrell
Collegian Staff

Dr. Antonio Rafael Armas Vázquez, a distinguished guest from Cuba's University of Havana Medical School, discussed Western theories in medicine and the need for more international collaboration yesterday evening at the University of Massachusetts Faculty Club.

Before the evening's discussions, Armas Vázquez visited classes, including Lynnette Leidy Sievert's Medical Anthropology class in Machmer and Dr. Dan Gerber's health class in Mahar.

Armas Vázquez said he had two main objectives he hoped to reach in his visit. First, he said, he hoped to "promote academic exchange between different cultures and social systems."

In his discussion, he talked about the ideal of a "holistic perspective" in medicine internationally. Armas Vázquez shared his idea that people from a wide spectrum of cultures should share their perspectives on health, medicine and education in order to foster the most growth in health, medicine and culture.

Armas Vázquez said he also had personal goals similar to people in all professions. He said he enjoyed visiting for the "opportunity to learn different approaches to health" for his own personal and professional growth.

Summing up both goals, Armas Vázquez said, "It's hard to accelerate within your own culture, but if you bring in international knowledge, you can jump."

Armas Vázquez discussed the similarities and differences between health care in the United States and Cuba. A professor in attendance stated that Cuba, particularly in the 80s, was highly regarded for its health services due to Cuba's supplying of medical services to everyone in the country – a system that

Continued on page 3

Allies nearing Baghdad; seven killed at checkpoint

A British Lynx 2 helicopter sets off for a mission yesterday, as dusk fell over the city of Basra.

By David Espo
Associated Press

American forces battled Iraqi defenders in fierce street fighting 50 miles south of Baghdad on Monday, pointing toward a drive on the capital. Seven Iraqi women and children were killed at an Army checkpoint when their van refused orders to stop, officials said.

American troops and tanks encountered rocket-propelled grenades and small arms fire in a dawn raid against Republican Guard defenders of Hindiyah, a key city astride the Euphrates River. Other units fought to isolate Najaf to the south and prevent attacks on U.S. supply lines.

"There are maneuvers going (on) to try to destroy those divisions that stand in our way" of Baghdad, Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal said at the Pentagon. He added that more than 3,000 precision-guided bombs have been dropped on Iraq in the past few days, out of 8,000 in the entire war.

In the northern part of Iraq, commanders said an assault on a compound controlled by an Islamic Iraqi group turned up lists of names of suspected militants living in the United states.

And heavy bombing was reported during the day, from areas near the northern oil fields, to downtown Baghdad, to the Republican Guard defensive positions south of the city.

On the 13th day of Operation Iraqi Freedom, British officials claimed that 8,000 Iraqis have been taken prisoner so far.

But a defiant Iraqi foreign minister said invading forces face the choice between death or surrender. "Every day that passes the United States and Britain are sinking deeper in the mud of defeat," said Naji Sabri.

Sabri struck his defiant pose at a news conference at the Iraqi Ministry building – bombed for the second time in two days.

For his part, President Bush warned that Saddam "may try to bring terror to our shores." The United States is acting to prevent such threats, he said as he issued his latest forecast of victory.

"Day by day, we are moving closer to Baghdad. Day by day, we are moving closer to victory," Bush said during a trip to Philadelphia.

Officials said the civilians were killed when Army guards opened fire at a checkpoint near Najaf, the same general area where four soldiers from the same unit were killed in a weekend car bombing. This time, officials said Army guards fired warning shots at the vehicle, then fired into its engine, but neither action stopped the van. The military is investigating.

"In light of recent terrorist attacks by the Iraqi regime, the solders exercised considerable restraint to avoid the unnecessary loss of life," said a statement from U.S. Central Command.

The official casualty count for Americans stood at 42 dead, seven captured and 17 missing. Another 25 British troops are listed as killed in action.

There are no official estimates for Iraqi casualties, although officials have said upwards of 4,000 civilians have been killed and wounded.

Some defecting Iraqis described harrowing conditions, and not only from American air bombardments.

One, who agreed to talk on condition his name not be used, said agents of the ruling Baath party attempted to shoot deserters. "But we decided it was either die from an American bomb or be killed by our own people," he said in the Kurdish town of Kalak in northern Iraq.

American and British warplanes continued to bomb at will. Thunderous explosions rocked the Baghdad skyline after dark, and smoke billowed from the Old Palace presidential compound. Iraqi state-run television was briefly bombed off the air, and nearly all telephone service was knocked out in the capital.

Officials in Biyare, in northern Iraq, said the assault on a compound controlled by Ansar al-Islam turned up documents, computer discs and other material belonging to Arab fighters from around the

Continued on page 3

Keeping students informed

Adam Meringolo educates students about the Festival of Peace and Nonviolence to be held in Washington D.C. on April 5.

Romney cancels meeting with UMass chancellors

BOSTON (AP) – Gov. Mitt Romney yesterday canceled a meeting with University of Massachusetts chancellors after they pledged to skip it unless the university president, William M. Bulger, was included.

The governor planned to meet Wednesday with the five UMass chancellors to discuss the future of the university system.

Bulger, whose job would be eliminated under Romney's plan, was not invited.

"It became clear that the chancellors weren't going to attend the meeting," Romney spokeswoman Shawn Feddeman said. "We hope that they can find a way to share their knowledge and insight with us."

Aides to Romney have said Bulger was not invited because he has already spoken out against Romney's higher education plan and his views were well known.

Grace Fey, chairwoman of the university's board of trustees, sent a letter to Romney last Friday, stating that she and vice chairman William Giblin and the five chancellors would not attend the meeting.

Bulger, who is paid $309,000 a year, has denounced the governor's plan as a "corporate takeover" of public higher education.

The plan, which aims to save $150 million in higher education spending to help close a $5 billion state deficit, would eliminate the UMass presidency and system administration to save $14 million.

It also would diminish the research missions of the Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell campuses, the College of Art and the Massachusetts Maritime Academy would be spun off and independently run and UMass Medical School in Worcester would be privatized.

Romney last week met community college leaders and on Monday met with state college heads.

-Associated Press

Editorial/Opinion Page 4
Arts & Living Page 5
Sports Page 8
Comics Page
Classifieds Page

Education Reform
Painful but possibly necessary
Page 4

'Head of State'
Chris Rock can't save this one
Page 5

Gonzo
Hassle-U vs UMass
Page 8

police log

Large thefts lead police log activity

compiled by Dan Lamothe

Friday, March 21, 2003

5:27 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Brett Hall on Infirmary Way. The Amherst Fire Department called to advise that they were sending an ambulance. After an evaluation, no transport to the hospital was necessary.

11:05 a.m.: A "suspicious computer message" was reported in the Hills House on Infirmary Way.

5:55 p.m.: A breaking and entering was reported in Tillson Sawmill on Tillson Farm Road.

6:04 p.m.: A medical emergency was reported at the Conte Polymer Research Center on Governors Drive. A caller requested for an ambulance for a person who cut his forehead and was bleeding. A chemical explosion within a lab caused the injury. AFD and Environmental Health and Safety (EH&S) remained on the scene for clean up.

Saturday, March 22

9:46 a.m.: Two laptops were reported stolen some time since midnight in the Knowles Engineering Building on Holdsworth Way.

3:15 p.m.: A caller reported that skate boarders at the Graduate Research Towers were being profane and annoying while boarding in the area. Six people were spoken to.

7:10 p.m.: Two scooters and a bicycle were reported stolen from the North Village Apartments on N. Pleasant Street.

Sunday, March 23

1:20 a.m.: A caller reported seeing a person in Lot 13 on Olympia Drive who was seen a few days before in the same lot sleeping in his car. The caller was identified and sent on his way.

12:05 p.m.: A bicycle wheel was reported stolen from the bus shelter on N. Pleasant Street.

5:08 p.m.: Three teenage suspects were reported skateboarding with beer on the scene at the Morrill Science Center I Public Health Building. They were all given trespass warnings.

Monday, March 24

6:42 a.m.: A Physical Plant control desk reported that a janitor in Dickinson Hall on Hicks Way found a male running through the second floor hallway while screaming that he could fly. The person was found and evaluated by Mental Health Services.

1:50 p.m.: A larceny was reported in Coolidge Tower on Massachusetts Ave. Seven playstation games and a memory card were taken during spring break.

3:54 p.m.: Vandalism was reported to a vehicle in Lot 11 on Stadium Drive. A person said that his vehicle had the windshield wipers taken off as well as the tires slashed.

Tuesday, March 25

2:12 p.m.: A larceny was reported in Field Hall on Orchard Hill Drive. A laptop was taken from a room during spring break.

4:23 p.m.: An R/P reported that $200 was taken in cash the night before in the Mullins Center.

6:23 p.m.: A laptop computer was reported stolen from a dorm room in Kennedy Tower on Massachusetts Avenue.

Thursday, March 27

12:51 a.m.: Six video games valued at $50 each were reported stolen from Brown Hall on Eastman Lane.

3:08 p.m.: A larceny was reported in Lot 44 on Sylvan Drive.

9:57 p.m.: Student Security reported a group of people on the north side of Totman Gym shooting off fireworks.
Friday, March 28

Friday, March 28

1:09 a.m.: An RA in Baker Hall reported a person playing a bongo drum.

1:24 a.m.: An RA reported a dozen people seeting off large amount of fireworks between Kennedy and Coolidge Towers.

1:26 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in John Adams Tower on Fearing Street. A RA reported an unresponsive male on the eighth floor men's room. The man was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

2:05 a.m.: A student security supervisor reported nearly being hit by a green Cherokee in the Southwest horseshoe. The vehicle sped off and was last seen on Massachusetts Avenue.

2:53 a.m.: An RA reported a group of people throwing firecrackers in the Southwest mall.

4:53 a.m.: Two college-aged people, one male and one female, were caught painting on the side of a building. They were released by will receive a summons for court later.

7:49 a.m.: Signs of detonated fireworks were found in the hallways and laundry room on the third floor of Kennedy Tower.

12:50 p.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Hampshire Dining Commons. A female fainted. An ambulance was dispatched and transported her to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

1:29 p.m.: A stolen microscope worth about $1000 was reported stolen from the Lederle Research Tower on N. Pleasant Street.

4:33 p.m.: A woman in the shower on the seventh floor of Dickinson Hall reported seeing a hand holding a camera around the corner. She believes whoever it was took a photo. She did not see the person.

8:28 p.m.: A laptop valued at $2500 was reported stolen from the Computer Sciences Building on Governors Drive.

11:44 p.m.: An RA reported a group of a dozen people throwing bottles on the east side of Grayson Hall, smashing a window.

Saturday, March 29

1:17 a.m.: A caller in John Quincy Adams Tower reported that someone entered his room and stole his chain, cross, cell phone and head phones.

4:01 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported at the Malcolm X Center in Berkshire Dining Commons. A female requested an ambulance for a male who passed out. The male, age 19, was taken into protective custody.

1:02 p.m.: A traffic stop on University Drive resulted in the arrest of Christopher C. Macmullen, 25, of 193 Hersey St. in Hingham, Mass. Macmullen was charged with operating motor vehicle with no inspection sticker and driving with a suspended license.

4:03 p.m.: A person was transported at his own request to see the mental health staff after possibly attempting suicide.

11:29 p.m.: A traffic stop on University Drive resulted in the arrest of Dean B. Smith, 22, of 12 Salt Works Ln. in S. Yarmouth, Mass. Smith was charged with operating a vehicle with a suspended license.

The last editor-in-chief debate is Wednesday at 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 168C. All staff writers and staff are expected to attend if they missed the first debate. Anyone who can't make it should get in touch with their respective editors.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Bartenders Have More Spirit! Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888

www.dailycollegain.com
www.dailycollegain.com
www.dailycollegain.com
www.dailycollegain.com
www.dailycollegain.com
www.dailycollegain.com
www.dailycollegain.com
www.dailycollegain.com
www.dailycollegain.com
www.dailycollegain.com

April '03
ARTS ON CAMPUS...
A monthly calendar brought to you by the UMass Arts Council.

Events

Thursday, April 3
Theater-Blessing the Boats Blending solo theatrical performance, literary reading, stand-up comedy, spoken word performance and the story-telling of a griot. 8pm Bowker Auditorium. 545-2511 $
Theater-Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead by Tom Stoppard April 3, 4, 5 and 9, 10, 11, 12 at 8 pm. Student matinee April 9 at 10 am. Rand Theater. 545-2511 $
Music - Avanti Wind Quintet Plus 8pm. Bezanson Hall. 545-2511 $
Wednesday, April 4
XCultural-SASA Night 03: The Fusion 7pm Campus Center Auditorium. 545-3600 $
XCultural-4th Annual National Haitian Student Conference: Blood, Sweat & Tears through 4/6. Various times and locations. 545-3600 $
Monday, April 7
Film-Trembling Before God 7pm. Hasbrouck 124. 545-4824
Tuesday, April 8
Music - 19th & 20th Century Flute Music 8pm. Bezanson Hall 545-2511 $
Wednesday, April 9
Grant Deadline: UMass Arts Council Mini Grant Submission deadline noon. 545-0202
Comedy- Jim Brewer 8pm. FAC Concert Hall. 545-3600
XFilm - Elegant Horror: Sound & Image in Val Lewton's the Seventh Victim 7:30pm. Bezanson Recital Hall 545-3659
XConference-Making Art--Making A Living: Performing Arts 4:30pm. Campus Center. 545-2360 Free for Students. $
XMixed Creative Expressions Night 5pm Orchard Hill. 545-4824
Friday, April 11
Music - David Murray and the Gwo-Ka Masters Magic Triangle in conjunction with WMUA. 8pm. Bezanson Recital Hall. 545-2511
XMixed - Common Threads: Fabric and Traditional Asian Garment Design - A contemporary interpretation. Trak. Exhibits, models and talks by master designer and weaver Leanore Alaniz. 3:30pm. Campus Center. 10th fl. $
XMixed - Bring on the Fire through 4/13. Various times. Library Lawn & SUB.
Saturday, April 12
XCultural - The Annual Native Pride Social 1pm. Cape Cod Lounge. 545-3600.
XMusic - Mingus big band Celebrating the music of the late, great composer and bassist, Charles Mingus. 8pm. Concert Hall 545-2511 $
Sunday, April 13
Dedication-Newly Renovated Bezanson Recital Hall Concerts at 4pm and 7pm. Shows are free but advance tickets are required. Bezanson Hall. 545-2511.
XJazz Brunch Hampshire Dining Hall
Monday, April 14
Film-The Business of Fancydancing 7pm. Hasbrouck 124. 545-4824
Tuesday, April 15
XTheater-MILK OF AMNESIA with Carmella Tropicana. 7:30pm Bowker 545-4824. $
XConference-Making Art--Making a Living: Arts and Activism 4:30pm. Campus Center. 545-2360 Free for Students. $
Music - Double Reed Faculty Recital 8pm. Bezanson Hall 545-2511 $
Wednesday, April 16
Music-Faculty Recital 8pm. Bezanson Hall. 545-2511 $
Seminar-The Art of Memorialization with Robert Dirk+ette 4pm. Renaissance Center Reading Room. 577-3600
XFilm - A Dream in Hanoi 7:30pm. SOM 137. 545-3659
Saturday, April 19
Music-Graduate String Quartet 7:30pm Bezanson Hall. 545-2511.
Tuesday, April 22
Music-Trombone Choir & UMass Low Brass 8pm. Bezanson Hall. 545-2511 $
Wednesday, April 23
XConference-Making Art--Making a Living: Art and Law 4:30pm. Campus Center. 545-2360. Free for Students. $
XLiterary Arts - Writers Work Connie Isman, Director, Jones Library 4:30pm. Commonwealth College Lounge. 545-5497
Thursday, April 24
XMusic - Jazz Lab Ensemble 20-piece ensemble playing an eclectic sample of tag along repertoire 8pm. Bezanson Recital Hall. 545-2804
XTheater-Soular Power d Full Circle Productions has its finger on the pulse of Hip-Hop culture. Also 4/25 8pm Bowker Auditorium. 545-2511. $
Lecture-Shakespeare in the 21st Century by G.B. Hordson. 4pm. Memorial Hall. 577-3600.
Mixed-Take Your Children to Work Day 8:30-10am. Mullins Center. 545-4371.
Friday, April 25
Music - University Orchestra with Faculty String Performers 8pm. Concert Hall. 545-2511. $
Saturday, April 26
Music-21st Annual New England Saxophone Symposium All day in the Music Department. 545-2810. $
XCultural-SAMBA Spring Carnival 8pm. SUB. 545-3600.
XCultural-9th Annual Puerto Rican Cultural Night 6pm. Campus Center Auditorium. 545-3600 $
Sunday, April 27
Music-Concert Band 2pm. Concert Hall. 545-2511 $
Music - American Music Wind Ensemble & Symphony Band Steven Dennis Bodner, conductor. 7pm. Concert Hall. $
Monday, April 28
Film-Sing-A-Long Wizard of Oz 7pm. Hasbrouck 124. 545-4824
Tuesday, April 29
Music-Eurdice Ensembles Baroque Chamber Music. 8pm. Bezanson Hall. 545-2511
Wednesday, April 30
XConference-Making Art--Making a Living: Arts-related Careers 4:30pm Campus Center. 545-2360. Free for Students. $
Mixed-Take Back the Night 7pm. Campus Lawn. 545-0583
Music-Graduate Jazz Composers' Concert 8pm. Bezanson Hall. 545-2511
XFilm - The Pianist 7:30pm. SOM 137. 545-3659

Exhibits

XAUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY
101 New Africa House - 545-5177
M-TU 1-7 pm; W-F 1-5 pm
The Way I See It
work by Michael Coblyn
Through April 18
Thesis Exhibition: Michael O'Bannon
April 24-30
XCENTRAL GALLERY
Central Residential Area
Infirmary Way-Wheeler House
545-0680
M-TH 9-6 pm; SU 2-5 pm
524 Bill and Tess Rock: New Paintings
Through April 27
XHAMPDEN GALLERY & SCULPTURE GARDEN
Southwest Residential Area - 545-0680
M-TH 12-6; SU 2-5 pm
Liminal
Curated by David Gibson
Through April 27
Face to Face
New portraits by Liora LaFerle
Hampden Gallery Lobby
XHERTER ART GALLERY
1825 Herter Hall - 545-0976
M-F 11-4 pm; SA-SU 1-4 pm
Julie Heffernan: A Painting Survey, 1995-2002
Through April 9
Linda Matalon: Drawings and Sculpture
Through April 9
MFA Thesis Exhibitions
Kim Hindman, Sandy Litchfield
April 22-25,2003
Terry Cappuccci, Bounma Chanthavong April 28-May 2
XSTUDENT UNION GALLERY
Student Union Building - 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 pm; F 10-3 pm
Healing the Wounded Heart
April 7-11
Body and Soul
by Meredith Appelbaum
April 14-18
Mantypus by Jared Snider
Zoom by Emiko Hirose
April 21-25
Today's Woman by Leah Moffie
wonies by Cheryl Lichwell
April 28-May 2
XUNIVERSITY GALLERY
Fine Arts Center - 545-3670
TU-F 11-4:30 pm; SA-SU 2-5 pm
In The Making: Contemporary Drawings from a Private Collection
through May 16
Jim Dow: American and National League Baseball Stadiums
through May 16
Five College students are offered a discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events *sponsored, in part, by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

4/03
UMass Arts Council·101 Hasbrouck Lab·545-0202

NATIONAL HAITIAN STUDENT CONFERENCE 2003

WHY DO WE CARE THAT, IN APRIL, 2000, A MAN NAMED JEAN DOMINIQUE WAS MURDERED OUTSIDE OF HIS RADIO STATION IN HAITI?

IT'S A QUESTION THAT'S BEST ANSWERED BY ANOTHER QUESTION: WHY DID 20,000 ECSTATIC HAITIANS WELCOME JEAN HOME FROM EXILE IN 1986?

THE OVERWHELMING SUPPORT STEMMED FROM THE WORK HE DID IN THE 1970'S, WHEN HIS STATION, RADIO HAITI, WAS ONE OF THE FEW INTELLIGENT, CRITICAL HAITIAN VOICES BRAVE ENOUGH TO EXAMINE THE DUVALIER DICTATORSHIP AND ALL ITS INJUSTICES. DURING THAT DECADE, JEAN DOMINIQUE'S EDITORIALS AND HIS NEWS STAFF'S REPORTING OFFERED THE POPULATION OF HAITI GROUND-BREAKING POLITICAL ANALYSIS AND CULTURAL REPORTING IN CREOLE -- WHICH MEANT THAT, FOR THE FIRST TIME, THE VAST MAJORITY OF HAITIANS WERE ABLE TO ENTER INTO AN INFORMED PUBLIC DIALOGUE ABOUT DEMOCRACY AND JUSTICE.

IN THE MIDST OF THE FUROR PROCEEDING THE 2000 PRESIDENTIAL AND SENATORIAL ELECTIONS, AS HIS STATION WEIGHED IN WITH BITING EDITORIALS AND HARD-HITTING INVESTIGATIVE REPORTING, JEAN DOMINIQUE WAS SHOT IN THE HEAD BY AN AS-YET UNKNOWN ASSASSIN.

WHY SHOULD WE CARE THAT MAN NAMED JEAN DOMINIQUE WAS MURDERED OUTSIDE OF HIS RADIO STATION? BECAUSE WE BELIEVE IN THE VALUES OF OPEN INQUIRY, JUSTICE AND FREEDOM FOR WHICH JEAN STOOD.

APRIL 6, 2003
UMASS-AMHERST
STUDENTUNIONBALLROOM
11:00AM - 12:40PM

JEANDOMINIQUE LIVES

Hollywood film director Jonathan Demme & Grammy award winning artist Wyclef Jean Proudly present: "The Agronomist: The Life of Haitian Revolutionary Jean Dominique".

United States intensifies air campaign

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – U.S. warplanes dropped 3,000 precision-guided bombs on Iraq over the weekend in an intensified air campaign aimed at weakening the Republican Guard divisions ringing Baghdad, Pentagon officials said Monday.

American planes had dropped about 5,000 precision bombs in the previous week. The escalation in the bombing campaign came as planes focused on hitting the Medina, Hammurabi and Baghdad Republican Guard divisions facing U.S. ground troops approaching Baghdad from the south.

Bombing in the Iraqi capital also intensified, with repeated hits on the Information Ministry and telephone exchanges aimed at cutting off communications from Saddam Hussein's government.

As fighting south of the Iraqi capital continued, U.S. troops killed seven Iraqi women and children at a checkpoint Monday when the Iraqis' van would not stop as ordered, U.S. Central Command said.

The soldiers involved "absolutely did the right thing," said Gen. Peter Pace, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. "Our soldiers on the ground have an absolute right to defend themselves."

Two other civilians were wounded at an Army checkpoint on a highway near Najaf in southern Iraq, according to a Pentagon official and a Central Command statement. The military is investigating, the statement said.

Meanwhile, fresh U.S. forces are flowing to the Persian Gulf, including 500 members of an Army cavalry regiment being sent ahead of schedule to help protect U.S. supply lines from Iraqi attack.

The buildup comes amid upbeat Pentagon assessments of progress against Iraq's strongest army force, the Republican Guard, which one U.S. general said Monday had suffered a "very significant weakening" from intensified American and British aerial bombardment.

"We know how it will end: The Iraqi regime will end," said Pentagon spokeswoman Victoria Clarke. "But we know that there could be some tough fighting ahead."

Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal, vice director of operations on the Pentagon's Joint Staff, told a news conference that more than 300,000 allied forces are now in the Gulf region, about 250,000 of them American. Last Friday his boss, Gen. Richard Myers, had put the allied total at 270,000.

McChrystal would not discuss specific missions of the additional forces that are en route to the Gulf or getting ready to go. They include 500 members of the Army's 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment who left their Fort Polk, La., base on Sunday. They and their Humvee scout vehicles, Kiowa reconnaissance helicopters and other equipment were sent by air, enabling them to get to Iraq quicker than if the equipment had been sent by sea as originally planned.

Other members of the 2nd Armored Cavalry are to go by sea.

NBC fires journalist for comments

By DAVID BAUDER
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – NBC fired journalist Peter Arnett on Monday, angered that he had given an unauthorized interview with state-run Iraqi TV saying the American-led war effort initially failed because of Iraq's resistance.

Arnett apologized for his "misjudgment," but added: "I said over the weekend what we all know about this war."

Meanwhile, the Pentagon was investigating whether Fox News Channel reporter Geraldo Rivera endangered troops by revealing the plans of a military unit in Iraq in advance. Rivera denied reports that he had been expelled from the country.

Arnett, who won a Pulitzer Prize reporting in Vietnam for The Associated Press, gained much of his prominence from covering the 1991 Gulf War for CNN. One of the few American television reporters left in Baghdad, his reports were frequently aired on NBC and its cable sisters, MSNBC and CNBC.

NBC was angered because Arnett gave the interview Sunday without permission and presented opinion as fact. The network initially backed him, but reversed field after watching a tape of his remarks.

The network said it got "thousands" of e-mails and phone calls protesting Arnett's remarks – a thousand e-mails to MSNBC President Erik Sorenson alone.

"When I heard he had given an interview to Iraqi TV, I immediately thought it was about as bad a judgment that a reporter in the field could make," Sorenson said. "I held out hope initially that maybe he had given the interview at gunpoint or there was some extenuating circumstance."

In the interview, shown by Iraq's satellite television, Arnett said the United States was reappraising the battlefield and delaying the war, maybe for a week, "and rewriting the war plan. The first war plan has failed because of Iraqi resistance. Now they are trying to write another war plan."

Arnett said it was clear that, within the United States, opposition to the war was growing, along with a challenge to President Bush about the war's conduct.

Mike Fissel of East Berlin, Penn., whose son is a Marine serving in the Middle East, called Arnett's comments "a disgrace." Fissel e-mailed his protest to NBC.

"My son's over there risking his life with all of his buddies and this guy's basically saying we've failed, we screwed up," Fissel said. "That is wrong to me. It seemed un-American and unpatriotic."

Arnett, speaking Monday on "Today," said he wanted to apologize to the American people.

"I gave some personal observations, some analytical observations, which I don't think are out of line with what experts think," he said. "But clearly I misjudged the firestorm."

He said he planned to leave Baghdad, where he was one of the last reporters left for a U.S.-based television network, and joked that he'd try to swim to "a small island in the South Pacific."

Leaving a second network under a cloud could mark the end of his TV career. Arnett was the on-air reporter of a retracted 1998 CNN report that accused American forces of using sarin nerve gas in Laos in 1970. He was reprimanded and later left the network.

The first Bush administration was unhappy with Arnett's reporting on the Gulf War in 1991 for CNN, suggesting he had become a conveyor of propaganda.

Doctor explains Cuban health

Continued from page 1

the U.S. has never been able to achieve. Armas Vázquez acknowledged the benefits of Cuba's system, but also acknowledged that the U.S. and Cuba share some problems as well.

"I think we have the highest [ratio] of physicians to people [in Cuba]," he said, "but the issue is quality not just quantity."

Whether in Cuba, the United States, China or any other nation, the goals in medicine are to raise the levels of health care and health education, Armas Vázquez said.

"We need to communicate more, because we have the same problems and the same goals."

In harmony with his promotion of sharing cultural and medical ideas, Armas Vázquez encouraged professors and students to participate in the 15th Conference of North American and Cuban Philosophers and Social Scientists at the University of Havana, Cuba this summer from June 17 to July 1. For details on submitting a paper or attending the Commission, contact Cliff DuRand at cliffdurand@targate.net.

Although travel to Cuba is still quite restrictive, student visas will be arranged to join the Commission. In addition, due to continued restrictions in traveling between the United States and Cuba, Armas Vázquez's visit to the United States will be shorter than once planned. He will be visiting Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine tomorrow before heading back to Cuba.

Armas Vázquez was invited to UMass by the Center for Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Studies and the Five College Program in Culture, Health and Science, not the "Faculty Club Program in Culture, Health and Science," which was incorrectly reported in yesterday's news story.

Suggestions, questions, and comments can be sent to news@dailycollegian.com

THE HARP IRISH PUB
TONIGHT ONLY TRIVIA STARTS AT 9:30 not 9pm
Thursday April 3rd: Equalites
Saturday April 5th: Johnny Stevens Band
163 Sunderland Rd. Amherst 548-6900
"Start your own tradition!"

CASH FOR BOOKS
BRING 'EM IN OR CALL US
Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 S. Prospect St. Amherst 253-3870, 256-7816

Styles by Deborah

Featuring Foil Highlights & Designer Haircuts for Students
Complementary consultation with every visit
$10 off Foils with a Style Haircut with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03
$5 off Clipper Cuts with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03
65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

Allies nearing Baghdad; seven killed at checkpoint

TONY NICOLETTI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Residents flee Basra yesterday as British Royal Marine commandos patrol nearby.

Continued from page 1

Middle East. The administration has longed claimed that the Iraqi-based group and al-Qaida are connected. But there was no immediate indication of evidence that tied Ansar to Saddam.

McChrystal said a week of intensive bombing has caused a "very significant weakening of the forces" arrayed to protect Baghdad.

Apart from the 8,000 precision-guided bombs, he said 700 Tomahawk land attack missiles have been fired at Iraqi targets since the war began.

Much of the day's fighting occurred south of Baghdad, where American forces are gathering strength for the push toward the capital.

U.S. troops staged a raid as the sun rose on Hindiyah, a city of 80,000. Iraqis used small arms fire and rocket-propelled grenades to try to prevent a column of tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles from taking control of a bridge over the Euphrates.

"This must have been important to him to send down a Republican Guard brigade," said Col. David Perkins, whose troops were facing Iraqis wearing the distinctive patches of Saddam's elite units.

nside the city, U.S. soldiers found a small cache of weapons. But the haul was bigger at the local Baath Party headquarters.

There, the Americans found tons of ammunition and hundreds of weapons, including several boxes of American grenades marked "Property of the Ministry of Defence of Jordan." Maps inside the building showed Iraqi military positions and the expected route of the U.S. attack.

The 1st and 2nd brigades of the 101st Airborne Division battled to isolate Najaf, a Shiite holy city. Iraqi forces attacked with mortar and small arms fire, and Maj. Carl Purvis, an Army spokesman, said the Army forces were prepared for house-to-house combat.

"They are trained and poised to do that if necessary," he said.

In Washington, the State Department said Secretary of State Colin Powell will travel to Turkey and Belgium on Tuesday for talks on the war as well as postwar reconstruction of Iraq.

Turkey is permitting use of its air space for combat aircraft, but rejected a U.S. request to allow ground troops to invade northern Iraq from Turkish territory.

In Brussels, Powell is expected to meet with NATO and European Union officials. Both organizations are split over the war.

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
Results you can feel.
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS $10. always
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256-0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586-0155

Looking for a job
in Amherst this summer? Full and part time jobs are available with Summer Conference Housing! Come and get an application and job description at the Conference Services Office, Room 918 Campus Center.
http://www.aux.umass.edu/ConferenceServices

Introducing
Natalee Prince
Ethnic Hairstylist

Casimir Kocot
79 So. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
413.256.3440

U Can Get Credit Too!
Swipe your Ucard to purchase any vended Coca-Cola product, automatically WIN $100, or $10 and you are entered to $50, $25, credit on Your Ucard!

Jeff Houle won $400!
GO UMASS !!!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Censorship of classroom material hinders our education

Kansas' state Senate passed a bill recently that will withhold up to $5 million in school funding from the University of Kansas.

The Senate's motivation behind the bill was their grievance with an explicit video used during a sexuality class.

The bill, which passed last weekend by a landslide 24-15 vote, requires schools to ban "obscene" materials or lose funding from the guilty department.

Dennis Dailey, an award-winning professor at the University of Kansas, has been teaching his class on sexuality for 20 years. His class is the one being targeted by the Senate for using "obscene" materials.

Republican Sen. Susan Wagle told CNN that a student informed her of the class. The student said Dailey showed images of female genitalia at young ages and implied that a woman going to the bathroom was going to masturbate.

We understand that remarks made by authority figures such as professors can be misconstrued as inappropriate when they are meant as humorous.

What we don't understand is why this professor is being targeted for attempting to educate his students in an honest, albeit blunt manner.

According to the Senate, Dailey uses unsuitable videos or pornography to complement his class lectures.

"I think what is going on in this undergraduate class is obscene, and I want to make this type of activity not funded by the taxpayer," Wagle told CNN.com.

Dailey countered that saying, "These are educational films. They are made by educational organizations and used as part of the educational process."

So what if the videos are a little graphic. This is a college class. We are talking about with young adults. And we're sure that if anything, his message might get across a little clearer when supported by such startling footage.

And it isn't as if Dailey is some sort of unknown, porn-hound teacher. This is a well-respected professor who has won numerous awards for his teaching and has the support of most of his students.

"I was fearful and didn't want to view pornography," 45-year-old Peg McFadden, a social work major, told CNN.com. "But because he prepares you with a fine lecture before you view it, you're really prepared."

Dailey respectfully declined to engage in a war of words with the senate, saying only that he uses these educational materials for educational purposes. We understand where he is coming from.

Many of us at the University of Massachusetts have taken classes where professors have somewhat shocked us with what they are said or showed to us. But I think many of us will agree that those are the lessons that stick with you.

By passing this bill, Kansas' state senate is bridling Dailey in his efforts to offer such lessons.

Information from CNN.com was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Tangled in red tape

Lindsey Elder

As television warms us to stock up on tape and to seal ourselves in for protection with the on-going war, I felt it appropriate to deal with some of the matters where the cutting of tape would be more effective, as in the red tape of the UMass administration. UMass Amherst was given the utmost honor of being ranked this year's number one college/university in "Red tape and Long Lines" so I decided to analyze a few situations where UMass not only seems to have red tape blocking their vision, but apparently cutting off oxygen to the brain.

For starters, let's begin with a student's first day of classes. If you are in a major like engineering or nursing, it is imperative you immediately start on your major requirements and get the gen-eds completed as soon as possible. However, with a large student body, that might be easier said than done. We've all gone to a class to sit and gravel before the professor about why we should get one of the remaining seats in the class and have been told to "just keep trying." The reason there is a wait is because it is UMass doctrine to hold the seat of a person registered for a class for the first two class sessions before dropping them from the class. Maybe I'm mistaken in thinking we're all adults now, and it should be our own responsibility to let the professor know we will not be able to attend the first two lectures but do plan on taking the course. However, in the eyes of UMass, the student who decided to extend their summer vacation or the one who was too out of it to realize they were enrolled is still the rightful owner of the coveted seat; the student that has shown up since day one with all the motivation to take the course is told "better luck next time."

Another problem I have is with the designation of guest meals. This year I found significant improvement in the dining services on campus with the larger selection and YCMP. My problem is not with the food; it's the stance UMass takes on who's eating it. If the meals have already been paid for, why exactly does it matter so much to designate who's digestive track these meals travel through? As other colleges in the Five College system, it's not a problem for me to drop a meal at their house or dining hall. However, if I have any guests here, or even for my fellow UMass students (that now live off campus or have forgotten their I.cards), I have to beg and plead to get them some of the food I paid for that I would not have a chance of using them all anyway.

Then there is the hub for almost all of the student body's main complaints, the trailer of tears, Parking Services. It has always blown my mind that while there is such a big rush to dole out tickets for "scholarships," I don't see many improvements to what should be the department's main concern: the current parking system or its lots. Before being in such a rush to talk about making money for future projects, why not invest some of it now to get the campus to a safe standard before we start talking new lots?

Students are charged to park in lots that are not even paved and all but crumble whenever it rains. Solar-powered light posts are not going to do much good when my car crashes into one of them, caused by losing control from skidding in and out of the mine field of potholes that surround them.

"I haven't had too many problems in dealing with the evil fortress Whitmore as many of my peers have."

Personally, other than UMass deciding mid-spring semester that I suddenly owed them $700, I haven't had too many problems in dealing with the evil fortress Whitmore as many of my peers have. I remember another student upon finding out UMass was ranked number one for red tape said, "It would be easier to get an interview with Saddam Hussein than with the dean of undeclared majors here." With such a large university, an inefficient administration is somewhat expected. However, more so than the long lines and mistakes at Whitmore that bothers me, it's the little mistakes that are example of wasteful spending and little thought.

For starters, why is it imperative to shovel Garber Field before any of the streets or walk ways on campus? There were days this winter I walked by the field about five times and never saw a player on it from sun up until sun down. What I did see was several of my fellow students hitting the pavement because the paths were still treacherous with snow, slush and ice adjacent to the emerald grass which was free of both snow and users.

Not convinced? Here's another. I can only imagine how much funding went toward paving a path for the bus route connection in front of the James and Thoreau dorms. With a sidewalk already surrounding the area, it seemed quite pointless and wasteful. The tombstone they erected marking it however seemed fitting. If I were a donator to UMass, I'd probably be turning over in my grave too if I knew something like that was what my money was going toward.

As much as I love UMass, it seems obvious that its administration follows the tactic many policy-enforcers do: it is easier to beg for forgiveness than to ask for permission. If they took the time to think things through in their administration and spending as thoroughly as they do in counting every last dime that students owe them (and ensuring we have the most high tech system for registering for classes that we can't get into,) maybe they'd have more of their workers and students behind them in fighting the red tape stereotypes. As for me, my spot on the UMass defense team will have to wait until I get my excess check.

Lindsey Elder is a Collegian Columnist.

Education plan scary, but maybe necessary

Dan Lamothe

When Governor Mitt Romney took over, everyone expected major changes. He hasn't disappointed in that regard, proposing massive changes for many things, including our very own University of Massachusetts system.

The thing is, we may be getting what we asked for, and it's starting to scare the holy bejeezus out of a ton of students and administration alike across the state.

Romney and his troops know this. They also know that to get the proposal passed, it's going to mean rallying support behind it at all levels. For that reason, Peter Nessen, chief education advisor for Romney, and Judith Gill, the chancellor of the Board of Higher Education, invited college journalists from all of the state schools in Massachusetts to Boston last week to explain the program and hopefully, through the college media, to drum up some support.

Nessen impressed upon us the need for a drastic change in order to reform the system. The man was bluntly critical of University administration and of higher education administrators in general. He said they need to be held accountable for the way things are now.

"This system doesn't have a discussion," he said. "Everything comes as a dictate."

Nessen showed disdain for President Bulger's office, blaming them for many of the inadequacies in the UMass system. He said every time there's a shortage of money in the system, the office looks to increase student fees, rather than cutting what he calls "backroom spending."

"You've got to look toward saving internally," he said, making it perfectly clear he believes the current UMass hierarchy does not.

On most of these points, UMass students could not be more with him. Criticize Bulger? Like we've never done that before. Complain about too many administrators and too much red tape hampering the system? Yeah, we've never complained about that, either.

So why the hesitancy? Why are so many so uncomfortable with the proposal?

"Considering most of us are in and out of here within a few years, we don't have time for them to get this right."

The answer is simple. Even when we complain we want it, people are still afraid of change.

If it's passed, the way things are now will get wiped away. Gone. And while the new system of doing things could be admittedly better, we're always going to have it in the back of our head that things could get worse.

The proposed reforms are many and wide-ranging. From eliminating Bulger's office to separating UMass into a flagship university separate from everything else on down to expanding enrollment on the Amherst campus, the plan promises to dramatically change the way things work here.

With that many changes, it's hard to not feel like the guinea pig, the lab rat. Doubts say we could end up being the first in a line of students that could eventually be great, but that we ourselves will suffer through a great deal of growing pains in the process.

Considering most of us are in and out of here within a few years, we don't have time for them to get this right. It needs to be right the first time, or it's our educations that will get screwed up in the process. Nessen says that if the plan doesn't work and UMass flounders on its own as an independent flagship, it can be brought back in to the University system. That may help someone out, but it won't be us. We'll be through the system by then.

The other part of the proposal that catches our eyes nearly immediately is the money. Once again, we're getting hit with another tuition increase – this one for a proposed $838 as in-state residents. And while Romney and Nessen and whoever else that make the decisions can write that increase off as a necessary evil to get UMass off and running and out of the doldrums, it's still hitting us right where it hurts – in the wallets.

Nessen says that under the proposal, an additional $50 million is included to fund scholarships for students who cannot afford the increase. That sounds great, but who defines who can't afford it? Nessen says that anyone borderline will be covered under the plan. But who decides what is borderline?

The reform proposal proves one thing, though: we've got what we asked for in office now – a radical who likes to shake things up if they need fixing. Romney and his plan have my support right now – hesitantly. I'll even swallow another increase tuition with the reasoning that it was a distinct possibility anyway with the way Bulger's office has been running the University. Without changes, we probably would have had a fee increase with no improvements, besides. For now, I can stick with my "Romney fixed the Olympics; I hope he can fix the state," train of thought.

I'll give change a try. It just better not screw up my own education.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

Moving toward an understanding

Caitlin M. Ott

When interpreting the actions of protestors, the general sentiment has risen to one of ridicule. Protesters throng the streets apparently in need of "taking them back." Yet politicians build the walls higher and widened their nasal passages till they drop. And how have we, as the educated elite, responded? All too often I look around and am confronted with the stifling sent of apathy. So what now folks? Are we all to crawl into our patchouli or alcohol wreck-ing dorm rooms to cry into our pillows? If you have answered yes, or more so, have not answered at all, you are more of the reason behind this war than those fields of oil burning bright.

Last Friday I did the angry liberal thing and laid upon a beach discussing the cold state of the world. And you? Admittedly, the angry beach bunny attitude is not one I carry always. I do enjoy a good dance party, but I have grown tired of empty words spit out upon the ocean. It is time for something different – for a constructive move toward change. To have the ability to understand and apply what I have learned, despite the outcome, I revel in that at least I tried.

"For America to 'Free the Iraq people,' is really propaganda aimed toward convincing the American public that the imposing of another's culture and needs is justifiable as long as it sounds good."

What is it that stops people from trying? In a university such as UMass, we are handed the keys and told to go find the locks. After much searching, and trial and error, I have found where to fit those ideas, concepts and information that I have learned in my classes. If in passing conversation I pause to question an overheard comment, this in itself is choosing to apply knowledge rather than run from it.

Granted, we all have our own culture, identities and thus approaches to life. This should not be a damper on reaching beyond that to find the universal human element that lies in us all. To peel back the layers of another, to learn where they come from, who they are, what they like to do, is the beginning of the reversal of apathy. It is only in discovering how we are all in fact the same that we can realize how ridiculous such slogans as "No Blood for oil" really are.

All you button-wearing liberals hold that outburst for a moment. Steaming from the how Iraq does in fact have a huge oil reserve, one that is a stabilizing element to the global economy, the slogan makes sense. For America to "Free the Iraq people," is really propaganda aimed toward convincing the American public that the imposing of another's culture and needs is justifiable as long as it sounds good.

If one were to research any non-American news source, or even CNN, the New York Times or alternative media sources such as indymeida.org, in application of the concepts presented the surge for Iraq freedom would be seen for little more than cultural imperialism. Yet hear lies the problem.

Even those who have educated themselves to culture, society and economics continually choose to grow stagnant in apathy. All I ask is what are you waiting for? One moves the stream around them by standing still. It is only by all moving toward a mutual understanding that a goal can be realized.

Caitlin M. Ott is Collegian Columnist.

Letter to the Editor

Students should vote to save their representation

To the Editor:

What are you doing on April Fool's day? I hope you plan to vote. Tuesday is Election Day in Amherst and for students at UMass it's an important one. Residents will be deciding whether or not to become a city with a mayor in charge. What has that got to do with me, you may ask? And why should I care? Well, it's the little things like housing regulations, public transportation, keg registration, the noise bylaw, child care, parking and many other things that touch the collected lives of students every day, on and off campus. These are the sorts of things that are debated and decided in Town Meeting.

The student body of UMass has the unrealized potential of being over 10 percent of that governing body. Southwest is by itself a town precinct with 24 available seats. If the proposed city charter passes, that potential will disappear. Instead, student concerns will rely on the graces of a mayor and nine-member city council whose interests will most likely be elsewhere.

So take 10 minutes out of your day and vote. Support your registered and write-in candidates for Town Meeting and vote no on the Charter. Keep your representation in local government and leave a political legacy for the Class of 2004 and beyond.

Alan Powell
Chair, Amherst Town Meeting Works

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com (413) 545-1592

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cincinnati symphony and Dr. Seuss lead today in entertainment

CINCINNATI SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR GETS CONTRACT EXTENSION

CINCINNATI (AP) – Paavo Jarvi, principal conductor and music director of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, has signed a four-year contract extension that will keep him through the 2008-09 season.

The extension was announced Friday on the eve of a final weekend concert series at Music Hall before Jarvi and the 99-member symphony were to depart Sunday for their first U.S. tour together. The five-concert tour will include appearances in New York City, Boston and Washington, D.C.

"I am thrilled that we will be continuing our musical collaboration," Jarvi said. "I never cease to be impressed with the extraordinary quality of this orchestra."

Jarvi's contract extension promises continued touring and recording work and commits him to conduct at least 14 of the symphony's 24-subscription concert weekends each year. Other details weren't disclosed.

Jarvi, born in Estonia, made his debut as the symphony's music director in September 2001. He succeeded Jesus Lopez-Cobos, who retired after 15 years on the job.

Jarvi's arrival has helped renew interest in the 108-year-old symphony. At the end of last season, ticket sales had increased 10 percent to a record $2 million in revenues.

Single ticket sales were up 13 percent, and 70 percent of those buyers had not attended a Cincinnati Symphony concert previously.

COPY OF DR. SEUSS SCULPTURE HEADED FOR CALIFORNIA

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) – Dr. Seuss is headed for California.

A copy of a bronze sculpture of Theodor Seuss Geisel _ aka children's author Dr. Seuss – will go on display at the University of California, San Diego, on March 2, 2004, which would have been Geisel's 100th birthday.

The sculpture, which depicts Geisel at his drawing board with the Cat in the Hat by his side, is part of the Dr. Seuss National Memorial Sculpture Garden in Springfield.

Geisel, a Springfield native, spent much of his adult life in Southern California. He died in 1991 at 87.

The copy of the statue will be made by his stepdaughter, Lark Grey Dimond-Cates, who created the original sculpture.

"He began his life in Springfield, and ended his life in San Diego. It's wonderful to have him at both places," Dimond-Cates told the Union-News of Springfield recently.

Geisel's widow, Audrey S. Geisel, asked that a copy of the sculpture be placed along a walkway leading to the university's library, which is named after the author, said Joseph Carvalho, president of the Springfield Library & Museums Association.

The library holds much of Geisel's research and illustrations in a special rare books collection.

BREMERTON SYMPHONY HIRES FIRST FEMALE CONDUCTOR

BREMERTON, Wash. (AP) – Elizabeth Stoyanovich has been selected as the first female conductor of the Bremerton Symphony.

Stoyanovich, conductor of education of the Fresno Philharmonic Orchestra, will succeed Robert Wingert, who's leaving after completing two years of a three-year contract.

Stoyanovich, who was chosen from more than 60 candidates, takes over July 1 as the symphony's music director and artistic director.

The all-volunteer Bremerton Symphony includes about 60 musicians who perform six regular concerts and one pops concert annually.

-Associated Press

Rock can't save 'Head of State'

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

'Head of State'
Directed by Chris Rock
Starring Chris Rock, Bernie Mac
Dreamworks
Rated PG-13
94 mins.

Chris Rock may be the most slashing stand-up comedian of our time. Slithering rage coils beneath his routines like a snake waiting to strike, and the incendiary wit of his words bring to the surface a truth some of us would rather not contemplate. But what has made Rock resonate as a comedian is his ability to give voice to the people, to our inner rage at the systems that have failed us.

Yet the movies that featured Rock have often failed to tap into that vein of righteous anger. In movies like "Down to Earth" and "Bad Company," Rock has been airbrushed and made safe; he's been turned into a bristly-cuddly comedian with the edge of a butter knife.

Since "Head of State" is the first film to be directed by Rock, you'd think it would recapture some of the comedian's satirical magic. There are moments that deep in "Head of State," but they unfortunately come few and far between. The moments in which Rock cuts loose and let's loose a politicized verbal assault are the funniest in the film, but they feel like moments of stand-up crammed into a predigested comedy.

"Head of State" is like "Bulworth" with a felt tip instead of a pointed needle. It's a child safe satire set in the halls and campaign trials of Washington, but any incisive attack against the way that the government is run is buried beneath an avalanche of easy potshots and cliché scripting.

Despite Chris Rock's abrasive hilarity, 'Head of State' offers no opportunity to showcase it.

Chris Rock is funny as usual in 'Head of State,' but the movie lacks any real humor and flops.

Rock's Mays Gilliam is an obscure alderman in a roughshod D.C. neighborhood who finds an act of courage met with Murphy's Law; he loses his car, his job and his psychotic girlfriend (a miles over the top Robin Givens, who's more frightening than funny.) When the presidential and vice presidential candidates in his party are killed in a plane crash, he's chosen to be the party's choice to run. The plan is to pit him against the sure-bet, incumbent vice president so that he will lose, but will allow his party to win credibility points amongst the minority crowd.

There was an opportunity here for Rock to shred his way through the current two-party system and make a film that addresses the modern political world in a topical, satirical light. But "Head of State" turns out to be nothing more than another anemic comedy: predictable, forgettable, free of the burden of humor. It's a movie in which the most topical element may be the use of Nelly's "Hot In Herre" on the soundtrack. Rock's direction is ragged and uneven; he'll move between moments of over-exaggerated goofiness and stabs at social satire and then he'll throw his movie over to a half-hearted romance between Gilliam and a pretty store clerk (Tamala Jones.)

The vice presidential nemesis could have been a funny creation. He has two mantras – "I'm a war hero, and I'm Sharon Stone's cousin" and "God Bless America … and no one else" – yet Rock repeats these sayings so often they lose their bite as humor. Bernie Mac, whose own angry-man comedic style has launched him into star status, plays Rock's brother and running mate, and while he enlivens the few scenes he's in, he's also desperately underused. Rock has a few prime moments, but he too often goes for easy laughs such as having rich, old, white folks doing the electric slide (a scene that's too ineptly staged to transcend the moth-eaten feel of the joke.) Rock is a furious wit, so it's sad to see him direct a film full of so many missed opportunities.

Hootie blows back into radio

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

Hootie and the Blowfish
'Hootie and the Blowfish'
Atlantic

Hootie & the Blowfish are back together again after going their separate ways in 2001, and while their reunion might not be as exciting as, say, The Eagles in "Hell Freezes Over," or The E Street Band's "The Rising," their latest album yields more crops than did any of the solo projects that several members embarked on.

Lead singer Darius Rucker had the most luck on his own, with an R&B/hip-hop album called "Back to Then," and he has brought along some of that funk for the new self-titled Blowfish album, most notably in the second track, "Little Brother." You might know the first single from the album, "Innocence," which is getting more radio airplay than any song from the last three albums put together. Indeed, this might be the album that puts Hootie back into mainstream circulation.

I won't cross my fingers though. As much as "Innocence" is one of the best cuts from the CD, the work as a whole does not meet the musical excellence of 1995's "Musical Chairs" or 1997's "Fairweather Johnson." It might sound odd to compare this CD to their debut one, "Crack'd Rear View," which is now one of the top 10 best-selling rock albums of all time. However, after seeing the amazing lengths to which the band could stretch, the album, much like their new one, shows little depth.

They're both full of fun, snappy pop, and that's just fine, but for audiences who might come back to the band after ditching them following "Crack'd..." I am only disappointed that the CD won't wow them.

Darius Rucker's vocals are as appealing as ever, manipulating the smallest details of a song's lyrics, like the way he be-bops in syncopation through the verses of "Deeper Side" or The Traveling Wilburys's sound-alike "Little Darlin." Then there're ballads like "I'll Come Runnin'" and "Tears Fall Down" where he croons with raw emotion, inflecting his words with rock grit that sticks in your ears. Also to Rucker's credit, more on this album than in the past, he doesn't let the parameters of the song restrain him, free-styling when the music allows, and avoiding the usual fallacy of rock stars to perform an album of music in only one tone. He's up, he's down, he's all over the place, and it makes the CD a much heartier listening experience.

Alongside Hootie is his faithful blowfish, Mark Bryan – arguably one of today's best guitarists (even more evident when you see him in concert). With "Show Me Your Heart," his opening lick sounds like a traditional rock vamp, but oh-so-subtly adds a bluegrass twang to it that even non-country music fans want to learn how to play (regardless of whether they own an instrument or not).

It's too bad the songs are, for the most part, under three minutes. While it's a deliberate ploy to get more radio airplay, many of the hooks jump out of the songs suddenly when you are expecting and perhaps want another verse. Just when you're getting into the song, it ends, and even though I believe in the adage "leave them wanting more," many of the songs leave us wanting too much more. However, that's what the repeat button is for on your CD player or the rewind key on your tape player. And if you're anything like me, you'll be pressing those quite a bit with this fine album.

'Enclave' puts players on edge of disaster

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

'Enclave'
PC, X-Box
Publisher Black Label Games
RPG

Imagine a world literally torn in half by a bottomless chasm, formed long ago as the result of an ancient war. On one side, there lives everything that is good. On the other, there's unspeakable evil. Now picture that bottomless chasm is closing, and all the evil of the world is primed to blot out the good. A bleak predicament – that is if you are the good guys. In Black Label and Vivendi Universal's "Enclave," you get to choose which side you play for.

There are six playable characters for each side. Though the game boasts 12 unique characters, it is really just a matter of a change in wardrobe and appearance. Still, being able to play as a good or bad warrior, wizard, archer, bomber, fighter/mage or thief is quite a selection that many games don't hoast.

The graphics in this game, though perhaps not cutting edge, are in a word, smooth. Combination keyboard/mouse controls provide the necessary accuracy and range of actions to, avoid traps, perform fluid multiple strike attacks and snipe enemies from afar. The sniping part is as the game warns; an exceptionally difficult skill to master, but it is worth the time It takes.

As with other third person fighting games, "Enclave" at times appears to be nothing more than a hack and slash "beat-em up," but it looks good doing it. There is no leveling up in this game. You must gather money as you go through your missions and purchase better equipment for your characters. A plus to "Enclave" that many other games in this genre do not possess is that used equipment re-sells at full purchase price. This means no more worrying if you are spending your money wisely. If the new armor you bought turns out to be lousy, you can just sell it back and try something else.

With checkpoints sprinkled liberally throughout every level, there is no threat of being sent back to the beginning by a sudden death. Another interesting feature of "Enclave" is should you die in the middle of a boss fight you are revived at the nearest checkpoint. The best part is that the boss does not start back at full life.

If this sounds too easy of a game for some, then turn up the difficulty and try it without the checkpoints and some added enemies. This game definitely has some great replay potential, with two completely different story lines and hidden characters to be unlocked. The only question now is which side will you choose?

Despite performance from Travolta, 'Basic' is lousy and lacks punch

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

'Basic'
Directed by John McTiernan
Starring John Travolta, Samuel L. Jackson
Columbia
Rated R
94 mins.

Movies have many functions. They are meant to entertain. They are meant to provoke thoughts and emotions. In some cases, they may even exist to toy with the audience, as long as the rewards are great enough for the effort expended. "Basic" is one of those movies that pulls the rug out from under the audience so often that the audience is left with nothing to stand on. There are so many twists here that it becomes a chore to even remember how the whole thing started.

"Basic" is all smoke, mirrors and nothing else. Its maze of reversals and contradictions isn't earned; it's nothing but a confusing tangle that in the end adds up to thin air. It takes its cues from the multileveled Japanese film "Rashomon," but the mystery here has no weight.

The movie opens in the hurricane soaked jungles of Panama, with the hard assed Sgt. Nathaniel West (Samuel L. Jackson, whose blustering acting style has official lapsed into self-parody) leading a team of Ranger trainees into the thick foliage on a training mission. Two of the men come back alive.

Tight-lipped Dunbar (Brian Van Holt) will only talk to another ranger; Kendall (an overreaching Giovanni Ribisi) is the son of a joint Chiefs of Staff member and mentions he's gay for no good reason to the plot.

Under fire DEA Agent, former Ranger and functioning alcoholic Tom Hardy (John Travolta) is called to question the two men alongside initially hostile base investigator Julia Osbourne (Connie Nielsen, succumbing to a bad Southern accent) and both get – surprise, surprise – conflicting testimony. To say anymore will spoil it for anyone foolish enough to think they can follow this plotline.

James Vanderbilt, the screenwriter, displays no respect for his own script. There is nothing wrong with playing with an audience, except for when the twists come this cheaply. "Basic" doesn't begin to hold up to logical scrutiny, and the more than plot ties itself into knots the faster it falls to pieces. This is a movie that gets off on its own cleverness. Yet it can't see the fact that it isn't so much clever as it is absurd.

There's plenty of decent stuff here: Travolta gives his best performance in years, charged with athletic charisma, and the give and take between Osbourne and Hardy has a dynamic jolt. Director John McTiernan (coming off the even more incoherent "Rollerball") shoots the movie with smooth assurance. The rest of the supporting cast (which includes Taye Diggs, Roselyn Sanchez and Harry Connick Jr) deliver solid performances. The problem here is the script, which reduces everything to "who cares" status. The movie seems to have 15 endings and never trusts its own central mystery. Why care for a movie's plot when no one else does either?

The plot of 'Basic' is anything but that. Despite a strong performance from John Travolta, 'Basic' fails to create any kind of mystery.

Collegian Book Review

Medieval 'Jester' charms

Patterson dazzles with solid story

BY JAKE D. LEWIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

'Jester'
By James Patterson and Andrew Gross
Little Brown and Company

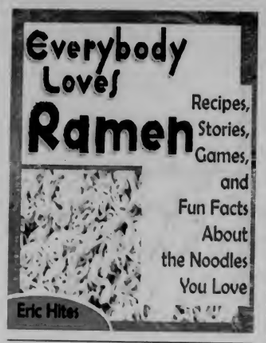
After 22 novels, 20 of which were some sort or another of present-day, murder, mystery/thriller, James Patterson has branched out with the new yarn "The Jester" (as predicted in my review of "Four Blind Mice," the bestseller which proceeded this one).

Patterson has attempted to write in other genres before. His first was a "Legend of Bagger Vance"-ish, magical tale called "Miracle of the 17th Green," but more recently, he penned a romantic novel that makes even Nicholas Sparks jealous, "Suzanne's Diary for Nicholas."

However, in the former example, he hadn't made a name yet for himself and was an author still trying to find his voice in the literary field, while the latter had a much smaller publicity campaign and printing and probably didn't even make it to the bookshelves of his more devoted fans. But with "The Jester," he includes action, adventure, drama, romance and comedy into one, and it's no wonder. The story is a mix between a legend right out of King Arthur's times, mixed with Patterson's prolific prose of mystery and mayhem.

After returning from fighting in the Crusades, innkeeper Hugh De Luc comes home to his village in the south of France to find his home burned to the ground, his son murdered and his wife kidnapped by a vicious gang of soldiers under the employ of his liege, Baldwin. He sets off to avenge this atrocity, taking on the guise of a jester in hopes to infiltrate the court of the evil ruler, win his affection, and then strike when the moment is right. (To those of you unfamiliar with medieval terminology, a jester was a "fool" or comedian of sorts whose sole purpose was to entertain the ruler, as well as the royal court.)

Dealing with The Crusades is no light subject, but Patterson does not let that intimidate him. He fills the book with some bloody good battle scenes that would rival a scene out of the film "Braveheart" or "Lord of the Rings." Indeed, this story could make a fine feature film, but the ending might need to be tweaked so it doesn't resemble one of those conclusions of out a Disney movie, where everything has worked out just perfectly.



However, Patterson goes to great lengths to stay true to the time period (made evident by a hearty list of research material included at book's end), but if this is the case, then a happily-ever-after does not fit with the rest of the text and the greater subject at large, The Crusades. While Patterson writes in an afterword to the book that it is merely a work of fiction, despite the mention of real names, places and things, he has to this point created realistic characters and scenarios. To have the ending be so darn sweet and tidy compromises some of the book's overall achievement.

It could be thanks to co-author Andrew Gross, or maybe just Patterson's blossoming talent, that the language used in the book seems so accurate to the times in which the novel is set. He includes vocabulary that sounds like it comes out a class taught on the Holy Grail, but still manages to keep his trademark style of two-page chapters and action that gets right to the point.

You don't have to be a fan of medieval literature to really enjoy this book, nor do you have to be a Patterson follower as well. There are elements here that are simply well done storytelling, plain and simple, and may open new doors to both his readers and for the author himself.

arts@dailycollegian.com

New noodle novel needs no nitpicking

BY JESSICA PELLETIER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

'Everybody Love Ramen'
By Eric Hites
Andrews McMeel Publishing

At some point or another during "the college experience," we've all done it. And there are those who either regret having to do what they've done or who proudly endorse this universally known product. No, it isn't herbal refreshment. It's ramen noodles.

As a child, I remember oodles of noodles as a much requested form of nourishment. And, of course, there's nothing a six year old needs more than a bowl full of carbs and sodium... except maybe caffeine and sugar. An unfortunate side effect of this diet has left many of us with no desire to consume the noodle-broth if at all possible.

That's when Eric Hites charges in from left field with his new book "Everybody Loves Ramen" and shifts into third gear with the nostalgic meal in the driver's seat. The final product is a collection of "recipes, stories, games and fun facts about the noodles you love."

Hites decided to write this book when he was in college and on a tight budget. The Terre Haute, Indiana author is now the president of Hites Design Studios. Probably the most repeated sentiment throughout the novel is the idea of sharing the recipes with friends and making memories with one another. His lengthy dedication at the beginning of his book makes it clear that the author is eternally grateful to his friends and family for their help in this project. The self-proclaimed "noodle guru" tugs his reader along and presents a gigantic array of ramen recipes.

Andrews McMeel Publishing is aiming at a target demographic that is no further away than a poorly furnished dorm room. The copy I received came adorned with a graduation cap sticker with the suggestion that this was the "perfect gift for the graduate." And while this book is an informative and inventive glimpse into various ramen recipes, I think phone cards and money are still at the top of every graduate's wish list. But for those wishing to humor their graduates, just remember ramen sold separately.

There're recipes of all sorts. Look for Elvis's Fav' Gravy Ramen, which relies on browning sauce and flour to provide a thick sauce instead of watery broth. Or prepare for Upstream Salmon Ramen, which includes cream cheese, julienne carrots and two cans of cooked, drained salmon. Alongside these interesting variations on what would otherwise be a very boring meal is a page where chefs can record the time and place when they first prepared their meals as well as any special memories associated with the event.

Throughout the book are little anecdotes from persons who swear an undying devotion to ramen noodles. One of the most interesting comes from a woman named Elaida T. who writes, "When I was a kid, I used to bring ramen to school. I would pour the flavoring on uncooked noodles and eat them. A lot of the kids did this, until one day someone started a rumor that you could get worms eating them that way. From then on, we were not allowed to do that at school. I still wonder who had made up that story." Sad words from a sad woman.

Another adorable addition to the format is the presence of a crossword puzzle, word search and an anagram game. Because what else are you going to do while your water begins to boil? The font and page design give the book a funky feel (oh god, did I just use those words?) and keeps the visuals interesting.

So if you happen to be a connoisseur of noodle soups or you're just hungry and looking for a quick pick me up, let Hites be your guide through the fabulously frugal world of college dining and soon you too may become a ramen-iac like the rest of us.

University of Hartford
Summerterm 2003
Earn 3 credits in 3 weeks
Open to students attending any college or university
Ideal for those wishing to begin their college experience
• Two convenient sessions
• Small, focused classes
• Choose from 400+ courses
call today 860-768-4978
Mark Your Calendars
Session I begins May 21
Session II starts July
Register Online
www.hartford.edu/summerterm

A gig you can bank on.
Local supermarket branches are seeking:
Bankers
(Selling products, providing customer service, and processing transactions)
Call 1-877-INAISLE to apply today.
Where there's a Citizens Bank supermarket branch, there's a unique opportunity for you to market your sales skills on the floor. How? Simply by approaching in-aisle shoppers to sell our great products and services. With variable schedules including evening and weekend hours and great benefits for full-time and part-time employees, it's as easy as freshly baked pie.
CITIZENS BANK
Not your typical bank
www.citizensbank.com/employment
Citizens Bank is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer committed to building a diverse workforce. M/F/D/V

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
UMass Boston
Looking for Summer Learning? We've Got It Right Here.
There's more to summer at UMass Boston than you might realize. You can study anything from James Joyce to Java, go abroad for programs in political science or archaeology, or take one of more than 40 online courses. The instruction is outstanding, the fees are affordable, and the campus is a great place to be in the summertime. Why go anywhere else?
Quality
• A distinguished faculty
• Up-to-date facilities
Variety
• 500+ courses
• International programs
• Field study on Nantucket
Convenience
• Morning, afternoon, evening, and online courses
• Easily accessible campus
• Off-campus courses in Plymouth
Value
• Fee for a 3-credit course is just $495 (undergraduate) or $540 (graduate), plus service fees
UMASS BOSTON
Registration Opens April 7
Classes Start May 27, June 30, July 14
To learn more, visit www.umb.edu
or call 617.287.6000

STUDENT TRAVEL
start packing!
LONDON for $258
EURAIL PASSES from $249
HIP HOTELS from $18
(domestic and international)
explore north america
USA • CANADA • HAWAII
backpacking, cruises, tours and more
don't miss your big BREAK
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
pick up your complimentary, premiere issue of BREAK magazine at your local sta travel branch.
www.statravel.com STA TRAVEL
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

PLAN AHEAD FOR NEXT YEAR
Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas
Voted Best! 2001 By The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145

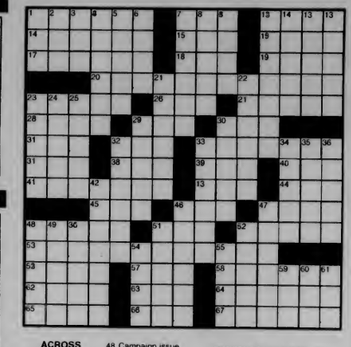
LOVE YOUR BODY WEEK
MARCH 31 - APRIL 6, 2003
EVENTS
• CAMPUS CENTER TABLES • Monday through Thursday, 10:00-2:00 Featuring: You Can't Change Your Genes
• NUTRITION PROGRAM • Getting in Shape. Learn to eat healthy. Campus Center, room 903 Wednesday April 2, at 7:00-9:00 p.m.
• MOVIE: RECOVERING BODIES • This is a movie about college student's problems with food and the process of recovery. UMass cable TV April 1 at 8:00 p.m., April 2 at 7:30 p.m. and April 3 at 7:00 p.m.
• FULLY ALIVE FASHION SHOW • a celebration of beauty in all body sizes. Fashion Show, Sunday, April 6, 1:00-3:00 p.m. Academy of Music, Northampton. Ticket prices are $10 adults, $7 students/children
• ALEXANDRA BELLER, MODERN DANCE CONCERT • Thursday, April 3 and Friday, April 4, at 8:00 p.m., Mount Holyoke College. Tickets available through UMass Fine Arts Center box office.
• MOVIE: "REAL WOMEN HAVE CURVES" • Friday, April 4 and Saturday April 5 at the Pleasant Street Theater
• POETRY READING BY AUTHOR SUSAN STINSON • Works offering positive portrayals of large women. Saturday, April 12, 8:00 p.m. Free to the public at Beyond Words Bookstore, Northampton.

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

JAYHOO AND JAYHOO • By Matt Medley

THE PEPPER PADDIDLE EXPLOSION • By Wes Eckhoff



THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • By Dennis Gordon

THE TORQUES • By Kris Dresen

ACROSS
1 Outback marsupial
7 Big rigs' radios
10 Wheel joiner
14 Moonshot mission
15 Sitcom planet
16 Hat attachment
17 Endure
18 Stooge with bangs
19 "—Christie"
20 Tasty fish (2 wds.)
23 Motor coaches
26 Furniture wood
27 Salon offering
28 Heron kin
29 LL.D. holder
30 Ad — committee
31 Egg drink
32 Playing marble
33 Reduced
37 Block, as a stream
38 Actress — Thurman
39 Fiesta shout
40 Corroded, as acid
41 Validated
43 Thicken
44 Fraternity letter
45 Gorilla
46 Double curve
47 Ticket info
48 Campaign issue
51 Southeast Asian
52 Trite
53 Big dog (2 wds.)
56 "The Mammoth Hunters" heroine
57 Bed-and-breakfast
58 Kilt wearer's son
62 Help in a crime
63 Standoff
64 Occurrences
65 Yield territory
66 Conclusion
67 Treaty ratifier

DOWN
1 Kids' card game
2 Cockney's optimism?
3 May honoree
4 Dins
5 Pseudonym
6 Writer — Morrison
7 Fight against
8 Creek
9 Twist
10 Greed
11 Rare gas
12 Charlie Brown's pal
13 Make glad
21 Fair (2 wds.)
22 Spade
23 Tough spots
24 WWII sub (hyph.)
25 Frat letter
29 Actress Anouk —
30 Pits
32 Henson creation
33 Enters cyberspace (2 wds.)
34 Indy competitor
35 Patriot — Allen
36 Zeus or Odin
42 Tycoon
46 Held down a job
47 Wet
48 Asimov of sci-fi
49 Possibly
50 Caught cold
51 Soviet founder
52 Hunger for 54 Tang
55 Malt beverages
59 Molecular biology topic
60 Addams Family cousin
61 Wind dir.

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

E	T	A	T		O	A	S	I	S		R	T	E	S
T	A	D	A		U	S	U	R	P		A	E	R	O
C	R	O	C		F	A	M	E	R		C	R	I	T
H	O	S	T	A	S			N	A	P	K	I	N	S
			I	S	M		M	E	T	E
A	R	M	C	H	A	I	R			T	I	A	R	A
D	O	E		R	I	N			E	I	L	M	E	R
A	T	L	A	N	T	A		P	E	R	K	I	N	G
G	O	O	S	E			L	E	X		G	E	O
E	R	N	I	E			P	I	P	E	D	O	W	N
			D	A	Y	S		O	V	O
P	I	C	A	S	S	O		H	E	M	A	R	K
L	O	A	N		F	U	G	I	T		A	L	I	E
O	T	T	O		E	V	O	K	E		S	A	L	E
P	A	S	S		N	E	V	E	R		K	I	L	N

1-29-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"And it's the day we do the things that we deplore / On the other three hundred and sixty-four..."
- "Topsy Turvy" from Disney's "Hunchback of Notre Dame"

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
You will accidentally end a phone conversation with your roommate today with an "I love you."

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
You are about to get those great shoes you have wanted for so long. Good things come to those who wait.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Hey, hurry up with finding a job already! You're moving at three speeds: slow, stop, and reverse.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Your mom will stop paying your tution after seeing your away message. "Out getting wizzasted with my bizzoys!!!"

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
If you ever reach total enlightenment while drinking beer, I'll bet it makes beer shoot out your nose.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You'll receive some last-minute information today, which may require you to change your plans.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You'll receive a surprise gift today from someone who has been looking out for you.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Tell your partner your that fun idea you had, and it will come true, even if it does include something with a sink.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You have to reduce the incidence of surprise today if you are going to enjoy any real confidence.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You'll very likely hear about something today that is fast approaching.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You can afford to be a little different today – but make sure not to keep the change.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You have to slay a few dragons to get to the princess. Once you bury a beast, the only way is up.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

TUESDAY
• High: 43
• Low:28

WEDNESDAY
• High: 54
• Low: 33

THURSDAY
• High: 55
• Low: 35

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Yankee Corn Chowder
• BBQ Pork Sandwich
• Hungarian Noodle Bake
• (vegetarian)
• Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
• Yankee Corn Chowder
• Chicken Pot Pie
• Boston Scrod
• Native American Stew (vegan)
• Jamaican 3-Beans (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andy Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Eric Soderstrom
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Jennifer DiMeglio
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lloyd / Gerry Auger

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

New York City trip sponsored by Commuter Area Government April 5th and 6th overnight $50 per includes Hotel Commuter for more details or to sign up come to 428 Student Union or call 545-0865.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Term Paper Editing! Editing performed by professors and graduate students
Visit us at www.papercheck.com or call us toll free 866-693-EDIT

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups: Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filing quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundriaser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com.

Sororities! Help Promote American Idol throw viewing parties at your house and earn $350 e-mail Jennifer D at Zilo.com for more info

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer sublet w/ all utilities included. 2 Bedroom Apt. Cliffside in sunderland. All utilities included on Bus route 1-413-665-9333 only $820/month.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? COME TO THE COMPLEX FAIR, WED APRIL 9, 10 TO 3 ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE. SPONSORED BY COMMUTER SERVICES, 428 STUDENT UNION
WWW.CSURC.ORG

FREE DELL COMPUTER OR UP TO $1000 IN SAVINGS WHEN YOU MOVE_IN Delux 2 bedroom apartments FREE HEAT & HOT WATER Plenty of free, on site parking Minutes from UMass-On free busline CALL SUGARLOAF ESTATES 413-665-3856 Visit us at sugarloafestates.com *limited time offer

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherst-stlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherst-stlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Honda Accord LX 1992 Great Shape $1500 obo 413-253-1456

COMPUTER

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise line entry level on board positions or yearround. 941-329-6434 cruisecareers.com

RENT US YOUR EARS! $5 for a half hour of listening Call 545-6837 Leave Message

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet,

EMPLOYMENT

Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392.

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available. Raises commensurate with performance, potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

EMPLOYMENT

FOR SALE

Love seat for sale - $30 call 546-2457

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom plus Newer house minutes from UMass $2700/month 548-8800

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

PERSONALS

Think your neighbors are sexy? Can they sing? Do they dance? We get it all in Alpine Commons. Check out The Next Door Boys, known for their hit single "No Shoes, No Panties." For one night, Jeff, Paul, Nick and Mark could be your neighbors. Now booking for private parties. Call the Eri's.

RENTAL PROBLEMS

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about Subletting,assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

STS America's number one student tour operator is now hiring on-campus reps 2003-04 18006484849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break with STS, America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lasme to leave UMass

Freshman wants to play the point

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

The 2002-03 Massachusetts men's basketball season was a failure on most counts.

The team finished 11-18, its worst since a 10-18 record in 1988-89 was bounced from the first round of the conference playoffs for the first time in since the 1980-81 season and saw attendance drop to scary-low numbers.

But UMass coach Steve Lappas and Athletic Director Ian McCaw were able to consistently point to the bright future of the team, as evidenced by strong first-season's from Lappas' first recruiting class: freshmen Mike Lasme, Gabe Lee and Jeff Viggiano.

But according to Lappas on Monday, Lasme has asked for his release and will transfer to another school at the end of the spring semester.

Lasme played in 27 games this season and became the starting shooting guard in December. Despite playing through a broken wrist and elbow and ankle injuries the Abidjan, Ivory Coast, native managed 7.5 points, 3.1 rebounds and 2.6 assists per game. His 27.5 minutes per game were second on the team, but that is less the problem.

Sophomore Anthony Anderson led the team with 36.1 minutes per game at point guard. Lasme's natural position and the one he believes is vital to his chances of making the National Basketball Association.

"Mike believes that in order to play in the NBA he needs to play point guard on a full-time basis," Lappas said. "I told him that he could easily compete for that position in our program.

"He chose not to compete for it, so he will move on," Lappas added. "I expect he will try to find a situation that better fits his vision of what is important."

Anderson, who won last year's A-10 Rookie of the Year Award, finished second on this year's team with 11.8 points per game. He also led the team with 5.5 assists.

Lasme's departure will open up significant playing time in the backcourt next season.

Artie Bowers, a 6-foot-4 high school senior from New Jersey, has signed a letter of intent with UMass. Ranked the 52nd best high school senior in the nation by ESPN, Bowers is currently the highest-ranked recruit signed by an A-10 school.

Also competing for time will be senior Marcus Cox, who transferred from Connecticut and debuted with the Minutemen this season after sitting out the 2001-02 year. Cox averaged 4.8 points and 1.9 assists last year, but lost the starting job to Lasme.

Lappas is currently recruiting two more shooting guards: Austin Montgomery from Indianapolis, Ind. and Maurice Maxwell from Philadelphia.

Mike Lasme has opted out of the maroon and white. The freshman guard wishes to play point guard full-time and is currently looking for a school with that opportunity.

Holtz earns a second honor

University of Massachusetts senior pitcher Kaila Holtz was named the Atlantic 10 Softball Pitcher of the Week the conference office announced this afternoon. This marks the second straight citation for the Minutewoman ace.

Last Friday against La Salle, Holtz threw her fourth career no-hitter while striking out 10 in a 4-0 win. The only base runner allowed by Holtz reached via a passed ball on a strikeout in the first inning. She helped out her own cause at the plate, going 1-4 with a home run and two RBI.

Holtz is now 8-6 this season with a team-low 1.15 ERA. She has fanned 73 batters in 97.1 innings while holding opponents to a .198 batting average.

Holtz and the Minutewomen (17-10, 4-0 A-10) will host Maine for a doubleheader at the UMass Softball Complex on Wednesday, April 2 at 2:30 p.m. This is UMass' first home game of the 2003 season.

Uliano named A-10 Performer of the Week

University of Massachusetts senior shot putter Eric Uliano was honored as the Atlantic 10 track and field performer of the week, the league office announced today.

In his first outing of the season at last weekend's North Carolina State's adidas Releigh Relays, Uliano finished seventh in the shot put with a mark of 53-8 1/2. That performance was a personal best, ranks as the third-best mark in school history and is the best effort by an A-10 performer in the shot this season. In addition, Uliano's throw was an NCAA Regional qualifying performance.

Uliano and the Minutemen return to New England for the Southern Connecticut State Invitational, Saturday, April 5, at New Haven, Conn.

Last year, UMass won the six-team meet by 16 points over the host school.

UMass alum lands with Red Sox

The Boston Red Sox today acquired North Adams, Mass., native Ryan Cameron from the Colorado Rockies as the player to be named in the March 18 deal that sent lefthander Javier Lopez to Colorado.

The 25-year-old is 29-29 with a 4.03 ERA in five minor league seasons. He has struck out 485 in 457.1 career minor league innings, an average of 9.5 strikeouts per nine innings. Cameron has held opponents to a .241 average and only 37 homers in 457.1 innings, an average of just one long ball every 12.4 innings.

The 6-foot-1, 170-pounder spent nearly all of 2002 with the Rockies' Double-A Carolina affiliate, going 5-7 with a 3.76 ERA in 57 games (15 starts). He ranked second in the Southern League with 139 strikeouts and seventh in ERA. As a reliever, Cameron held opposing batters to a .181 average, going 2-1 with a 2.90 ERA in 22 appearances.

He made a spot start for Triple-A Colorado Springs May 11, 2002 vs. Sacramento, and joined the major league club for the Hall of Fame Exhibition Game in Cooperstown, NY July 29, working 2.0 innings against the White Sox.

Cameron pitched in the Arizona Fall League following the 2002 campaign, finishing 1-3 with a 3.58 ERA in 17 relief appearances. He struck out 45 in 27.2 innings, an average of 14.6 K's per nine innings.

Cameron, who now lives in Williamstown, Mass., pitched for UMass from 1996-98, and was drafted by the Rockies in 11th round of the 1998 First-Year Player Draft.

He is one of eight former Minutemen currently playing professional baseball, joining Doug Clark, Nick Gorneault, Greg LaRocca, Nate Murphy, Chad Paronto, Craig Szado and Ron Villone.

Transfer leads in series win

By Andrew Merrett
Collegian Staff

When Matt Reynolds transferred to UMass from Maine, he was listed simply as a backup to senior Jeff Altieri at first base. But a move to third base is making waves at the junior went 5-for-9 with two runs batted in to help the Massachusetts baseball team (6-9 overall, 3-3 Atlantic 10) take the final pair of games in a three-game set with La Salle.

Reynolds went 3-for-4 in the first game yesterday, which was the first inning continuation of a game shortened after four innings earlier the Minutemen rode the performance to a 6-3 win over the Explorers.

Reynolds followed up with two more hits including a double, as UMass took the third game of the series 9-6. Altieri added two hits and a pair of RBIs to solidify the victory giving the Maroon and White a .500 record in the A-10.

The second game saw lefthander Eric Chown earn what had to be one of the ugliest victories of his career, giving up five runs on 12 hits. Both teams had a pair of three-run innings for the Maroon and White in the fourth and seventh, and La Salle in the first and sixth.

The Minutemen scored at least one run in three of the last four frames, and the tandem of relievers Jason Hickey and Scott Ratliff shut the Explorers down for three scoreless innings to preserve the UMass victory.

After taking a 4-2 lead in the first four innings of play in the middle game of the series, the teams were forced to sleep on it when the clouds opened up. The delay left La Salle with two outs and a runner on base in the bottom of the fifth inning. Maroon and White pitcher Keith Doherty started the next day cold, giving up two walks before coach Mike Stone brought Anthony Gallo in to finish off the game.

Gallo fit the bill, and gave up a run and two hits in 2 2/3 innings of work to earn the save, his first of the season. Doherty's win was also his first of the season, bringing him to 1-2 on the year.

It was also the first conference loss for the Explorers, who beat the Minutemen 9-8 in the first game of the series.

In the opener, right-fielder Ryan Parfitt went 2 for-5 with three runs scored and one RBI, and reliever Eric Ruhland provided two strong innings of stopping power to hold the Minutemen off. It was Ruhland's third save of the year, and it gave starter Bryan Harvey his own ugly win, bringing him to 2-2 on the season.

UMass freshman Matt Torra struggled through 4 2/3 innings, giving up six earned runs on five hits and five walks. Scott Ratliff earned the loss in relief, though, after giving up the winning run on a sacrifice fly by La Salle centerfielder Steve Harris.

The Explorers took the lead for good with a fifth inning parade that saw five La Salle batters receive free passes, and the Blue and Gold scored four runs on one hit.

The Minutemen nearly chased back with three runs in the final two innings, but it wasn't enough.

Next up for UMass is Sacred Heart, which strolls into town today with a 6-9 record. The Pioneers are coming off a 3-1 win over Rhode Island, in which pitcher Lee Nastu scattered five hits and struck out one in a complete-game victory.

The last time the two teams met, UMass defeated the Pioneers 8-6 in Fairfield on March 14, 2002.

Controversy surrounds Minutewomen's loss

By Ari Jankelowitz
Collegian Staff

With a little over two minutes left to go in the game and the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team down by one a foul was called near the substitution area. But due to what coach Carrie Bolduc called "slack 4-fits, tuned rules" the clock was allowed to run for 55 seconds before play actually started.

According to the rules if there is a foul before the two minute mark the clock is allowed to run

Hofstra	9	down," said Bolduc, who was visibly upset after the game. "But there is also a rule about the restraining line. When if there is a foul around that area time is stopped. The referees also should realize that this was a game changing situation. Instead they actually set up the girls and we lost 30 seconds."
UMass	8

When play finally resumed, UMass achieved possession and had an opportunity to tie the game at nine, but Hofstra goalie Megan Greene, a native of Maryland, stopped the Minutewomen at the doorstep of the cage with a stick save.

After the save, only 30 seconds remained in the game and Hofstra ran out the clock for the victory.

Pride midfielder Kathleen Mikowski scored in the first minute of the game and Hofstra went on to run 9-8 in a back and forth thriller.

Mikowski is an offensive machine, having scored 22 goals in the first six games of the season. Her two goals Monday upped that to 24.

"We wanted to have someone else besides Mikowski scoring all our goals," Hofstra coach Shelly Klaes-Bowcomb said. "The game plan was team oriented."

Team oriented they were, with Becky Thorn (two), Tara Beucker, Jamie Rabbiano, Melissa Hedrick, and Catherine Guenette all contributing goals. Mikowski, according to Klaes-Bowcombe, "had five or six assists."

The Minutewomen (5-4, 1-0 A-10) struggled in the first half, falling into a 6-4 deficit midway through the game.

"We have a trend to fall behind early and play catch up during the game," Bolduc said. "We didn't start the game the minute it started. The first 20 minutes didn't go our way and we fell behind 4-0 early. Sometimes we can't overcome an early deficit."

Despite Lydia Robinson's four goals, three coming in the first half, the Minutewomen could not defeat a physical Hofstra team.

Cyndi Doyle had a lukewarm performance in goal. A play that summed up her day was a goal that occurred with 20:04 left to play in the second half.

Hofstra's Thorn took a shot that bounced off Doyle's stick 15 feet in the air. There appeared to be some outside force acting on the ball, as it dropped directly behind Doyle and bounced into the goal. That allowed Hofstra to tie the game at seven and eventually win.

That was followed by another goal from Thorn that put Hofstra up by one, 8-7.

With 6:50 left in the game UMass' Kerri Connerty tied the game up at eight and it appeared that the Maroon and White might pull off the comeback, but Mikowski sealed the deal with her only goal with 5:47 left.

"Fortunately for us it was not an A-10 game," Bolduc said. "We need to move on, get some rest, and get fired up for Friday's game against Temple."

The women's lacrosse team lost a heartbreaking 9-8 decision to Hofstra yesterday on a controversial call.

– Courtesy Associated Press and UMass Media Relations

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

NOT YOUR OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The war is not about oil; it's all about sexual tension

There is much speculation about what the war in Iraq is all about. Some say it's for the liberation of the Iraqi people; others for oil and some claim it's George W. Bush trying to get revenge on Sadaam Hussein for trying to kill his daddy.

But we at The Collegian know what it's really about. So let's talk about sex.

One of the greatest philosophers of our time George Carlin, was the first to openly recognize this tension in 1991. Carlin, in his infinite wisdom thought it was interesting that the war was being led by two men whose names were Bush and Dick. Twelve years later, not much has changed, adding to the duo, Colin.

Bush, Dick, and Colin.

The reason this war started was because the United States was jealous that Iraq could he hiding bigger weapons. Weapons that could cause mass destruction. Weapons that could send load upon load of debris shooting extended distances. This was a bit too much for Bush to handle, as it would be the biggest tragedy in history if anyone else had larger weapons than he did with more extended capabilities than he did. Perhaps it was a bit too much for the Iraqi people as well.

Saddam was rather protective of his big weapon and didn't want anyone to see it. When weapons inspectors got close; Saddam squealed like a little schoolgirl for them to move away. Saddam's weapons were not going to be devirginized by some wacky U.N. weapons inspectors who were only after his junk because they were jealous. Saddam's weapons package was being saved for someone special. Though he was tempted and who wouldn't be, when courted by the biggest porn star in Europe, Hans Blix. Nevertheless, Sadaam protected his precious weapon. Bush decided he must be playing hard to get, and that he should give Sadaam what he really wants. The United States decides that it's going to liberate the Iraqis and give them some democratic protection. If this isn't all about some kind of bizarre sexual innuendo, we don't know what is.

Not to mention all the phallic symbols that, have been parading across the television screens of America. Tanks with big guns, big missiles, small missiles, the towers of mosques, lots of large burly men running around in uniforms grunting at each other. And what better color to get everyone "in the mood" than night vision green.

It makes us at The Collegian want to pop in a Barry White CD. And of course there's been a media blitz to cover this soap opera; it's like masturbation for the American public. The media knows that sex sells, and baby, is the public eating out their coverage. And it's not going to be over until Bush tells those troops to pull out.

So don't let the media, your professors, Bush, Dick, or Colin tell you that the war is about other things like international security, oil or any of that other mumbo-jumbo. It's all about the size of your Dick Cheney and his penetration.

Unsigned editorials represent the unfulfilled desires of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page and in today's paper are part of our April Fools edition. So have a laugh and lighten up!

It feels so good to be a protester

Candlepin Lovestar

So I was walking to class a couple weeks ago, and I was listening to the two people in front of me talk. They weren't speaking English, but I thought I heard one of them say, "war." I hadn't watched the news in a few months, but they looked like pretty smart kids, so I knew this was serious. I stopped in my steps, ran back to my room and pulled out my old box of tie-dye shirts; it was protest time!

That afternoon, I was talking to one of my friends who heard from her friend who heard from her boyfriend that we were going to war with Iraq. We both decided that something needed to be done and agreed to meet at 7 p.m. Before she came over, I sat down and wrote some morbid poetry about death so that I could show her later that night and maybe even recite at the anti-war poetry reading the next night. One of the guys I have a crush on runs these poetry readings, and that's really the only reason I go. On a side note, I think it's really sexy that he doesn't shower.

When my friend finally arrived, I noticed we were both wearing the same long flowery skirt. We thought it would make a great statement if we made "No blood for oil" shirts out of recycled cotton with blood red paint splattered on them. While we were making the shirts, my friend pointed out that our skirts had a little bit of red in them. Since we didn't want our clothes to match, and we needed to buy supplies anyway, we got in her car and drove to the mall. We bought stuff like wood, paint, markers and those really cool inspirational anti-war tapes that were on sale for $20.

As we were paying for our stuff, I noticed a cute boy with long hair down to his knees and a big peace sign shirt staring at us. He came over and asked if we needed help with our bags. At her car, the cute guy asked if him and his friend could come with us. My friend and I looked at each other and smiled. "Any friend of peace is a friend of ours," we both said cheerfully. At that moment, his brother approached the car. He was wearing torn jeans and an Abercrombie and Fitch sweatshirt. When we got in the car, I turned around and asked his friend what his thoughts were on the war with Iraq. He looked at me and said, "Damn war. I am all about peace, and I will be at every protest with you guys." I turned back around and stared blankly in front of me. If he is a true protestor, why was he wearing an Abercrombie and Fitch sweatshirt?

"If he is a true protestor, why was he wearing an Abercrombie and Fitch sweatshirt?"

That night we made a bunch of cool signs and pamphlets. I already decided I wasn't going to go to any of my classes until the war was over. I also decided that since I wasn't going to go to my classes, no one else should either. With the help of my fellow protestors, we decided that blocking the Student Union halls would be the best way to do this. That night, we all got stoned, listened to Bob Marley and talked about how cool the world would be if everyone was naked all the time. Then we practiced new yoga meditations and tried to find our Chi's, anticipating our first organized walkout.

The next day, at one of our rallies, I looked around me, and I couldn't help but smile. I was still pretty fucked up from the night before, but that was only half of the reason I was smiling. On my left, I saw my friends screaming and holding up signs. On my right, I noticed that one of my fellow protestors was scaring the shit out of the girl scouts with his gas mask. And as I slammed my pamphlets into another student's face, I thought to myself, damn, it feels good to be a protestor.

Candlepin Lovestar loves being a protestor and can be found playing the bongos and tambourine outside of PVTA bus stops all over the Pioneer Valley.

Attending dinner at Camp David with the Bush family

Pimpbot

This past weekend, I was honored to join the presidential family for a world class gourmet meal at Camp David. These "Bush Powwows," as my hosts kept referring to them, take place fairly often. They're a means of keeping a certain level of cohesiveness among a clan that is otherwise dispersed across the United States, regionally representing their coveted surname. It is all the untamed independence of the Kennedy brood they maintain that is allowing them to slowly oust the Massachusetts family from their once untouchable position as America's version of royalty. President Bush joked, however, that his family should actually be considered America's dynasty, because what they lack in grace they make up for with results.

I sat down to dinner at a regal, crystal and silver adorned table with President George W. Bush, first lady Laura Bush, former President George Bush, former first lady Barbara Bush, Florida governor Jeb Bush and the President's fraternal twin daughters Jenna and Barbara. Much to my surprise, it was not our nation's President sitting in the captain's chair at the head of the table, but his father, who had retired as leader of the free world over a decade ago. The power dynamic between the two leaders became strikingly clear as they discussed the current war in Iraq.

"What's the story with Saddam? He was supposed to be taken care of by the end of Shock and Awe," Bush Sr. asked his son.

"I've got Rumsfeld on it," the President answered. "It's turning out to be tougher than expected."

"I better see some results, or Jeb will be President in 2004," Bush Sr. demanded.

Soon the wait staff appeared, dressed to the 90s, and the business conversation digressed toward a family banter that could be considered anything but conventional. Barbara asked her granddaughters how college was going. Younger Barbara, who attends Yale, explained that school is going okay, but that anti-war protestors have been putting a damper on her fun.

"You better not be having too much fun," Bush Sr. interjected. "You are on deck for this family. There are no more Georges after your dad."

"I know," younger Barbara sighed.

"Let's not forget that a Yale alumnus at this table used to have a snorting problem. Don't do anything worse then smoke marijuana," George Sr. demanded.

"Am I on deck too?" Jenna asked.

"No, sweetie," George Sr. explained. "Remember when we discussed that you will become a trophy wife to an influential politician? Hone your skills down at the University of Texas, but keep it light and breezy."

After finishing a grand meal of filet minion and a dessert of Texas Best Red Velvet Cake, Bush Sr. informed me that it was time to attend the caucus. This agenda was kept hidden from my dinner invitation, but I expressed my gratitude to the women and followed the President, George Sr. and Jeb into an elevator and down to a door with a plaque that read, "The Secret Republican Lair." Three heavy hitting Republicans were already there: Mitt Romney, C. Montgomery Burns and Count Chocula.

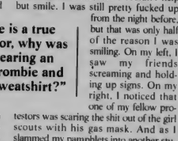
"I'm glad y'all made it," Bush Sr. greeted them. "We must discuss current events. I want to see Iraq renamed "America Junior" before I die."

"I thought Canada was "America Junior," Burns said puzzled.

"Didn't you get the newsletter? We are calling Canada "America's Hat" now. It makes so much more sense."

"France is being such a little bitch," Count Chocula added.

"I am confident that we are taking a step in the right direction with Operation Freedom Fries," the President stated. "Operation Freedom Kiss is on the way. We have to convince Eminem to use the phrase in a song."



"Vice President Dick Cheney was relaxing in some sort of Tupperware-like preservation chamber."

"Just don't ask the Dixie Chicks!" Romney exclaimed. "They suck!"

The President then got up and walked over to what appeared to be a seven foot glass capsule, and knocked on the door. "Sorry to disturb your longevity treatment, Dick, but we are having a caucus." Vice President Dick Cheney was relaxing in some sort of Tupperware-like preservation chamber. It soon became clear why he has not been in the public eye for ages. He was in a race against nature not to disintegrate.

The men behind our government went on to discuss future plans for our nation. They were hard to follow, but I gathered that in the future most of frat row at the University of Massachusetts will be sold on EBay and that a casino would be built in its place. I had a wonderful time at Camp David with the Bush family, and it was almost as wild as the time Chelsea Clinton took me to a nudie bar.

Pimpbot is a guest political columnist who likes to write about his experiences with politicians. This weekend he will be uptown with Bulger to see if he can find out where Whitey really is.

Invading Canada instead of Iraq: Good idea, bad idea?

Let's get those Mounties

Johnny Donaldson

I am sick of these liberal hippies that populate our bright, cement-covered campus. They gather in rallies and sing chants of "No Blood for Syrup." They say our much-needed preventive war on our Canadian neighbors to the north is unjustified. I say they are wrong. In fact, I will go so far as to say they are idiots. And they are stupid.

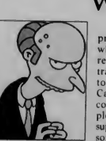
Everyone should just shut up and kneel at the altar of our glorious leader, George W. Bush. This man only has our best interests, and the best interests of Canada at heart. Who would want to live in a frigid, barren landscape under the thumb of an insidious government that subjects its citizens to cruel reruns of "Kids In the Hall?" Who watches "Kids In the Hall" anyway? I'll tell you who. The kinds of people likely to commit mass murder. In my book, any American who watches "Kids in the Hall" is a traitor to this great, proud land of ours.

These liberal hippies buy into damn liberal rhetoric about the reasons why we are going into war. They call Bush, God bless his soul, a moron and question his every idea, when they know deep down he is a genius. They ask why we don't invade other countries – first saying they are worse than Canada can ever be. For example, they cite Iraq as a prime country to invade with the reasoning that Saddam Hussein has chemical weapons and stuff like that. Well, Iraq doesn't have Celine Dion, and it isn't a hop, skip and a jump away from Buffalo. Come on, why fight countries like Iraq, Iran, Fiji and other axis of evil countries when Canada is so much closer to our borders?

What are these liberal hippies going to say when the Royal Mounties invade our borders and start killing their families? Are they going to lie back, protest and say "aboot" and "ehh?" Are they still going to lie down in the middle of the road, smeared in maple syrup? God, if I see one more person eating a maple candy...

America is the best country in the world; no country is better than this one. Yet here's Canada, trying to be like us. They're even co-opting our musical styles, allowing Shania Twain to sing the America-created song style of country western. How dare a Canadian sing country! It's obscene!

Yet, here are the students on this campus holding rallies to protest this war, when they should be supporting the troops who are risking their lives to maintain America's stranglehold on the world. They won't even begin to listen to the very good reasons why we are bombing innocent civilians in Ontario. When Bush says that a country is evil and holding a stockpile of dangerous biological weapons, then he must be right. So what if Colin Powell forged or stole his proof – drastic situations call for drastic measures. Bush and his cabinet aid convince those liberal hippies in the U.N. to support an invasion of Canada. But no, France won't help us, because they think we should use diplomacy. Since when has diplomacy ever solved anything anyway? Everyone knows that macho, mindless, violent aggression is the solution to all life's problems (well, that and alcohol.) Besides, the French would just surrender anyway.



"What are these liberal hippies going to say when the Royal Mounties invade our borders and start killing their families?"

The Canadians are already everywhere in America. There could be another William Shatner sitting next to you as we speak. Doesn't having a person of a different culture and belief system next to you make you uneasy? It does me. Why can't they abide by our culture? Our culture's the best, and they should know it. And I don't want to risk being infected with Canadian smallpox to live my life.

Canada has sat above us all this time, and no one has done anything about it. God, imagine what America could do with the country after we boot that tyrant Jean Chretien from office. These liberal hippies should shut up and watch the unbiased conservative coverage on Fox News Channel for the real scoop. Then after being immersed in stories about the evils of Canada and the heroism of the soldiers, they'll realize the necessity of the shock and awe campaign on Ottawa. Who are you going to believe, a liberal hippie who says they know world politics or the leaders of our beautiful land.

Johnny Donaldson loves maple syrup.

War for syrup is wrong

Gilad Skolnick

I think it's pretty clear why our current administration wants to invade Canada. They come up with plenty of superficial reasons to try to justify a war with our northern neighbors, but they steer clear of the true reason. Bush wants to go into Canada for the Maple Syrup, and I think it's time we speak up.

Canada, the second biggest country in the world, has an astonishing maple syrup reserve. While the U.S. has some in Vermont and possibly a bit in Maine, Canada has hundreds and hundreds of miles of maple trees just full with maple syrup. In fact, a recent U.N. study determined that Canada holds the world's largest maple syrup reserves. The sad fact is that we Americans have become desperately reliant on this maple syrup. Most of us panic, coughing and choking when there is no syrup to be put on our pancakes, "liberty toast," hash browns, and other such American delicacies. For years, we've been consuming this delicious syrup with no regard for the supply, and with our current rate of wood consumption, it won't be long before we run out of syrup. As it is we are overly reliant on foreign sources of sweeteners.

Even worse, with such technological marvels as fluoride and advanced oral-B toothbrushes, our teeth last longer and thus we can consume even more syrup. With America being the largest maple syrup consuming nation in the world, and our administration aiming to appease large syrup and sweetener corporations, I think that it's pretty clear that this war is about the syrup.

Violence and war just for syrup is wrong, and can't be justified. Pay no heed to Bush's excuses for war; we know that he has one thing on his mind: syrup. The solution to this problem is finding alternative sweeteners, not new sources of syrup. No, I am by no reason advocating tapping the maple trees in the Alaskan nature reserve, as this would clearly disturb the delicate ecosystem, but rather alternative substances such as honey.

Furthermore, an intrusion into the sovereign nation of Canada would not only bring a temporary raise in syrup prices, but could even result in syrup shortages for years afterward. American spy planes have recently brought back satellite images of Canadians taking their axes out of their sheds, preparing to chop down their maple trees if the United States goes in. It would take decades for these trees to grow back. Yes, I know they aren't supposed to have axes, which the U.N. inspectors apparently missed, but the United States has the largest supply of axes in the world, and Canadians should have a right to have some as well.

Honey is an environmentally friendly and plentiful sweetener that we could use instead of syrup, but unfortunately the current administration has close ties to the syrup industry. Even though bees sting, they help pollinate plants, thus helping them reproduce. Harvesting honey doesn't involve drilling into trees – something that can't be too good for them. I suggest we help our own struggling honey industry grow and prosper, not to mention that its time we start exporting honey from other allies of the United States that desperately rely on the sugary substance to keep their economy up and running. Through honey, the U.S. could strengthen its ties to such strategic nations as Luxembourg and Tajikistan, both in areas of the world that the United States isn't too strong in. Additionally, honey is thicker than syrup, reducing drippage. Hundreds of gallons of syrup are needlessly wasted each year due to dripping of plates and bowls and is just not economically viable.

Bush has been painting Jean Chrétien as an evildoer to help justifying going into Canada and having a regime change, but Chretien is the elected leader of the Canadians, and we all know how the Canadians react when they are governed by others. The last thing we need is for the Canadians to gather up their pitchforks and shovels and start going into rampages. In a recent interview, the Prime Minister of Liechtenstein, Mr. Otmar Hasler, stated that "war with Canada would mean disaster, and would destabilize the region."

Quebecian fanatics could launch a civil war. Neighboring nations such as Iceland and Greenland could have their fragile government collapse, and the last thing we need is chaos in such Greenland cities as Ilkqqortoormiut or Qeqertarsuaq.

Therefore, I urge you all to oppose a war against Canada. This is no way to help solve our syrup problems. There are other options, other choices, and war should not be met until every other option has been attempted and tried. Bush will continue to mislead us that Canadians are evil, that Chretien aims to gain control of the worlds syrup supply, but the truth remains that Canada is a peaceful maple syrup-loving country that is no threat to us. I urge you all today at 8:05 p.m. to walk out of your classes, no matter what you are doing, in a peaceful protest against a war with Canada, and together we shall walk to Springfield where we will protest in front of the city hall. War for syrup is just not right.

Gilad Skolnick loves honey.

Not the UMass Daily Collegian

FARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dylan, Nelson and Cash to headline FogeyFest

By Kris Kristofferson
Staff Correspondent

A party rumored Willie Nelson announced yesterday from the Pine View Ranch home that a three-day festival – dubbed Fest – this summer would take place in Branson.

Hoss Nelson chuckled. "I think [illegible] He pretty sweet. Me and Bob and Johnny are gonna get so wrecked every night."

Headlining the festival alongside Nelson will be rock and country legends Bob Dylan and Johnny Cash. The three aging musicians expect to be able to play together in heaven by August. "As long as Cash plays his part we should be able to do it, but ever since he stopped doing drugs that man's refusal to die has kept this show on hold," said Nelson.

Dylan, the junior member of the trio ringing in at 61, will be the only one playing anything electric at the divine concert. "Weee dooon't needd to have tooo muuuch noooise there," said a barely comprehensible Dylan. "Willie caaaaaan't heeeeaaaaar toooo well anymoooooore and looooohny gets craaaaaaaanky," he added.

Though he is only 61, Dylan is confident that in mid-July he will travel to the great beyond. "Are yoooooo kiiiiidding? Just last weeeeeek I was smoooooooking anthrax to prep fooooor this."

Cash is set to play the morning shows, taking the stage each day after St. Peter's morning address. "I imagine I'll get my best audiences when they've been prepped by Pete. A lot fewer people will sell for me to play 'Ring of Fire' after he has guilt trips them about not being alive and hanging with Jesus," Cash said. He said he knows about Peter's morning talks from past experiences.

"I've been so close to the Pearly Gates a bunch of time, it was Pete's boring talks that made me come back," he said. "Now that I know we're gonna do this fest I won't turn back."

In addition to the power trio headlining, Great White guitarist Ty Longley has been slated to play the late night tent.

"He promised not to light anything on fire and he's willing to play for the egg salad sandwiches we were offering as payment," said Nelson. "Egg salad... I've gotta get me some of that," the still stoned singer added.

"I doooon't waaaant aaaany," said Dylan, who insisted on cucumber sandwiches on Wonder Bread.

"Dylan can really be a little bitch when it comes to his lunch," chimed in Cash, who added that he is 10 years older than Dylan and gets to make more decisions. "I rule this festival, no matter what Bob thinks; I'm also the only one here who doesn't get stoned every morning. I mean Christ, Bob is on a Formaldehyde drip half the time and Willie's trailer always smells like weed and pee."

"Dude, it doesn't smell like pee," responded Nelson as he struggled to swallow yet another twinkie.

Competing with a sold out Bonnaroo festival and Colorado's Telluride bluegrass festival, FogeyFest will be the only summer festival for the deceased.

"It's wiiiiicked coooooool," Dylan said.

"We are not letting Eminem take the stage. That prick will be dead by then for sure, but he hasn't sampled anything of mine so he can't come on stage" said a visibly irritated Cash who then reminded Dylan that he was the youngest of the three and told him to shut up. Cash then left the room and was reportedly taking a nap in the T.V. lounge.

"Heee uuuuused toooo beeeee coooooool," muttered Dylan. "Then beeee cleeeaned up. Now heeeee's noooo fun. I'm sooooo getting stoooooned with Willie thooooough, all the tiiiiime."

In addition to a old-timers discount for those who died before any of the acts were born, the festival will offer beer cozies and stadium seat cushions to the first 500 in attendance.

"We thought about travel mugs with free coffee refills, but most of the people who bought tickets don't want to have caffeine. Who wants to stay awake all night when you're going to be around for eternity," said Nelson.

God hopes the festival goes smoothly. "Something tells me that there won't be any problems, as long as Nelson stays away from the door to purgatory," he said. "Willie's version of Crazy is so good that I sold Patsy Cline to Lucifer already," he said.

God also said Cash and Dylan will get special treatment while the festival is under way. "They both had some good religious revival albums," he said. "I loved Shots Train Coming," God added.

Britney's on the loose; Farrell's liver speaks

By Donny Jonaldson
Staff

HOLLYWOOD (PA) – The liver of hard-drinking Irish rocker Colin Farrell held a press conference Monday afternoon in order to bring attention to the actor's wild ways.

"I love Colin dearly," said the ailing organ, who continued to report that it is suffering the incipient systems of alcoholism of the liver. "But he keeps drinking and drinking and drinking and he, hurting everyone around him, especially me."

Though I love the sweet, sweet taste of alcohol as much as anyone else, I could never drink as much as Colin does," said one of Farrell's 55 girlfriends, model Kim [illegible]. "Never mind that I am caring his baby, and I suck that much alcohol."

Farrell's liver is requesting that fans, friends, family and anyone who thinks the actor is an overhyped next big thing, stage an intervention. They hope to at the very least, help Farrell's drinking level to merely alcoholism.

When asked for comment, the charming party boy mumbled something in an incomprehensible brogue that consisted of the word fuck and then went off on [illegible] a reporter.

HOLLYWOOD (PA) – It's official. Britney Spears is [illegible] with every man in Hollywood.

The 22-year-old pop star, who has been linked to [illegible] with Justin Timberlake, Colin Farrell and [illegible] Fred Durst, has been seen out on the [illegible] with acting legend Abe Vigoda.

[illegible] Spears originally said the relationship was [illegible] she came clean when the duo was [illegible] a nasal hockey at a post-Oscars party on [illegible].

[illegible] breaking up with boyfriends Timberlake, [illegible] and Durst, Spears began dating a string of [illegible] hairy leftist documentarian [illegible] to R&B singer R. Kelly. (Kelly reportedly broke up the relationship after two months saying that Spears was too old for his tastes.) When asked about her man-eating ways told reporters that she was trying to keep up with rival Christina Aguilera.

Big surprise there. Britney's banged everyone in Hollywood.

"She used to be the sweet innocent one that could sing, and I used to be the slutty sexy one that was overexposed and made crappy music. Then that bitch became Xtina, and she started wearing buttless chaps and she stole my crown. I haven't even had a venereal disease yet, and she already has three!"

When asked if he as any feelings about Spears relationship with Vigoda, Timberlake said "Abe Vigoda? Isn't he dead? Whatever dude, she can screw whoever she wants, she ain't that good anyway." When Vigoda was asked to reply he told reporters "I don't thought I was dead."

J-ho and Scary to battle in talent match

By Pop Eye
Staff

[illegible] challenging [illegible] Hopez to an [illegible] match. The [illegible] reveal.

[illegible] and rambling [illegible] his Collegian yesterday [illegible] paper to publish the [illegible] Hopez to a one-on-one [illegible] Scary said. [illegible] has had enough" [illegible] after running into [illegible] drunk party in New [illegible] Scary says she [illegible] Hopez told her she [illegible] around lately and [illegible] had been hiding. [illegible] around, swings her [illegible] sass on the charts," [illegible] all in a fit of rage."

[illegible] involved in a bit-[illegible] of words with Hopez [illegible] Hopez has copied [illegible] things clothing, and [illegible] a fortune in the [illegible].

[illegible] deciding to enter the [illegible] Ho has copied my every [illegible] and my every look," Scary [illegible] "I tried to sing like me, act like me and talk like me."

Scary believes Hopez took advantage of her "mental and physical breakdown" by hooking up with hip-hop magnate Ja Rule for a hugely successful hip-hop version of Hopez's single "I'm Real."

"She continued to promote the shit out of that single as if she was trying to rub it into my face during my rehab stay," Scary says. "I was the one who introduced hip-hip into the pop world! Where does she get off basing her success off my assets?"

Scary says that audiences aren't nearly as interested in Hopez as they are in her.

"That whore can't even sell half the albums I can," referring to her status as the best-selling female artist of the 90s with more than 100 million records sold worldwide.

Scary says she got the idea of the talent contest after watching the hugely successful "American Idol" contests.

"I want that prissy bitch to get off her high horse and meet me in front of Simon Cowell," Scary said. Scary finished off her statement by shouting "Holla!"

Asked whether she is afraid to contend with the Bronx-born diva, Scary said "The only thing I'm scared of is getting my foot stuck in her ghetto booty."

The verbal rivalry began before Scary's breakdown when Allure magazine reporter Vanessa Grigoriadis sat down with her in the early summer of 2001 for a candid chat. When an interview with Hopez was mentioned by Grigoriadis, Scary commented (sarcastically), "I bet it was really intellectually stimulating ... I bet you could just see the depth in her eyes, she was so soulful."

In the Allure interview, the 300-octave singer reacted to Hopez's comments that she gets eight hours of sleep per night, "If I had the luxury of not actually having to sing my own songs, I'd do that too."

The background on the girls' battle is that Hopez is signed to Sony records, Scary's former label, which up until a few months ago also happened to be run by her former husband, Tommy Mottola. Rumor has it that Mottola took hoochie mama Hopez under his wing and worked the same magic for Hopez's career that he did for Scary's back in her Sony days.

Hopez could not be reached for comment at press time.

Bad horror movie found in staff production studio

By Kulak Attack
Collegian Snoop

In the aftermath of the disasters of teen horror movies, "I Know What You Did Last Winter Break" is a gem among movies. Just kidding. But how did I get to see this movie when it doesn't come out for another five months, you ask? Well, yours truly snuck into The Collegian Productions Studio to get a sneak peek of the anticipated summer movie.

The movie starts out on a blustery winter evening, where five innocent college students pile into a car and proceed to ding the car behind them. They quickly speed away from the empty car. A simple hit and run fender bender, no big deal, right? Sure. The five students, Kojak, Missy, McGuire, Sydney and Jess, joke about Kojak's bad driving and leave it at that – though Sydney laments about how it sucked when her car was dinged in a hit and run fender bender.

Intro credits roll, and we see Jess and Kojak and another guy, Will, boarding an airplane. Apparently they are going to Florida for spring break. They arrive at the hotel, and we are slowly introduced to the cast of victims. All five kids from the first scene are present, along with five others. Malothe, Polokowski (Missy's boyfriend), Biz, Will and Bok. No one suspects anything deadly is going to happen.

Lets examine the characters, shall we? Polokowski and Missy are the "couple." Kojak is the goofy friend, the kid who always dies. Malothe is the typical "guy." McGuire is the typical blond, and Will is the typical sarcastic dude. Totally typical. Bok is the quiet observer who tries to keep the peace, and Biz is the out-going charmer of the group. Jess is the innocent girl, and Sydney is our heroine. She seems to play a background role at first, but her character develops throughout the movie into the true main character.

So here are a bunch of kids at a nice, Disney resort. The first day of their trip is uneventful, but the night provides our first casualty. McGuire and Malothe leave the others to go to Pleasure Island. Sydney gets pissed because she got ditched and goes to hang out with everyone else, elsewhere. Heavy drinking ensues, and McGuire and Malothe are split up. McGuire is dancing up a storm, when all of a sudden she sees blood on her shirt. Before she knows it, she is being stabbed again and again from all sides. No one notices because they think she's dancing. She screams and flails and falls to the ground, but no one notices a problem until later. Just a bad dancer who passed out to them...

Cut to a subdued hotel room. Nine upset faces. Some of the guys discuss what to do. The group decides to head off to the Magic Kingdom, despite the tragedy. Malothe, who wants to go swimming, sulks off to the pool. Sydney, feeling extra guilty about leaving McGuire, goes after him, but after a brief conversation decides to go with the others. At the Magic Kingdom, the group splits: Jess and Will go off to Fantasyland. The others deem it too "kiddie" – "kiddie?" – they're in Disney World! Cut to Jess and Will leaving Fantasyland and getting in line for the Haunted Mansion. Jess has just left a cell phone message for the others to meet them at MGM later. Inside the ride, the two laugh it up. As they reach the end of the ride, they encounter the Bride locked in the attic. Suddenly, as if real, she lunges out, cutting both their throats.

Back to the other six, on a bus back to the hotel, unaware of the fate that has befallen their two friends. Sydney speculates where Malothe has gone, while Kojak, Bok and Biz joke around. They get back to the hotel, a group of guests and police has gathered around the pool. There is blood in the pool, a suggested alligator attack. The body is gone. The dejected friends suspect Malothe is dead. Polokowski is especially upset, because they had argued earlier. So they return to the room and receive the message from

Continued on page A7

New reality series features SGA

By Your Mother
Collegian Bizznatch

MTV announced yesterday a new reality series based on University of Massachusetts' own Student Government Association.

Laura Anderson, a spokesperson for MTV, said the decision came based on many factors, including the organization's ability to constantly bicker with one another and never get anything accomplished.

"We are looking for a show like 'Sorority Life,' but for smart kids," Anderson said. "The SGA argues about stuff that smart kids care about, but they create all kinds of silly drama just like sorority girls. We're trying to reach out to a new market – not just the brain-dead Gen X's, but the kids who actually listen in school."

Dave Carr, president of the SGA said this will do great things for the image of the SGA, as well as bring in additional funding to disperse amongst RSO's and agencies.

"Now we can get Eminem for Spring Concert," Carr said.

The series is set to start shooting in the fall, so it can portray the madness and disorganization of senate elections. MTV will also set up an "SGA Confessional" where senators can go sit in a room with a camera and grumble about each other. Each week, members will receive a mission, somewhat like MTV's "Road Rules." In addition to trying to better the campus by actually doing something that affects anything, the SGA will have to complete a mission by actually working together to complete some kind of challenge.

If the SGA can complete the mission in the time allotted, they will get an undisclosed amount of money to add to their treasure chest. At the end of the 12-week run, if they can go without killing each other, they will get a "handsome reward."

"We're hoping it might create some kind of unity for us," Fatemi said. "God knows all we do now is fight, but hopefully us earning money will allow us to do something for the students."

Carr also expressed concern about what the show will do for the image of the SGA.

"Hopefully, this will show the students that we actually do get stuff accomplished sometimes," Carr said. "I mean, we still have no say with what happens with the administration, but sometimes we can get a majority to agree on something."

Anderson said MTV looks forward to working with the administration at UMass. They added that they think the SGA will create solid ratings for MTV.

"If people will watch a bunch of sorority bimbos fight over bathrooms, hairspray and men, people will watch pretty much anything, including a bunch of pompous assholes arguing over stuff that doesn't really matter," Anderson said.

The worst horror movie ever written revealed less. Kojak suggests they go meet them. Missy and Polokowski offer to stay at the hotel in case anyone returns. The others head to MGM, leaving the couple to make out. Polokowski suggests the jacuzzi in the master bedroom might relax them. Polokowski sets up a radio in on the windowsill. In the throws of a kiss, neither notices a shadow appear, as the radio is pushed into the tub. Didn't they ever watch "Scream?" You never get it on, that means you die. And who puts a radio next to the tub anyway?

Continued from page A6

Cut to MGM. The only people left alive are Sydney, Bok, Biz and Kojak, but they don't know that. Following Jess' message, they head over to the Tower of Terror. Sydney opts to wait outside while the others go on the ride – she doesn't like drops. Biz and Kojak and Bok walk up to the ride. Suddenly, it is announced that the ride is closed. They try to exit and get lost.

Sydney sees that everyone is exiting the park except her friends. She gets suspicious, and despite her fear of the Tower of Terror, enters the fake hotel. Meanwhile, the guys are trying to catch up to an employee, or so they think, Sydney hears them and begins to follow as well. She sees the three of them enter a giant room, and realizes what is happening. The "employee" flicks a switch, just as Kojak and Biz run toward Sydney, as she screams. The elevator above falls, crushing Bok. The "employee" cackles, and is revealed to be Malothe. He screams about Kojak hitting his car months ago.

As Malothe advances, the three survivors run, heading out of the ride. In the rain, they get confused, and accidentally run toward the Aerosmith ride. In this dead end, they hear Malothe taunting them about their dead friends. They run into the ride – silly victims. As Kojak stumbles onto the track of the coaster, Biz jumps down to help him. Malothe screams about dented cars, and an Aerosmith car comes racing down the track. Biz jumps off barely in time and is clipped by the car. As Kojak is mowed down, Biz lands in an unconscious heap.

Sydney is terrified, she can't go on the ride, but there is nowhere else to go. Malothe talks about her being a kindred spirit, as she too has been victim to a hit and run fender bender. Sydney screams about her dead friends. Malothe shrugs and states that he will have to kill her too. She jumps into the next cart and straps in. Malothe jumps on and begins to move up the cart. But in his crazed state he is not strapped in, and on the first loop, goes flying off into the darkness. Sydney makes it through the coaster and hops out as police arrive. Biz is still alive, but his ankle is mangled. Malothe's body is found, and carted out. Sydney and Biz weep for their friends. Thus ends this gem of a movie.

This movie sucked. All in all, I give it a D.

PHOTOS COURTESY DAN PLUMLEY AND TABLE TOPS

UMass shuts out Bonnies

By Mike Barnacle
Notorious Schmuck

Lackadaisical, aloof, slower than Tim Turner in sand, waste of space, and Helen Keller; senior Micah Brand has heard it all this season from the UMass critics. One NBA scout went as far to say that Brand "has the intensity and rebounding ability of a prepubescent school girl. I see him succeeding in the Canadian Basketball Association."

Despite this harsh criticism from the Amherst community and the rest of the world – Fox Sports personality Tommy Heinson once said of Brand, "I award him no Tommy points and may god have mercy on his soul" – Brand showed up for the best game of his life, a match against perennial NIT contender St. Bonaventure.

UMass	2
St. Bonnies	0

This game decided whom would obtain the allusive and highly regarded 'Futility Cup' sponsored by prestigious corporations Enron and World Com. Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney had those words to say about the game, "Obviously both these teams could have merged and become one 'super' team, well mediocre, at least. These people in the east do not know how to run their primitive culture.

"Say have you ever thought about joining the Mormon Church?"

The Gov. wasn't the only A-list celebrity to attend the game. Lebron James also attended.

"Lebron James shows up to see Micah Brand play," James said. "I think Micah Brand will take the NBA to a level that Yinka Dare never achieved during his illustrious career."

When asked about the now camouflaged Hum-V, the gushing James said, "King James always supports his troops."

When presented with the information that King James of England was disposed by William of Orange in the Glorious Revolution of 1688, James mystified reporters by saying, "King James will never have to play Syracuse."

Larry Bird sat courtside next to Michael Jackson. It is rumored that if the Governor has his way and privatizes UMass, Mr. Bird and Mr. Jackson will bus the school in a joint venture to promote basketball through the core values of NAMBLA (North American Man Boy Love Association). Both were unavailable for comment.

Emotions ran high in the Futility Cup, with both teams failing to score in the first half. UMass coach Steve Lappas commented on the first half, "Tough, tough game. I love this job, but this is a tough, tough business. By the way, if Romney raises tuition do I get paid more? I really liked that bow-tie I wore at the Rhode Island game and I want to buy more."

Brand played consistently in the first half. Missing all of his shots and grabbing one rebound.

"It started to jell at the end of the first half when I missed two shots in a row but got that board over Marques Green," Brand said.

Green stands at 5-foot-4.

The second half featured a slower offense from St. Bonaventure because of the departure of half of St. Bonaventure's players during half time.

Freshmen Ahmad Smith and Calvin Brown were seen in street clothes walking out of the stadium.

"Spring break starts now, baby!" Smith said.

Whitey Bulger made the trip to UMass from an undisclosed location. Bulger made the trip up to give inspiring speech during halftime.

"He really knows how to scare the shit out of you," Anthony Anderson said. "He reminds me of Hannibal Lechter, except without the English accent."

With three minutes left to go in the third quarter, UMass turned the ball over to the Bonnies. Green took the ball and easily passed three UMass defenders. Within seconds he had the ball under the hoop and surprisingly missed a wide-open lay up.

After this, Bonnies coach Jan van Breda Kolff called out to his players, "Run the no-man!"

The no-man defensive philosophy originated in the Asian league two years ago, where legendary Taoist, Max Rosen coached after he was thrown out of the WNBA for cursing at a referee. The basis of the defense is to remove the defense away from the basket and just talk calmly to the other team about how bad they are. This is as Phil Jackson once said "the best mind-fuck around."

"We know UMass' biggest weakness is hitting the open shot," van Breda Kolff said. "We forced them to make the big shots."

Fan favorite Jeff Viggiano looked like he would be the hero of the day when his uncontested dunk went through the basket for two points, but veteran referee John Sullivan called no basket because of traveling. Boos rained and err sprinkled down from the Mullins Center.

Unofficial attendance stood at 30 spectators. Fifteen thought they were at a hockey game.

A young man dressed solely in maroon paint yelled out, "Hes ref, get off your knees. You are blowing the game!" The crowd cheered in congruence. He then said "No war!" and was booed heartily by the evidently pro-war basketball fans.

The next 12 minutes were uneventful. The remaining two and a half minutes were boring as well, but finally during the last 30 seconds the game became what the Futility Cup is all about.

Brand stole the ball from Green and displayed the stellar athleticism that caused people to mention Marcus Camby and Brand in the same sentence four years ago. And as time ran down to zero, Brand remembered what basketball was all about and let go a beautiful finger roll, reminiscent of Dr. J, from eight feet out. The ball glided through the net as the buzzer sounded and he smiled. The game finished with UMass winning 2-0.

Don't believe it? Check the NCAA record books.

LeBron to be a Minuteman

By Harry Tipper
Hates Your Mom

Scoot over Julius and take a seat Marcus, there's a new rooster in this hen house. In a sequence of events that has turned the world of basketball inside out and upside down, Ohio high school phenom LeBron James has signed to play basketball at the University of Massachusetts.

James fell upon UMass after a trip to the Basketball Hall of Fame where he was being shown his shrine 20 years in advance. Reportedly, he had heard that the dining hall chicken tenders were to die for and wanted to give it a try before going skateboarding with Antoine Walker and Paul Pierce.

"What can I say, I love chicken tenders," James said. "Hopefully, they'll get some better barbeque sauce, though."

On the way to the Berkshire Dining Common, LeBron got his foot stuck in a pothole and proceeded to slam his head onto one of the pyramids in front of Washington tower. Five lunch ladies ran to his aid and quickly got James to Health Services.

After minor head injuries and a positive pregnancy test, James immediately told Dr. Raymond Larkin that he wanted to be a Minuteman.

"I thought he was crazy, he had that crazy look in his eye, but what kind of doctor would I be if I said no to LeBron... I mean he is a basketball player," Larkin said.

UMass coach Steve Lappas heard about LeBron's decision soon after, and was more than ecstatic.

"I almost shit myself," Lappas said. "I figured someone was pulling my leg, but there he was... I had the papers ready for him to sign.

"So who needs Mike-fucking-Jasme, anyway," Lappas added. "We've got King-fucking-James."

LeBron wanted a full tour of the campus after signing the most valuable piece of paper in UMass history, which will be up for auction on EBay later tonight. He was soon whisked away in the Midnight Madness Hummer.

Before Lappas and James arrived at the Mullins Center, James' number was already being retired. Due to further budget cuts Trigger Burke's banner was flipped over so LeBron's number could be put on the back.

"Trigger doesn't really deserve to have his number retired anyway," Athletic Director Ian McCaw said. "He only gave us a bunch of money. I mean, even Micah Brand scored more points in his career than Trigger. Seriously, what the fuck is up with that."

Trigger's number was put back up on an old piece of cardboard until further notice, but the Athletic Department figures he'll send them more money to fix his jersey.

"Cha-Ching!" a usually relaxed McCaw said. "We should have done this for Art Bowers, Jeff Viggiano, Kyle Wilson, Anthony Anderson, Raheim Lamb and everyone else that has come through here. Good golly, we'd still have a men's water polo team!"

Upon entering the arena, James wasn't pleased with the capacity and began barking orders to everyone.

"Oh hell no, I want at least 10 thousand more... and I want it to smell nice, like Pine Sol," James said. "And we need a better looking dance team. I wouldn't nail half of those girls."

Lappas immediately sent out the order for 5,000 gallons of Pine-Sol. Plans to cut the roof off the Mullins Center and attach McGuirk Alumni Stadium by bungee cords is currently underway. The football team will now compete on the softball field.

The next MJ was extremely excited about having his first roommate, and has chosen the Southwest residence area as his home. Even though Lappas sold his house in order to share bunk beds with James, Housing Services couldn't find an opening for the two-year couch. Lappas and his family will be spending next year in the Orchard Hill dormitory.

"I mean you can understand why I'm upset, I've always wanted to live in the towers," Lappas said. "They don't call me Chuggie McLappas for nothing."

Since LeBron is a freshman, he is only allowed to have a yellow lot sticker for his shiny silver Hummer. Due to current conditions of the parking lot, James seemed to be almost excited about the experience.

"They don't got holes like that in Ohio. We have to travel for miles to find some good potholes. Now all I have to do is drive to the Mullins Center and park my sweet baby. I don't know how you do it in those normal cars," James said.

Before James drive back to Ohio for his tea party with Allen Iverson and Chris Webber, he made sure the press knew he was devoted.

In a line that has the women on this campus a little worried, LeBron made his vision clear, "I'll always be a Minuteman, no matter how much experience I get.

"I'm, that didn't come out right. No, uhh, seriously, ladies. You know you don't have to worry about King LeBron."

Jim Harrick's Coaching School

"I've got nothing better to do."

Camp Features:

- Vintage UCLA, Rhode Island and Georgia gear
- Free long distance phone calls
- Informative classes, taught by my son, Jim Harrick, Jr. Including...
  - Coaching Principles & Strategies of Basketball (Attendance not required)
  - Settling the typical sexual harassment lawsuit
  - Mastering the false expense report
  - Getting your assistants to lie for you
  - How to get blue-chippers (like Lamar Odom) to your shitty school

Only $299.99!!!

Reserve your place today! 1-800-YAY-NCAA

The Signal

NUMBERTWO (PLOP)

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2003

READINGONTHECAN@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass Sports Briefs

Lasme declares eligible for NBDL draft

UMass freshman guard Mike Lasme has declared himself eligible for the upcoming NBDL Draft.

"I thought that if I was going to screw up my basketball career by leaving UMass, I should really screw it up and go play with those losers," Lasme said.

"I know that it makes no sense for me to leave Lappas' program at this point in my career, but it still feels like the right thing to do," Lasme said. "I figure sitting out next season will really hurt my growth as a basketball player."

Lasme, who was recruited by some of the most well-known basketball programs in the country out of high school, has received interest from such juggernauts as Framingham State College, Salem State College and the School of Hard Knocks since announcing his intention to transfer from UMass, but has opted for the NBDL, where not one single player with any talent laces up.

"Hey, maybe Micah [Brand] will get drafted, too!" Lasme said of the 2002-03 captain.

Rambling briefs

Why do we run so many pictures of Erin Lilly during the women's soccer season? Head down to Rudd Field next year and figure that one out for yourself.

Will we run a story on any club team or non-sports team this year? Hell no.

Will we box down to UMass hockey coach Don "Toot" Cahoon at every chance we get? Hell yes.

This year's hottest female athlete at UMass: Tie – Shauna Nielson (swimming), Lilly.

2001-02 winner: Tie : Brooke Bartlett (soccer), Teri Rosnes (softball)

Why no men mentioned: Only one female writer in sports department.

Do the assistant sports editors love Greg Mauldin just a little too much? Oh yeah.

Need a good punter for your flag football team? Give David Sanger's agent a call.

Boston College's Bell still a baby

Boston College senior guard Troy Bell has issued a statement in reference to his outburst directed toward Massachusetts co-captain Jackie Rogers on Dec. 7. Bell was quoted as saying, "I regret the decision to act upon my emotions at the time. I guess I got caught up in the excitement of actually showing up with my A-game, and forgot what an overrated pussy I was. Coach [Al] Skinner has suggested that since I have choked down the stretch each of the last four years, I will have plenty of opportunities to make amends with the UMass family. I plan on rooming with Michael Lasme next season, as we will be playing basketball together in Europe."

Big game, big lake

The University of New Hampshire has announced that it plans to host UMass next year on Lake Winnepesaukee, the state's largest body of water. When questioned as to the origins of their enormous fan base, coach Dick Umile replied with, "This is New Hampshire, what in fuck's sake else do people have to do?"

In response to rumors that they will try to upstage their rivals by hosting UMass on the Atlantic Ocean, Maine coach Tim Whitehead said, "It'd have to be way the fuck out there, like halfway to fuckin' Spain. Otherwise we'd lose the effect of having those poor bastards drive to Orono."

Timmy Day still looking

Massachusetts freshman quarterback Tim Day was recently fined by parking services for sitting in his car outside in the yellow lot next to McGuirk Alumni Stadium for over an hour without a sticker. When questioned by a parking officer as to his intentions, Day stated he was, "just waiting for an open receiver."

According to reports, Day is still waiting.

"No, we haven't forgotten the Holstra game, Dammit!)

Clubs recognized, no one cares

Massachusetts Athletic Director Ian McCaw has announced that in celebration of UMass' club fencing team winning the 2003 Club National Championship, the University will hold a rally in the Curry Hicks Cage. When asked about his choice in venue McCaw said "The Cage is historically significant here at the University. Plus, it is also where we like to stick our teams that have piss poor fan bases in order make it look like people around here actually care about them."

Women's basketball coach Marnie Dacko was unavailable for comment

Greg Cannella = Jon Gruden

Massachusetts assistant men's lacrosse coach Andy Shay oversaw the Minutemen's first practice since their upset loss to Penn State on Saturday. According to media relations, head coach Greg Cannella was unable to attend practice, as he was being honored prior to a Tampa Bay Devil Rays game for coaching the Tampa Bay Buccaneers to victory in Super Bowl XXXVII as his alter ego – Jon "Chucky" Gruden."

McCaw hates on cheerleaders

In response to questions about possibly eliminating cheerleading from the University's athletic budget, McCaw stated, "I don't have the jurisdiction to eliminate cheerleading, seeing as it is not a sport. However since it takes place at athletic events, I will be taking the liberty of forming cheerleading squads from within UMass' current athletic realm. We already have some volunteers from both the field hockey and women's tennis teams."

McCaw refused to elaborate on his experimental use of the men's rugby in place of the cheerleaders at home games this past winter, saying only, "We figured nobody would be able to tell the difference."

In response to The (Weakly) Heights' response,

Eat it.

B.C. still dead

Mystery is now solved

By JUDGE SMAILS
COLLEGIAN POLICE ASS-HOLE

BOSTON – A year ago today, Boston College died. To commemorate its passing, B.C. benefactor Osama bin Laden is hosting a special ceremony tonight at Centerfolds Boston, a refined downtown stripping cooperative.

The festivities will include speeches from notable B.C. alumni, including John Walker Lindh, the Bulger brothers, William and Whitey, many naughty Boston priests, and the doctor who sewed John Wayne Bobbit's penis back on.

Jar-Jar Binks, accompanied by a slide show, will deliver the keynote address, recounting the top 10 moments in B.C.'s miserable, 139-year history.

"Meesa fucking hate B.C.," Binks said yesterday at an area Starbucks." "Meesa fucking hate them more than meesa hate meesa-self."

Hiring Binks as the keynote speaker was considered an odd play by the dark side, or, rather, B.C. Binks is widely known as one of the Eagles' staunchest foes, yet retains he was honored to accept the invite.

"Yousa think me no wants to go to thisa event," Binks said. "Yousa fucking crazy. Meesa loves to celebrate dare fucking death. Dat was best day of meesa life when BC fucking died."

Nonetheless, Binks was more than happy to pick the top 10 moments in B.C.'s life.

Highlights include Doug Flutie breaking college football's midget barrier, becoming an official satellite campus of Notre Dame and Mark Chmura and Bill Romanowski following the Eagles football tradition by reaching the NFL, sharing a hot tub with a minor and spitting on a black person.

With the celebration, there is renewed interest in the case of B.C.'s death.

As expected, the Boston community is still mourning the loss of its shitty, cock-sucking, illegitimate, trust-fund, genetically-engineered-to-be-an-asshole, baby. And these people want answers.

When it was first reported, police surmised that B.C. had, in a drunken state, accidentally discharged it's own semi-automatic pistol into itself at a Boston bar.

But due to recently uncovered evidence, local authorities are saying the bar incident may actually be a setup. Under the authority of a search warrant, the Boston Police Department found what seems to be a suicide letter in the confessional at Our Father of Good Molestation Church.

It reads as follows:

Dear World,

I have decided to rid you all of my STD infested, Notre Dame wanna be, child-molesting, sex-changing, trust-fund-baby, safety school, country-club-sniffing, brown-nosing, venereal-pass-bleeding, impotent, viagra-addicted, fat-chick-banging, Waffle-House-hating, Shirley-Temple-drinking, elementary-school-boy-ass-ramming, piss-yellow-wearing, life-sucking-self.

The pressure to compete with UMass was just too much to bear, I mean bare, I think. I always had trouble with spelling. Ever since I was in first grade and my mother couldn't bribe the panelists at the spelling bee and I lost. I hate losing.

Ever since that spelling bee I couldn't stand losing. When my neighbor, who didn't have nearly as many toys as me, beat me in a race, I had my Daddy talk to him. When my girlfriend, Mount Holyoke, beat me in Jenga, I hit her in the head with a toaster. But then I met UMass. Then I lost 23-2 in a lacrosse game. Then I had to take all the kids that didn't get into UMass and give them scholarships to come here.

I had a problem. I couldn't compete with my completely superior overlord institution, so I began to have a UMass complex. I wrote letters and recorded tapes. I waited for UMass for hours at the gates of heaven, just to try and get an autograph. People asked me why I didn't have any pictures of B.C. alums on my walls. Who the fuck do I have to be proud of? Bob Ryan comes over for a spoon at my beck and call, but most of my other alums are too busy scouring elementary schools. Instead I put up posters of real men like Dr. J and Bill Cosby. I tried to tattoo "Minuteman" on my penis but my boyfriend, Brandeis, thought it sent the wrong message. But UMass ignored me, not responding to any of my e-mails, letters, tapes, pictures, fetish videos or singing telegrams. So I've decided to put an end to my miserable existence by throwing myself off the W.E.B. DuBois Library. Please don't try to stop me.

No regard for human life.
Boston College

Police believe that no one attempted to prevent B.C.'s death, also noting that some reported that a large group assembled at the base of the library tower to make sure B.C. was actually dead.

"I tried kicking it a few times to make sure B.C. was really dead," said Mike DeRaynard, captain of the varsity B.C. fucking sucks team. "It started twitching so I pulled out before it was done and stepped on its face. Then I did a keg stand on its rectum."

Bob Ryan, one of B.C.'s former life partners had this to say about the new evidence.

"I can't believe B.C. committed suicide. I won't believe it," Ryan said. "I know I could've done something to stop it. Maybe I could've paid for dinner once, maybe I could've bought the dental dam or used less tooth and more tongue. I know hand jobs are inadequate but to go and throw yourself off a building, c'mon.

"B.C. was a good bang; I mean friend. It will be missed."

"You will not miss B.C.," responded Obi-Wan Kenobi. "B.C. fucking sucks. You want to go home and rethink your life."

"I will not miss B.C.," Ryan amended. "B.C. fucking sucks. I want to go home and rethink my life."

A protest against Mr. Ryan's remarks is scheduled for this evening on the Student Union steps. Apparently, nobody thinks B.C. will be missed.

Contrary to original reports, Boston College committed suicide by launching itself off the W.E.B. DuBois library one year ago today.

Broken hips ahead

Oldies Lombardi and McCaw will suit up

By SHAM D'ONESSY
TOTAL HACK

In an astonishing move, the University of Massachusetts Athletic Department announced that Chancellor John V. Lombardi and Athletic Director Ian McCaw will officially be joining the ranks of the Maroon and White for the 2003-04 seasons.

Lombardi earned a special tryout, and will be in the lineup at linebacker for the Minuteman football team this fall. McCaw, who has alluded to no prior experience, will be the newest center on the UMass hockey team.

The two administrators held a press conference yesterday in the nearly-complete Blue Wall Bar, both sporting UMass athletic windpants and tank tops. Onlookers were shocked at the size of Lombardi's triceps.

"This is something Ian and I have been talking about for months now," said Lombardi, who is said to have excellent 40-yard dash times, but whose small stature may become a handicap against the likes of Kansas State.

"We know we're old, and neither one of us have actually participated in athletic competition in many years, but we both agreed that we are the missing links for our respective teams."

"John actually brought the idea to me at the end of the football game against Hofstra last season. I remember he was teary-eyed after witnessing Coach [Mark] Whipple and [starting quarterback] Jeff [Krohn] go and hug [backup] Timmy [Day]. We sort of looked at each other, and realized what we had to do.

"I personally suck at football, but John was telling me he once went undefeated in Madden 2003 with the Cincinnati Bengals, which I think we can all agree is qualification enough for I-AA football. I mean, c'mon guys, they're playing Central fucking Connecticut out there, how hard can it be?"

Lombardi, also sporting a brand new pair of state-of-the-art prescription sport goggles made by the Coca-Cola Bottling Company, gave the media a taste of the kind of talent UMass fans can look for on the gridiron this season.

The Chancellor, whose age has never been revealed but is estimated at upwards of 178 years, quickly did 15 pushups, and ran what may have been the fastest lap in history around one of the tables in the Blue Wall. Lombardi, who players have taken to calling "Head Cheese," was remarkably in shape, and didn't break a sweat during his impromptu scouting combine.

McCaw is expected to bolster the Minuteman attack, and has developed a special pair of skates that seem to have no other modifications, other than being really shiny.

Hockey coach Don "Toot" Cahoon remarked, "Ian gives us a depth we didn't have before. I'm not real sure what his role will be, except when we play Northeastern. Then, it's pretty clear, he'll be out for blood."

McCaw, who has also hinted at joining the lacrosse team next spring, did his own workout, bench-pressing one of the female reporters in attendance, and running through the plate glass window at the front of the bar.

He was seen some hours later by the Mullins Center locker room, clad in nothing but an athletic supporter and hockey helmet, and brandishing a hockey stick. UMass police tranquilized the AD, thinking actor Don Knotts had gotten out of the loony bin again. McCaw will be staying overnight in a holding cell for observation.

After the fireworks surrounding McCaw's early exit, Lombardi sat back down with reporters and explained his entire football history. However, no one has been able to find any records of a "Wicked Good High School," which Lombardi alleges he attended, and where he starred as a linebacker on the state championship football team. Which state that is, though, is still unknown.

BRYAN SMITH/COLLEGIAN – TELL TO THIS PHOTO

Chancellor John V. Lombardi knows how to keep his face clean in the middle of a snow storm.

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 109

First UMPD cadets graduate

Campus police swear in inaugural class of 15 students

Daniel Shepis and fellow cadets are sworn in by Police Chief Barbara O'Connor during the awards ceremony for first graduating class of cadets at UMass. Shepis also received special recognition for earning the C1 award.

By DAN LAMOTHE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Police Department graduated its first class of student cadets last night, swearing in 15 students.

UMPD Police Chief Barbara O'Connor said that police chiefs look for ways of creating an image and leaving a mark on the departments they lead. She said she sees the cadet program as a way in which she can do that at UMass.

"One of the greatest reasons I want this program is for education [of the cadets]," O'Connor said.

Officer Thomas W. O'Donnell Jr., a key part in the training of the cadets, said that when the search for cadets began, there were 55 applicants for the program. The search was narrowed to 30 applicants, who were then interviewed. Fifteen applicants were admitted to the program, which began training Feb. 4.

O'Donnell said that he didn't think all 15 students in the program would make it to graduation.

"They were told that they were going to be held to a higher standard," O'Donnell said. "I gave them three words: prove me wrong."

He showed admiration for the cadets.

"We could not have had any better people for the first class of police cadets," he said.

Cadets trained for 100 hours under the supervision of Lt. James Thrasher and his staff in numerous areas, including in the classroom and in the field. Areas of study included police liability, hazardous materials and basic self-defense, among others. The recruits were expected to spend Tuesday and Thursday nights for four hours each and all day Saturday training.

Thrasher impressed upon the cadets the importance of their jobs, saying that it is important for them to realize that they are now assigned to take care of other people's children. He also expressed admiration for the cadets.

"These young men and women while going to school full time worked very hard to give us 110 percent and the University 110 percent," Thrasher said.

Several cadets were recognized individually for their performances, including the only two UMass students in the program, Kyle Peterson and Lisa Scott. Peterson and Scott were presented with certificates for serving as squad leaders.

Another cadet, Daniel Schepis of Westfield State College, was recognized as a platoon leader and designated as the "C-1" cadet for best exemplifying what a cadet should be.

Cadets, who begin serving their duties this weekend, will wear a full police uniform with gray shirts. O'Connor said that there will be 10 permanent and five alternate cadets, with at least two cadets on duty every night Monday through Wednesday from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m. and Thursday through Saturday from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. On weekends, at least two teams of two cadets will serve.

The groups will patrol primarily the Southwest Residential Area, O'Connor said, with numerous duties. Cadets will patrol the areas around residential hall doors and back up student security. They

Continued on page 3

Illness suspected on airline

By MALCOLM RITTER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

An airliner from Asia was briefly halted on a tarmac in San Jose, Calif., on Tuesday – the most dramatic sign yet that a mysterious illness blamed for more than 60 deaths worldwide is provoking worry in the United States.

As it turned out, none of the five passengers who caused concern among the flight crew had the disease.

Seventy cases of the illness, severe acute respiratory syndrome, called SARS, are suspected in the United States, but no one has died. Worldwide there are about 1,800 cases.

The California airport incident was the first time a plane has been stopped in the United States for fear of passengers spreading the disease. Some passengers and health officials called it an overreaction.

U.S. health officials are not considering quarantines so far because the disease is not spreading as rapidly as in Asia and the related outbreak in Toronto.

In Hong Kong, for example, some 240 residents of an apartment complex where SARS has spread were taken away to quarantine camps on Tuesday.

But such measures don't yet appear warranted in the United States, said Tommy Thompson, secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

"We are in the business of protecting the public health of all citizens," Thompson said Tuesday in Atlanta. "If there is a virus that is explosive...and the only way to control it is by quarantine, we have to consider it. But we're not there yet."

Health officials say there's no sign that SARS is spreading freely throughout any American community.

The disease, which originated in Asia, seems to be confined mostly to

Continued on page 3

An airplane arriving at San Jose International Airport was briefly halted yesterday when a mysterious illness was suspected in a number of passengers.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

CHANGE THE GRADE
UMASS MAY SWITCH TO A TRADITIONAL POLICY
PAGE 3

SIMPLE PLAN
HIGH SCHOOLERS FLOCK TO WORCESTER'S PALLADIUM
PAGE 6

COMFORTS OF HOME
SOFTBALL OPENS AT HOME WITH DOUBLEHEADER
PAGE 10

Rally to support U.S. troops today on Student Union steps

By AMY O'NEILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

People interested in voicing their support for the troops fighting the war with Iraq will have their chance today at noon on the steps of the Student Union.

Organized by University of Massachusetts Football Quarterback, Jeff Krohn, the peace rally is an attempt at supporting our troops without a political message.

"I just wanted to[give everyone a chance who wants to support the troops to do it because I think it's an important part of being American citizens," Krohn said.

Over the last several months many anti-war rallies have taken place at UMass, with several hundred students coming out to show their feelings against the war with Iraq. Krohn feels that this is a way for students to express support for troops without being for or against the war.

"Views on the war don't really matter," Krohn said. "[I am] not trying to make it a pro war versus no war kind of thing. We just want to support the troops."

Students at UMass have been active in voicing their feelings on the war since before it began.

On March 6, over 2,500 students walked out of classes from all over the Five-College system in addition to Amherst-Pelham Regional High School and the middle school, as part of the "Books not Bombs" nationwide campaign. In addition to the walk out, a daylong event, Teach-ins were held all over campus and a group of about 1,600 students marched to Amherst Center.

Although the war with Iraq was declared by President Bush last month, peace rallies have continued on campus. Last week a rally was held on the Student Union steps with students from both sides voicing their feelings. About 12 students came out with Bush-Cheney signs, saying that they felt that they were supporting their country by doing so.

Students who turned out to voice their feelings against the war said they were supporting the troops by asking that they be brought home.

This weekend 25 protesters were arrested in Northampton after participating in a "Spring Break-Out for Peace" demonstration, starting in front of weapons manufacturing firm Kollmorgen. Also a "die-in," protestors dressed in white and poured red fruit juice on themselves to represent blood took place in downtown Northampton, blocking traffic by laying in the road.

SGA will address smoking policies

By KRISTIN SHREWSBURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tonight members of the Student Government Association Senate will be addressing motions regarding smoking enforcement rules, a new grading policy and a request that Parking Services fix all broken meters on campus.

Members of the SGA Senate addressed the need to look at the University of Massachusetts' smoking policy after an almost split vote by the student body at last weeks Senate meetings.

Chair of the University Policy committee Blake Kleppe addressed the Senate explaining that a decision regarding the current smoking policy, as well as other passed referendum questions needs to be addressed by the Senate.

"A lot of these questions have to do with the University, and most of them passed overwhelmingly by the student body, but one didn't and that was the issue of smoking on campus," Kleppe said. "Many of them have to do with University Policy and now we are going to have to take our constituents voice and make a decision."

The University Policy committee will present a motion regarding smoking on campus. The motion requests that the University enforce it's current 20 feet rule, and that all smoking posts be placed 20 feet from all buildings.

"The motion is stressing existing laws that we have here on campus, but with this decision it's about what the students want," Speaker Dan Saunders said. "This can't be a top down decision; it needs to be a bottom up decision. Whatever policies Whitmore is trying to instate we need to make sure it's what the students want. Were all adults and people know the risks of smoking and I think that if a change needs to happen we will make sure it happens for the benefit of students."

Continuing issues surrounding University Parking Services will also be addressed by the Senate, as a motion is being presented requesting that Parking Services fix all broken meters on campus. The motion also requests that Parking Services replace any meters that have been removed from University property.

A motion requesting that the University comply and change its current grading policy is also up for discussion. Currently the UMass is under a five point grading policy.

The motion requests a change to a four point grading policy in an effort to alleviate potential disadvantages for transfer students.

The motion also addresses the fact that by changing the current grading system the University would comply with most nationwide college campuses.

"A new grading policy has been talked about since I came to this school, and basically it would get ride of the A/B of B/C policy and make our grading system on an A, A- or B+, B scale," Saunders said. "We've just started really exploring new options especially with the new Spire program. Adding another decimal point to everyone's GPA's, however, [this] is a huge issue that is not going to be solved in just a day or two."

Tonight Re-elected President David Carr will also be sworn into the SGA. Members of the Senate approved the 2003 Presidential and Student Trustee elections unanimously last week, and tonight it will become official.

"I'm really looking forward to this year. I have one year under my belt and now I'm just looking to fill cabinet positions and really look outside the box," Carr said.

Saunders agreed by explaining that by getting new student's involved would only prove to be more beneficial for the SGA as well as for student representation.

"Dave is going to do a great job and it's going to be really interesting to see who all apply for cabinet positions," Saunders said. "All cabinet positions are open for anyone who is interested and we're really trying to get as many new people involved because it can only make us better."

As the Senate looks towards the end of the semester, Saunders stressed the need to tie up loose ends within the SGA, specifically with what the future holds for the Campus Activities Office.

Saunders explained that currently the office is under temporary management and it poses an important leadership position on campus that cannot be replaced.

"We are really going to be looking into Campus Activities and their future," Saunders said. "They are as important as any leadership position held on this campus and they are responsible for RSOs and student life on this campus and we need to make sure that they stay a part of this campus."

The SGA Senate will be meeting tonight at 7 p.m. in room 165 of the Campus Center. All meetings are open to the public.

Romney admits possible mistake

By KEN MAGUIRE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Mitt Romney said Tuesday he "may have been wrong" to not invite University of Massachusetts President William Bulger to a meeting of chancellors – a meeting that was cancelled when school officials refused to attend.

Romney, who has proposed eliminating Bulger's office in his plan to restructure public higher education, said the meeting was intended to get the chancellors' opinions on the proposal.

"President Bulger made his position so clear, it didn't seem that it would lend to an open flow and a dialogue if he were at that particular meeting," Romney said.

"We may have been wrong on that, who knows," he said. "It struck me that this was a good chance for them to speak without having President Bulger there."

Bulger has likened Romney's restructuring plan to a "corporate takeover." Bulger had alluded to the governor's personal wealth in claiming that he doesn't understand the importance of state colleges to lower-income residents.

Romney on Tuesday called the comments "quite personal," but pledged to meet with Bulger to discuss ideas other than the elimination of the president's office.

"He's made it clear he thinks that's a bad idea," Romney said. "I probably don't need to meet with him to understand that. Other ideas, about capital spending for instance, that's something I'd like to get his perspective on."

Continued on page 3

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mass. Governor Mitt Romney

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

COMMUNITY BULLETIN

WEDNESDAY APRIL 2

UMASS-Photos from the Feb. 15 rally in New York City will be on display at the the UMass Graduate Student Lounge.

SMITH COLLEGE – A lecture on entrepreneurship will be held at 12:10 p.m. in the Neilson Browsing Room. This lecture series provides a comprehensive survey of the entrepreneurial process. Topics include moving from concept to business plan, funding and securing capital and women and entrepreneurship. Lunch will be given to the first 70 attendees. Women and Financial Independence will sponsor the lecture. Admission is free.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – The Mount Holyoke College Medical Emergency Response Team (MERT) and the Alcohol and Drug Advisory Committee are joining with South Hadley High School in co-sponsoring a national program entitled "Every Fifteen Minutes" on Wednesday. (Rain date April 8). This program promotes awareness of the consequences of drinking and driving. For more information, contact Karen Jacobus at kjacobus@mtholyoke.edu or call 538-3200.

UMASS – The "Renassance Wednesday" discussion entitled "Dishonoring God and the Country: Puritans, Sex and Historians with Else Hambleton" will be held at 4 p.m. at the Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies at 650 East Pleasant St., Amherst. Admission is free. For more information, call 577-3600.

UMASS – Distinguished Faculty Lecture Series presents "Barbara Osborne: The Short Life and Timely Death of a White Blood Cell." The event will be held at 4 p.m. in the Massachusetts Room in the Mullins Center. Osborne's research focuses on the immune system and how it can be affected by genetics and cell death. Her work has implications in health issues, ranging from Alzheimer's disease to spinal cord injuries to breast cancer and cancers of the immune system. A reception follows the lecture. Admission is free and open to the public.

UMASS – A symposium entitled "Making Art – Making A Living: Visual Artists and Writers" will be held from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Presenter Daniel Grant, author of "How to start and succeed as an artist." For aspiring professionals in the visual arts and for writers, topics will include marketing, galleries, distributors, contests, agents and other issues. For more info, contact 545-2360 or visit www.umass.edu/aes. This event is free for Five College students. There is a $10 suggested donation for others and $40 for the five-part series. The event runs April 2, 9, 15, 23 and 30 and is sponsored by Arts Extension Service, UMass Division of Continuing Education and UMass Arts Council.

THURSDAY APRIL 3

SMITH COLLEGE – A lecture entitled Principles of Investing will be held at 12 p.m. in the Neilson Browsing Room. This course provides an introduction to the theory of portfolio diversification and its relationship to risk and return. Topics include investing and the life cycle, stocks, bonds and interpreting financial statements. Professor Roger Kaufman will present the lecture. Lunch for the first 70 attendees. Admission is free. Women and Financial Independence will sponsor the event.

SMITH COLLEGE – A lecture entitled "Recovering from Violent Conflicts: Women and Peace Building in Uganda" will be held at 4:30 p.m. in Seelye 201. Admission is free.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – A lecture entitled "W.E.B. DuBois: The Aristocrat at the Barricades" will be held at 7 p.m. in the Gamble Auditorium in the Art Building. The event is sponsored by the African and African American Studies departments. Admission is free.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – Hampshire College Theater presents, "Shakespeare: A Festival," to be held at 8 p.m. in the Studio Theatre in Emily Dickinson Hall. Student admission costs $3 and general admission is $5. For more information, call 559-5351.

FRIDAY APRIL 4

AMHERST COLLEGE – A lecture series on "Civil Liberties and Civil Rights and the Imagining of America" will be held from 4-5 p.m. in the Cole Assembly Room in Converse Hall. Admission is free.

UMASS- The South Asaian Students Association is sponsoring SASA Nite '03 tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium at 7 p.m. Tickets are $5 in advance at TIX Unlimited and $7 at the door. There will be a free after party.

SATURDAY APRIL 5

UMASS – Princeton Review's LSAT Preparation Course will be held from 6:30-9:30 p.m. The first session of the LSAT preparation course held on the UMass campus. This course runs every Wednesday night, through June 4 with four Saturday morning practice tests. Class size limited to eight. For information and registration, call 800-2REVIEW or visit princetonreview.com.

SUNDAY APRIL 6

AMHERST College – "Affirmations: An African American Worship Service" will be held at 1 p.m. in Chapin Chapel. The Reverend Zina Jacques, Director of Pastoral Counseling at Trinity Episcopal Church in Boston, will be the speak. A reception will follow the service.

UMASS- Celebrate African-American and Jewish Culture and the liberation and unity of all peoples at the Freedom Seder in Campus Center room 1009 at 6 p.m. For more information call The Office of Jewish Affairs 545-9642.

MONDAY APRIL 7

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – A community event, Buddhist Awareness Week will be held until April 12. Events are TBA. Check online Five College calendar for current information or email mhcbig@hotmail.com with questions. The event is sponsored by BIG, Buddhists in Gathering. For more information, email mhcbig@hotmail.com.

UMASS – A lecture entitled "Competing with the Check Cashers and Money Transmitters: How Banks Can Do a Better Job Serving Latin American Immigrants" will be held in Thompson Hall, room 620 from 12 to 1 p.m. Admission is free and open to the public. For more information, call 545-3940.

UMASS – An Entomology seminar, "How dispersal capability and ovarian dynamics affect the efficacy of whitefly parasitoids" will be held at 3:30 p.m. in Fernald Hall in the Alexander Conference Room. The speaker is David Byrne of the University of Arizona. Refreshments will be served at 3:15 p.m. in the second floor Bug Collection hallway.

UMASS – Reel Out Movie Series will present "Trembling Before God" in Hasbrouk Auditorium, room 124 at 7 p.m. "Trembling Before God" is an unprecedented feature documentary that shatters assumptions about faith, sexuality and religious fundamentalism. It is cosponsored in part by the Office of Jewish Affairs. Admission is free. For more information, call 545-4824.

TUESDAY APRIL 8

UMASS – A lecture entitled "Dancing with Giants: Ekphrasis in Don Quixote 1.8" will be held at 4 p.m. in Herter Hall, room 301. In this talk, Professor Frederick de Armas will dwell on the famous episode of the windmills in Don Quixote and how Cervantes shaped it according to artist of the Italian Renaissance. Admission is free.

UMASS – Class: Shakespeare's Tragedies, Early and Late with Normand Berlin from 7-9:30 p.m. in the Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies, 650 East Pleasant St., Amherst. Admission is free. For more information call 577-3600.

SMITH COLLEGE – A lecture entitled The Biology and Politics of Restoring the Florida Everglades will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Neilson Library Browsing Room. The event is sponsored by the environmental science and policy program, the botanic garden and the landscape studies program. Admission is free.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – A Japanese Tea Ceremony will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Wa Shin An, Eliot House. Sign up by email nyamashi@mtholyoke.edu or by calling 536-4364

-Compiled by Courtney Charles

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Index Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily, since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500. Sales between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Munager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

GET PAID TO GO TO SCHOOL. TALK ABOUT ROLE REVERSAL.

The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT
NEED A SUMMER JOB?

University Conference Services is currently accepting applications for FULL OR PART TIME SUMMER EMPLOYMENT for its Summer Conference Housing Program.

The following positions are available:
- Desk /Operational Staff
- Guest Housing Supervisors
- Desk Staff Supervisor
- Key Control Supervisor
- Student Supervisor

If you are staying in the area this summer, this is a great way to earn some cash, enjoy a relaxed summer, and gain valuable experience in customer service that will benefit any major.

Pick up an application:
- In the Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center or online at
- www.aux.umass.edu/conferenceservices

For more information, stop by or call 545-2591

COMPLETED APPLICATIONS ARE DUE BY 5PM, APRIL 11, 2003

Illness suspected on plane

Continued from page 1

international travelers, to health care workers who have taken care of SARS patients, and to those in close contact with SARS patients.

They also say the SARS germ, not yet firmly identified, appears to spread mostly from droplets spewed out through coughing or sneezing. But it's possible it might also spread more broadly by airborne transmission, or by lurking on surfaces like doorknobs that other people later touch, the experts said.

Short of quarantine, authorities around the country have taken other steps.

At the airport in San Jose, Calif., an American Airlines flight from Tokyo was held on the tarmac after the captain reported five people on board appeared to have SARS-like symptoms. The disease causes a fever, sometimes with chills, headache and body aches, and can lead to a cough and shortness of breath.

A man sitting near three of the passengers said they showed no signs of illness.

"It's an overreaction of some sort," said Bob Beom of Grants Pass, Ore.

Federal health authorities are handing out warning cards to travelers who arrive in the United States from Asia, including those who may just passed through infected countries.

The cards advise the passengers arriving by plane or by ship to monitor their health for at least 10 days because of possible exposure to SARS. "If you become ill with fever accompanied by cough or difficulty in breathing, you should consult a physician," the card advises.

Airports aren't the only places where SARS has prompted precautionary steps. Syracuse University in New York state cut short its semester-long study-abroad program in Hong Kong and called 31 students home Tuesday. The university also has decided to cancel two upcoming summer programs in mainland China.

Fifteen of the recalled students are enrolled at Syracuse, while the rest are from other U.S. colleges. They had already completed most of their course work, but were originally scheduled to return home May 21 after a five-week internship, usually at a multinational corporation in China.

Meanwhile, the Greenwich Country Day School in Greenwich, Conn., asked more than 40 students and staff members to stay home a few days because they'd visited China for two weeks recently on a class trip or visited the Far East during spring break.

None of the students or staff members have shown symptoms of SARS, the school said Tuesday. Headmaster Doug Lyons decided on Sunday to ask them to stay home after reading newspaper accounts about the disease in Asia. The students and staff were to return to school Wednesday if they continued symptom-free.

"This is probably the most conservative position that any school in the United States is taking," Lyons said. "A reasonable person might say, 'Doug you're overreacting,' and I would accept that and say, 'You may be right. Forgive me.'"

In California, an easy jumping-off place for Americans to travel to Asia, some travel agencies reported cancellation of vacations and business trips.

At 5 Oceans Tours in Westminster, some customers have canceled flights to Asia scheduled for May and June and weekly bookings for trips there have dropped from 100 to five, according to manager Cam Tsai.

"It's kind of serious when people in Hong Kong are wearing masks," Tsai said. "I wouldn't go, either."

It's more of the same in San Francisco, where Kevin Goo, a travel agent for China Travel Service USA Inc., said about 20 percent of the firm's clients have canceled tours in China.

In Atlanta, Thompson said more pressure would be applied on China, where the disease first unfolded but was kept quiet for months.

"It's important to see if we can work in more of a collaborative fashion with China," said Thompson, who was touring a new emergency operations center of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

"I think we're going to put on more pressure, we're going to tell them we want to be more helpful."

On the net:
WHO information: www.who.int/csr/sars/en/
CDC information: www.cdc.gov/ncidod/SARS

Romney admits possible error in excluding Bulger

Continued from page 1

A capital spending meeting is upcoming, Romney said, adding 'Certainly President Bulger should be part of that meeting."

Bulger spokesman John Hoey said they are open to "any thoughtful discussion."

"The president is willing and happy to collaborate and work with the governor and the Legislature in assuring that the University of Massachusetts and higher education have a bright future," Hoey said.

Bulger, whose $309,000-a-year job would be eliminated under Romney's plan, was not invited to Wednesday's meeting.

Grace Fey, chairwoman of the university's board of trustees, sent a letter to Romney last Friday, stating that she and vice chairman William Giblin and the five chancellors would not attend the meeting without Bulger.

Romney says the state would save $14 million eliminating the UMass presidency and system administration. The proposal is part of his plan to save a total of $100 million in higher education spending to help close a $3 billion state deficit.

It also would diminish the research missions of the Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell campuses, the College of Art and the Massachusetts Maritime Academy would be spun off and independently run and UMass Medical School in Worcester would be privatized.

Romney on Monday called off the chancellors' conference just hours before he met with the leaders of the state's nine public colleges, who expressed concerns about the governor's plans to reorganize the system.

Romney noted Tuesday that Bulger has pledged to slash $40 million – $7 million more than the governor's proposal – from the UMass budget.

"It proves our number wasn't as aggressive as it should have been. We'll adopt his number right away," Romney said.

First cadet class graduates

Continued from page 1

will also be dispatched to less serious matters needing a police presence and are designated as potential first responders in medical emergencies. O'Connor also sees the cadets as useful in policing parking lots of Southwest, areas that she says vandalism frequently occurs.

O'Connor said that the cadets will also have limited arrest powers, particularly in situations where they are assaulted or see another person being assaulted.

"Any other stuff they see they will call for another officer," O'Connor said.

O'Connor characterized the cadets as enthusiastic men and women who are also good students.

"Their average GPA is actually over 3.0," she said.

Cadet Aaron Boesch, a student at Westfield State College, said that the toughest part of training for him was balancing everything in his schedule.

"It was hard to take care of two separate things [school in Westfield and cadet training in Amherst] that are so far apart from each other," Boesch said.

Boesch said that he has been designated as a reserve, or alternate, meaning that he will work one night a week with other shifts occasionally added when extra policing is needed, such as on concert nights.

He sees the cadets' roles as a positive for the campus.

"It was determined that the police needed new eyes and ears to help them with law enforcement," he said.

Boesch said that he jumped at the opportunity to be a cadet and sees it as a stepping-stone toward a career as a full-time officer.

"I hoped to gain the experience of it," he said.

News Meeting today at 5 p.m.

April Fools?

After a week of warm weather students are caught off guard during a surprise flurry. The weather is expected to remain cool for the remainder of the week.

UMass grading policy under review

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

A motion to change the grading policy at the University of Massachusetts from the current A/AB system to the more common A/A system has been put forth by the Academic Matters Council and the Graduate Council. The motion will be presented and voted on by the Student Government Association and Faculty Senate at their upcoming respective meetings.

The policy, if passed, will take effect for the Fall 2003 semester and will affect all undergraduate and graduate students. Student's existing Grade Point Average would stand but new grades would be added in coherence to the new system.

"Once it goes into effect, it will be in effect for everyone," said professor of nutrition Moktar Atallah, a member of the Academic Matters Council.

According to Atallah UMass has used its current A/AB system since the 1970's.

As a student member of the Academic Matters Council Atallah, who has now graduated, suggested the policy change. The student raised the question of whether the grading system put students at a disadvantage when applying to other schools and the Academic Matters Council began to look at the issue.

The special report from the Academic Matters and Graduate Councils concludes that the current grading system does put UMass students at a disadvantage.

"Graduating seniors and alumni applying to gradate/professional schools are often handicapped by a system that gives them ABs and BCs for work that would have earned A-'s or B-'s at other institutions," the report states. "The difference may seem subtle but, for an employer or an admission officer not familiar with our system, the impact of that difference can create a disadvantage for our graduates."

Secretary of University Policy for the SGA, Brian Long, agreed with the report, and supports the motion for this reason.

"Say you're applying to graduate school, when people at other schools or employers look at a BC they don't know how to interpret it, so they round down to a C when converting a UMass student's GPA," Long said.

Results from a random Internet survey done by the two councils showed that UMass is one of fewer than 10 institutions, within the 125 Research I and Research II universities (schools comparable to UMass), that use the A/AB grading system.

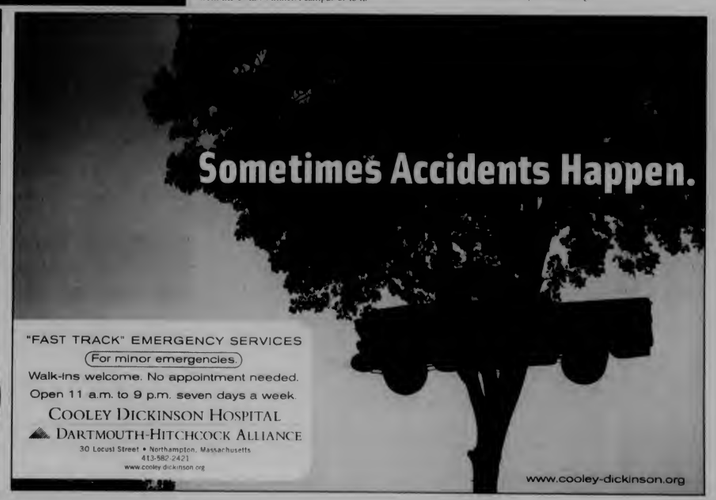
UMass is the only school within the UMass system and the Five-College Consortium that uses the A/AB grading system. According to the report this creates difficulty for current UMass students taking courses at other colleges within the consortium and for those students who chose to transfer away from the UMass Amherst campus or to it.

Confusion due to the A/AB system is reflected furthermore in the "broader categories that are unfamiliar to our entering students," who have left high schools or higher education institutions with A/A- system that "clearly groups the students' efforts into categories." Current grading policy at UMass lacks this clarity, as well as the "clear indication" to the student that to earn a higher grade a greater effort must be made in order to move the student from a B+ to an A- or A.

The move to an A/A- grading system will also assist professors by providing faculty with "uniform guidelines for recording the grades for each course" and student, says the councils report.

Atallah agreed that the change would have advantages over the current system for professors, but that it could also create greater difficulties for professors when deciding a student's grade, especially in larger classes where professors and students have less contact with one another.

"Grading – we struggle with grading all the time. But it's going to be more important for students and where they stand in the class. With the new system to put the student in an A- or a B+ is a greater decision [than giving an AB grade] for professors," said Atallah. "The gap is bigger; it will be more of a struggle for faculty especially in large classes where it is hard to know whether to move a student to an A- or a B+. The differences are small but there is a perception when looking at a transcript with a group of grades whether this person is in the B group or the A group."



By recommending the change from the current A/AB system to a A/A- system, the Academic Matters and Graduate councils hope to conform UMass grading and transcripts with those of the Five College Consortium members, other state schools especially those within the UMass system, and grading guidelines commonly understood by employers and graduate programs.

The SGA will discuss the report and motion at their meeting this evening. The SGA's University Policy Committee and Public Policy and Relations Committees have already passed the motion unanimously, and Long expects that it will be passed by the general body Senate at tonight's meeting. Atallah says that he will be in attendance to answer any questions brought to the floor concerning the report.

The Faculty Senate will hear the report and adjoining motion by the Academic Matters Council during it's meeting on April 10. Ernest May, secretary of the Faculty Senate, supports the changes outlined by the report.

"I agree with all the points made in the report," May said. "From the student's point of view, however, the major advantage to the proposed system is that it will facilitate transfers (in and out) and applications to graduate schools. The current system puts UMass Amherst students at a slight (but unnecessary) disadvantage."

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
Results you can feel.
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Media vs. security: non-bias and common sense a must

The firing of NBC TV journalist Peter Arnett Monday and the Pentagon's criticism of Fox News reporter Geraldo Rivera yesterday serve as constant reminders that the United States' current war with Iraq is being covered journalistically like no other military conflict ever has been before.

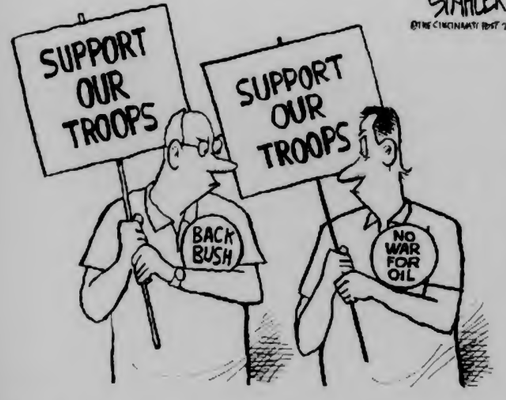
With the coming of the "embedded" journalist has come a continued friction between different media outlets and both the Iraqi and United States government. Everyone from the Fox News network to ABC's Peter Jennings has been criticized for the way they are covering the war. Fox News has been criticized since the onset of the war for coverage others, especially liberal groups, have deemed as too 'pro United States'. Jennings has been critiqued by both the political left and right and for remaining "too neutral." The United States government has been criticized for trying to sway journalists by providing easy access to troops and generals.

The first journalist to lose his job as a result of wartime frictions is Arnett. NBC fired Arnett after he granted an unauthorized interview to an Iraqi television station. In that interview, he openly criticized the American government, saying that their movement initially failed because of Iraqi resistance.

Arnett made a mistake in granting the interview, displaying an alarming lack of objectivity that had to have startled heads at NBC.

"When I heard he had given an interview to Iraqi TV, I immediately thought it was about as bad a judgment that a reporter in the field could make," MSNBC president Erik Sorenson told the Associated Press. "I held out hope initially that maybe he had given the interview at gunpoint or there was some extenuating circumstance."

That about sums it up. NBC realistically had no other alternative but to release Arnett. After his outburst, it would have compromised their wartime coverage to keep him on the job. Arnett has since been reportedly hired by the Daily Mirror, a London newspaper openly opposed to the war violently.



Rivera has drawn fire for revealing the positions of American troops several times, something which goes against all rules that have been established for embedded journalists. While Rivera is not embedded, he should be adhering to many of the same rules. Drawing diagrams in the sand, as he has, to reveal key positions of American troops stands as a security and safety threat for the war effort and the lives of each and every soldier behind enemy lines. The Pentagon has asked Fox News to remove Rivera from his post.

The conflicts that go with covering the war in Iraq are far from over. There are too many dissenting opinions and too many different points of view for that to ever happen. What both the media outlets and the United States government must recognize is that lives are at stake every day that conflict drags on. The fight for public opinion and the fight to break stories cannot come at the expense of the lives of American soldiers.

The Associated Press was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

STAHLER. ©THE CINCINNATI POST 2003

Pay per view match of the century

War is everywhere. From the bountiful amount of anti-war groups on campus to the non-stop coverage provided by the 24-hour news cycle, the topic of war is inescapable. So, what else was I to do but join the bandwagon and write my thoughts on the war?

I am not going to argue the details of the war. I will leave that to the protestors. It seems everyone has an opinion of the positives and negatives of the President's policies. In all honesty, I have heard as much as I can handle from both the pro and anti war groups. The more I hear about the war, the more the words of my brilliant (and anonymous) friend ring true: "Bush and Hussein should just duel."

Adrienne Bossi

After serious consideration and much contemplation, I have contrived a list of reasons why this is the ideal solution to the situation in Iraq. When stripped of all propaganda and partisanship, the main fight against Iraq is between leaders. The American people and the Iraqi people don't want to experience the destruction and loss of war. Yet, each leader is eager and willing to enlist their people in a bloody fight of principles. They are hiding behind the citizens they govern. I wonder how their ideals would change if their own blood and that of their family and close friends were to be shed on the battlefield?

I say, let's find a nice abandoned warehouse in a neutral country for the two to duke it out. They will have no advisors help, no citizens and soldiers to act as human shields, and no weapons. There will be cameras hidden all over the building and a daily check in area for each leader to make sure they are still alive. I can see the Pay-per view headlines now, "The Match of the Century."

Further benefits of a "Match of the Century" revolve around easing economic strains within the United States. Our defense budget is soaring within the hundreds of billions range. Think of all the other programs this money could be used for. Poverty would require roughly $90 billion a year to remedy. Millions of Americans have no health care and millions more work an extra shift or two to afford insurance. Think of all the improvements to public education a few billion could provide.

Additionally, much of the money saved on weapons and other war products could be used more productively as aid for Iraqi civilians. This will not only help them rebuild their country but it will help improve the image of the United States in the eyes of the world.

The cost of Bush and Hussein's duel is meager in comparison. The expenses would involve transportation to said warehouse, compensation to the nation in charge of said warehouse, and security to prevent sabotage by either party. Whatever the total is, I'm sure it is less than the annual $380 billion budget posted on the Department of Defense website.

> "I wonder how their ideals would change if their own blood and that of their family and close friends were to be shed on the battlefield?"

More important than money, however, would be the return home of our troops and our allies' troops. Why should our relatives, friends and significant others fight a battle that mostly lies in two men's inability to cooperate with each other? Furthermore, the number of civilian lives that will be saved is also fuel for this theory. The Iraqi people have suffered enough under Saddam Hussein's regime. Now they must suffer through his war, his stubbornness and his lack of diplomacy.

"The Match of the Century" will also eliminate the challenge of dissecting war facts from media bias. How is a citizen supposed to stay well informed of war updates when each news source is biased in some way? Fox news is utterly and unquestionably supportive of the war policy while Peter Jennings has been criticized for questioning policy too often. Where is the neutrality? Each station seems to have a partisan bias.

Furthermore, it is hard for reporters who hide in foxholes and ride in tanks with American and ally troops to not feel partisan. The reporters become "comrades." They are present during many of the gruesome scenes of war. It is hard to report a story against the war when you know the faces of the casualties. Similarly, the comfortable distance an anchorman like Peter Jennings has makes it easier to question policy. So, whom do you believe?

You believe me. Give each party a month to prepare. Half the time shall be spent on physical training, the other half on diplomacy training. How eager will they be to fight when it is their own blood being spilled? I can see the headlines now. "Bush and Hussein duel in a bare-knuckled "Fight Club" style brawl till they can't brawl no more." Although we may not all like him, I have my money on the ol' frat boy president's right hook.

Adrienne Bossi is a Collegian Columnist.

We hope you enjoyed your flight

Regan McKendry

We've probably all seen them – the children who are flying alone without their parents for the first time. Perhaps it was once when you were seven years old and being escorted everywhere by the hand of the flight attendant when you traveled to see your grandmother out in Arizona. For myself, like most of us, my first time traveling alone was in adulthood. I joined my family for a quick three-day weekend down in Orlando a few autumns ago.

What was different this past weekend was that it was my inaugural getaway by air without anyone for the entire trip. No family, no friends, not even my stuffed Kermit to keep me company (truth be told though I outgrew him a long time ago … kinda). I was off to visit the first of the three graduate schools I'll be seeing over the next two weeks. With them paying for all the travel, who could resist?

I've flown on numerous occasions for both vacations and business, and the worst thing I've come across was one missed connector in Dells Fort Worth on the way home from Hawaii (resolved an hour later by catching another flight). I should have known, though, when I called to confirm my flights the night before departure that this trip was going to be anything but easy.

All I wanted when I phoned United Airways was a confirmation of my flights. What I got was a rude awakening that the tickets for my trip had never been booked. Here I was, scheduled to depart in about 17 hours, and I had no way to get on the plane. I had found it strange a month earlier when booking the tickets that no person had asked for my credit card number. I asked the vague question, "Am I all set?" I was assured twice that everything was fine and even given a confirmation number. I guess it turns out I was supposed to call back within 24 hours to purchase the tickets I had just "reserved" and not "bought" them.

The agent told me that there were still seats available, but the price had escalated from $241.50 to $479.50. Now I know I wasn't paying for the trip, but I also didn't feel like surprising the University of Tennessee with an additional $238 in charges. I tried to tell my customer service representative (if that's what you could call her) that nobody had told me to call them back, nor asked for a credit card. She, however in her own rude way, found that impossible.

After checking other airlines to no avail, as I really didn't want to rearrange the schedule of my trip, I called back and spoke with a supervisor. I was able to bargain down to $349.50 – a modest victory in my eyes for the company's mistake. At least I knew I'd be leaving Windsor Locks the next day at 2:38 p.m., right?

Having arrived at Bradley around half past noon, I checked in, grabbed a Cinnabon and boarded a refreshingly "not full" plane. We were all set to pull away from the gate when the pilot informed us that Air Traffic Control had issued a ground stop in northern Virginia (my connection). A wall of water clouds and whatever else Mother Nature could think of was blocking the path from the northeast toward Dulles, so the skies had become overly crowded with diverted aircraft.

What did this mean to me? An additional two hours for me in the Nutmeg State. I waited in line while trying to find other airlines that might be able to get me there. I eventually determined that the simplest plan of action was to remain with my original flight and try to make my connector. If I didn't, there was at least another one that I was now ticketed for.

A little over two hours after our initial departure time, about 30 of us on the 737 were in the air on our way to the D.C. area, by way of Syracuse. (That's direct isn't it?) I landed and found that my connector had left an hour before, so I would have to wait for the final flight to Knoxville of the evening, which departed at 9:30 p.m. It was now 6:30 p.m. – when I should have been landing in Tennessee. At least I had a flight. Several ladies sitting near me on the plane and bound for San Diego were going to have to spend the night at the airport hotel waiting for the first flight out Sunday morning.

When I should have been relaxing in my hotel room, I was boarding the plane for my second flight of the day and another shock in store. I had planned my original flights because of their schedules; I wanted to avoid propeller planes on all four flights for the trip. But as I had missed my first connector, I was no longer on a Canadair Regional Jet. Instead, a cramped, noisy, box was to be my home for the next two hours. With a disc man, the noise was bearable. Even still, the plane was still tiny as can be: one seat to the left, two to the right and roughly ten rows. The chairs didn't even recline. The only saving grace was that the flight was only about half full. Five hours after I was supposed to arrive, I finally landed at McGhee-Tyson Airport in Knoxville.

To be fair, the whole weekend was fine. The University of Tennessee made very hospitable hosts, and my flights home were uneventful. Even on the trip down, I still did not have to sit next to anybody on the plane. There was even a guy from Virginia Tech who was on the same delayed flight into D.C. that I could talk to for two hours while we waited for our respective connectors. No, the day may not have been at its worst, but it is surely an experience I won't soon forget.

Regan McKendry is a Collegian Columnist.

What is un-Americanism?

I was having a political discussion with one of my friends the other day, and not for the first time I was labeled un-American. In my experience, that's a very typical response to people who speak out against the current war in Iraq, any number of domestic issues, or American policies in general. It would seem that many people in this country are not willing to put up with critical opinions, throwing them all into a category they derisively label as un-American.

In order to figure out exactly what un-Americanism implies, it would help to begin with a definition. The word suggests that anyone fitting that description is directly opposed to U.S. interests. Yet even this is unclear. How can I be opposed to American interests given that I was born here? The fact is that I am American, and have always been. The United States is my country just as much as it is anyone else's. So if I choose to criticize my government, it won't change the fact that I am still an American. Since that is the case, it is a direct contradiction to say that I am un-American. In fact, it's plain wrong. So clearly that is not what is meant by the term un-American. Critics are more concerned with the views being expressed than with the nationality of the person expressing them.

Will Hillyard

Another remark I have heard many times in the past is "If you don't like the way things are here, why don't you leave the country?" This has always seemed particularly ridiculous to me. First of all, it's difficult for anybody to cross borders from country to country and start a new life. And even if I wanted to leave the country, I don't have the means to do so. But even more important is that when critics are asked to leave, it shows just how little room there is for dissent. Diverging opinions are a healthy part of the democratic process. So if America really does stand for freedom and democracy, divergent opinions should be welcomed, not rejected.

One of America's founding principles is tolerance of free speech. One of the things my friend kept telling me was that I am lucky to live in a country that tolerates free speech, and that people have died in order to provide me with the opportunity to write this very column. His point was that I should not take advantage of such an opportunity by expressing anti-American views. I couldn't disagree more. On the surface, he is correct. People really have died fighting wars against totalitarian states that did not support free speech and censored their newspapers. But if I censor myself in order to avoid offending people, what was their sacrifice for?

> "So if America really does stand for freedom and democracy, divergent opinions should be welcomed, not rejected."

Besides, the only way you can say you support free speech is if you are willing to support opinions you disagree with. Anyone can support opinions that they agree with. Heck, even Stalin could do that. It's when a truly unpopular point comes up that the true test of free speech is applied. For example, if this newspaper printed an article by a Nazi sympathizer, they would be supporting free speech. To refuse to print the article would be to reject free speech. Now I'm not saying that I would agree with whatever a Nazi sympathizer has to say. I'm sure I would disagree with it. But I would want to see the point get out there for people to read.

That's the purpose of a free press, and a demonstration of the value of free speech. So when my friend tells me to stop criticizing the war or any other American policy, he is directly refuting the very ideal he claims to stand for. Of course, it's important to be fair and accurate. But there's nothing wrong with criticizing a policy if you truly believe it to be wrong.

This seems to come up again and again now that we are at war with Iraq. People opposing the war will be labeled as un-American and unpatriotic. The implication is that these people don't understand what it really means to live in the greatest country in the world. Again, I couldn't disagree more. When people say that opposing the war is un-American, I think of a speech Martin Luther King, Jr. once made against the war in Vietnam.

Dr. King said that he understood that people would criticize him for opposing the war by calling him anti-American. His response was that he opposed the war because he loved America, and hated to see Americans fighting a terrible war half a world away. He did not want to see his country doing something so needless and destructive.

These sentiments express why I feel justified in opposing the war in Iraq. I do so because I think America is a wonderful country, and I hate to think that America would follow a policy of such questionable morality. America is a free country, and I have the privilege of expressing my views in this column. To me, there is no better way to demonstrate my appreciation of that privilege than to express my opinion, whatever that opinion may be.

Will Hillyard is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include author's name and phone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 250 and 300 words and should be addressed to 'Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and should be addressed to 'Commentary.' All submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

The socialites of Sylvan

You get on the bus to Orchard Hill and it takes a right on the corner of North Pleasant and Eastman Lane. On your right you drive by Northeast and continue up a hill and all of a sudden the trees open up and on your left appears a cluster of large brick buildings with people scampering about.

Ben Feder

What is this place? Have you found the legendary El Dorado? Some lost city populated by an ancient civilization? Perhaps some parallel dimension where weekends don't exist and Tuesday-Thursday classes are three hours long?

What this mysterious place you have stumbled upon that few others take notice to is called Sylvan. A place I called home my freshman year, along with other students shoved to the wayside by housing when they chose to live in the bustling Southwest or Central.

An area shunned by students who, upon hearing its name, shudder and cringe at the sound of its two syllables rolling off the tongue. Most students have never even set foot upon its grounds.

I remembered feeling ashamed when I left Sylvan's secluded boundaries to venture into the wilderness of UMass. When asked where I lived, I would shy away and mumble the word "Sylvan." Even its name sounds like it is more a part of the latest installment of the "Lord of the Rings" than of a dormitory area.

The main reason this area is cast aside is due to its location. To get there you can travel through Northeast, an area barren of activity besides its extensive quad, which, in times of nice weather, supports a host of activities including Streak Fest and freshman orientation. Or from Orchard Hill, you can walk the "rape trail," a path that as its name implies, isn't the most appealing of options.

Another common feeling of Sylvan is that it is antisocial. With students confined to suites with just seven other roommates, they tend to stay within their own little community, with no need to venture into the hallways to other suites, let alone other floors. Well when I lived there, I met more people than I had in other dorms. I found that it was one of the more socially expectable environments than otherwise.

A feeling of "if you can't get to the action, bring the action to you," was heartfelt by us. One spring evening during finals week, my entire suite went to Wal-Mart, purchased water guns, and declared war on the floor above us. Sure the hallways smelled like wet dog for the following days, but it was the time of my life. Now I have lived in Southwest, Central, and even Northeast, and I can happily say that comparatively, Sylvan was just as eventful.

> "Now I have lived in Southwest, Central, and even Northeast, and I can happily say that comparatively, Sylvan was just as eventful."

Plus those suites provide the perfect atmosphere for a party. Imagine 50 people having a miniature round robin behind a suite's two locked doors. That beats the ten-person capacity that most dorm rooms provide.

The reason I bring this up is that it distresses me to see any of these Sylvanians being socially ousted for their misfortunes. I remember hearing somewhere that Sylvan was one of the most sexually active college dorm areas. And come the weekend, the area is brimming with activity. If this is true, than this doesn't sound like the proverbial collegiate ghost town that Sylvan is rumored to be.

What I propose is something called the Sylvan exchange program. Where students from other areas switch with students living in Sylvan to experience what these areas have to offer. The students will hang out with each other's friends, and with them they'll bring the life style of whatever area they are coming from. This will help bring the bonds of the UMass community closer as students come together and embrace these wayward souls back into the social circle.

To everyone I say this: don't turn your noses up to a Sylvanian in need. If you see one of these downtrodden souls, put your arm around them and say, "Hey it'll be all right." For they too deserve the chance to be in a drunken stupor, hugging that porcelain bowl with their head held high, smiling at the camera, saying, "Now that was a good time."

For, whether we like it or not, we all share one common goal: to live out our youth to the fullest and most outspoken way possible. That we may somehow leave our mark, somewhere down the road, so future UMass residents retell our exploits and wonder how we managed to not get arrested, kill ourselves, or bring the university to financial ruin. Here's to you UMass.

Ben Feder is a Collegian Columnist.

Support our troops

Can you hear that? It's very faint, but if you listen hard you'll hear it. I know what it is. It's the sound of our ancestors rolling over in their graves. Why? Well, because I don't think they paid the ultimate price so that people could walk out of school in protest of war they should be supporting. The problem is that our opinions are skewed by so many outside forces, that we shouldn't listen to all the time, mainly the liberal media.

I wonder why we put so much stock into what Hollywood celebrities think about social issues. What experience do any of these people have that qualifies them to render their opinion so often? None. They use their celebrity status to get themselves air time to spew their rhetoric, and then run away and hide behind their publicists and spokes people. Should the opinion of people who make millions of dollars pretending to be someone else count?

Daniel Cote

They're professional phonies, and their entire world is a fantasy, like most liberals. They drink imported water and have Personal Assistants to fetch them cafe lattes. They live in massive mansions and think they can sympathize with the homeless. How many of these stars contributed money to the Sept. 11, 2001 charities? Not many, but they sure didn't have a problem asking blue collar America to contribute their honest money. George Clooney, Martin Sheen, Susan Sarandon and the rest have used their status to make anti-war commercials that talk about how the inspections are working and that invading Iraq will cost the lives of hundreds of thousands civilians. How do the stars know any of this? They don't; they're just making it up.

What about rock stars, you might be thinking? Well Tom Morello, formerly of the band Rage Against the Machine, has been pretty vocal. The "machine" being corporate America. The funny thing is that Tom makes all of his money from his lucrative contracts with his record label. I thought that these record companies were big business. So that makes Tom a hypocrite. Also, with the exception of Janeane Garofalo, have any of these stars appeared on a show where their unfounded opinions will be challenged? Nope. That shows just how much credibility these people have. Also, do you think for a second that these stars went to do a complete 180 when the military starts uncovering the weapons Saddam had built up and the atrocities he has committed?

What have any of these socialist sympathizing stars done for their country? Nothing but enjoy the freedom to say what they want and the capitalistic system that has made them rich. If they don't like the war that much then they, and anyone else that agrees with them, can move to France, because in this war our troops need our support and not our criticism.

> "France is useless as a whole, and along with Germany, is making billions off their oil deals with Saddam."

Then there are those who think we can't do this without the support of the United Nations. Well, France is useless as a whole, and along with Germany, is making billions off their oil deals with Saddam. Russia is selling Iraq weapons that will be used against our own troops in exchange for oil well below market prices. So how much water does that case hold?

And how many of those U.N. countries would exist without the United States? The United Nations doesn't care about the lives of your family. So anyone who puts their safety in the hands of the United Nations obviously doesn't think much about their family. Hans Blix and the rest of his chocolate chomping inspectors are delaying the inspections to keep themselves in the spotlight.

Then there are those who say that there will be terrorist attacks in retaliation of the war. Well, can you really call it freedom if you let someone like Saddam or Osama hold an axe over your head while you go about your daily business? It is well known that Saddam Hussein finances terrorism, so what do you think is going to happen to terrorist networks if their financial well dries up? Also, the government knows it didn't get all of the weapons of mass destruction destroyed back in 1991. The first responsibility of the government is to protect its citizens, and if this means pissing off the Islamic community, then so be it. When it comes to protecting your family you can't care what everyone else thinks of you.

I wonder why so many people will show up to protest for a free Tibet, but as soon as you mention Iraq you get that sanctimonious, "Iraq hasn't done anything to us." No, except for violate every U.N. mandate they've signed, gas their own people, and starve dissenters out.

Right now there are a quarter of a million U.S. troops in the Kuwaiti desert. They eat MREs, spend their free time picking the sand out of their boots and get to call home once a week. They only work on days that end in the letter "y." So put yourself in their boots and imagine all of the bullets, bombs and missiles flying overhead. Would you want in the back of your mind the thought that most of the people back home don't support you?

Daniel Cote is a Collegian Columnist.

Extreme environmentalists

Gilad Skolnick

MassPIRG, move over. If you thought that MassPIRG helps the environment then you haven't met the residents of Baker. MassPIRG tries their best to clean up rivers, save forests and take care of harmful toxins, but compared to my hall mates, they do nothing. No one works harder to promote recycling like the people of Baker.

Each week they make sure to buy many recyclable choice beverages, drinking them in an accelerated pace in order to quicken the recycling process. When they aren't able get to a recycling bin with their bottles, they throw them on the halls and bathroom floors of Baker, determined not to see them end up in a trash can, where it would take hundreds of years to decompose.

> Bakeronians are hardcore environmentalists, who are willing to deface and ruin what they need to in order to help our world."

And no one conserves water like the residents of Baker. They tear off showerheads to prevent people from having pleasant, and thus longer showers, which would result in much more water wastage. Toilets are rarely flushed, no matter what waste is left in them, and I can assure you that this is not because the people of Baker are disgusting lazy and uncaring, but rather in an effort to stem the waste of gallons and gallons of fresh water that gets flushed for so called "sanitary" reasons. You might look at all this and think that your hall mates do just as much to help the environment, but do your residents tear sinks off, probably in protest of water being wasted? Do your hall mates tear off soap dispensers to discourage people from washing their hands and possibly wasting even more water? The people of Baker think of everything.

Day after day they find new ways to help the environment. Trashcans are stolen, thrown out windows, or knocked down in a desperate effort to encourage more people to recycle. Every Thursday night, after the ritual of drinking from recyclable bottles and cans, several residents go as far as to vomit on the ground, adding nutrition to the soil and enriching the ground, for healthier grass and trees.

We care about our world and we care about our environment. MassPIRG is trying their best to do something about the rising pollution in the country, the dwindling forests, the polluting of rivers, but they simply can't compete. Bakeronians are hardcore environmentalists, who are willing to deface and ruin what they need to in order to help our world. Posters and fliers are indiscriminately ripped down from the halls, not out of a drunken rage, but in protest of the wasting of paper and the killing of trees.

Perhaps Baker's biggest environmental achievement is its window smashing campaign. The amount of energy wasted each year in our country through poorly insulated windows and doors amounts to the amount of energy received from the Alaskan pipeline every year. As a result of a simple window smashing, the administration puts up a wooden board in the spot where the window was. These boards don't have leaks and can't be opened, and hence much better at saving energy.

No, the residents of my dorm are not messy heartless self-centered drunks, this couldn't be farther from the truth. They care, and they couldn't do much more to show that they care about our world. In my recent interview with the President of Baker, Steven Spiegel, he states that "Cleanliness is up over 2 percent from last semester, the rate of recycling has risen by well over 1.3 percent, and that at this rate Baker is estimated to be spotless by the year 2034." He assured me that the house council is working around the clock to ensure that this goal is met. Working seven days a week to better the environment, Bakeronians are simply shockingly remarkable; so I ask but one thing of you, next year, when you are asked on your bill to donate that seven dollars to MassPIRG, give the money to a fellow resident of Baker instead.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian Columnist.

Differences in down under

Julia Maguire

Driving on the left side of the road is not driving on the wrong side, it's driving on the different side. After being in Australia for the past two months, it seems like the only side. In fact, everything Australians do seems to make the most sense.

First, they are entirely conscious of conservation. Despite being disappointed in not being able to see the water go down counter clockwise on account of shooting straight down, I'm comforted by the fact that I can save water by using either "halfies," a half tank over "wholies," a whole tank. The use of each tank is at the users discretion and should be fairly self explanatory but being aware of the contribution is enough to claim you're part of the solution.

Australians also have a fondness for abbreviations and rhyming which are both things I can wholeheartedly get behind. Despite how ludicrous it seems to call the telephone, the "dog and bone," phone does rhyme with bone and dogs play with bones. Perfectly logical. There's also the calling of Americans "seppos." The reasoning behind that is entirely linear because Australians believe all Americans are Yanks, so what rhymes with yanks?

Tanks! What kinds of tanks do we use? Septic Tanks! Obviously septic tank would be shortened to "seppo" and voila ... a word people use and have no idea what the connotations are, on account of a process that took place years ago to assure "seppo" became part of the Australian lexicon.

It's also appropriate that people have shortened Australia to Oz. There is idyllic scenery and interesting characters, and while I haven't been screened by members of the Lollipop Guild, I feel sufficiently welcome here. And while I'm in no hurry to get home, I'm confident in the fact that once I am, this Oz will finally be a reality and not just a dream I had the misfortune to wake up from.

There are aspects that are foreign enough to me to seem like a dream. Education in Australia is put in particularly high regard. Through a program called Hecks, the Australian government pays for every citizen to go to a university up front. Once each person starts making a designated amount of money, the government automatically withdraws from their pay check, as if it were another tax.

Also, universities don't attempt to distinguish themselves as more venerable or esteem worthy as others. They all provide quality education so everyone is offered the same opportunities. Impossible to replicate at this point due to the exorbitant tuitions forced on the American public, it's just another aspect that should provide Australia more respect and recognition than it normally receives in the United States, outside the explosion of Australian actors and the portrayal of its supposed essence in the form of a talking kangaroo.

Also, voting is compulsory, so despite an increasing majority being fed up with Prime Minister John Howard, there are no questions marks surrounding his election. Australians can at least be secure in the fact that their system is not crumbling before their eyes. It would be tolerable to handle an administration that I knew was elected fairly and Australians always have that going for them.

It's impossible to sum up how I feel about Australia while I am still in the midst of it. It's in the reflection that things are really put into perspective. I still don't even have a strong opinion about college life. I don't know what I am going to do from day to day, and I reckon that's a mentality the entire country shares. I'm usually guilty of wanting to know how things are going to turn out in the end, but I'm not interested in knowing here. This is a part of my life that I have no experience for, and pointing out the things that make this place unique to me are the only way I can communicate what it's like.

I don't think my weekend of sitting on the beach would be of any interest to you, but the fact that the sand actually squeaks when you walk on it is something that interests me. Or that the South African Bitou Bush, which grows on the dunes, is making it impossible for any other native vegetation to grow in, and therefore has to be ripped out, is pretty fascinating. And so is the entire league of people that assure that the thousands of plants will be ripped out in order to preserve the dunes and respect the beach that I am fortunate enough to sit on.

In the end, it is obviously the differences that make places special, and as a friend told me recently, change is as good as a holiday. If there's one thing that is a certainty about the continent of Australia, it is a change.

Julia Maguire is Collegian Columnist.

Celebrate the unibrow

Sanam Hakim

The eyebrow separation process is one that men and women alike go through. My eyebrow separation process began back in the eighth grade. After four years of gradual eyebrow reduction, I, too, had two eyebrows. The thing that confuses me about this whole thing is why people even separate their eyebrows to begin with.

The idea that all the cool kids have two eyebrows really gets introduced in middle school. Middle schools nationwide are filled with kids that are just starting to go through puberty. This means that the little girls and boys with light colored unibrows will slowly watch their unibrows get darker and darker. A lot of the little girls will start plucking their eyebrows. The boys don't really worry about it too much until they are in late high school-early college. At this point, they realize that their double-browed friends get more girls than them.

> "That's right ladies … chances are, if it looks like he plucks, he really does pluck."

For statistical purposes, I asked 20 of my guy friends how many guys pluck their eyebrows. The average answer was two out of ten. However, since guys tend to under-exaggerate that which makes them look bad, and over-exaggerate that which makes them look good, I'm going to take the liberty of adding three to that number. That's right ladies … chances are, if it looks like he plucks, he really does pluck. The thing I don't understand about guys who pluck is why none of them own tweezers. If you think it's "uncool" to pluck, it would be more logical to own and hide your own tweezers, than having to eventually confide in a tweezer-owning female friend later when you need to re-pluck.

The "eyebrow separating metamorphosis" is one of the strangest to deal with, in any situation. Sometimes you don't see a friend for a summer, for example. When you finally do see them, usually the words "you look so different" are the first words out of your mouth. Deep down you're really thinking "Wow you have two eyebrows now." Then you start crossing your fingers and hoping they don't ask you why you think they look different.

If you look at the situation realistically, the people with unibrows are the lucky ones. First of all, unibrowed people have the option of having one or two eyebrows. If, for some weird reason, unibrows became the big style in America, the people with two eyebrows would be doing silly things like drawing in the connection piece with mascara. People with unibrows always have the option of shaping their eyebrows into whatever shape they want. Remember – the most beautiful sculptures came from big blocks of wood, not tiny wood chips.

Second of all, really thin eyebrows go in and out of style, but thick eyebrows stay in style forever. Frankly, eyebrows are a significant part of face defining. If you're standing three feet away from a person, you shouldn't be wondering if they have eyebrows. Thick eyebrows scream, "Here are my eyebrows. Let there be no doubt." Lastly, thick eyebrow hair implies thick head hair, which is held in very high esteem, especially in America. Did you ever wonder why you never see hair-thinning formulas at the salon? That's right – thick hair is HOT!

To all you people relating to my column in any way, this column is a shout out to you. Your eyebrows are nothing to be ashamed of. They are a part of who you are. Living in a society where everyone looks the same, a good old-fashioned unibrow is something that should be celebrated, not looked down on.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian Columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Should rock stars sound off?

Rockin' Out

Samara Marblestone

Things haven't been so normal lately. It's weird to walk around this campus and see a bunch of hippies holding rallies and protesting the war. That's exactly what happened when most of our parents were in college too. During times like these, most people turn to music for comfort.

Lately, people have been turning to rock stars for opinions about what's going on in Iraq.

A couple weeks ago, my boyfriend vented to me about rock stars and their naive opinions about the war. He was flipping through the channels one day and saw Good Charlotte on MTV complaining about the war and sharing their thoughts on it. Of course the band was against the war, but they did not provide any valid reasons about why they felt this way. You're probably wondering what's wrong with a band voicing their opinion on MTV.

Here's the part where I started complaining.

That's just fabulous that Good Charlotte has an opinion about the war. The problem is that millions of young teens make up most of MTV's audience. Most are too young to understand what this war is about. They'll turn on "TRL" and listen to their favorite band vent about how unjust and unfair this war is, but you know what happens? They form the same opinion as these musicians.

It's not just Good Charlotte. MTV will interview any random rock star about what they think about the war, as if they were military experts. The average rock star knows just as much as the average Joe on the street about what's going on in Iraq. Rock stars shouldn't go on "TRL" and vent to Carson about how they want peace in this world or want the war to end. Young teens forming these same opinions as their favorite televised bands do so just because they're on MTV.

Frankly, MTV should restrain from interviewing any more rock stars about the war. I really don't care what any rocker has to say about the war; it would be more effective to walk out into Times Square and ask a random person his or her opinion.

Most rock stars may not even give their honest opinion about the war live on camera. They just might promote peace because they think that's what their fans want.

System of a Down is the only rock band that demonstrated doing research about the war and actually participated in protests. I care what they have to say, because they're actually somewhat intelligent.

Yes, I believe in free speech. But I just want MTV to realize that rock stars are not anymore intelligent about the war simply because they can play an instrument and know how to work the camera. There are young, naive children out there who will believe anything their favorite MTV personality says. Maybe the MTV community should take that into consideration.

Rock stars are not military experts, so why does MTV treat them like they are? Hey, why not? They get money for it, and that's all that matters.

Samara Marblestone is a Collegian columnist.

Simple Plan appeal to high school crowd

By Alyson Zillmann
Collegian Correspondent

Every high school student within a 20-mile radius of the Worcester Palladium must have been at the Sat. March 29 sold-out Simple Plan show. It was really a sight – thousands of antsy teenagers all drawn to one place, like one giant high school dance. No doubt every one of them had seen Simple Plan's single "I'd Do Anything" a million times on MTV.

The young, attractive guys of Simple Plan are perfect MTV material, with catchy songs and lyrics that are easy to mindlessly memorize. The teenagers who came to see them knew every word, and belted them out during the set so loudly that lead vocalist Pierre Bouvier could have given his windpipes a rest the entire evening.

Simple Plan
The Palladium
March 29

The opening bands, Madcap from Los Angeles, Gob from Vancouver, and Diffuser from Long Island, were good selections, and kept the audience alive and on their feet for two hours. Madcap took the stage first, and the energetic response was almost instantaneous. They had barely played two chords before there were crowd surfers in the air and mosh pits opening on the floor.

Next, Gob, a group that is worthy of headlining its own tour, gave an amazing performance. One of the songs they played, "I Hear You Calling" has an infectious guitar hook some might recognize as one of the tracks off the NHL 2003 game. At one point during the performance, lead vocalist Tom Thacker actually climbed on top of guitarist, Theo Goutzinakis, while continuing to sing. In addition to their own songs, Gob played an excellent cover of "Paint It Black," slightly faster than the original, but just as good in its own right.

Diffuser topped the opening bands off with heavier guitars and a rock edge.

Then Simple Plan took the stage, and the audience, whose energy had recently begun to lag, convulsed. Lead vocalist Pierre Bouvier started shouting "jump, jump, jump," and all as one the audience leapt to its feet. With the audience sufficiently riled up, Simple Plan opened into "God Must Hate Me."

Bouvier's vocals came out loud and clear, and all together the band's sound was nearly studio quality. While running through numbers like "My Alien," "The Worst Day Ever," "One Day," and "I Won't Be There," Bouvier and guitarist Sebastien Lefebvre kept the audience visually entertained by jumping up and down and spinning in circles.

For the more somber song "Perfect," which is about struggling to make your parents proud and growing apart from the closeness of childhood, Bouvier asked the audience to wave lighters or ... for a modern twist, cell phones. The song has beautiful tension in it, between parts where there is very little instrumentation, sometimes only a soft guitar part, and parts when the guitar and bass really fill out, swelling with emotion. The band played several covers of current hits, ranging from Eminem and 50 Cent, before wrapping up with their song "I'm Just a Kid," which the audience obviously related to. Thousands of teenage voices hammered out the lyrics about not fitting in and having your friends ditch you, as if the song were an anthem.

When the audience started chanting Simple Plan's name, the band came back out of the wings to give an encore performance of several more songs, including a cover of "American Psycho" by Bad Religion.

Before finally stepping off the stage, the band reiterated a statement that had been made earlier – this was the largest Simple Plan show ever.

"There's no way we can repay you for how good this feels," Bouvier said, with an emotional twinge in his voice.

There was no need for any payment after such an energetic and well-carried out concert. Not to mention, the audience was probably grateful that they got to stay out past curfew.

Disaster movie hollow to 'The Core'

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

What is it about disaster movies that appeal to people? In almost every disaster movie, some sort of photogenic catastrophe threatens a major populace. Then it's up to the heroes – as gee-whiz band as the Power Rangers – to find a way to outsmart Earth. The characters earnestly mouth pseudo-scientific jargon and lines about how "if [name your disaster of choice] isn't stopped, [name your preferred location here] will be destroyed!" Finally, we get treated to special effects smorgasbords of beloved monuments turned into burning cinders.

'The Core'
Directed by Jon Amiel
Starring Aaron Eckhart Hilary Swank
Paramount
Rated PG-13
135 mins

"The Core" is no different than your usual "the apocalypse is upon us" science-fiction melodrama. However, it lacks the kind of goofy fun that these movies usually have. It can be described as a subtler "Armageddon" with only half the fun. In the film, the Earth is threatened with an apocalypse, and the heroes must drill into the center of the Earth to stop it. "The Core" lacks the migraine-inducing jackhammer editing of "Armageddon." In it's way, it manages to be even sillier. Compared to "The Core," "Armageddon" looks like a model of scientific genius.

This time Earth is threatened when the inner core stops spinning, causing the protective electromagnetic field to start breaking apart. Pigeons fall from the sky; people with pacemakers drop dead; powerful electric storms tear apart Rome; Ultraviolet rays melt the Golden Gate Bridge. So it's up to hunky college professor Josh Keyes (Aaron Eckhart) and his team of scientists and pilots to rescue the world.

How do Keyes and his team plan to save the world? Conveniently, eccentric scientist Edward "Braz" Brazleton (Delroy Lindo) has developed a way to drill through thick rock at the speed of thousands of feet a second and a metal that can withstand almost any abuse, including magma hot temperatures. The plan is to build a ship that will drill to the Earth's core and detonate a series of nuclear weapons to jumpstart our stalled "engine."

"The Core" puts the fiction in science fiction. It's the kind of movie that should sweep us into questioning, "Could this really happen?" However, the movie is too silly to even take seriously on that cheesy level. Would a desert hermit scientist really have all the materials to build a ship that can take us to the center of the planet? "The Core" is built on a coincidence so headsmackingly dumb that the movie threatens to fall apart faster than the movie's version of the electromagnetic field.

There's a lack of eye-catching impression to the special effects. We are given images of the Earth's inner core that look like a psychedelic poster from the 1960s and scenes where beloved monuments are torn apart in violent, shiny cataclysms. The special effects, while decent, are humdrum images of destruction and flashing fluorescent colors shown far too many times before.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

The special effects of "The Core" are humdrum images of destruction and flashing fluorescent colors reminiscent of those in "Armageddon."

The main thing "The Core" has going for it is its cast. The director, Jon Amiel, doesn't know how to get the action scenes to spark, yet he has a gift for casting the movie with actors who don't turn everything into facile action film heroics. Eckhart, in particular, gives Keyes an extra dimension or two. The actor's bemused line readings may indicate he knows how to take a movie with a grain of salt without turning it into camp. Stanley Tucci, as an arrogant celebrity scientist, pitches his role with the right note of hammy zest. Ultimately, "The Core" boils down to a cast of good actors (Oscar winner Hilary Swank and Bruce Greenwood among them) spouting one-dimensional dialogue about how we must save the world. "The Core" is a sci-fi fantasy that's about as fantastic as the end of the world.

Letterman returns with jokes about his ailments

NEW YORK (AP) – After five weeks on sick leave, David Letterman returned to CBS' "The Late Show" Monday night acting happy, jazzed and just a little bit wacky.

"I am still under the influence of high-powered pharmaceuticals," he explained. "If it turns out the show goes great, I've still got the guy's number."

Letterman has been recuperating from a painful case of shingles, an infection of the nerve roots caused by the same virus that causes chickenpox.

"It hurt so much I was Michael Jackson-crazy," Dave raved.

The evening's Top 10 List summed up all the good things about shingles. It was a list of just one statement declaring there is nothing good about shingles.

With a series of guest hosts subbing for him since Feb. 26, Letterman may have been out of sight, but he hasn't been out of touch.

"You know how they cured my shingles?" he asked in a sly reference to the nation's current state of alert: "Duct tape!"

Then, with a proud smirk, he added, "Thirty days it took me to get over the shingles – and according to (Secretary of Defense) Donald Rumsfeld that's right on schedule."

He welcomed as his first guest Billy Crystal, who with dread amusement recalled his own case of shingles.

"I couldn't put a sheet on me!" said Crystal, who then took a close look at Letterman's eyes and chuckled, "Hey, you're really waxed!"

For Letterman, who turns 56 on April 12, the evening was a loopier version of the joyous welcome he got in February 2000, when he returned to the Ed Sullivan Theater after missing five weeks for heart bypass surgery. At the time he brought onstage his six doctors and two nurses from New York-Presbyterian Hospital and tearfully thanked them for saving his life.

Monday night, pretending to get emotional, he introduced his dermatologist who diagnosed and treated his shingles.

"I'm back from my annual bypass!" Dave told his fans.

-Frazier Moore, Associated Press

TV series to drop film plans, Indianapolis reviews discrimination charges, Heinz moves on plans

THREE MOVIES, CABLE TV SERIES DROP PLANS TO FILM IN MINNESOTA

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) – Three movies and a cable TV series have dropped plans to film in Minnesota, blaming the end of a state rebate program.

"That's a $66 million loss" of money that would have been spent in the state, said Craig Rice, executive director of the Minnesota Film and TV Board.

"These were films we had worked hard to get here," Rice said.

Those productions had counted on the "snowbate," an incentive to filmmakers that Gov. Tim Pawlenty suspended in January in a round of emergency cuts.

Now, as Pawlenty proposes to end its public funding, the film board is fighting for its existence.

"Officially, we're alive, but we're on life support," Rice said recently.

Because the board is partly supported by private grants and donations, it wouldn't disappear, said Rice, but its office would be reduced "to a couple of people who answer questions on the phone" instead of actively drumming up business.

Arnold Schwarzenegger's "Jingle All the Way," the "Mighty Ducks" movies, "Grumpy Old Men" and its sequel and Tim Allen's "Joe Somebody" are among the productions the film board has lured to Minnesota.

"We were in the running for 'Dreamcatcher' for a while," Rice said of the Stephen King thriller. "They ended up going to Canada. But there are a lot of films that are not as big that we could attract."

INDIANAPOLIS REVIEWS QUESTIONS ABOUT RAP, POSSIBLE RACISM

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) – Mayor Bart Peterson has asked a task force to examine claims that some nightclubs in a northside neighborhood discriminate against blacks by agreeing to limit when rap music can be played.

"I'm concerned because there is a suggestion that not everybody is welcome in Broad Ripple," Peterson said recently. "If that is the perception of some people, then it is an issue we should examine."

The Greater Indianapolis Progress Committee, a civic group formed in the 1960s to promote unity and community growth, will address the concern that some club owners in the Broad Ripple neighborhood made a pact to avoid hip-hop parties on weekends.

The concern began when J.Y.'s, a dance club formerly known as Eden, drew criticism from other bar owners for hosting hip-hop parties on weekends.

Peterson said the task force will investigate whether a ban on hip-hop is observed by club owners, and whether it has "the effect of segregating the community." The committee is expected to begin work within two weeks.

The same group examined police-community relations at Peterson's request following complaints at Indiana Black Expo last July.

Some neighborhood leaders and business owners have denied accusations of racism but criticized J.Y.'s for its music.

HEINZ HISTORY CENTER BREAKS GROUND ON $27 MILLION EXPANSION

PITTSBURGH (AP) – The Senator John Heinz Pittsburgh Regional History Center broke ground on a $27 million addition that will house traveling exhibits from the Smithsonian Institution and a regional sports museum.

The five-story, 50,000-square-foot addition will give the museum about 195,000 square feet of space, and should be completed by fall 2004.

Andrew Masich, president of the Historical Society of Western Pennsylvania, which runs the 7-year-old museum, said the space is needed because of the partnership with the Smithsonian.

The addition also will house the Western Pennsylvania Sports Museum, an education center and a theater. One floor of the addition will be dedicated to ethnic exhibits.

Ground was broken Monday.

Nearly 80 percent of the cost of the project already has been raised from state grants, federal grants and donations from individuals, corporations and foundations. The group hopes to raise the rest from the public by selling time capsules that will be sealed into a wall of the addition.

The expansion will be topped by a tower and logo to make the building, located in an old warehouse area known as the Strip District, easier to find. Museum officials say that's a common complaint.

People in the news

Jackson goes ape, Knopfler cancels tour, Tonya fights harder

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) – "Lord of the Rings" director Peter Jackson is going from tiny hobbits to a giant ape for his next film, a remake of "King Kong."

Jackson plans to use a field on the outskirts of the New Zealand capital, Wellington, as a stand-in for New York City. Work is scheduled to begin late this year, Universal Studios announced.

"I'm making movies today because I saw this film when I was 9-years-old," Jackson said. "It has been my sustained dream to reinterpret this classic story for a new age."

Jackson said the film has a budget of about $110 million and would be shot in Wellington and various locations around the country and make extensive use of computer animation techniques.

In an interview for Tuesday's edition of Wellington's Dominion Post newspaper, the director said the project was the "realization of a boyhood dream."

Shooting would begin in mid-2004 with the aim of releasing the film in 2005. The third film in the "Rings" trilogy, "The Return of the King," comes out in December.

The original "King Kong" from 1933 starred Fay Wray as a beautiful actress who becomes the object of a gigantic ape's affections.

LONDON (AP) — Rock star Mark Knopfler has canceled his British tour after a motorcycle accident in which he broke six ribs and a collar bone.

Judy Shaw of Mercury Records said Tuesday the Dire Straits lead singer has canceled six shows, scheduled June 2-9, because of the injuries he suffered in the March 17 crash.

"Owing to injuries sustained in his recent motorbike accident, and acting on medical advice, Mark Knopfler has reluctantly been forced to cancel all shows on his proposed tour," Shaw said in a statement.

"Mark is obviously bitterly disappointed and would like to thank the fans who have sent him get well messages," she said, adding that ticket holders would be refunded.

Knopfler, 53, was knocked from his Honda bike when it collided with a Fiat Punto in Belgravia, central London. The female driver of the Fiat was not injured.

A leading exponent of the moody rock lament and one of the world's most respected guitarists, Knopfler has written hit songs including "Sultans of Swing," "Romeo and Juliet" and "Brothers in Arms." His most recent production was the solo album, "The Ragpicker's Dream."

In 1999, Knopfler was made an officer of the Order of the British Empire, or OBE.

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) - Figure-skater-turned-boxer Tonya Harding has agreed to a match at an Iowa casino.

Harding, who's best known for the 1994 knee-whacking of rival skater Nancy Kerrigan, will appear May 9 at Lakeside Casino Resort in Osceola.

Jeff Hargis, Harding's trainer and manager, and Paul Scieszinski, president of Des Moines-based Capital Promotions, confirmed Monday that the deal is signed.

"She's excited about coming to Des Moines," Scieszinski said.

He said Harding, 32, and her entourage will receive about $10,000 for the trip.

Tickets for the fight at the casino, which seats about 1,000, will range from $30-65. Organizers hope to finalize Harding's opponent this week.

"We're negotiating between a couple people," Scieszinski said. "But we think it's going to be a girl from Iowa."

Scieszinski said the 5-foot-1-inch, 120-pound Harding – 2-1 in her brief boxing career – is about 15 pounds heavier than when she skated.

Fox's 'American Idol' week's most popular show

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) - Television viewers seeking relief from war news made Fox's "American Idol" last week's most popular program.

Both episodes of the contest were seen by more than 19 million people, Nielsen Media Research said Tuesday. The new Fox comedy, "Wanda at Large," had a strong debut largely because it was shown directly after Wednesday's "American Idol."

NBC won the week's prime-time ratings crown, however, on the strength of the "Law & Order" franchise. Three separate "Law & Order" shows finished among the week's 10 most popular programs, Nielsen said.

Viewers seemed to be looking for more escapist fare, as no news shows cracked the top 10. CBS' "60 Minutes" and "60 Minutes II" were 13th and 14th, respectively.

Meanwhile, some late-night ratings gave folks at ABC and CBS reasons to smile.

With host Ted Koppel embedded with the military in Iraq, "Nightline" was television's most popular late-night program for the week of March 17 (ratings information for late-night lags behind prime-time shows). It was a rare instance where the news program beat both Jay Leno and David Letterman's talk shows.

A preliminary estimate also showed that Letterman drew his second biggest audience of the year Monday for his return after being out five weeks because of shingles. His most popular show of the year was his visit with nemesis Dr. Phil.

For the week in prime time, NBC averaged 11.2 million viewers (7.5 rating, 12 share), CBS averaged 10.5 million (7.0, 11), Fox had 9.6 million (5.7, 9), and won among the 18- to 49-year-old demographic advertisers crave. ABC had 8.4 million (5.5, 9); the WB, 3.4 million (2.2, 3); UPN, 3.3 million (2.1, 3); and Pax TV, 1.1 million (0.8, 1).

NBC's "Nightly News" won the evening news ratings race, averaging 11.2 million viewers (8.0 rating, 15 share). ABC's "World News Tonight" was second, averaging 10.3 million viewers (7.3, 14) and the "CBS Evening News" had 8 million (5.9, 11).

A ratings point represents 1,067,000 households, or 1 percent of the nation's estimated 106.7 million TV homes. The share is the percentage of in-use televisions tuned to a given show.

For the week of March 24-30, the top 10 shows, their networks and viewerships: "American Idol-Tuesday," Fox, 19.8 million; "American Idol-Wednesday," Fox, 19 million; "Survivor: Amazon," CBS, 16.7 million; "Law & Order," NBC, 16.5 million; "Law & Order: Special Victims Unit," NBC, 15.8 million; "Friends," NBC, 15.6 million; "Fear Factor," NBC, 15.6 million; "Everybody Loves Raymond," CBS, 15 million; "Law & Order: Criminal Intent," NBC, 14.5 million; and "Wanda at Large," Fox, 14.3 million.

Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives for Fall 2003

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus CenterBasement, with your resume for more information.

All Majors & Classes Welcome to Apply

PARKING SERVICES

REGULATION REMINDER

Effective Monday, April 7, 2003 Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement, which is 7:00 am to 5:00 pm Monday through Friday.

Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots, except visitor meter lots, which are enforced for payment 9:00 am to 5:00 pm. Vehicles may park in any legal parking space, provided it is not a tow zone, handicapped space, vendor space, state vehicle space, reserved space, or 24-hour permit required lot (lots 21, 22, 29, 35, 44, 47, 49, 50, 54, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.), from 5:00 pm to 7:00 am, Monday through Friday, weekends and holidays, without displaying the proper permit. Parking meters will continue to be enforced for payment 9:00 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday.

Familiarity breeds content.

AMHERST downtown we have it all!

Jeter goes down

Continued from page 10

Torre said Huckaby was just being aggressive, and Jeter said he wasn't sure whether the catcher could have avoided the collision.

"I'm just angry. I'm going to miss a long time. I'm not happy about it," Jeter said. "I've never done this before. I have no idea how long it will take. I'll be cautious because it's early in the season."

With a payroll of about $150 million – at least $30 million higher than any other team and more than double what most teams pay – the Yankees usually have the depth to overcome injuries.

They have seven starting pitchers, an experienced closer in Juan Acevedo to step in when Mariano Rivera hurt his groin, and many players on the bench who were starters elsewhere.

At shortstop, the Yankees aren't as deep. Jeter, a five-time All-Star has been the Yankees' leader during their run of four World Series titles and five AL pennants since 1996.

He has played at least 148 games each season, going on the disabled list only three times with minor injuries.

"He'll be missed a ton, no doubt about it," first baseman Jason Giambi said. "This is just some adversity we have to overcome. We've all been through it before, just not with a player like Jeter. We have a lot of great players on this team and we'll all have to pick up the slack a little bit."

Almonte was unpacking his car in Columbus on Monday night when Rob Thomson, the vice president of minor league development, called and told him to be ready.

Almonte drove to Cincinnati on Tuesday morning to beat someone at the airport who brought his passport from Tampa. Almonte arrived in Toronto about three hours before the game.

"I wasn't expecting it. I always want to play in the big leagues. I never expected a guy like Jeter to go down," he said. "He's a guy who is a future Hall of Famer. He's my idol. I was watching him play. I watch him play all the time. He's fun to watch. I'm just going to try to do my job and play well."

Once considered a promising prospect, the 25-year-old Almonte struggled last season. He hit .235 in 66 games at Triple-A Columbus before being demoted to Double-A Norwich when he batted .241 in 33 games.

"I don't expect the kid to come in here and be what Derek Jeter is," Torre said. "On the Yankees, we probably get more attention than anyone else. This kid will be under enough pressure."

DAILY COLLEGIAN / CORDAN

Greg Scott and the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team travel to the University of Maryland-Baltimore County this weekend for a Saturday matchup with the Retrievers. The Minutemen are coming off an upset loss to Penn State last weekend, the second victory of the season for the Nittany Lions.

Catching Tiger easy on paper for Davis, Big Easy

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. (AP) – "Chase your own potential."

Davis Love III underlined those four words, even put stars around them, as a reminder that the best way to catch Tiger Woods is to wear blinders.

The strategy came from an offseason session with sports psychologist Bob Rotella. Love jotted down the notes on a yellow legal pad, and he reviewed them the night before the final round of The Players Championship.

He proved to be a quick study.

Love turned in the greatest closing round in the 30-year history of the tournament. In cold, blustery conditions, he shot a bogey-free 64 to make up two strokes on the leaders and eventually win by six.

"We always talk about playing against Tiger down the stretch," Love said. "I was chasing my own potential, and I think that's the difference."

It sounds good on paper, anyway.

The real test comes next week in the Masters – or any other tournament where Love's pursuit puts him on a collision course with Woods on the back nine Sunday.

That never happened on the TPC at Sawgrass.

Love's stiffest competition came from Jay Haas, who had not won in 10 years, and Padraig Harrington of Ireland, who has never won on the PGA Tour.

It wasn't Love's fault that Woods finished one hour in front of him and 11 strokes behind. Woods' largest deficit since the 2001 PGA Championship.

Love didn't need blinders, he needed binoculars.

Would it have been different if Love played the final round with Woods, instead of good friend Fred Couples?

Probably not.

Couples has been around for 20 years and shot a 64 on the final day in 1996 to storm from behind and win The Players Championship. He called Love's round the best he has ever seen anyone play.

"Not just Davis – anybody," Couples said.

Love said he was building to a moment like this and that he felt comfortable enough to compete with anyone, although he eased off when he saw the next question coming.

"I'm not throwing down challenges and saying, 'I'm back,'" he said. "But it's nice to see the ball going where you're looking."

Phil Mickelson called out Woods in a magazine interview by saying he used inferior equipment, words that were intended as a compliment but perceived as a challenge. Woods whipped him the first time they played together, in the final round at Torrey Pines.

Ernie Els challenged Woods with his results.

The Big Easy became the first player in 14 years to win the first two PGA Tour events of the season, then won twice more against good fields in Australia.

He and Woods met for the first time this year on Saturday at Bay Hill under unfavorable conditions – Els had a sore right wrist; Woods had a four-stroke lead.

Woods wound up 10 strokes clear of Els after the third round, and finished 19 shots ahead of him at the end of the tournament.

Love has scars, just like everyone else who has been run over by Woods.

He handed Woods his first PGA Tour victory in 1996 at Las Vegas by missing a 6-foot par putt in a playoff. Woods trounced Love twice during a four-week span in 2000, in the semifinals of Match Play and in the final round at Bay Hill.

"It's going to take somebody to stuff it in his face a couple of times coming down the stretch to knock him off," Love always used to say.

That was the problem.

Not many can, and even fewer do.

Love acknowledged as much Sunday night, when he talked about the legal pad of notes he carries with him.

Chase your own potential.

"You can add the next four or five words that I didn't write down," Love said. "I need to chase myself and not chase anybody. I've got a big enough tail to chase."

He is going in the right direction, and Love might find some company along the way.

Els also approached this season with a renewed determination to stop worrying about Woods.

"Instead of trying to improve things, doing things out of the ordinary, trying to chase Tiger down, I just thought, 'Play my game' and see where it goes," Els said.

Els has been runner-up to Woods six times, more than anyone. He played with him when Woods won the 2000 U.S. Open by 15 strokes, the single greatest feat in golf.

Els bit rock bottom a year later and sought help from Belgian psychologist Jos Vanstiphout, whose first piece of advice was to forget about Woods.

"Tiger wasn't the issue," Vanstiphout said. Els "was the issue."

Vanstiphout spoke from the locker room at Bay Hill. Out on the course, Els was falling further and further behind Woods, an ominous sign.

"No man, it's perfect," he said. "Whenever Tiger gets into a tournament, pow! There's five times more press, more security, more attention. Ernie has got to learn to live with it, and he will. He's still in the learning process."

UNC's Doherty resigns

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) – Matt Doherty resigned Tuesday as basketball coach at North Carolina, ending a bumpy three-year run marked by his failure to lead a storied program back to national prominence or even the NCAA tournament.

The Tar Heels failed to make the tournament in two of his three seasons. He leaves with three years left on a six-year contract that paid him $855,000 a season.

Doherty's resignation came after a meeting with Chancellor James Moeser, athletic director Dick Baddour and players, several of whom complained about the coach's intense practices and fiery, mood swings. Three players transferred last season and others talked about it this year.

But sophomore Jawad Williams defended his coach and his methods.

"Any coach across America has an anger problem. You have to, dealing with guys coming into such a high-profile program," Williams said.

The 41-year-old Doherty was a Tar Heel fixture long before he took over the program, having played with Michael Jordan in the early 1980s.

He left Notre Dame and returned to North Carolina to succeed Bill Guthridge and for the first season, things were fine. North Carolina went 26-7, but it slipped to 8-20 last season – the worst record in the program's history.

This year, his young team finished 14-16.

Baddour picked the inexperienced Doherty after Roy Williams – a former assistant to Hall of Fame coach Dean Smith – turned down UNC to remain at Kansas.

Associated Press

Softball returns home

Continued from page

ted in on the weekend.

Sortino needed one word to describe how Emily has performed this season: "Unbelievable. You couldn't ask for more in a leadoff hitter. She can run, drop a bunt, hit a single, a double, a triple, or a home run. She gives you such a quality at-bat as a leadoff. She's also the core of our defense. I couldn't ask for more in a player."

Robustelli wasn't only player with a hot bat this weekend. Senior sensation Brandi Cross, the team leader in batting average, home runs and RBIs, went 3-for-6 while tallying two runs and four RBIs. Cross also has a .980 field percentage.

Junior Jamie Cahalan was on the verge of a streak, going 4-for-7 with one run and one RBI. The UMass catcher was clutch in the early contest by driving the go-ahead run in the third inning, which also turned out to be the winner. Over the course of the last four games, Cahalan has been very hot, going 8-for-13, collecting four runs and three RBIs.

UMass was more impressive in the second contest, with eight of the nine starters collecting at least one hit to give the Minutewomen a season-high 14 hits. Sortino explains the sudden improvement in the team's success at the plate this season.

"They are doing a better job putting the ball in play," Sortino said. "We have been really working hard going a little better with the outside pitch. A little bit of the work paid off and we're settling in a little bit better.

The two UMass aces, Kaila Holtz and Kelli Arnold, are proving to be one of the most dominating duos in the NCAA. Holtz struck out seven batters, walked one and allowed just two earned runs and four hits in the opening game. She improved to 8-6 and earned A-10 Pitcher of the Week including a no-hitter against La Salle.

With four impressive performances, Sortino and the Minutewomen are excited to be heading home. The Maroon and White play their home-opening double-header today at UMass Softball Complex. The first pitch is scheduled for 2:30. Defending a 40-game home winning streak, UMass has a difficult test with 12 home games in 12 days.

"We are so happy to finally be home," Sortino said. "We started feeling like the wandering child."

Looking for a job

in Amherst this summer? Full and part time jobs are available with Summer Conference Housing! Come and get an application and job description at the Conference Services Office, Room 918 Campus Center.

http://www.aux.umass.edu/ConferenceServices

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/28/03 - Thursday 4/3/03 only
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:00 9:35
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:15 4:10 7:25 10:25*
OLD SCHOOL (R) 4:35 10:10
DREAMCATCHER (R) 1:00 4:05 7:10 10:15*
* - No Show Sat 3/29
Sneak preview of WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 7:30
THE CORE (PG13) 1:10 4:45 7:35 10:20*
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:00 7:40 10:00*
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55*
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:05
TULA: FROM THE TOP (PG12) 1:55 4:50 7:45 10:50*
BOAT TRIP (R) 10:00*
PIGLET'S BIG MOVIE (G) 1:05 3:00 4:55 7:00*
THE HUNTED (R) 1:25 4:30 7:30 9:45
AGENT CODY BANKS (PG) 1:50 4:25 7:05 9:40
TEARS OF THE SUN (R) 1:35 7:25
Senior Show 4/3/03 - BOAT TRIP
- NO passes/superSavers
•NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Styles by Deborah

Featuring Foil Highlights & Designer Haircuts for Students
Complementary consultation with every visit

$10 off Foils with a Style Haircut with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03

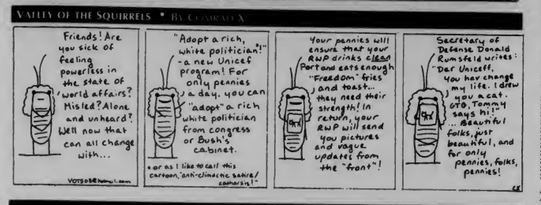
$5 off Clipper Cuts with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03

65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

QUESTIONS OR COMMENTS EMAIL US AT SPORTS@DAILY COLLEGIAN.COM

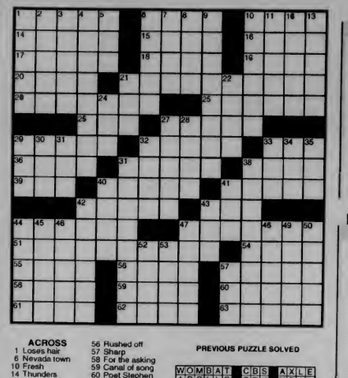
McMurphy's welcomes Live Music
THE GUITAR DUDES every wednesday
NO COVER
positive ID required

Plan Ahead For Next Year...
Excellent Location... ½ Mile From UMass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas
PUPPY TOWN VILLAGE III
Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145



STUDENT TRAVEL
start packing!
LONDON For $258
EURAIL PASSES From $249
HIP HOTELS From $18
(domestic and international)
explore north america
USA ■ CANADA ■ HAWAII
backpacking, cruises, tours and more
Fare is round trip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.

don't miss your big BREAK
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
pick up your complimentary, premiere issue of BREAK magazine at your local sta travel branch.
www.statravel.com STA TRAVEL
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET



ACROSS
1 Loses hair
6 Nevada town
10 Fresh
14 Thunders
15 Tel —
16 Refrigerator stick
17 "Wait Until Dark" actor
18 Eat out
19 Strauss of strains
20 Walk
21 Modern energy source (2 wds.)
23 Kill a whale
25 Some exams
26 Aloof
27 Miffed
29 Real estate —
32 Mentor
33 Startled cry
36 Hanker for 37 Tendon
38 Unusual
39 Emergency signal
40 Proprietor
41 Feel anxious
42 Jerks away
43 Faint
44 Strong
47 Threatens
51 Satan sight
54 Scent finder
55 Dory need
56 Rushed off
57 Sharp
58 For the asking
59 Canal of song
60 Poet Stephen Vincent —
61 Impudent talk
62 Foxes' digs
63 Houston athlete

DOWN
1 Cheeky
2 Major artery
3 Los Angeles cager
4 Wet
5 Job application info
6 Toxic gas
7 Malicious
8 Caravel of 1492
9 Sunplus
10 Warsaw's country
11 Actress — Verdugo
12 Party hearty
13 Works hard
21 Tofu constituent
22 Dock
24 Fall mo.
27 Viking letters
28 Cato's highway
29 Pacino and Unser
30 Moo — gai pan
31 Coast Guard off.

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

W	O	M	B	A	T		C	B	S		A	X	L	E
A	P	O	L	L	O		O	R	N		V	E	T	T
R	E	M	A	I	N		M	O	E		A	N	N	A
		R	A	I	N	B	O	W	T	R	O	U	T
B	U	S	E	S		O	A	K		R	I	N	S	E
I	B	I	S		A	T	T		H	O	D
N	O	G		M	T	E		L	O	W	E	R	E	D
D	A	M		U	M	A		O	U	E		A	T	E
S	T	A	M	P	E	D			G	E	E		C	H
		A	P	E			P	E	S		S	E	A	T
I	M	A	G	E			A	C	T			C	O	W
S	A	I	N	T		B	E	R	N	A	R	D
A	Y	L	A		T	I	N		C	A	D	D	I	S
A	B	E	T		T	I	N		E	N	I	G	M	A
C	E	D	E		E	N	D			S	E	N	A	T	E

1-30-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

32 Fork prong
33 Corn serving
34 Miscalculate
35 Phobia
37 Traded places
38 Love affairs
40 Cry of dismay (2 wds.)
41 Be victorious
42 Taste and smell
43 — Moines
44 Faculty VIPs
45 Scarlett et Tara
46 Gets bored
47 Fashions
48 Dracula's title
49 Aromatic chemical
50 Look after (2 wds.)
52 Limerick locale
53 Harness attachment
57 Perry Mason's org.

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

WEDNESDAY
- High: 57
- Low:37

THURSDAY
- High: 55
- Low: 42

FRIDAY
- High: 66
- Low: 30

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Vegetable Tortellini Soup
- Meat Lasagna
- Chicken Nuggets
- Ginger Black Beans (vegan)
- Vegan Nuggets

DINNER
- Vegetable Tortellini Soup
- Roast Turkey
- Fried Scallops
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Sarah Lloyd
COPY EDITOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Lizzy Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Scott Ciruso / Matthew F. Sacco

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I was married for four years and pretended to be happy, and had six years of analysis and pretended to be sane."
- Network

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You might want to double-check your figures today. You'll notice that you forgot to carry the one.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You'll be forced to crush someone with your poisoned tail after they stupidly make fun of you.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't let someone else's lack of enthusiasm bring you down today.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Someone is likely to know what's going on inside your head better than you do today.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Focus on presentability today. You'll want to adopt the right behavior and look your best

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Attendance is required in your second class. Make sure you wake up.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Put yourself into the running for something spectacular today, and hope for the best.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
What begins as a slow process – one that you do not wholly enjoy – is soon to be something that you will.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You'll be going from one thing to another all day long.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You can afford to be more sensitive today. And everyday for that matter.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You'll be going from one thing to another all day long. .

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
What begins as a slow process – one that you do not wholly enjoy – is soon to be something that you will.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for CONCERTS EVENTS SHOWS? Check out www.THAZOO.com for local up-to-date info.

Get Greek Stuff F-A-S-T! Group orders get great discounts. Lettering, embroidery, novelties. Visit on-line at Connectsports.com. 1-800-929-1897. alantran@starpower.net.

Buy/ Sell Textbooks Locally @ the text-bookhub.com No Shipping Hassles No waiting period text-bookhub.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study/area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare. Experienced. Tues-Thurs afternoons walk UMASS call before 8 pm 549-9351

CAMPUS REPS needed to promote new energy drink mid Feb - end of semester Easy fun flexible hours. Please respond ONLY if outgoing, confident, energetic Letter of intro + resume to maingolder1@nyc.rr.com

CAMPUS INTERVIEWS-SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE- Camp Wayne, NE PA. Counselor-Specialists all Land/Water Sports inc. Tennis; Golf; Soccer;

EMPLOYMENT

Outdoor Adventure: Camping, Mountain Biking, Climbing/Ropes; Roller Hockey; Rocketry; Fine Arts; Theatre; Radio, Video and more. Graduating RNs, RNs, Nurse Practitioners for Health Center. CDL Drivers; Wait Staff. CAMPUS INTERVIEWS— TUES & WED, FEB 12 & 13. Let's get the ball rolling now! Online application www.campwayne.com; email info@campwayne.com; 1-888-549-2963 (516-883-3067).

Economics / Business Development Assistant for economic software firm. Includes telephone sales. Part time or full time. Please send cover letter and resume to: Regional Economic Models, Inc. 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic modeling firm. Delphi, FORTRAN, MS office a plus. FT or PT. Please send cover letter and resume to: Frederick Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com.

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help videotape practices & games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship Aid & workstudy available. Beginning late spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sisler at 577-0419

Bartenders Needed! No experience necessary!!! Earn up to $300/Day! 1-866-291-1884xu1047

EMPLOYMENT

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Admissions Center, 37 Mather Dr. (behind Orchard Hill) for Tour Guides, Student Admissions Reps, and Summer Orientation Counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 7.

Drivers & Kitchen help needed Flexible hours. Apply DP Dough Downtown Amherst.

Attention: Get a head start on your New Years Resolution. Lose weight Make money DJDon 1-888-232-3615 www.designlifestyle.com

LOST

Lost: U.S. Passport of Michael Leuchtenburg If found, please call 546-7296 or email Michael@slashhome.org

LOST

Last semester I lost two necklaces of high sentimental value. Both silver with a pendant, One is square, the other is a heart. If you have any info please contact me at 586-5189 or aanasch@student.umass.edu. Reward if found

ROOM FOR RENT

Two furnished rooms available. Utilities included. No lease required. $375.00 per month 253-3670

413-549-8113 Feb-June Grads Preferred Near UMASS Ask for Jay

ROOMMATE WANTED

LRG Room in furnished Home, on Amherst / Belchertown Line 400+ month 253-7215

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Clean Needles Save Lives. Anonymous needle exchange. Safe, non-judgemental. Resources and support. Tapestry Health, 16 Center Street, Northampton. 586-2016 x 164.

Confidential Pregnancy Testing and Counseling. Sliding fee scale. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992 (14 words)

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK! Bahamas Party Cruise $279 5 Days, Includes 10 Free Meals, Free Parties & Drink Specials! Incl. Port, Departure, Hotel Tax! www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, Last Chance to Book! Special Rates For Groups of 6+, www.leisuretours.com / 800-838-8203

Montreal Madness Weekends $89+$15 Security Fee Complete (based on quad occupancy) Includes Round Trip Motor-coach, 2 Nights at a Hotel Downtown, Breakfast-Dinner, Nightclubs (The best in town!) Departs every weekend: March, April, May; 10 or more Group Discounts available montrealexpress.net 781-979-0076

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endless-summertours.com

Absolute Best Deals for Spring Break! Acapulco, Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida! Space still available. Call us today 1-866-273-2500 www.vagabondtours.com

WANTED

Wanted Immediately For on campus student in Chemistry II & Biology IV, Graduate Student or experienced TA. Will Pay Reasonable Rate 617-868-7515 Joshiville@aol.com or JamieJoshi@hotmail.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Streaking softball set for twinbill

Doubleheader on the docket today

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Elaine Sortino must have been freezing in the dugout, but at least her team gave her something to smile about. On Monday, the Massachusetts softball team stayed mentally focused and was able to pull out two wins, 6-2 and 7-0 at Fordham.

Fighting through cold weather, the Minutewomen (17-10, 4-0 Atlantic 10) team still managed to dominate at the plate and on the mound. With cramped legs and numb fingers, the Maroon and White still managed 13 runs, 24 hits, and gave up only two runs in the doubleheader against Fordham in Bronx, NY. The impressive performance came after the game was called 24 hours prior due to heavy rain and snow.

"I can't believe we hit as well as we did [Monday], because it was so dysfunctionally cold," Sortino said. "You can't really play a game when it's that cold. You aren't running consistently, [because] you have to stand and wait. It's all fine motor skills, and you don't have any in that kind of weather."

The team hitting effort was lead by senior leadoff hitter Emily Rohrstelli, who has been the most consistent hitter for the team this season. Rohrstelli went 5-for-7 with one run and four runs bat-

Continued on page 9

The Massachusetts softball team will finally open its 2003 home season at the UMass softball complex with a doubleheader against Maine today.

Tennis finally back in action

By Anna Edwards
Collegian Correspondent

After almost two weeks without a competitive match, the Massachusetts tennis team is preparing to blast its way into the final seven matches of the spring schedule and turn the table of bad luck before the Atlantic 10 Tournament kicks off in Baltimore on April 17.

The Minutewomen will host Rhode Island today at 3 p.m. at the Upper Boyden Tennis Courts, weather permitting, in an attempt to turn around the disappointments of their Florida road trip and pick up their momentum for the A-10.

"We have the chance of being between two, three and four in the Atlantic Conference," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "We are one of the favorites."

Now that the Maroon and White are playing outdoors on campus they expect an increase of supporters, which is a motivation for the team.

"I have been in the valley so long, they come out and get hooked, they chat to the kids and get to know them," said Dixon. "Only 10 percent of supporters are students."

On March 18, the Minutewomen fell to Barry 6-3 at the Buccaneer Tennis Complex in Miami Shores, Fla.

The Maroon and White proved stronger in the doubles matches, with wins at both the number one and two doubles positions. Sophomore Stephanie Price and junior Jafra Depontes took the Minutewomen to an 8-4 victory against Buccaneers junior Victoria Cournes and sophomore Maria Lopez in the number one doubles spot.

Freshman Dorothy Iwanowicz partnered sophomore Sasha Edelstein in the doubles position powering the Maroon and White to victory, 8-5, against sophomore Carole Steinhauser and freshman Greta Trotman.

Iwanowicz continued her success in defeating Lopez 7-6, 6-4 in the number five singles position for the Minutewomen.

UMass had a disappointing match against Florida Atlantic on March 19, being defeated 6-1 with the lone win at number 6 singles, where junior captain Susan Hvams defeated the Lady Owls junior Stephanie Beaulieu, 6-4, 3-6 (7-6).

The final leg of their Florida road trip was the postponed match against Lynn on March 20, where the Minutewomen continued their losing streak.

The doubles partnership of Hvams and freshman Camilla Knight had the only victory of the day for the Maroon and White, defeating the Knights sister partnership of Masha and Dina Bajramovic 8-4.

Price had a tense first set in her singles match against junior Monika Mastallvova culminating in a tiebreaker, which Mastallvova clinched 7-6. Price lost her edge in the final set being defeated 6-1. UMass finally fell to the Knights, 8-1.

The trio of losses put the Minutewomen at 3-9 in the spring portion of their schedule with seven matches left to play before the A-10 slate.

"We have a really good chance to do something good and we feel like we can win this one," Dixon said. "Every match is critical to position ourselves [for the A-10]."

A day later, hardball at Lorden

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Following the postponement of its game against Sacred Heart University yesterday, the Massachusetts baseball team will return to Earl Lorden Field this afternoon at 3pm to face the Pioneers (6-11).

It will be UMass' final home game before they play their first home Atlantic 10 series of the season this weekend, taking on the Musketeers of Xavier.

The Maroon and White (6-9, 3-3 Atlantic 10) enter with the momentum from a doubleheader sweep of La Salle on Sunday that saw positive performances on the hill from a pair of sophomore hurlers.

Both southpaw Keith Doherty and right-handed classmate Anthony Gallo limited the Explorers to two hits in 4-2/3 innings and 2-1/3 innings respectively. Doherty earned his first victory of the season while Gallo recorded the save.

The Minutemen will look to combine that with the performances of Junior Eric Chown and sophomore closer Scott Ratliff in the second game to further solidify their inexperienced staff. The core of young arms will be a keyin this afternoon's contest, but UMass coach Mike Stone may also do so with greater confidence in his offense.

The Minutemen scored nine runs in the second game on Sunday, matching their highest output of the season. Part of this was a major boost they received from University of Maine transfer Matt Reynolds. The junior infielder went 3-for-4 with three doubles, four runs scored and two runs batted in on the afternoon.

With senior first basemen Jeff Altieri going 2-for-2 with a pair of free passes, the Stone has reason to be optimistic that the Minutemen will again be swinging potent bats this afternoon.

Finally, SHU will serve as the Maroon and White's final tuneup before entering the bulk of their conference schedule. UMass has managed to shake off a slow start by winning four of their last six games.

The Pioneers enter play having been swept by Quinnipiac in a Saturday doubleheader in Hamden, CT. The Minutemen are the joined by fellow A-10 schools George Washington and Rhode on the SHU schedule.

This afternoon's first pitch will be thrown at 3 p.m. at Earl Lorden Field.

Pedro extends deadline

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) – Three-time Cy Young Award winner Pedro Martinez has extended the opening-day deadline he gave the Boston Red Sox to sign him to a contract extension.

Martinez said after Monday's opener against the Tampa Bay Devil Rays that talks were ongoing, but would not discuss details.

"The reason I'm not talking about the contract is because it's time to play baseball, concentrate on the things I'm doing," Martinez said. "Both parties, I guess are open, still talking because I haven't had a report. There's nothing I can tell you right now."

Martinez allowed just an unearned run and three hits in seven innings Monday, departing with a 4-1 lead that the Boston bullpen couldn't hold in a 6-4 loss.

The right-hander said in February that unless the Red Sox exercised his $17.5 million option for 2004 or signed him to an extension by the end of spring training, that he likely would finish his career elsewhere.

"I'm pretty sure they're going to give you an answer pretty soon, whether we did it or whether we don't. I'm just going to wait and see what happens," Martinez said, adding that he was going to "continue to play baseball because that's all I want, and I want to focus."

Piazza's suspension cut to four games

NEW YORK – Mike Piazza's suspension for charging the mound in spring training was reduced to four games, and the New York Mets' All-Star catcher will start serving the penalty Wednesday.

The decision to shorten the ban by one game was made Tuesday by Bob DuPuy, baseball's chief operating officer. He heard Piazza's appeal Monday after New York's season-opening 13-2 loss to the Chicago Cubs.

"Naturally, I'm glad the suspension has been reduced," Piazza said. "I just want to put this all behind me so I can concentrate on baseball the rest of the season."

The Mets were off Tuesday. If games are played as scheduled, Piazza would be able to return to the lineup Sunday against Montreal.

Bob Watson, baseball's vice president in charge of discipline, originally issued a five-game suspension and $3,000 fine after Piazza charged Los Angeles reliever Guillermo Mota during an exhibition game March 12. Piazza, who had been hit by a fastball, later went into the Dodgers' clubhouse looking for the pitcher.

"I believe that we did make our points effectively," Piazza said Monday after the 45-minute appeal hearing.

Mota originally was suspended for five games, but appealed and had it cut to four games last week.

Montreal slugger Vladimir Guerrero, suspended for three games for charging the mound in another spring training game, dropped his appeal in exchange for the commissioner's office cutting the penalty to two games.

–Associated Press

Sens topple Bruins

OTTAWA (AP) – Marian Hossa scored twice to set an Ottawa record with 45 goals and Martin Havlat had a goal and an assist, carrying the league-leading Senators to a 3-2 win over the Boston Bruins on Tuesday night.

Radek Bonk assisted on all three goals for Ottawa, which ended its home schedule by tying a team record with its 10th point. The Senators, who lead Dallas by two points for first overall, can clinch their first Presidents' Trophy – and home-ice advantage throughout the playoffs – with wins in their final two games.

Senators	3
Bruins	2

Martin Lapointe got his eighth goal and Glen Murray scored his team-leading 42nd for Boston, which is seventh in the East with 84 points.

Hossa scored his 44th goal midway through the first period to tie Alexei Yashin's 1998-99 team record. He broke the mark with his second goal of the game late in the period to draw the Senators even for the second time.

Bruins captain Joe Thornton got his 98th point with his 63rd assist on Murray's goal, which gave Boston a 2-1 lead 10:31 into the game. Then Hossa broke Yashin's record as he took Vaclav Varada's no-look, through-the-legs backhand pass and fired a quick shot to beat goalie Tim Thomas.

Havlat broke the 2-2 tie in the second period with a power-play goal just three seconds after Boston killed a two-minute five-on-three disadvantage.

Bruins defenseman Sean O'Donnell put his team in a deep hole early in the middle period when he was assessed minors for cross-checking and roughing 1:25 into the period as Boston was being called for having too many men on the ice.

Ottawa pinned the Bruins in their end throughout the two-minute advantage and finally got the go-ahead goal from Havlat during a delayed penalty to Boston defenseman Nick Boynton.

Lapointe opened the scoring 2:34 into the game when he beat goalie Patrick Lalime with a one-handed shot despite having Ottawa defenseman Shane Hnidy draped all over him.

Bonk and Havlat combined to set up Hossa's power-play goal, but Boston regained its one-goal lead just 56 seconds later when defenseman Bryan Berard's pass sent Thornton and Murray away on a two-on-one. Murray one-timed Thornton's cross-ice pass to beat Lalime.

Hossa drew the Senators even again with his 10th multigoal game of the season.

Senators owner Rod Bryden was given a standing ovation before he addressed the sold-out Corel Centre crowd of 18,500 on hand for "Fan Appreciation Night."

"It has been a great decade," said Bryden, who will lose control of the financially troubled team once bankruptcy proceedings are completed. "From the worst team in the National Hockey League to fighting to the last day to be the best. A great team for a great city."

–Associated Press

Yanks' Jeter injured

Shortstop to miss at least a month

By Josh Dubow
Associated Press

TORONTO (AP) – Even the highest payroll in baseball couldn't prepare the New York Yankees for what they face now – playing without leader Derek Jeter for at least a month.

Jeter was placed on the 15-day disabled list Tuesday after dislocating his left shoulder on opening night. The Yankees expect to be without their All-Star shortstop for much longer, and it could be up to four months if he needs surgery.

"We miss him when he's out of the lineup for one game," manager Joe Torre said. "To have him out for an extended period of time, we're lucky we haven't had that happen before. This will probably be a month or more. There will be a big void."

Jeter will fly with the team to Tampa, Fla., after Wednesday night's game and have an MRI test on Thursday. The Yankees, who open a three-game series with the Devil Rays on Friday, hold spring training in Tampa and have extensive facilities there.

The test will show the extent of the damage and whether Jeter needs surgery, said Dr. Jonathan Glashow, a shoulder specialist.

"The worst case should be three-to-four months and with any luck it could be four-to-six weeks," said Glashow, an orthopedic surgeon at New York's Lenox Hill Hospital. "The MRI will show how stable the shoulder is and how much damage was done to the surrounding area."

The Yankees were more comfortable having their doctors in Florida examine Jeter than having tests in Toronto.

"I don't think it really makes a difference if we do it now or Thursday," Jeter said. "I want to find out. Obviously, something is wrong, because something is out of place. Something probably has to be torn."

Erick Almonte will get most of the time there while Jeter is hurt, although Enrique Wilson started at shortstop Tuesday. Almonte was called up from Triple-A Columbus on Tuesday.

Jeter hurt his shoulder in the third inning Monday night when he slid headfirst going from first to third on an infield groundout.

Toronto catcher Ken Huckaby, covering third because of an overshifted infield, landed on Jeter's shoulder in a violent collision. Jeter was down for more than 10 minutes, writhing in pain as concerned teammates surrounded him.

Some of the Yankees thought it was a dirty play. Huckaby called it a "freak" play and left a message on Jeter's cell phone, apologizing.

Continued on page 8

New York Yankees shortstop Derek Jeter collides with Toronto Blue Jays catcher Ken Huckaby during AL action in Toronto on Monday. Jeter had to leave the game after the collision.

AARON HARRIS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 110

Bluewall bar set for opening

SARAH LEVIN/COLLEGIAN

Two students relax and study while drinking coffee and a fruit smoothie at the Bluewall. Behind the students is the new location for the Bluewall bar.

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

After two decades of being "dry," the new Blue Wall Pub will open Friday April 4 at 5 p.m., providing students and community members with a full service bar and entertainment.

University of Massachusetts students and community members over 21 years of age will have access to a full liquor selection, a number of bottled beers, a locally brewed beer on tap and several wines.

The Blue Wall Pub is also scheduled to provide sports on two 50-inch screen televisions and entertainment that includes live bands, DJs and interactive giveaways.

The creation of the pub stems from the effort to attract more of the student body to the campus center.

"We want it to revitalize the Campus Center," said Brenda Ryan- Newton, Retail Food Services operations manager.

"It should be a safe environment and a gathering place for students."

Opening night will feature two acts, Ed Vadas and the Fabulous Heavyweights blues band at 7 p.m. and the band Adios Pantalones from 10:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. Prizes and promotions will be offered from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m.

The first 100 Bud Light Draft customers will receive a 16-ounce pint glass. Other bottled beers at the bar will include Miller Lite, Rolling Rock, Michelob Ultra, Heineken, Guinness, Corona, Bass Ale, Budweiser and a locally brewed selection from the Berkshire Brewing Co., as well as the non-alcoholic O'Doul's and Mike's Hard Lemonade.

The new bar will also offer standard pub favorites: wings, nachos, fries and pizza.

The following Monday the entertainment will focus on the NCAA men's basketball final, with promotional activities by the Boston Beer Co., makers of Samuel Adams and Sam Adams Light, two beers the Blue Wall will carry in bottles.

The programming schedule for this semester will include interactive promotions on Thursday nights, live music on Fridays and a DJ on Saturdays.

"Our students can go anywhere in the area for similar entertainment," said Chancellor John V. Lombardi. "We believe that a responsible and effective pub with good entertainment and a quality atmosphere will serve many of our students well."

Managers are working with Public Safety and Environmental Health and Safety to provide appropriate security. A team of non-student security personnel will be on hand during bar hours and alcohol sales and consumption will be within a roped-off area. The Bluewall will use different glasses for alcoholic beverages, allowing security to easily

Continued on page 2

Bulger may be granted immunity

By Lolita C. Baldor
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – University of Massachusetts President William Bulger, who last year refused to testify before a congressional committee about his fugitive mobster brother, may get a chance to talk about any conversations he's had with him after he went on the lam.

Bulger, who invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination when he went before the House Government Reform Committee in December, may be given immunity from prosecution.

The panel plans to vote Friday on granting immunity to Bulger and former mob boss Francis Salemme. The committee has been investigating the Boston FBI's ties to mob informants, and Bulger's brother – James "Whitey" Bulger, wanted in connection with 21 murders – is a central figure in the probe.

William Bulger's lawyer told The Associated Press that Bulger wants to cooperate with the investigation. No date has been set for Bulger and Salemme to appear before the committee.

"We have no intent to be uncooperative with the committee," attorney Thomas Kiley said. "We have to wait and see what committee has in mind and I don't know what that is."

Plans for the immunity vote came together quickly this week, but a spokesman would not say if the committee negotiated an agreement with Bulger to testify.

"Chairman (Tom) Davis (R-Va.) believes the committee shouldn't walk away from a witness that may have important information that he refused to provide," said committee spokesman David Marin. "We wouldn't be moving forward with the immunity if we didn't think there would be results."

Whitey Bulger disappeared in January 1995 after former FBI Agent John J. Connolly Jr. told him he was about to be indicted.

Connolly, who grew up in the same South Boston neighborhood as the Bulger brothers, was convicted earlier this year for tipping off Whitey Bulger and other mobsters about their indictments and is serving a 10-year prison sentence.

William Bulger, 68, testified before a grand jury that he talked with his brother in a pre-arranged phone call at a friend's house shortly after Whitey Bulger fled, but maintains he hasn't had contact with him since.

Salemme, 69, a mob associate of Whitey Bulger, was released from prison in January after serving nearly nine years in prison for racketeering and extortion.

Salemme cooperated with prosecutors in their case against Connolly. He has already testified before the committee, but requested immunity before providing any further information.

Motion passes on non-smoking intiative

JAMES SCHAFER/COLLEGIAN

Gabe Tavarez looks on at the Student Government Association Senate meeting last night.

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

A motion requesting that the University of Massachusetts Amherst Administration enforce its current smoking policy narrowly passed last night at Student Government Association Senate meeting.

Senate members also addressed and passed a motion requesting that the University change its current grading system to that of a five-point system in an effort to comply with most national university grading policies.

Financial allocations also were on last night's agenda, with four motions passing to allocate funds to spring events in the Southwest residence area and the Orchard Hill residence area, as well as an $8500 allocation to University Productions and Concerts.

Questions and concerns regarding the University's current smoking policy were addressed on this year's 2003 elections ballot. The referendum question requested student input on whether or not students felt that a smoke free campus would be positive course of action, or if the current system should remain in

Continued on page 2

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 12
COMICS PAGE 11
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

UNFAIRNESS TO FRATS
EBAY SALES OF GREEK HOUSING UNFORTUNATE
PAGE 4

PUNK NATION
A LOOK INTO PUNK MUSIC
PAGE 5

LOOKING AHEAD
MINUTEMEN PREPARE FOR MATCHUP WITH UMBC
PAGE 12

Student running for for office in Greenfield

By Tom Brennan
Collegian Correspondent

Isaac Mass, a senior University Without Walls student at the University of Massachusetts, is running for his third term as a member of the Greenfield town council.

After two terms as a representative for Precinct 9 in Greenfield, Mass., Mass now seeks one of the town's two "at large" council seats that would redirect his responsibilities toward the entire town rather than one specific district.

"It will help me draw support for issues from the entire town," Mass said. "It will give me more of a mandate."

Mass, a 26-year-old member of the Army National Guard for the past seven years, has a long resume of qualifications for the job. During the conflict in Bosnia, Mass was part of the Bosnian Peace Keeping Mission, where he helped develop economic strategies that would introduce that region to a market economy – skills learned during his first two terms as town councilor in Greenfield.

Also during his time as town councilor, Mass served on the Finance Committee and the Economic Development and Planning Committee.

Before that, he spent time on the Town Planning Board as well as Regional Board for State and Federal Matters, where he helped pass Greenfield's adult entertainment by-law. He also helped structure Greenfield's "Master Plan," which is an overall strategy for economic development in the town.

Mass recognizes the economic hardships that Franklin County – the poorest county in the state – faces, and plans to bring his previous training into his job as "at large" town councilor. He proposes a regional economic policy that would include Greenfield as well as surrounding towns such as Montague.

Continued on page 2

Students rally for troops on Student Union steps

JAMES SCHAFER/COLLEGIAN

Jim Bancroft, a political activist and Marine Corp. veteran from Connecticut, speaks to students outside the Student Union about Iraq's connection to terrorism and Sept. 11 during yesterday's "Support Our Troops" rally.

By Jamie Loo
Collegian Staff

About 75 people rallied in support of United States troops yesterday on the Student Union steps.

"What we're doing right now is supporting our troops that are over there," said student Matt Progen.

The rally was organized by Jeff Krohn, quarterback of the UMass football team, as well as the Silent Majority and the Republican Club. Yellow ribbons donated by an independent student group were given out to students at the rally, and larger ribbons on display were donated by LeBeau Florists in Easthampton. Progen said that the large ribbons will be hung around campus.

"I don't think it matters what our stances are on the war. I think what matters is that we need to show support for them now," said Krohn.

Progen said the rally was held in conjunction with other rallies at universities across the country in places such as Richmond, Cornell, and Berkeley. The rally featured several speakers, including veterans and students.

Jim Bancroft, a veteran from the U.S. Marine Corps, read a poem sent to him from a corporal in Iraq entitled, "Wish You Were Here."

"Wars must be fought and young men must die…so pray for those who are behind enemy lines," Bancroft read.

Bancroft also commented on how peace protestors have been claiming they're for peace while holding up signs calling for death, including "We'll support out troops when they shoot their officers," and "George W. Bush: Wanted dead or alive."

"Peace protestors calling for the death of the presidents aren't peace protestors, they're traitors," said Bancroft.

Student Yasaman Pourati said her family immigrated here from Iran and knows what it's like to live in war.

"Our involvement in this has brought out many different opinions on the war," she said. "But believing in our troops should be a no brainer."

"They're regular people just like us. They listen to the same music and cheer for the same sports teams," said Dave Falvey, a member of the ROTC. Falvey also said that one of his friends is currently serving overseas.

Student Kristen Kremer read the names of 52 men and women who are prisoners of war, missing in action or who have died in the war. She urged students to respect the troops and what they're doing, especially ROTC members.

"When you see ROTC members in uniform on campus, respect them. They could be fighting for you soon," Kremer said.

The entire rally was also videotaped by Kremer to be sent overseas to a close family friend. People were urged to send messages to the troops via the videotape.

At the conclusion of the rally, the Republican club collected donations to make care packages for the troops.

SGA passes motion on non-smoking initiative

Continued from page

place at UMass.

With a split vote by the UMass constituency, members of the SGA Senate brought forth a motion requesting that the administration actively enforce the current smoking policy prior to instating a new one.

"Our constituency voted by a slim margin and currently the smoking policy in place is not enforced," Senator Daniel Pozmanter said. "We think that the University should really enforce its current policy before it even considers another one."

However, senators questioned how the University intends to enforce the rules since they have not been able to currently enforce the policy set. Senators questioned if moving ashtrays 20 feet away from buildings would make it where students would use them.

"We as students feel that they need to do something to enforce it," Pozmanter said. "The Faculty Senate has not said it yet, but there's a strong possibility that the Administration is considering a smoke free campus and this bill might make the Administration pause for a second."

After three calls to be tabled for further discussion, the Senate passed the motion with 29 votes in favor and 16 against.

A motion requesting that the current UMass grading policy by changed was also reviewed. Senators questioned how a new five-point system would affect grades prior to a grading policy change, and what it would mean for professors' overall grading policies.

Senator Kiera Manikoff presented the motion, explaining that the current grading system used by UMass does not comply with most universities around the nation. Manikoff explained that the UMass system also makes it difficult for students applying to graduate school and other professional schools. She said that UMass is one of less than 10 schools that have this current system.

"When they look at our B/C they interpret that as a C+" she said.

Faculty Senate representative Professor Mokhatar Atallah said that the new system would not affect the current SPIRE system greatly, just the calculations process.

"It is not that difficult to work out, Atallah said. "We talked with the Registry and the computer people and they said it would not be difficult."

Atallah said that he hopes it will start in the fall of 2004 and apply to everyone.

"We don't have it [UMass grading system] in our high schools or in other schools, and it makes it much harder to compete with professional schools."

Senators questioned whether or not this would alter professor's current grading policies as well as make earning higher grades more difficult.

"Our life is to evaluate the students and a good performance will be graded to the quality of the student's performance," Atallah said.

After further questioning the Senate passed the motion.

Financial allocations also were a topic of discussion as senators debated over a motion to allocate $8500 to University Productions and Concerts (UPC) for the Spring Concert. Student Trustee Bill Powers told the Senate that he felt that those funds could be better used for other Registered Student Organizations (RSO) on campus.

"I think Spring Concert is a good event, but if they don't get the money from the SGA, they will get it from somewhere else because this happens every year," Powers said. "I think we need to hold ourselves to the same standards as RSOs and that never happens. I know a lot of other groups who would kill to get $8500 for an event."

Members of the Senate disagreed and the motion to allocate $8500 to UPC was passed by the Senate.

Student running for office in Greenfield

Continued from page 1

"A job in Montague is just as important as a job in Greenfield," he said.

Part of this plan would be building a regional industrial park. In addition to attracting new business to the area, the revenue from this project would then be given back to all participating town governments.

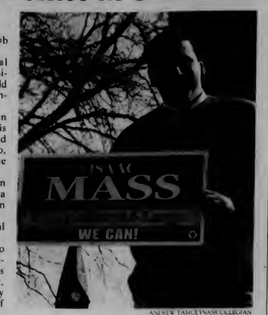
Mass also recognizes the role that UMass plays in helping the economy of Greenfield. The university is the single largest employer in Franklin County and many of its employees are from his hometown. Also, students from Greenfield Community usually come straight to UMass after their two years there.

Mass says that for every dollar that is invested in Greenfield Community College, the surrounding area gets $14 back. The ratio in relation to UMass is even greater.

"That's why keeping the University healthy is vital to me," Mass said.

Also as a part of his platform, Mass is looking to build a combined seniors/veteran's center to accommodate the aging baby-boomer population in his town. Because it would have a veteran's component, up to 80 percent of the project would be funded by the federal government, which takes the burden off the common taxpayer.

Another topic high on the list of priorities for Mass is getting rid of user fees for trash collection in Greenfield. For the past few years, Greenfield has been charging on a "per bag" basis. The cost has risen 150 percent in that short time.



"It's bad tax policy," Mass said. "It ends up hurting the poor because there's no way to stop it from rising dramatically."

Mass says that police would be spending valuable time on garbage detail instead of curbing neighborhood speeding – a real problem in Greenfield. It also can lead to illegal dumping, causing potential environmental hazards.

He claims he is one of many young people on the town council – one-third of the council is under 33— and that being young is actually an advantage.

"My age is a help, not a harm," Mass said. "I'm single and I haven't started a family yet, so I have lots of time and energy to dedicate to this job."

As for whether or not someone as young as he is can really offer something to the governing structure of a town, Mass is adamant.

ANDREW TAMCHYNA/COLLEGIAN

Student Isaac Mass demonstrates his campaign signs. He's running for Greenfield Town Council.

"I don't think being young precludes you from having perspectives," he said.

Mass is organizing two events this Friday and Saturday in Greenfield. Friday there will be a rally on the town common with a visit from Lt. Governor Kerry Healey – by Mass' invitation – to hear concerns from people in Franklin County.

On Saturday at midnight, in conjunction with the Historical Garden Theatre, Mass is showing 'Monty Python and the Holy Grail," hosted by WHMP DJ David Peck. Entry fee with popcorn and a soda is $10.

Preliminary elections are April 29, which will cut the five-man race down to four. General elections will take place June 10. Mass will compete against the remaining three candidates for one of the two available seats with a term that lasts three years.

"People get to choose two candidates," Mass said, "and I hope that I'm one of them."

Bluewall bar ready for grand opening on Friday identity who has them.

Managers have also met with the UMass police department.

"After that meeting we felt pretty comfortable that they were ready for opening day," said Pat Archibald, deputy chief of UMPD.

On nights when live entertainment is provided, there will be one officer on duty at the pub. "Their only responsibility will be keeping an eye on the Pub to make sure things run smooth," said Archibald.

In addition to the uniformed officer, the Campus Center Hotel has asked for increased security.

Archibald also said that UMPD will be re-evaluating security measures after Easter break.

"Everyone is waiting to see how things go. Everyone hopes it's successful," he said.

Both students and the UMass community are eager for the opening of the pub.

"I think it'll be a nice touch for the Bluewall," said Sharon Stimpfle a Bluewall employee. "I went abroad to Dublin and there was a student pub there. It really brought the community together."

Stimpfle also said she thought it would attract more students to the eatery and coffee shop.

Lombardi thinks it's worth a try.

"In the past, I am told, the Blue Wall Pub or its equivalent was a very good part of campus life," he said. "We will see if it works for this generation of students."

As excited as many students are for the pub, some are skeptical.

"I dislike the bar idea. I don't think that it will have a bar atmosphere," said Karoly Aliotti, a junior Political Science major. "The most important thing about a bar is the atmosphere, not the beer."

The Blue Wall Pub will be open from 5 p.m. to 1 a.m on Thursday through Saturday and 5 to 10 p.m. on Monday through Wednesday.

Musicians who would like to perform at the Blue Wall should email entertainment@mail.aux.umass.edu.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Luo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives for Fall 2003

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus CenterBasement, with your resume for more information

All Majors & Classes Welcome to Apply

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on. (Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

America at War

American troops rescue POW

19-year-old soldier reportedly found with broken limbs and gunshot wounds

U.S. CENTRAL COMMAND/ASSOCIATED PRESS

An image from video shown during a news conference yesterday shows the rescue of United States soldier Jessica Lynch.

By MATT KELLEY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – American troops rescued Army Pfc. Jessica Lynch, who had been held as a prisoner of war in Iraq since she and other members of her unit were ambushed March 23, the Defense Department announced Tuesday.

Lynch, 19, of Palestine, W.Va., had been missing since nine days ago with 11 other U.S. soldiers from the 507th Maintenance Company. The unit was ambushed near Nasiriyah after making a wrong turn during early fighting in the invasion of Iraq. Five other members of her unit were later shown on Iraqi television answering questions from their Iraqi captors.

Lynch had been listed as missing in action but was identified by the Pentagon Tuesday as a POW. She was not among the seven U.S. soldiers – including the five from the 507th shown on television – formally listed as prisoners of war.

Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks at Central Command headquarters in Qatar announced that a U.S. POW had been captured but refused to provide any further details.

In a brief statement, Brooks said: "Coalition forces have conducted a successful rescue mission of a U.S. Army prisoner of war held captive in Iraq. The soldier has been returned to a coalition-controlled area."

Central Command officials in Qatar, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Lynch was rescued from a hospital in Iraq.

Fifteen other Americans are formally listed as missing. The other POWs include two Army Apache helicopter pilots captured March 24 after their helicopter went down.

Relatives and friends said Lynch, a supply clerk, joined the Army to get an education and follow her dream of becoming a teacher. Her older brother, Gregory, is a member of the National Guard.

The 507th Maintenance was attacked during some of the first fighting in Nasiriyah, a Euphrates River-crossing city where sporadic battles have raged since U.S. troops first reached it. Troops and military officials have said much of the fighting there has involved members of the Fedayeen Saddam and other Iraqi paramilitaries who have dressed as civilians and ambushed Americans.

Lynch, an aspiring teacher, joined the Army to get an education and take advantage of a rare opportunity in a farming community with an unemployment rate of 15 percent – one of the highest in West Virginia.

She was also following in the footsteps of her older brother Gregory, a National Guard member based in Fort Bragg, N.C. Jessica enlisted through the Army's delayed-entry program before graduating from Wirt County High School in Elizabeth.

"You would not believe the joys, cries, bawling, hugging, screaming, carrying on," said Lynch's cousin, Pam Nicolais, when asked Tuesday about the rescue. "You just have to be here."

Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., called the rescue a miracle.

"God watched over Jessica and her family," Rockefeller said through a spokesman in Washington. "All of West Virginia is rejoicing. This is an amazing tribute to the skill and courage of our military."

Allied forces seize bridge, destroy Guard division

By DAVID CRARY
Associated Press

Closing to within 35 miles of Baghdad, U.S. forces seized a bridge over the Tigris River and swept past battered Republican Guard units Wednesday. One of the key Guard divisions, defending the city of Kut, "has been destroyed," a U.S. general said.

Farther south, U.S. commanders said Iraqi soldiers were shooting from inside a revered mosque in Najaf. American soldiers withheld return fire.

Soldiers on the front lines and relatives 6,000 miles away in West Virginia rejoiced over the bold, middle-of-the-night rescue of Pfc. Jessica Lynch from captivity at an Iraqi hospital that was housing a military command post. The commandos who freed her also retrieved 11 bodies, some of them are believed to be American soldiers.

Army's 3rd Infantry Division and the First Marine Expeditionary Force launched a two-pronged attack toward Baghdad, and both reported breakthroughs as units entered the so-called "red zone" within range of the guns and missiles defending the capital. U.S. officials say Iraqi resistance will be the most tenacious in this zone and have warned of the possible use of chemical weapons.

In an attack launched at midnight, 3rd Infantry units surged past the strategic city of Karbala, targeting an estimated 2,000 paramilitary fighters. Karbala, which sits on the main approach to Baghdad from the southwest, was encircled and hit by nighttime bombardment from U.S. artillery and warplanes.

To the east, Marines moved to within 35 miles from Baghdad after capturing an important bridge over the Tigris River near Kut. Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks said the Baghdad Division, defending Kut, was destroyed.

One of the Marine units battled Iraqi artillery and mortars for control of a bridge over the Saddam Canal near the Tigris River late Tuesday, killing an estimated 100 Iraqis dug into trenches and bunkers.

The shooting started only after it appeared the Marines would cross the bridge uncontested - a belief shattered by mortars fired as the forces approached the bridge.

The Marines then resumed their advance Wednesday, passing an abandoned military complex with high-rise barracks while bombs thudded in the distance near Baghdad.

For days prior to the offensive, both the Baghdad Division and the Republican Guard's Medina Division still defending Karbala had been pounded by airstrikes and artillery barrages. U.S. officials said the bombardment reduced the strength of both divisions by more than 50 percent.

"They're in serious trouble, and they remain in contact now with the most powerful force on Earth," Brooks said of remaining Republican Guard units.

The commander of British forces in Iraq, Air Marshal Brian Burridge, confirmed that the latest assaults by his U.S. allies marked the start of a momentous phase.

"This is certainly a decisive engagement in which we are now just beginning with the Republican Guard," he said. "The point I would make, though, is that decisive phases often take time. I wouldn't want to give you the impression that within a day or two this is going to be finished."

In Najaf, about 50 miles south of Karbala, the Central Command said U.S. forces were being fired on from the Ali Mosque, one of the most important Shiite Muslim sites. U.S. commanders say they have been trying to minimize damage to religious sites to avoid angering Muslims in Iraq and abroad.

Iraqi Information Minister Mohammed Saeed al-Sahhaf contended that American warplanes were flying close to some of the holiest Muslim sites, causing vibrations which could damage the structures. He described as "illusions" the U.S. reports of advances near Baghdad.

The International Red Cross, meanwhile, said some its staff members saw the bodies of dozens of people at a town south of Baghdad where Iraqi officials claim U.S. helicopters attacked a residential neighborhood. At least 280 injured were being treated at a hospital in Hillah, 60 miles south of Baghdad, the Red Cross said.

Iraqi officials said yesterday that U.S. Apache helicopters attacked a neighborhood in Hillah, killing 33 people and injuring more than 300. The U.S. Central Command said it was investigating the claim.

Contractor rushing missile production

By JUSTIN POPE
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – Defense contractor Raytheon Corp. said it is in talks with the Navy to accelerate production of the next generation of Tomahawk cruise missiles after two weeks of war in Iraq have depleted stocks of the existing model.

In response to queries from the Navy, Lexington-based Raytheon has said it could accelerate production of the new Tactical Tomahawks, to be manufactured in Tucson, Ariz., from 38 to 50 per month if funding becomes available. Raytheon spokeswoman Jennifer Allen said Wednesday.

The Navy has said it plans to spend as much as $2 billion for 1,353 of the next-generation weapons, which are scheduled to become operational in the summer of 2004. That date could be brought forward.

Raytheon is under two contracts totaling $260.5 to build 192 of the new missiles.

Allen said it is unknown whether the Navy would order further missiles or just ask for accelerated delivery of those currently under contract.

"We're standing by," she said.

A Navy spokeswoman did not immediately return a phone message seeking comment.

The Army said earlier this week that 700 Tomahawks have already been fired by the U.S. Military in the Iraqi war. Analysts had estimated the Pentagon's pre-war stockpile at only about 2,000.

The satellite-guided missiles are fired from ships and submarines.

John Pike, president of defense consultancy GlobalSecurity.org., said the Pentagon is more likely to use cruise missiles early in a war when targets are better defended. He said the Pentagon planning called for a large enough stockpile to handle conflicts in Iraq and, if needed, North Korea, with some extras in reserve.

"I'm not going to try to second-guess their estimates over time as to how many they would want to have, but I am assuming they are rapidly running out of the number that would be allocated to targets other than North Korea," Pike said. "They basically don't intend to find themselves with a one-war inventory when they're done with Iraq."

In a separate announcement, Raytheon said recent contracts and another anticipated deal involving Patriot missiles will mitigate previously announced layoffs.

In February, Raytheon said it would lay off 300 workers at its Andover plant, about 3 percent of the employees of Raytheon's Integrated Defense Systems division. Raytheon said Wednesday it would instead trim 200 positions.

About 3,300 people work at the Andover plant.

The company said the layoffs were necessary because of the winding up of a contract to build Patriot missiles for Greece and duplication in operations, but said it had since won a number of smaller component manufacturing contracts and that it anticipated an additional contract. The company did not provide any more specifics.

KRISTA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Remembering the troops

Katie Flynn, a sophomore history major, listens somberly to the speeches at the Support our troops rally on the steps of the Student Union yesterday.

Rent One of Ours
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Cargo Vans
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass Amherst

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Busch & Busch Light 24 Pack Bottles $9.99 + dep.
Corona 12 Pack Bottles $9.99 + dep.
Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm
333 Russell St., Rt. 9 584-8174

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

PLAN AHEAD FOR NEXT YEAR

Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Gambling in Massachusetts: Slot machines or casinos?

Another week, another new proposal from Governor Mitt Romney.

The leader of the Bay State recently announced his plan to investigate the installation of three locations within the Commonwealth that would each feature 2400 slot machines. Romney continues to preach, though, that he is not in favor of full-blown casino gambling.

Some legislators are happy about the idea of the possible chance at increased tax revenue. The plan would call for towns to have already passed a voter referendum in favor of casino gambling. In Western Massachusetts towns such as Holyoke, Palmer and Warren have all passed such measures.

Others though are outraged at Romney's attempt to tread on both sides of the fence. "You can't come up with these dinky proposals. You have to do it right or not do it at all," declared Warren town selectman Donald G. Nickerson. And honestly, who can blame people from both sides for being frustrated with the Governor.

For those that are in favor of having casinos in Massachusetts, this seems like a slap in the face. Slot machines are being allowed, but other games are not. It's like telling a child who wants to have a banana split that they can eat the maraschino cherry on top, but that's it.

Those opposed to gambling are likely to be outraged for the governor to allow any sort of gaming to take place. They see slots as only a pit stop on the road to the huge casino resorts seen to out south in Connecticut.

The idea of a casino in Massachusetts is nothing knew, and it has been hotly contested within the past decade, ever more so as we sit by and watch our neighbors in the Nutmeg State profit from the tax monies generated by Mohegan Sun and Foxwoods.

Only three weeks ago, Senator Michael Morrissey of Quincy, proposed the idea of transforming the Hynes Convention Center into Massachusetts' first casino, right in the heart of Boston. The Hynes is up for sale by the State, as its current use will be outdated once the new convention center being build near the Boston Water Front is up and running.

While the building would only need minor renovations to make the transition from convention center to casino, proponents claim, numerous neighbors of the Back Bay area are outraged at even the thought of a casino in their backyard. And this is the reaction for a proposal that is deemed a long shot.

The Romney administration and the rest of the state legislature need to get on the all and find some course of action. It's true that there will never be a day that all involved agree, but there needs to be some focus out of our leaders, rather than trying to placate everyone in some fashion.

Talks of casinos has ranged from in the capital, up north to the shores of Salisbury, down to the ports of New Bedford, and right here in the Pioneer Valley, specifically in Holyoke. The proposals are going to keep coming, particularly the longer that the cities and towns of Massachusetts, like the state, remain in fiscal distress.

One could think that despite Romney's words about being against casinos, that his concession for slot machines are the first step in a long process. Why not then just seek to allow casinos in the first place? If this is not his view, why throw casino advocates a bone, only to yank all hopes away.

Information from Massline.com and WCVB were used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

American values at gunpoint

Mark Ostroff

The war in Iraq is only one small part of a much bigger plan for the Bush administration. The plan, surprisingly enough, is entirely on paper with shocking straightforwardness.

The entirety of this plan comes in the form of a 90-page report called "Rebuilding America's Defenses: Strategies, Forces and Resources for A New Century."

The report can only be described as an outright appeal for Pax Americana with rather disturbing overtones. Reading the report, it becomes obvious that its purpose is to provide "a blueprint to global military 'preeminence'" – a fancy word for "dominance."

The plan was written by a think tank known as the Project for the New American Century (PNAC). Members of the PNAC include Dick Cheney, Donald Rumsfeld, Paul Wolfowitz, Jeb Bush, and the "Prince of Darkness," Richard Perle. (Perle got the nickname during the Cold War while advocating for nuclear war on the USSR.)

According to this report, "America's military preeminence" would spread to land, sea, air, space, and even cyberspace. It describes a race for space militarization, made exclusive only to the Pentagon and other commercial interests. Cyberspace would also be controlled in the same way.

The report was written in 2000 and names specific targets for the US to "fight and decisively win in multiple, simultaneous, major theater wars." Of course, the first three countries on the list were (drum roll, please) the "Axis of Evil," Iraq, North Korea and Iran.

Although it mentions a regime change in Iraq, it recommends that when Saddam Hussein "passes from the scene," American military presence should remain in the Middle East indefinitely, pointing to Iran as the next stop for the US Troops – described as the "cavalry on the new American frontier."

In a chapter entitled "Creating Tomorrow's Dominant Force," the PNAC does not hold out on even the most absurd details of its vision of American might. Part of the chapter emphasizes that in order to carry out such a plan, a catastrophic event – described as a "new Pearl Harbor" – must act as a catalyst.

"The report can only be described as an outright appeal for Pax Americana with rather disturbing overtones."

See if you can guess what that "new Pearl Harbor" is.

Throughout the chapter, the vision of a future American military is described using ideas like "fleets of robots," to assist on the battlefield and the development of pharmaceutical skin patches to suppress fear and heighten stamina, strength and awareness.

These experiments, according to the report, will be carried out in a project called the "Land Warrior Program," in which they "envision a squad of seven soldiers able to dominate an area the size of the Gettysburg battlefield" – about 165,000 men.

The report also describes a future in which biological warfare will be a "politically useful tool," when they can target only people with specific genotypes.

Alongside that, it specifically mentions that in order for America to not be held back from its goal as a single world power, certain treaties, including the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, should be abolished. Bush has already backed out of this and many other treaties as well.

The PNAC also envisions a world in which America will be a sole peace keeping force, while the UN would play a less influential role. The US has already begun this move as it invades Iraq on only flimsy justification and forged documents and against UN rulings.

As American citizens take a hostile split over the justification for war on Iraq, these politicos have all the justification they need in the form of an explicitly "new manifest destiny" to "disseminate our values."

If this manifest destiny is to be carried out, it will be carried out in the same way every other empire has done since the beginning of time, with overwhelming force and intimidation.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian Columnist.

Communication in break-ups

Paige Cram

There's no situation more awkward than a break-up. In fact, I commend anyone who's ever had a successful and eloquent split because it's next to impossible to know what to say in that setting. You're facing someone that you care about, or at least cared about at one point, trying to tell them that it's over. We've all been at one end of that scenario, if not both, at some point. If you are the breaker-upper, you are just trying to find the easiest way out while inflicting the minimal amount of damage possible (unless of course it's a really bad break-up). If you are the one being broken up with, you are just trying to make sense of what is being said while hopefully maintaining at least some of your dignity.

If only it could be as simple as, "This isn't working for me." End of conversation. But it doesn't work like that because if you are the one being broken up with, you feel that insatiable need for an explanation, and if you are the breaker-upper, you feel the need to justify yourself. So instead of muttering a one liner and high tailing it out the door, you sit there fumbling with words, attempting to articulate what is going on in your head. And in most cases, you may not even understand it completely yourself, so how can you be expected to explain it to someone else? That is where the problem comes in because those circumstances are what inevitably lead to sometimes drastic miscommunication.

I, myself, have been at both ends of this situation so not only have I been the cause of some break-up blunders but I have also fallen victim to them. I'll be the first to admit that, when breaking up with someone, I get extremely frustrated when the person takes something that I say in completely the wrong way. However, I know that in the opposite position, I also tend to misinterpret what is being said. For example, something like "I can't deal with continuity," would loosely translate to, "You are completely boring me." Or, "I just don't want a relationship right now," would mean "I don't want a relationship with you." It's certainly understandable for a person to think like this, especially while dealing with the insecurity that comes from being dumped, but it's important to remember that while these statements may be somewhat similar, they hardly mean the same thing.

Besides misinterpreting what is being said, the other major breakdown in communication during break-ups is the actual choice of words. The breaker-upper speaks very carefully, often in an attempt to avoid misinterpretation ironically enough, but this technique will usually backfire. One friend of mine described her situation with an ex-boyfriend where she thought she ended the relationship, but because she was trying so hard to "be nice" and "break the news gently," her ex was not even aware that that's what he had actually become.

"If you think about it, the whole difficulty of splitting up can be solved with three simple rules."

The more people I talked to, the more common I realized stories like this one actually are, and it occurred to me that as often as break-ups happen, no one really seems to know how to handle them. Perhaps that is because every break-up is different. It completely depends on the people and the circumstances, but still, shouldn't there be some sort of general guidelines set up to help ease the awkwardness?

If you think about it, the whole difficultly of splitting up can be solved with three simple rules. First, say what you mean. As tempting as it is to sugar coat things, let's face it: no matter what you say, it's still going to sting, so it's better to be clear and straightforward than to have your words be misunderstood. Second, don't put words into someone else's mouth. It's not fair to assume that a person means anything other than what he or she is actually saying. So, take what is being said literally, without adding your own interpretation, which should be easy if rule number one is also being followed. And lastly, don't be afraid to ask questions. If anything seems vague or unclear, make sure it gets clarified. Nothing can be more uncomfortable than not knowing why a relationship ended, or worse, completely misunderstanding the reason.

People always say that there is no such thing as "a good break-up," but I disagree. As long as you are honest (yet respectful) and open, there is no reason why things can't end on a positive note. Sure, the conversation itself will always be difficult, but if it's done right, it'll be easy to move beyond that and start building your relationship in a different way: as friends.

Paige Cram is a Collegian Columnist.

Frat row belongs to everyone

Jamie Loo

This situation is proof that you can sell just about anything on eBay.

A few of my friends put the link in their AIM profiles last week, and at first I thought it was a joke. But there it was, frat row on sale for an estimated $4 million dollars.

Apparently, the company that owns the four houses on the east side of North Pleasant Street, Alpha Tau Gamma, Inc. (ATG) was waiting to see if the University was going to buy the lot before offering it to anyone else.

Company treasurer Jim Mulcahy said that ATG, Inc. has been considering selling the space for a while now and that the fraternities were given notice a long time ago.

"We ourselves in ATG, in leasing to these fraternities, have told them all that they should be setting aside some money and that eventually ATG was going to knock [the houses] down," said Mulcahy.

I'm not sure if my cynical mind completely buys that statement but I'm sure we'll find out more later on. Now, I'm not going to lie. I'm not a fan of the Greek lifestyle. Dancing on beer soaked floors, getting groped by random men and then having people toss beer bottles at my car as I pass doesn't fit my idea of a great weekend. I think some of the houses on North Pleasant Street look a little shabby on the outside and are occasionally eyesores. I've been in many classes with people that are in fraternities and sororities that are brainwashed, and no matter what topic we're talking about they can work Greek life into it.

"When we create these categories, we lose sight of the individual people that make up these groups."

I've seen friends starve themselves during rush, because it "builds character," and I've heard stories of people who are given humiliating tasks. If you don't fit the stereotype of "what it means to be [fill in the blank]" you can't get into some ALANA frats or sororities. Again, the voice of your junior high school health teacher should be screaming loud and clear; these people probably shouldn't be your friends. But nevertheless, this is part of the tradition of college Greek culture.

I do recognize that the Greeks do some great things for the community, in terms of service projects but overall, I'm not impressed by it. I'm sure many people on campus share this same sentiment. Some of you are probably happy about the possibility that frat row could be totaled by wrecking balls soon.

But I'm not.

I might not like Greek culture, but I do like the Greeks themselves. I've had many friends and colleagues over the years that are in fraternities and sororities. Many of them have been strong student leaders, who weren't afraid to stand up for their causes and their organizations in addition to overall being cool people.

We have a tendency on campus to lump people together into stratified categories: Republican or Democrat, white or ALANA, pro-war or anti-war, Greek and non-Greek. When we create these categories, we lose sight of the individual people that make up these groups. In every group there's at least a few good men and women, arguably several great people and it's those people we often forget about.

These individuals are part of our community at UMass. They are the students that sit next to us in class, that work at the DC and that we go to sporting events with. They're also people who deserve to have fair representation in the SGA.

Frat row isn't just a set of houses. It's where a community of students live and they're in danger of losing that. ATG is about to sweep in and evict our fellow students out of their homes. I would liken it to tossing a family out of its home and then separating them (because if these fraternities cannot find another house, chances are they won't be living together as a cohesive group). It's an awful thing to lose your home.

And we've already witnessed a disbanding of one community on campus: Butterfield dormitory. Of all the places on campus, Butterfield had its own distinct community of residents and due to some unfortunate events a few years ago the University decided to disband it. Each resident was scattered across campus, and if administration could, they tried to keep residents from living in the same building, even from living on the same floor.

It's a shame that something like this might happen again to our fellow students. If and when, it does happen and we have any control over it as students, we should rally for the Greeks. Like them or not, it's indisputable that they are valuable members of the UMass community and it's not fair for them to lose their homes.

Jamie Loo is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the author's name, address, phone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 250 and 300 words and should be addressed to 'The Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and submitted to the Opinion Editor. All submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to us.

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

A history of punk

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

It's hard to say when and where the punk genre started. It began in earnest in the 1970s, as a rebuke to disco and the forms of commercialized music that was being heard in that era. Rebellion minded teens and 20-somethings began to wear tattered clothing and socially unacceptable accessories (tattoos, piercings, strange hair.) They made music that was the complete opposite of the glossiness of disco music that was dirty, dangerous, loud and anarchic. This music was given the name punk.

The Sex Pistols, a rambunctious UK outfit that had songs like "God Save The Queen," hit it big in their homeland (yet never really caught on.) Their perceived rivals, The Clash, did achieve success with the song "Rock The Casbah." "Train in Vain" and "Should I Stay or Should I Go?" The album "London Calling" remains a classic.

The 80s brought luminaries like Sonic Youth and Elvis Costello and the Attractions, acts that have matured into respected musical royalty. Similarly, the Velvet Underground, The Ramones and the Talking Heads – bands spawned from the punk underground – have influenced acts to this day. Punk, in this time came in different guises: the art-punk of Talking Heads; the gloomy post-punk of Joy Division and the Smiths;

Continued on page 6

Punk fashion

By Lauren DiFillipo
Collegian Staff

With the growing popularity of punk rock music in all of its incarnations, it is only logical that the mainstreaming of its fashion would also come into being. Punk rock's do-it-yourself style has been embraced, although some argue co-opted, by advertising organizations and department stores alike.

The transition of punk fashion has transcended from campy to cool. One illustrative example is the adoption of Kelly Osbourne's eccentric style. The same people who once mocked her for her fashion sense are now clinging onto her bootstraps for advice about how to avoid fashion faux pas.

The notion of visual identification with the music you listen to, the affirmation that you belong to one community as opposed to another through your appearance is nothing new. What is new, however, is the ability to purchase these niche-creating garments at department stores and popular retail chains. This mainstreaming of fashion does not stop at mere garments. Colorful tattoos are again a must-have accessory, an idea perpetuated through popular imagery, jewelry and other accents

Continued on page 6

PHOTO BY GERALD LINSKI/COLLEGIAN
PHOTO COURTESY DRIVE-THRU RECORDS AND REBECCA CLARK

A detailed history of punk from The Ramones to New Found Glory

Continued from page 1

and the ferocious, envelope-pushing of G.G. Allin, Black Flag and the Misfits.

In the late 80s/early 90s, indie and punk acts like Rancid, NOFX, Mr. Bloody Valentine and Pavement continued the DIY aesthetic that began in the 70s. The most important act to come from this era of punk, however, may be Nirvana, the Seattle-based group whose bleary style was more reflective of old-school punk rather than the grunge movement to which the band was soon attached. Nirvana's 1991 album "Nevermind" may be Gen-X's version of "London Calling." Sadly, the saga of Nirvana ended when frontman Kurt Cobain killed himself in 1994. However, their legacy remains, most notably in Nirvana soundalikes such as Australia's The Vines.

The commercial and critical success of Nirvana forever changed the landscape of punk. After that, punk music became commercial and mainstream. Influenced by the Kinks and Buzzcocks, pop got folded into the punk mix. The not-so originally named new genre of pop-punk specialized in catchy, clean variations on punk. The energy and fervor was still there, but the sound was more antiseptic and syllable in the market place; it was inoffensive and made for wide exposure. Green Day and The Offspring were the most popular bands of this time. Pennywise and Bad Religion are also two notable names. The long-running Warped Tour became a way of showcasing up and coming and popular bands. In 1999, Blink-182 became famous with the song "What's My Age Again?" and resurrected the genre after it made a quick disappearance. The members of Blink-182 are responsible for two of the more experimental side projects in punk, Boxcar Racer (featuring drummer Travis Barker and guitarist Tom DeLonge) and the Transplants (in which Barker teams with Rancid's Tim Armstrong).

Currently holding the mantle for the pop-punk throne are Good Charlotte, New Found Glory and Sum 41. GC are a quintet that sprung from Maryland and feature twins Joel and Benji Madden, who use their childhood struggles (poverty, an absentee father) as the basis for their music. Sum 41 is a fun loving Canadian quartet known for its destructive, goof-off ways. They carry the title of rock star proudly, while acts like GC and NFG tend to shrug off such shenanigans in favor of concentrating on the music. Sum 41's new release "Does This Look Infected?" should be noted for the harsher guitar sound than the first album.

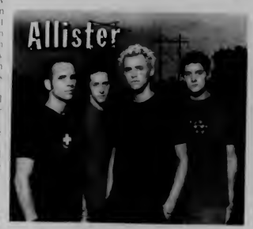
The current pop-punk acts are accused of being sophomoric, cherishing toilet humor and callow themes about teenage alienation and heartbreak over politics and social injustice.

Punk fans have been divided over the issue of punk-pop and its cousin, emo. Hardcore punk fans often hate punk-pop dismissing it as "mall punk" and "boy band punk" – punk bands that are as dangerous as N'Sync. Emo, a more sensitive offshoot of punk, is both loved and hated for the sound's reliance on pained, whiny vocals and angsty, earnest lyrics. Punk-pop fans may not like the hard, squealing sound of punk; non-discriminating fans – true fans – don't care.

Ska is one type of music that has its roots in punk, yet isn't exactly punk itself. Think of it as punk meets big band music. Early No Doubt (before "Hella Good"), The Mighty Mighty Bosstones and Save Ferris are good examples of this.

The early part of the millennium gave rise to a neo-garage rock revival, a return to Rolling Stones-style pre-punk rock. New York hipsters The Strokes led the revival, which gave justified buzz to Detroit's punk-blues duo The White Stripes, as well as a great many acts from Scandinavia (The Hives, Soundtrack of Our Lives, Sahara Hotnights) and Australia (The Vines, The D4 and The Datsuns). England spawned the aptly named Libertines, as known for their hard-partying ways as their music. America returned in kind with The Mooney Suzuki and Yeah Yeah Yeahs.

Inspired by the likes of Patti Smith and Blondie's Deborah Harry, women weren't afraid to make their mark in the punk scene. The Donnas are an all-girl quartet who recall the good time punk of the Ramones and turn the sexist music of Motley Crue on its head. The girls have been around since middle school and their fifth album, "Spend The Night," has given them major attention. The Sahara Hotnights proved on "Jennie Bomb" that they are Europe's version of The Donnas. The Distillers and Yeah Yeah Yeahs both feature formidable female frontwomen. But punk rockers of both sexes and all ages bow down at the feet of Sleater-Kinney, an all female trio beloved in the indie rock world for their socially conscious music.

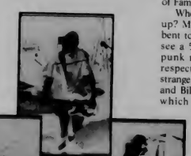


Sadly, punk lost some of its heroes in the past couple of years. Clash frontman Joe Strummer and Ramones Dee-Dee and Joey have departed this world. Punk fans mourned, but Strummer's post-Clash band, The Mescaleros, will have another album on the way. And adding legitimacy to the punk world The Clash, The Ramones and Elvis Costello have all been added to the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

Where do punks go after they grow up? Most punk music has a juvenile bent to it, so it becomes awkward to see a 50-year-old man acting like a punk rocker. Most punks become respected maverick musicians (and strangely enough folk artists.) Costello and Billy Bragg are two directions in which aging punks go after they mature. Henry Rollins (of Black Flag) became an actor; so did Iggy Pop. Many still put out music, but music with the hindsight and wisdom of experience grafted on to it.

Punk as music and lifestyle is about being true to yourself, about being an individual. It's a rebuke to the mindless drudgery of everyday life. It's about not going with the flow, about being your own person above all. You don't have to look like a punk to be a punk; anyone who believes that has sadly misinterpreted the spirit of punk. Punk is about standing up for what's right, about not bowing down to the pressure of conformity. Punk is...punk.

Here's a brief sampling of the punk acts that are making waves now. This is hardly a comprehensive list (or history) but it is a start. I suggest listening to these and then reading magazines like Alternative Press for more info. Then you may be prepared to delve into the back catalogue.



The list, as follows: AFI, Allister, American Hi-Fi, The Atarris, Authority Zero, Bodyjar, Bowling For Soup, brandnew, Bright Eyes, CKY, Cursive, Dashboard Confessional, Desaparecidos, The Distillers, The Donnas, Dropkick Murphy, Fenix Tx, Finch, The Hives, Homegrown, Hot Rod Circuit, H2O, Jimmy Eat World, Liars, The Libertines, Midtown, Millencolin, The Mooney Suzuki, The Movielife, mXpX, No Use For A Name, Rainer Maria, Riddlin' Kids, Rufio, Sahara Hotnights, Senses Fail, Showoff, Simple Plan, Something Corporate, The Starting Line, Sugarcult, Taking Back Sunday, Thursday, The Used, Vaux, The White Stripes, Yeah Yeah Yeahs and Yellowcard.

Punk fashion

Continued from page 5

featuring studs have also risen in popularity.

The artists are not unaware of this trend towards commercialization. The goal of the do-it -yourself aesthetic still exists; the route to which you achieve it has changed with the convenient locations of stores offering punk rock merchandise at a mall near you. Don't worry: the clothes are new, but look like they have been around for years, complete with rips, tears and studs.

All told, punk rock fashion has come into its own, and graduated from the fringes of popularity to the forefront of chic, but at what costs? Even the connection with the word fashion drives some punk rock enthusiasts to tears. A simple hop on the Internet will showcase websites that teach would-be punks how to dress the part of a real punk rocker. Hence, the colloquialism "fashion punk."

April '03

ARTS ON CAMPUS...

A monthly calendar brought to you by the UMass Arts Council.

Events

Thursday April 3
Theater- Blessing the Boats Blending solo theatrical performance, literary reading, stand-up comedy, spoken word performance and the storytelling of Agent 3pm & 8pm Bezanson Rec Hall 545-2511 $
Theater-Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead by Tom Stoppard April 3, 4, 5 and 9, 10, 11 at 8pm; April 6 at 2pm Rand Theater 545-2511 $
Music- Avanti Wind Quintet Plus 8pm Bezanson Hall 545-2511 $
Wednesday April 4
XCultural-SASA Night '03: The Fusion 7pm Campus Center Auditorium 545-3600 $
XCultural- 6th Annual National Haitian Student Canference: Blood, Sweat & Tears Through 4/6, various times (all in Campus Center) 545-3600 $
Monday April 7
Film-Trembling Before God 7pm Hasbrouck 124 545-4824
Tuesday April 8
Music- 19th & 20th Century Flute Music 8pm Bezanson Hall 545-2511 $
Wednesday April 9
Grant Deadline- UMass Arts Council Mini Grant Submission Hasbrouck Room 545-0202
Comedy- Jim Brewer 8pm T.A.'s Concert Hall 545-3600
XFilm - Elegant Horror: Sound & Image in Val Lewton's The Seventh Victim 7:30pm Bezanson Recital Hall 545-3659
XConference-Making Art - Making A Living: Performing Arts 4:30pm Campus Center 545-2360 Free for Students $
XMixed- Creative Expressions Night 5pm Somerwall Center 545-4624
Friday April 11
Music - David Murray and the Gwa-Ka Masters Magic Triangle Ensemble with WMUA 8pm Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2511 $
XMixed - Common Threads: Fabric and Traditional Asian Garment Design A contemporary interpretation Talk, fashion models and sales by master designers and weaver Leonard Along 3:30pm Campus Center 6th fl $
XMixed - Bring on the Fire through 4/5 Art Museum, Library Lawn & SUB
Saturday April 12
XCultural - The Annual Native Pride Social 6pm Crave Out Lounge 545-3603
Music - Mingus Big Band Celebrating the music of the late, great composer and bassist Charles Mingus 8pm Concert Hall 545-2511 $
Sunday, April 13
Dedication- Newly Renovated Bezanson Recital Hall Concerts at 4pm and 7pm Shows are free but advance tickets are required Bezanson Hall 545-2511
Jazz Brunch Hampshire Dining Hall
Monday April 14
Film-The Business of Fancydancing 7pm Hasbrouck 124 545-4624
Tuesday, April 15
Theater- MILK OF AMNESIA with Carmella Tropicana 7:30pm Bowker 545-4824 $
XConference-Making Art - Making a Living: Arts and Activism 4:30pm Campus Center 545-2360 Free for Students $
Music- Double Reed Faculty Recital 8pm Bezanson Hall 545-2511 $
Wednesday April 16
Music- Faculty Recital 8pm Bezanson Hall 545-2511 $
Seminar- The Art of Memorialization with Robert Gunderman 4pm Kennedy Library Center Reading Room 611 545-
XFilm - A Dream in Hanoi 7:30pm SOM 137 545-3659
Saturday April 19
Music- Graduate String Quartet 3:30pm Bezanson Hall 545-2511
Tuesday April 22
Music- Trombone Choir & UMass Low Brass 8pm Bezanson Hall 545-2511 $
Wednesday April 23
XConference- Making Art - Making a Living: Art and Law 4:30pm Campus Center 545-2360 Free for Students $
XLiterary Arts - Writers Work Campus Center Director Room Library 3:30pm, Commonwealth College Lounge 545-5427
Thursday April 24
Music - Jazz Lab Ensemble 20-piece ensemble playing director's choice sample stage bands' repertoires 8pm Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2964
Theater- Soular Power Full Circle Productions has its finger on the pulse of hip-hop culture. Also 4/25 8pm Fowler Auditorium 545-2511 $
Lecture- Shakespeare in the 21st Century by C.B. Hardison 4pm Memorial Hall 577 545-3659
Mixed- Take Your Children to Work Day 8:30-11am Mullins Center 545-4377
Friday April 25
Music- University Orchestra with Faculty String Performers 8pm Concert Hall 545-2511 $
Saturday April 26
Music- 21st Annual New England Saxophone Symposium All day in the Music Department 545-2511 $
XCultural- SAMBA Spring Carnival 8pm SUB 545-3612
XCultural- 9th Annual Puerto Rican Cultural Night 6pm Campus Center Auditorium 545-3600 $
Sunday, April 27
Music- Concert Band 2pm Concert Hall 545-2511 $
Music - American Music Wind Ensemble & Symphony Band Steven Dennis Bodley, conductor 7pm Concert Hall $
Monday, April 28
Film-Sing-A Long Wizard at Oz 7pm Hasbrouck 124 545-4824
Tuesday April 29
Music- Euridice Ensembles Baroque Chamber Music 8pm Bezanson Hall 545-2511
Wednesday April 30
XConference-Making Art - Making a Living: Arts-related Careers 4:30pm Campus Center 545-2360 Free for Students $
Mixed- Take Back the Night 7pm Campus Lawn 545-0883
Music- Graduate Jazz Composers' Concert 8pm Bezanson Hall 545-2511 $
XFilm - The Pianist 7:30pm SOM 137 545-3659

Exhibits

XAUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY
Hampden Dining Commons
M-Th 8:30-9:30pm; F 8:30-5pm; Sa 10-5pm
The Way I See It April- by Michael Coblyn Through April 18
Thesis Exhibition- Michael O'Bannon April 24-30
XCENTRAL GALLERY
Central Residential Area Fearing Way Wheeler House 545-0580
M-Th 3-6 pm; SU 2-5 pm
524 Bill and Tess Rock: New Paintings Through April 27
XHAMPDEN GALLERY & SCULPTURE GARDEN
Southwest Residential Area 545-0580
M-TH 12-6; SU 2-5 pm
Liminal Curated by David Gibson Through April 27
Face to Face New portraits by Laura LaPerle Hampden Gallery Lobby
XHERTER ART GALLERY
122A Herter Hall 545-0976
M-F 11-4 pm; SA-SU 1-4 pm
Julie Heffernan: A Painting Survey, 1995-2002 Through April 9
Linda Matalon: Drawings and Sculpture Through April 9
MFA Thesis Exhibitions
Kim Hindman, Sandy Litchfield April 22-25,2003
Terry Cappucci, Bounma Chanthavong April 28-May 2
XSTUDENT UNION GALLERY
Student Union Building 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 pm; F 10-3 pm
Healing the Wounded Heart April 7-11
Body and Soul by Abraham Appelbaum April 14-18
Mantypus by Jared Snider
Zoom by Emiko Hirose April 21-25
Today's Woman by Leah Moffie
works by Cheryl Lichwell April 28-May 2
XUNIVERSITY GALLERY
The Arts Center 545-3670
M-F 11-4:30 pm; SA-SU 2-5 pm
In the Making: Contemporary Drawings from a Private Collection through May 16
Jim Dow: American and National League Baseball Stadiums through May 16

XFive College students are offered a discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events
XSponsored, in part, by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

4/03

UMass Arts Council·101 Hasbrouck Lab·545-0202

SUMMER POSITIONS AVAILABLE
DEAN OF STUDENTS

The Dean of Students Helpline is looking for responsible, highly-motivated students to staff a helpline. The phoneline is designed to provide help to current and prospective undergraduate students at UMass.
Staff will be trained in all aspects of Bursar, Financial Aid, and Housing Assignment policies and procedures (and you'll be paid during the training period). Work Study and Non-Work Study positions are available.

Duration: June 16, 2003 - August 29, 2003
Starting Salary: $7.00/hr

Interested?
Applications are now available at the Dean of Students Office (227 Whitmore).
Applications are now available at the DOS Office by Friday, April 25, 2003.
Questions? Contact Justin Cornier or Paul Vasconcellos at 545-2684.

PARKING SERVICES

REGULATION REMINDER

Effective Monday, April 7, 2003 Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement, which is 7:00 am to 5:00 pm Monday through Friday.

Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots, except visitor meter lots, which are enforced for payment 9:00 am to 5:00 pm.
Vehicles may park in any legal parking space, provided it is not a tow zone, handicapped space, vendor space, state vehicle space, reserved space, or 24-hour permit required lot (lots 21, 22, 29, 35, 44, 47, 49, 50, 54, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.), from 5:00 pm to 7:00 am, Monday through Friday, weekends and holidays, without displaying the proper permit.
Parking meters will continue to be enforced for payment 9:00 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday.

People in the news

Dixie Chicks, Sharon Osbourne, and Linkin Park

LONDON (AP) – Sharon Osbourne is free of cancer after months of treatment, her rock star husband, Ozzy, said.

Ozzy Osbourne said he still feared his wife would become ill again, and added that he was emotionally overwhelmed last year when her illness coincided with the success of their MTV reality show.

"She's got no cancer in her body now, they tell me, but there's always a chance of it coming back," Ozzy Osbourne told the music magazine Kerrang! "She's doing great, but I must confess that I'm still worried about her."

Sharon Osbourne, 50, announced last year that she was undergoing treatment for colon cancer, which she allowed cameras from "The Osbournes" to document. The hit reality series follows the daily misadventures of the couple and two of their three children, Jack and Kelly.

"With Sharon's cancer and the success of the TV show, I lost it last year. I just freaked out," the 54-year-old Osbourne said. "I think I had something like a nervous breakdown – my nervous system just imploded. This is all too much for me sometimes."

SPARTANBURG, S.C. (AP) – The Marshall Tucker Band plan to play a May 1 concert organized as an alternative to the Dixie Chicks, who will be opening their United States tour at the Bi-Lo Center in Greenville that day.

Radio talk show host Mike Gallagher proposed the concert as a way for fans to protest remarks that Dixie Chicks lead singer Natalie Maines made about President Bush during the European leg of the trio's tour.

"Just so you know, we're ashamed the president of the United States is from Texas," Maines told a London audience last month. The singer since has apologized, but the anti-Chicks sentiment has spread rapidly.

The South Carolina House of Representatives even got involved in the fracas by adopting a resolution asking the band to play a free concert for the troops and their families as a way of apologizing.

Gallagher says people attending his concert who have Dixie Chicks tickets will sit in a special VIP section and attend a VIP reception. All proceeds from the Marshall Tucker Band concert will buy food for military families and military communities, he said.

NEW YORK (AP) – Linkin Park's latest release has made a meteoric rise to the top of the album chart, debuting at the No. 1 spot.

"Meteora" sold more than 810,000 copies during its first week in stores, according to industry figures released Wednesday.

The rap-rock band's first album, "Hybrid Theory," was the top seller of 2001 with 4.8 million copies sold.

Debuting in second place was the new Celine Dion album, "One Heart," which sold nearly 432,000 copies in its first week.

And the No. 3 album also was a new release, "Now That's What I Call Music! 12," which sold about 256,000 copies. The latest in the compilation series includes songs from Jennifer Lopez, B2K, Nelly and Justin Timberlake.

Last week's top disc, rapper 50 Cent's "Get Rich or Die Tryin'," fell to fourth place. It's sold 3.7 million copies since its release nearly two months ago.

-Associated Press

Taking a look at global food, one gag at a time

Dedicated to the subtle science of microwave cookery in all its forms and variants

MICROLOGY

Jessica Pelletier

Variety is the spice of life, isn't it? And what better way to experience all the gastronomic pleasures of the earth than by going out on a limb and eating something different? That's all well and good for most everyday meals, but you have to admit that the course of human events has caused many a society to embrace some really twisted "delicacies." And believe me, I'm not talking about grubs and crickets. Over half the earth's population consumes insects as a staple food source, so far be it for anyone in this society to freak out over something that's has happened and will continue to happen for thousands of years. These foodstuffs are concrete examples of the fact that humans will eat anything.

Truffles are a tuber, which grows naturally in forests with temperate climate and rich soil. After the fall of the Roman Empire, the truffle waned in popularity and it wasn't until the Popes moved to Avignon that its brilliant delicacy regained a royal following.

In Italian, the word for a professional truffle hunter is a trifolau. This person traditionally searches for the glorified mushrooms with the aid of a sow. The Italian white truffle contains pheromones that only entice female pigs and not the males. Recent trifolau's have taken to training dogs to find the rare delicacies, since the canines have no interest in devouring the rare spores.

Price ranges for these refined beauties run from 800 to 1500 dollars a pound, so be prepared to pay for such luxury. A truffle tasting in a fancy restaurant can add as much as one hundred dollars onto your bill.

Thousand-year-old eggs are a product of Chinese cuisine, but the name can be slightly misleading. The duck eggs are rarely more than 100 years old...but who's counting.

To create the unique flavor, the eggs are packed in a combination of red earth, garden lime, salt, wood ash and tea. For presentation's sake, chefs recommend that the eggs be wrapped in rice husks to prevent sticking. A recent special on Food Network presented an up close and personal look at a thousand-year-old egg. And, well, it looked like a bad dream. Part of the process involves cooking the egg past recognition and letting it sit in a pile of hot dirt until "done." The result is an egg, which is a lovely shade of black, with a green center. Apparently the eggs are pungent with the taste of cheese and pair well with pickled vegetables.

Contrary to popular belief, horse urine is not used in the fermentation process. I have been told that the taste is one that needs to be cultivated in certain individuals, but if you want something with the taste of cheese, just go out and eat the cheese.

Rocky Mountain Oysters have nothing to do with seafood, believe me. They are, instead, the testicles of a bull, boar, or sheep which are battered and deep-fried. I have never eaten this by-product either. But then again, I have also never had the desire to have the testicles of an animal in my mouth. Enough said.

Other fun names for this food include prairie oysters, Montana tendergroins (my personal favorite), cowboy caviar, swinging beef and calf fries. It is generally recommended that the "oysters" be eaten as close to their date of purchase as possible...the author recommends they be giggled about and not consumed, unless a dare has been issued.

Haggis is one badass dish that hales from Scotland and uses the bits and pieces of a sheep that would normally be wasted. The first recorded recipe for haggis was published in 1390 for King Richard II. Back in the old days, though, they called it Afrochemsale.

A simple Haggis recipe involves chopped sheep's tongue and kidneys, which are rolled in breadcrumbs and stuffed inside a sheep's stomach with gravy broth. The stomach is then boiled until firm. Wow. That recipe didn't get any better did it? A family member of mine was made to eat some of this dish during her trip to the British Isles; it's a subject we are forbidden to discuss in her presence. If the idea of stomach bothers you, the breaded tongue and kidney delight can be concocted in a jar or baking dish.

And that's all for disgusting trivia this week! Next time you feel like complaining about Blue Wall food, contemplate chowing down on a pile of animal organs and know that you're probably better off. Remember, I said probably.

Jessica Pelletier is a Collegian Columnist.

Toronto Film Festival, Houston Symphony Orchestra Today in entertainment news

HOUSTON (AP) – The Houston Symphony Orchestra has ratified a new 3 1/2-year contract, ending a strike that began nearly a month ago.

The deal, which calls for a two-year pay freeze followed by wage increases for the final 18 months, along with nine weeks of unpaid furlough time over the life of the contract, went into effect on the 24th day of the musicians' strike.

"We're delighted we have reached this settlement and that Houstonians can once again hear our incredible symphony musicians on stage," society President Jeffrey Early said Tuesday.

Dave Kirk, who has played tuba for 21 Houston Symphony seasons, said he was most excited about the contract's call for a joint commitment between musicians and the society to improve lagging fund raising and concert subscriptions.

"Some would view this as an ending. We view it as a beginning," Kirk told reporters Tuesday at a news conference alongside symphony officials at Jones Hall, the ensemble's downtown home. They'll resume the 2002-03 season Saturday when they team with Scottish percussionist Evelyn Glennie for the first of three performances of James MacMillan's "Veni, Veni Emmanuel."

The deal was a product of 36 1/2 hours of talks Saturday and Sunday refereed by prominent Houston developer Ed Wulfe, who drafted friend and respected mediator Alvin Zimmerman. Mayor Lee Brown recruited Wulfe last week to help end the walkout, which began March 9.

Musicians began voting Monday morning and finished Tuesday morning. Kirk said passage required a simple majority, though he declined to release the final tally.

The orchestra had been playing without a contract since Oct. 5. The society had called for salary cuts because it is nearing a $6 million deficit ceiling imposed by major charitable foundations that back it.

Kirk said the pay freeze and gradual raise will ensure that Houston musicians won't fall further behind their peers in like-sized and smaller cities, and with reinvigorated fund raising they might eventually catch up.

On the Net:
Houston Symphony Web site: http://www.houstonsymphony.org
Musicians' Web site: http://www.upbeat.org

TORONTO FILM FESTIVAL ANNOUNCES PLANS FOR NEW HOME DOWNTOWN

TORONTO (AP) –The Toronto International Film Festival is planning a new film center that's expected to be completed for the September 2006 festival.

"The festival center that we want to build will...act not just as a magnet for our own very talented filmmakers, but I believe it will act as a place where the world will come to Toronto, to celebrate film, to see films and to learn more about them," festival director Piers Handling said Tuesday.

Handling said having a single location for the festival has been a dream since its 1975 inception.

The $83 million complex will include a five-story building, a library and archives, along with screening, dining and bar facilities, and a Festival Tower condominium development.

Festival managing director Michele Maheux said a campaign to raise money to build the center was being launched, with $12.8 million already commitited.

The project is a partnership that includes director Ivan Reitman ("Dave," "Kindergarten Cop"), who grew up in Toronto after emigrating with his family as a child from Czechoslovakia, his sisters and The Daniels Corp. real-estate developers.

"We saw this as a great opportunity to build something special, something that gives back to the profession that I've had the good fortune to be in, to give back to the city and this country that took us in as immigrants," Reitman said.

The September festival screens movies in several theaters around the city, with increasing demand for seats each year resulting in long lines and people shut out of some showings.

On the Net:
Toronto Film Festival Web site: http://www.e.bell.ca/filmfest/

MAJOR LEAGUE SOCCER SIGNS TELEVISION DEAL WITH FOX SPORTS WORLD

NEW YORK (AP) –Major League Soccer will increase its presence on cable and satellite television, agreeing to a four-year contract with Fox Sports World and Fox Sports Espanol. The deal, announced Tuesday, will provide Fox Sports World with a minimum of 25 regular-season games on Saturday nights. There also will be a minimum of eight postseason games on the network, plus a weekly one-hour wrap-up show at midnight (Eastern).

Spanish-language Fox Sports Espanol will televise one game a week.

The English network is available in just under 20 million U.S. homes, and the Spanish network reaches about 5.1 million U.S. households, 45 percent of them Hispanic.

"Those numbers are not enormous in the context of the overall cable universe," said David Steinberg, senior vice president and general manager of Fox Sports International and Fox Sports Espanol. "They are very focused on the relative audiences.

"People know these networks are the destination for world-class soccer and that, in our expectations, will drive very healthy marketing numbers."

MLS already has a deal with ESPN2 for 26 Saturday telecasts at 4 p.m. (Eastern). ESPN2 reaches about 82 million U.S. homes.

The championship game will remain on ABC.

Fox Sports World, which already televises games from the English Premier League, the German Bundsliga and many other top soccer organizations, will begin its MLS coverage April 12, when D.C. United plays at Kansas City.

"Over the past several seasons, we've been doing all we can to tighten and further the connection between our league and the hardcore soccer fans in the U.S.," said Mark Abbott, MLS chief operating officer.

-Associated Press

Any writer working on the arts magazine needs to be in contact with Lizzy, Nick or Jen ASAP.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/28/03 - Thursday 4/3/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
SHOWING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:00 9:35
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:15 4:10 7:25 10:25*
OLD SCHOOL (R) 4:35 10:10
DREAMCATCHER (R) 1:00 4:05 7:10 10:15*
1st No Show Sat. 3/29 - sneak preview of WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 7:30
THE CORE (PG13) 1:10 4:15 7:15 10:20*
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:00 7:40 10:00*
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55*
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:05
•NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & Showtimes available at cinemark.com

Looking for a job in Amherst this summer? Full and part time jobs are available with Summer Conference Housing! Come and get an application and job description at the Conference Services Office, Room 918 Campus Center.
http://www.aux.umass.edu/ConferenceServices

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Karaoke
Flying Lizards
Chris Kasik Quartet
Richard Jess Duo
UPSTAIRS AT THE ABC
POOL / DARTS / PINGPONG
LATE NIGHT MENU TIL MIDNIGHT
24-36 N. Pleasant St. • Amherst MA
413.253.5400
www.amherstbrewing.com

Introducing
Natalee Prince
Ethnic Hairstylist
Casimir Kocot
79 So. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
413.256.3440

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
Results you can feel.
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

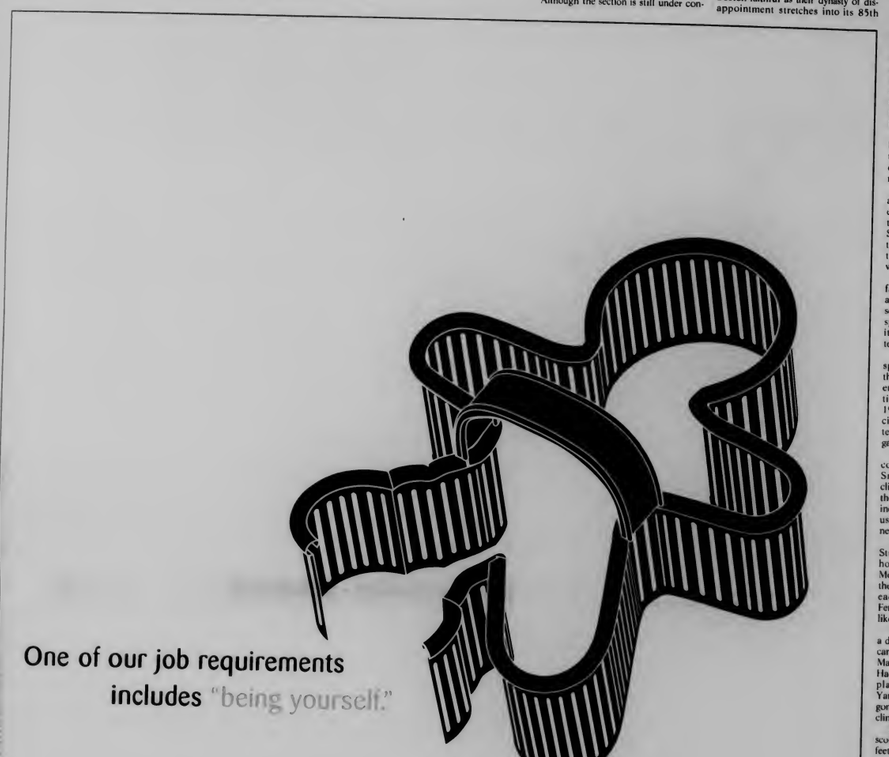
Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Busch & Busch Light
24 Pack Bottles
$9.99 + dep.
Corona
12 Pack Bottles
$9.99 + dep.
Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm
433 Russell St., Rt. 9
584-8174

Happy 50th birthday, TV guide

By JENNIFER KAY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA (AP) – At age 50, TV Guide is showing signs of maturity. Circulation is down amid competition from newspapers that offer their own listings and TV shows that provide a steady stream of celebrity news.

TV Guide has also adapted to the changes in the media business in recent years, with online listings, an interactive program guide and a television channel that make the most of its instantly recognizable name and logo.



Founded by Philadelphia publisher Walter Annenberg, the television viewer's bible debuted April 3, 1953 in 10 Midwest and East Coast cities with Lucille Ball's young son Desi Arnaz Jr. on the cover. Now owned by Gemstar-TV Guide International Inc., it has 209 regional editions nationwide and just over 9 million subscribers, according to the latest figures from the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

The magazine is now just one part of TV Guide's domain. The company estimates that it reaches about 100 million users each week, when all of its various formats are considered – the Web site, www.tvguide.com; the TV Guide Channel on cable and the TV Guide Interactive digital program listings.

As more home technology develops around the television screen, TV Guide's mission is to help readers make the most of their leisure time, not just tell them what to watch, said John Loughlin, president of the TV Guide Publishing Group.

To that end, the company plans a redesign of the magazine to make the listings easier to read. It will also have shorter stories and expanded coverage of home-entertainment products, such as DVDs and high-definition TV sets, Loughlin said.

It will also direct readers to the Web site and on-screen guides for the latest news.

One of our job requirements includes "being yourself."

How can you grow as an individual if you're being forced into a mold? At Ernst & Young, we empower you to push the boundaries. We offer the chance to generate creative ideas that really count. On our teams everyone has a role to play and something to contribute, so not only do you have a voice but you can make a difference with clients and co-workers alike. Break the mold.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2002

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

New seats atop the Green Monster sure to be a hit

By JIMMY GOLEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATOP THE GREEN MONSTER (AP) – Kenmore Square and its landmark Citgo sign are at my back, the nightclubs of Landsdowne Street below, the Boston skyline is off in the distance and, to my right, almost close enough to touch, will be the foul pole that welcomed Carlton Fisk's famous homer into history.

I am sitting in Fenway Park's newest seats. They are already the most coveted seats in the ballpark, a season's worth snapped up in a matter of hours. Although the section is still under construction, and the only action on the field is the grounds crew, it is obvious that they are the best seats in the house.

Wearing hard hats, Janet Marie Smith, who is helping the ballclub decide whether to renovate or rebuild its home, and I visited the Green Monster this week. An April snow was falling on Boston, the Red Sox had lost the opener in spectacular fashion (as the Red Sox tend to do) and their world-weary fans were already gearing up to concede the 2003 season (as Red Sox fans tend to do).

So here is some good news for the Boston faithful as their dynasty of disappointment stretches into its 85th year: Fenway Park is becoming a more comfortable, more enjoyable place to watch a baseball game. And no change will be more popular than the new Monster seats.

Unlike hotel rooms that offer a distant view of the SkyDome field or the frolicky diversion of the Bank One Ballpark swimming pool, the Monster seats are immersed in atmosphere. The view of the plate is perfect (though a play at The Wall is obscured); you are a mere 310 feet away (and 40 feet up); and unlike the luxury boxes that seal fans off from the crowd, you are thick in the middle of it.

And you might catch a home run, too.

Or, as long-suffering Red Sox fans know too well, a popup.

The team's owners, in place less than a year when construction began, are understandably squeamish about tinkering with Fenway's allure. The seats were floated as an idea, then discussed in community meetings before they were announced with great fanfare.

In the end, the team felt that the best way to show off Fenway's signature feature was to allow fans to get close to it, rather than treat it as a museum piece.

"We wanted to try and celebrate the authentic things and the moments that exist naturally, rather than treating them as objects under glass or clichs," Smith said. "With Fenway, it is the real thing. It's one of the last of the real things. We certainly expect to treat it with some reverence."

Even in stodgy, red-brick Boston, fans welcomed the change. They've already gobbled up each of the 270 seats at $50 a piece and 100 standing spots at $20 a pop for every game after its scheduled April 29 opening, the team's second homestand.

By then, fans will be able to cross a spacious and steady concourse from the suite level or the centerfield bleachers to the new section. For the first time since the ballpark was built in 1912, Fenway visitors will be able to circle the field inside it, though the team won't open the new section to gawkers until things cool down.

For now, though, the only access comes by a rickety scaffolding that Smith and I joined halfway up by climbing over the grandstand wall. At the top, a catwalk balanced 37 feet, 6 inches above the warning track takes us across the top of The Wall to the new seating.

It's cantilevered over Landsdowne Street, the landing place of so many home runs that cleared the Green Monster and its netting. Just a few of the seats have been bolted down so far, each one a metal barstool painted Fenway Green, perforated in a pattern like the seams of a baseball.

Each stool is behind a counter with a drink rail, but a fan in the front row can peer down on Red Sox left-fielder Manny Ramirez as he plays the carom. Had the seats been here for the '78 AL playoff game against the hated Yankees, one of these fans could have gone home with Bucky Dent's pennant-clinching popup.

Fenway has its bad seats: Under the scoreboard in centerfield, you are 600 feet from the plate; others are behind posts. Even the good ones are too narrow, cramp-inducingly spaced too close to the row in front, and pointed at the wrong angle.

All of this will be addressed when the team decides whether to replace Fenway, a six-month evaluation process now into its second year. For now, though the team is going after the low-hanging fruit, as president Larry Lucchino has called it: The fixer-upper projects that fall between a new coat of paint and a total teardown.

Although the Monster seats have gotten the most attention, there are other changes afoot for baseball's oldest and smallest (and, for the sixth year in a row, its most expensive) ballpark.

Among the most visible is the growth of the manual scoreboard to twice its width – it now covers almost the entire length of The Wall – to include updates of National League games and advertisements. Two rows of seats now go the length of foul territory.

The club seating behind homeplate, renamed the .406 Club to pay tribute to Ted Williams after his death last summer, will be redecorated with memorabilia from the Red Sox star.

The area where the TV trucks used to park has been brought inside the ballpark walls for a barbeque area. Entry gates have been spruced up, and new restrooms underneath the grandstand promises shorter lines for women and changing tables in bathrooms for men and women.

"You have to come back when the bathrooms are done," Smith said at the end of the tour. "They're every bit as exciting as the Green Monster seats."

The foul pole that Fisk memorably dinged with his game-winning homer in the 1975 World Series was taken down during construction to sand off the rust and give it a fresh coat of paint. The section of netting that his shot probably hit has been preserved for the Red Sox Hall.

The ladder that the grounds crew used to clear balls out of the net above the Green Monster was also taken down during construction. It will be put back as well – restoring the threat of ricochets for over-confident left-fielders waiting beneath – even though there's no need for it any more.

Why?

"Because," Smith said, "this is Fenway Park."

NL to be the San Francisco treat again?

Astros, Braves and Cardinals all look to make a serious run at the defending league champs, while Giants hope Barry will be the man again

There are at least eight legitimate contenders for the National League pennant this season, and unlike past years, there are no clear-cut favorites. Last week, we looked at the American League, and now we turn our attention to the Senior Circuit:

NL East

1. Atlanta Braves
Key additions – Paul Byrd, Robert Fick, Mike Hampton, Roberto Hernandez, Russ Ortiz
Key losses – Tom Glavine, Wes Helms, Kerry Ligtenberg, Kevin Millwood, Damian Moss, Mike Remlinger

The Braves have won 11 consecutive NL East titles and despite the winter decimation of a once-spectacular starting rotation, expect them to add a 12th. And why shouldn't we think that? After all, the core of the team (Greg Maddux, John Smoltz, the Joneses) is there. Gary Sheffield and Fick will do their share of damage swinging the bats. Ortiz and Byrd should be solid, and Hampton will be better than last year. Atlanta is still the team to beat in the East.

2. Philadelphia Phillies
Key additions - David Bell, Kevin Millwood, Jim Thome
Key losses – Marlon Anderson, Jeremy Giambi, Doug Glanville, Travis Lee

No one would argue that Philadelphia isn't improved, but here's what they did in the off-season. 1) They gave a fat, six-year deal to Thome, a guy with a history of back problems, and 2) overpaid for Bell, a career .256 hitter. On the other hand, signing potential superstar Pat Burrell to a long-term contract and acquiring Millwood for a bag of peanuts were moves that can't be questioned. But doesn't this team remind anyone of the 2002 Mets when they added seemingly every name-player available (Roberto Alomar, Pedro Astacio, Jeromy Burnitz, Roger Cedeno, Mo Vaughn)? That worked out splendidly, didn't it? Call me crazy but I'm just not sold on this team yet.

3. Florida Marlins
Key additions – Todd Hollandsworth, Juan Pierre, Mark Redman, Ivan Rodriguez
Key losses – Charles Johnson, Kevin Millar, Eric Owens, Preston Wilson

The Marlins have arguably the best young starting rotation in the majors, with guys like A.J. Burnett, Josh Beckett and Brad Penny. The additions of Pudge and Pierre give Florida a formidable offensive attack, and look for Derrek Lee to bust out this year. Expect the Marlins to be contenders late into the season.

4. New York Mets
Key additions – David Cone, Cliff Floyd, Tom Glavine, Art Howe, Rey Sanchez, Mike Stanton
Key losses – Edgardo Alfonzo, Jeff D'Amico, Rey Ordonez, Bobby Valentine

In theory, this should be a good team. In theory. Of course, this was supposed to be a good team last season and it wound up in the NL East cellar. Can't you imagine Howe sitting in the corner of the dugout in mid-June, his face buried in his hands, realizing the Mets are nine games out of first and David Cone is his fourth starter? "I left Oakland for this?" he'll sigh. Despite having Robbie Alomar and Sanchez in the middle of the infield, the Mets' defense is atrocious. Alomar should bounce back from a bad year last season, but the team won't.

5. Montreal Expos
Key additions – Livan Hernandez, Orlando Hernandez, Jeff Liefer
Key losses – Bartolo Colon, Andres Gallaraga, Matt Herges

Last year Montreal was a Cinderella story and stayed in contention for much longer than many of us thought they would. This year reality catches up with them. Harsh, bitter reality. The reality of having the fourth-lowest payroll in the majors. The reality of not having enough pitching to compete this year in the NL East. The reality that Vladimir Guerrero will most likely not be an Expo next year. On the plus side, the Expos get to play 20 games in Puerto Rico this season. Which is nice.

NL Central

1. Houston Astros
Key additions – Jeff Kent, Brian Moehler
Key losses – Shane Reynolds, Tom Gordon, Daryle Ward

Is there a better 3-4-5 in the majors than Bagwell-Berkman-Kent? As Dean from Dean's Home Furniture would say, "I doubt it!" Playing in the hitter-friendly Minute Maid Park, the Astros will certainly score their fair share of runs. Their pitching is solid as well: Roy Oswalt and Wade Miller form a nasty 1-2 punch and the bullpen is strong with Octavio Dotel and Billy Wagner. They will battle St. Louis for the NL Central crown, but the 'Stros will come out on top. Expect great seasons from Kent and Oswalt.

2. St. Louis Cardinals (Wild Card)
Key additions – Joe Girardi, Dustin Hermanson, Al Levine, Brett Tomko
Key losses – Andy Benes, Dave Veres

The Cards endured a tragic season last year that culminated with their being smacked around by the Giants in the NLCS. This is still a good team, though, and a return to the playoffs is probable. From top to bottom, St. Louis' lineup might be the best the NL, and the pitching is more than adequate. They have star players (Albert Pujols, Scott Rolen, Matt Morris) and experience. The Cardinals will be a dangerous team come October.

3. Chicago Cubs
Key additions – Dusty Baker, Shawn Estes, Mark Grudzielanek, Eric Karros, Damian Miller, Mike Remlinger, Dave Veres
Key losses – Todd Hundley, John Lieber, Fred McGriff, Chris Stynes

The Cubs are the trendy pick to win the NL Central this year, and while they are improved from last year, they're not that good. Sure, their pitching is fine; some might say spectacular. Kerry Wood is an undeniable talent, and Mark Prior might just be the next big thing. But offensively, besides Sammy Sosa, there are questions. Can Moises Alou stay healthy? For the last four years, the answer to that question has been no. Also, rookie Hee Seop Choi's performance will be a large factor in the Cubs' success (or lack thereof) this season.

4. Pittsburgh Pirates
Key additions – Jeff D'Amico, Kenny Lofton, Reggie Sanders, Randall Simon, Jeff Suppan
Key losses – Mike Fetters, Sean Lowe, Armando Rios, Ron Villone

Want a sleeper team this season? Pittsburgh might be your team. Believe it or not, the Pirates are not that bad. They have solid everyday position players and good young pitching (Kris Benson and Josh Fogg, in particular). This team is moving, albeit ever so slowly, in the right direction.

5. Cincinnati Reds
Key additions – Great American Ballpark, Felix Heredia, Felipe Lopez, Paul Wilson
Key losses – Cinergy Field, Shawn Estes, Brian Moehler, Todd Walker

Is this finally the year that Ken Griffey, Jr. makes his return to baseball prominence? If spring training is any indicator, it very well may be, but Griffey alone cannot bring the Reds out of their mediocre state. If Danny Graves can pull a Derek Lowe, then Cincy might finish above .500, but that's asking a lot.

6. Milwaukee Brewers

Nah.

NL West

1. San Francisco Giants
Key additions – Edgardo Alfonzo, Felipe Alou, Jose Cruz, Jr., Ray Durham, Marquis Grissom, Damian Moss
Key losses – Dusty Baker, David Bell, Jeff Kent, Kenny Lofton, Russ Ortiz, Reggie Sanders

Considering the feats that Barry Bonds has accomplished in his career, is hitting .400 this season out of the question? He is surrounded by new faces in the Giants lineup this year, and with good buddy Kent gone, the task of protecting Bonds goes to former Met Edgardo Alfonso and Rich Aurilia. Despite the loss of Kent, the Giants offense is solid. The loss of Ortiz might hurt the pitching some, but Jason Schmidt and Kirk Reuter are still around. If closer Robb Nen can become and stay healthy, San Fran is the team to beat in the West.

2. Arizona Diamondbacks
Key additions – Carlos Baerga, Elmer Dessens
Key losses – Greg Colbrunn, Erubiel Durazo, Mike Fetters, Damian Miller, Todd Stottlemyre

Arizona goes as far as Randy Johnson and Curt Schilling can take them, but it won't be too far unless the offense puts runs on the board. Remember how the D-Backs' bats went silent in the playoffs last year after Luis Gonzalez went down? And Gonzo, at 35, isn't getting any younger. Someone – maybe Danny Bautista – has to pick up the slack on the offensive end or this aging team won't make it to October.

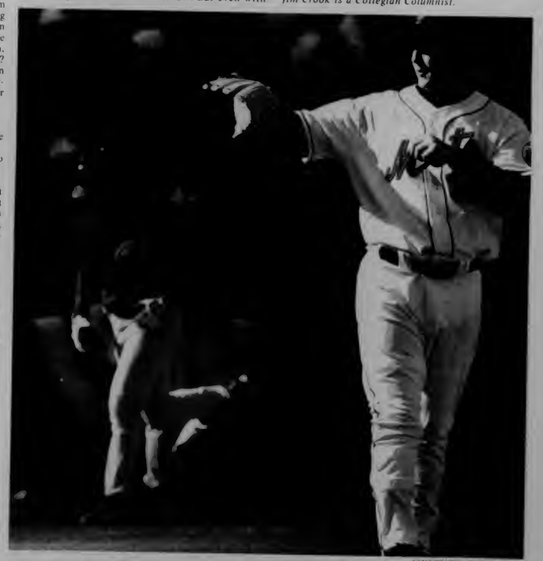
3. Los Angeles Dodgers
Key additions – Fred McGriff, Todd Hundley, Daryle Ward
Key losses – Omar Daal, Marquis Grissom, Mark Grudzielanek, Tyler Houston, Eric Karros

If Kevin Brown and Darren Dreifort are healthy, the Dodgers' pitching is good. Real good. But that's a huge "if," considering Brown has been on the disabled list six times since he came to LA in '99, and Dreifort missed the past one-and-a-half seasons while having two reconstructive "Tommy John" surgeries on the same elbow. But even without those two, the pitching staff is above average with Hideo Nomo, Odalis Perez and Kaz Ishii (who is rehabilitating from a skull fracture). Shawn Green will again carry a heavy load offensively.

4. Colorado Rockies
Key additions – Ron Belliard, Jose Hernandez, Charles Johnson, Chris Stynes, Preston Wilson
Key losses – Sandy Alomar, Jr., Mike Hampton, Juan Pierre, Todd Zeile

We all know the Rockies will hit, and with a revamped offense, the runs will be many. Fantasy baseball geeks everywhere have been salivating over the idea of Wilson playing at Coors Field, and he won't disappoint. However, the Rockies have proven in the past that they cannot win at Coors because of their pitching. Last year they finished dead last in pitching, and it doesn't figure to get any better in 2003.

5. San Diego Padres
Key additions – Mark Loretta, Lou Merloni, Jesse Orosco, Rondell White
Key losses – Deivi Cruz, Damian Jackson, Brett Tomko



No Trevor Hoffman, no Phil Nevin, no hope for the Padres in 2003. They have some nice pitchers in Brian Lawrence, Adam Eaton and Oliver Perez. Ryan Klesko and Mark Kotsay are good hitters. But the season-ending injuries to Hoffman and Nevin are too much for the Padres to even think about crawling out of the West cellar.

Divisional Playoffs
San Francisco over St. Louis
Houston over Atlanta

NLCS
San Francisco over Houston

World Series
San Francisco over Oakland
2003 MVP: Barry Bonds
2003 Cy Young: Roy Oswalt

Jim Crook is a Collegian Columnist.

KATHY WILLENS - ASSOCIATED PRESS
Chicago Cubs' Corey Patterson trots the bases after hitting a three-run homer off New York Mets pitcher Mike Bacsik, right, in the sixth inning of the Mets home opener Monday, March 31, 2003, at Shea Stadium in New York.

NCAA title up for grabs

With Texas the only remaining top seed, Men's Final Four is wide open game is loosely officiated, Texas will be an even tougher team to beat.

Continued from page 12

What Syracuse needs to do to win:

Syracuse is as talented as any team remaining in the tournament, and offensively they are very difficult to stop. When freshmen sensation Carmelo Anthony is on top of his game, the rest of the Orangemen raise their level of play and can cause nightmares for their opponents, as evident in their thrashing of Oklahoma.

With that said, Syracuse is also the least experienced team remaining. Their starting lineup consists of only one upperclassman, who is also their only senior to receive substantial minutes (Kueth Duaney).

Syracuse must be able to react with Texas' physical play and find a way to slow down T.J. Ford, while finding ways to get Anthony good looks on the post, where he is still more effective than from outside. It is also important to establish a perimeter game and get Freshmen Gerry McNamara good looks from the outside to help assist their inside game.

Syracuse must be strong on the boards and battle Texas's stronger front line with quickness and agility.

What will happen:

The effectiveness of Syracuse's 2-3 zone will determine the outcome of this game.

Texas is not accustomed to playing against this type of defense, and Syracuse is not accustomed to playing against a player as quick and smart as T.J. Ford. The advantage in this matchup will favor Texas.

However due to his ability to get in the seams of defenses and get his teammates open shots at the basket from outside and down low. Both teams are pretty deep, with Texas having a slight advantage in depth, having the ability to play 10 men over Syracuse's usual eight-man rotation.

Texas will be able to switch people to cover and harass Anthony and they have perhaps the best wing defender in the country in Royal Ivey who could give McNamara a lot of trouble initiating Syracuse's offense.

Texas's physical toughness will rattle Syracuse in another hard fought battle, with Texas joining Big 12 rival Kansas in the finals.

Final Score: Texas 74, Syracuse 66

Ari Zivyon is a Collegian Columnist.

NYC
$40/person
THIS WEEKEND
leave haigis 9:45 AM Sat leave the apple NOON Sun
BUS•HOTEL•BREAKFAST to do whatevah you want family discounts
4 people / room (limited doubles)
sponsored by Commuter Area Government
428 Student Union / 545-0865
(Commuter Services Apartment Complex Fair
Next week: Wednesday April 9 - Campus Center)

Minutewomen cruise

Cross paces offense while Holtz, Arnold shut down Black Bears seven innings of work, Holtz scattered three hits and gave up one unearned run while fanning 10 Black Bears. After hurling her way to victory, Holtz added a hit and a RBI as the designated player to help Arnold's.

Continued from page 12

In the shortened evening contest, Arnold impressed by shutting down the A-10 rival allowing four hits with four strikeouts before the game called in the fifth inning due to darkness.

Between the sun setting and the damp, December-like weather in April, it wasn't a good month for softball. UMass coach Elaine Sortino was happy the weather didn't give Maine an advantage.

"I'm glad we could do what we could, even though we couldn't get loose," Sortino said. "I hope we have some better weather. It's not a good day to play softball. It's way too cold.

Cold is a neutralizer. If a team has a physical advantage over the other team, like Maine, they can neutralize that in a hurry. Anything can happen under the right conditions."

The Maroon and White have now won 10 straight games and improve their home-winning streak to 42 straight games, including 19 openers. With 10 more home games in 10 days, the players and the coaches aren't feeling the pressure.

"We're just so excited to be home," Holtz said. "I can't even tell you how good it feels to be back on this field. We could have 16 or 20 games in 12 days, it doesn't matter. The atmosphere and the fan support here is the best. We just love playing here."

The next opponent attempting to break the home-winning streak is the St. Joseph's Hawks. The doubleheader is slated to begin at 3 p.m. tomorrow at the Massachusetts Softball Complex.

MARCIO JOSE SANCHEZ/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Texas guard Jamie Carey, right, drives past Louisiana State guard Tamicka Johnson in the second half of the NCAA West Regional championship game in Stanford, Calif., on Tuesday, April 1, 2003. Texas won, 78-60.

Familiar faces Tennessee, UConn look to build off of past success in 2003 NCAA Women's Final Four

By CHUCK SCHOFFNER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Diana Taurasi and Alana Beard will be there. So will "Rocky Top" and "Hook 'em, horns!" The women's Final Four will feature two of the game's top stars, a ton of tradition and plenty of orange.

Taurasi will lead defending champion Connecticut against Texas in one semifinal at the Georgia Dome in Atlanta on Sunday. Duke, which looks to Beard for leadership at both ends of the floor, faces six-time champion Tennessee.

If this group looks familiar, well, it should. Connecticut, Tennessee and Duke reached last year's Final Four. Texas is bringing the burnt orange to the sport's showcase event for the first time since 1987, the year after the Longhorns won the national championship.

Texas coach Jody Conradt has 817 victories, second only to Tennessee's Pat Summitt, who has 820.

Connecticut (35-1) made it the national semifinals for the fourth straight year despite losing four starters from last season's unbeaten team. Coach Geno Auriemma has no seniors and his new starters include two freshmen. A third freshman plays major minutes.

"I don't think people really understand what we went through and what Coach has gone through with us," forward Jessica Moore said. "For us to be here is just amazing, and it's like a sense of relief, a real blessing for me. I just feel so proud to be a part of our team."

Tennessee's orange-clad faithful will follow the Lady Vols (32-4) to their 14th Final Four and clap with gusto every time the band strikes up "Rocky Top."

This is the last chance for Kara Lawson and the other Tennessee seniors to win a title. The Lady Vols lost to UConn in the semifinals last year and haven't won a title since 1998.

"This is a confident group. We believe in each other," Lawson said. "We want to go a couple of steps further this year."

Duke (35-1), which has lost only to Connecticut, is in the Final Four for the third time in five years. The Blue Devils are the only team in the field without a national championship, but they've won 15 straight games and have been playing outstanding defense.

Texas (29-5), winner its last 17 games, was the No. 2 seed in the West Regional. The other semifinalists were seeded No. 1.

The Longhorns' men's team also reached the Final Four.

The matchups:

Duke – Tennessee

Duke's 76-55 victory over Tennessee on Nov. 24 was so long ago that it's hard to draw any conclusions from it. But Summitt hasn't forgotten it. Nor has she forgotten her team's 63-62 overtime loss at Connecticut on Jan. 4.

"Anytime you get beat along the way, you immediately want to play again," Summitt said. "When we saw the brackets, we saw that we had a great opportunity for revenge. We shouldn't need motivation. (But) we do have something to prove."

Tennessee is deeper than Duke and has the athletes and size to stay with Beard and 6-foot-4 leiss Tillis, who plays on the perimeter and inside.

The Lady Vols have the consummate leader in Lawson, who has played every game as if it were her last. At 6-2, Gwen Jackson can shoot from the perimeter or post up, and with her deep bench, Summitt can go with a big lineup, a small lineup or a combination.

Beard, a smooth left-hander, is tough to defend because she can drive, pull up for the jumper or hit the fadeaway from in close. She's also Duke's best defender.

So far, Beard has been carrying Duke in the NCAA tournament. To beat Tennessee, she'll need more help from Tillis, Sheana Mosch, Mistie Bass and Michele Matyasovsky.

Connecticut – Texas

Connecticut's young players have rallied around Taurasi, the only returning starter. She's averaging 25.8 points in the tournament, prompting Auriemma to compare what she has done to when Larry Bird led Indiana State to the 1979 Final Four.

"That's the last person I can think of that had a cast of characters that nobody will ever remember on the men's side," Aurienma said. "I think D has the same sort of responsibility. She's got to do a little bit of everything every night. It really has been remarkable."

Moore has become a key player after averaging only 3.8 points in last year's NCAA tournament. Freshmen Barbara Turner, Ann Strother and Willnett Crockett all have had big moments – and some sour ones, too. But Taurasi usually has been there to bail them out.

Texas could give the Huskies trouble with its inside duo of Heather Schreiber and Stacy Stephens. The Longhorns also have a heady point guard in Jamie Carey, a good shooter who left Stanford after a series of concussions and was cleared to play at Texas.

The victory that sent Texas to the Final Four, 78-60 over top-seeded LSU, came on Stanford's floor.

"Since I was in the seventh grade, I dreamed of cutting down the nets at Stanford to go to the Final Four," Carey said.

MARK HUMPHREY/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Connecticut's Maria Conlon, right, is fouled by Purdue's Lindsey Hicks late in the second half of the Women's NCAA East Regional final Tuesday, April 1, 2003, in Dayton, Ohio. Connecticut won, 73-64, to advance to the Final Four in Atlanta.

sports@dailycollegian.com

UM shuts out Sacred Heart behind Crane

Continued from page 12

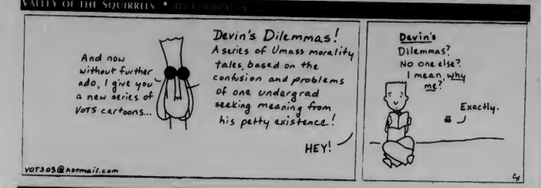
was gunned down at second. Twomley crossed for the Maroon and White's fifth run.

The Minutemen started the game off with a little help from the SHU defense. Leadoff hitter Mike Athas reached on a nutmeg job by Sacred Heart shortstop Tim Lantz. He would later score along with Cullan Maumus on a Jeff Altieri double. Although Altieri was nailed in a rundown to end the inning, the damage was done.

The only danger Crane fell into was when the Pioneers had runners on second and third with one out in the seventh. But the righthander struck out the next batter, and induced a ground ball to end the inning unscathed.

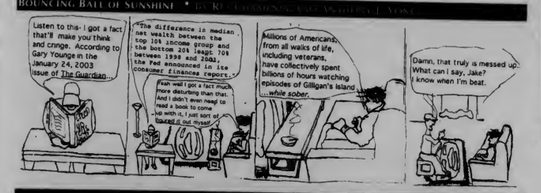
One inning later, UMass coach Mike Stone sent stud transfer John Toffey out to the bullpen to loosen up, with the intent of bringing the Barnstable, Mass. native in if Crane got tired, but the starter would have none of it.

"No way [was I coming out]," he said. "[Stone] told me to let him know if I was getting tired, but I knew I was going to be fine. It was my game."



The coach agreed.

"[Toffey] was going to come in, but [Crane] was cruising," Stone said. "We wanted to see him get a complete game. He had his pitch count down and was throwing a lot of strikes. You want to see a tempo carry over into the weekend where we just shut them down."



U Card
Coca-Cola
U Can Get Credit Too!
Swipe your Ucard to purchase any vended Coca-Cola product, automatically WIN $100, or $10 and you are entered to $50, $25, credit on Your Ucard!
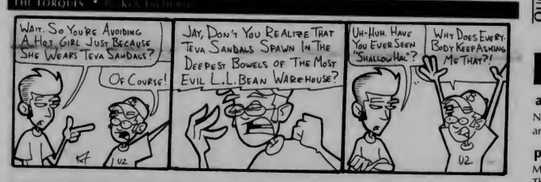
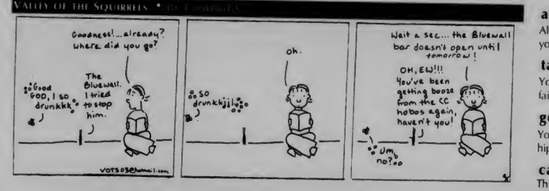
Jeff Houle won $400!
GO UMASS !!!

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • BY [illegible]

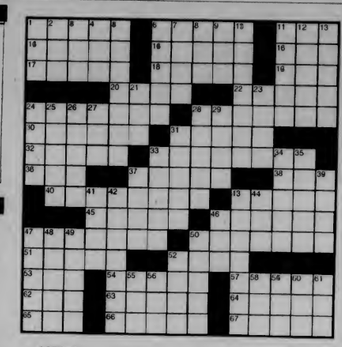
BOUNCING BALL OF SUNSHINE • BY [illegible]



JAWHOO AND JAWHOO • BY [illegible]



THE PEPPER PADDIDLE EXPLOSION • BY [illegible]



THE TORQUES • BY [illegible]

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • BY [illegible]

ACROSS

1 Fiber: — cable
6 Home appliances
11 Tool set
14 Jane or Henry
15 Widespread damage
16 Crack pilot
17 Gigantic being
18 Historic shrine
19 Guitarist — Wood
20 Long ago
22 High-schoolers
24 Shellfish
28 Vivid
30 Natural gift
31 Fall behind
32 Hodgepodges
33 Arrives (2 wds.)
36 S. Dak. neighbor
37 Put out a fire
38 Edge
40 Bulletin
43 Tough-talking coach
45 — blanche
46 Desolate
47 Devotion
50 Let go
51 Prince Arn's mother
52 Hull part
53 Feverish
54 Like some bathrooms
57 Just ridiculous
62 Topple over
63 Abrasive mineral
64 Chloroform kin
65 Survey choice
66 Meager
67 Trees provide it

DOWN

1 Many times
2 Taro dish
3 High explosive
4 Bokié's st.
5 Western ravines
6 Midwest airport
7 Goodbye, to Gaius
8 Ms. Peron
9 Name, to Pierre
10 Cute pooch
11 Isak's real name
12 PC menu items
13 Fidgety
21 Que. neighbor
23 Electric fish
24 Like — — of bricks
25 Packed cotton
26 Excuse
27 Sign before Virgo
28 Notre Dame
29 Basilica area
31 Cease-fire
33 Eccentric
34 Prefix for violet
35 Toll roads
37 Tapered seam
39 Square of glass
41 Vamoose
42 Tastes
43 Flirts
44 Venation
46 Pollen spreader
47 Congregation
48 Kukla's pal
49 Kennel sounds
50 Change colors
52 Actress Deborah —
55 Little rascal
56 Pastoral spot
58 Extreme degree
59 Triumphant shout
60 Composer — Horem
61 Before now

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

B	A	L	D	S		H	E	N	O		P	E	H	T
R	O	A	R	S		A	V	I	V		O	L	E	O
A	I	K	I	N		D	I	N	E		V	E	I	L
S	T	E	P		S	O	L	A	H		A	N	E	L
H	A	R	P	O	O	N		F	I	N	A	L	S
			C		U		R	I	L	E	D
A	G	E	N	T		T	U	T	O	R		E	E	K
L	O	N	G		S	I	N	E	W		R	A	R	E
S	O	S		O	W	N	E	R		W	O	R	R	Y
		S	H	I	E	S		D	I	M
P	O	T	E	N	T		M	E	N	A	C	E	S
R	H	I	N	O	C	E	R	O	S		N	O	S	E
O	A	R	S		R	I	E	O		P	U	T	E
F	R	E	E		E	R	I	E		G	E	N	E	T
S	A	S	S		D	E	N	S		A	S	T	R	O

1-31-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

THURSDAY
- High: 48
- Low: 32

FRIDAY
- High: 46
- Low: 36

SATURDAY
- High: 48
- Low: 27

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Tomato Soup
- Captain's Catch Sandwich
- Shepherds Pie
- Lentil Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Tomato Soup
- Roast Beef/ Gravy
- General Tso's Chicken
- Penne with Spinach & Tomato (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matthew Despres
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schatter
COPY EDITOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Dan Simmons / Scott Ciruso

QUOTE OF THE DAY

I am dead by the beauty of strangers, in horror my eye-head transforms them / Into smiling, beatific roommates...from dust to dust they create rock and roll.

- Sonic Youth

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Nothing will work out today. Why don't you go home and cry about it.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Make sure to bully all of your aquarius friends today... They deserve it.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
All the gum you have swallowed over the course of your lifetime has become a toxic ball in your stomach.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
You need to get your mind off of the obvious. Have faith and you will be rewarded.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
You are far too materialistic. Be more like the happy hippie that sits next to you in class.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
This is a time for you to make up your mind. Someone is waiting.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Watch your back today. Your roommate wants to get you back for the April fools prank you pulled.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
The weather is getting you down. And rightfully so, since you'll be splashed by PVTA busses all day.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't eat any last food today. All the burger flippers are feeling aggravated.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Don't be so whiney today. You're not going to get your way anyway.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
When you go out drinking tonight, be sure to tip your bartenders. They need some love.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
When your phone rings in the middle of class today, don't be surprised if you get a stiff arm to the face.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Last Chance: New York City trip sponsored by Commuter Area Government April 5th and 6th overnight $40 per includes Hotel Commuter for more details or to sign up come to 428 Student Union or call 545-0865.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Study Abroad in Aix-en-Provence, France Request a Free Catalog (800) 266-4441 Or Visit www.GoWithCEA.com

Term Paper Editing! Editing performed by professors and graduate students Visit us at www.papercheck.com or call us toll free 866-693-EDIT

Sororities! Help Promote American Idol! throw viewing parties at your house and earn $350 e-mail Jennifer D at Zilo.com for more info

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups: Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact Campus-Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Apt. located in Brandywine Furnished Apt. Seeking Female Roomate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sandy @ 413-546-0489

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Sublet one Bedroom. Cliffside, month of May. Can continue lease if desired. Price Nego. E-mail silverjuliet@hotmail.com

Summer sublet w/ all utilities included. 2 Bedroom Apt. Cliffside in sunderland. All utilities included on Bus route 1-413-665-9333 only $820/month.

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? COME TO THE COMPLEX FAIR, WED APRIL 9, 10 TO 3 ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE. SPONSORED BY COMMUTER SERVICES, 428 STUDENT UNION WWW.CSHRC.ORG

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

FREE DELL COMPUTER OR UP TO $1000 IN SAVINGS WHEN YOU MOVE_IN Delux 2 bedroom apartments-FREE HEAT & HOT WATER Plenty of free, on site parking Minutes from UMass-On free busline CALL SUGARLOAF ESTATES 413-665-3856 Visit us at sugarloafestates.com *limited time offer

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

89 Volkswagon jetta standard good condition driven everyday $600 or best offer 413-549-3545

Honda Accord LX 1992 Great Shape $1500 obo 413-253-1456

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392.

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Jobs! Help New Students off to a good start. Peer Advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive Salary. 20hrs/week-mid-may mid July. Applicants-615 Goodell deadline April 11.

RENT US YOUR EARS! $5 for a half hour of listening Call 545-6817 Leave Message

Mowing: Local mowing company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available. Raises commensurate with performance, potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

Love seat for sale - $30 call 546-2457

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

HOUSE FOR RENT

Large 4 bedroom house in Hadley 1 mile and 3/4 to UMass. Available June 1 $2,650 Call Lincoln Real Estate 253-7879

5 Bedroom plus Newer house minutes from UMass $2700/month 548-8800

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean only $250 round trip! Europe $189 one way! Other world wide destinations cheap. Book on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

STS America's number one student tour operator is now hiring on-campus reps 2003-04 1800-6484849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break with STS, America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WANTED

Egg Donors Needed, non-smokers. Donors Ages 21-32. Generous compensation paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781) 769-6800.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Surging forward

UM moves on after upset loss to PSU

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

You don't get a lot of wiggle room in big-time college lacrosse, especially if you aren't Syracuse, Johns Hopkins or Princeton.

While the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team (7-1, 1-1 Eastern College Athletic Conference) has certainly earned quite a bit of national respect over the years, it still can't expect to lose more than two or three games and receive an at-large bid into the postseason – as evidenced by the 2001 snubbing after a 12-2 season.

So coming off last Saturday's 11-10 loss to Penn State, which entered the game with a 1-5 record, the Minutemen must bounce back this weekend at University of Maryland-Baltimore County.

"If you were to say at [the beginning of the season], 'Coach, you'll be 7-1 at this point, I would have taken it in a heartbeat," UMass coach Greg Cannella said at Wednesday's Weekly UMass Sports Luncheon. "Unfortunately, when you are 7-0, you get greedy."

Last Saturday, Penn State's Will Jones scored with 3:25 remaining to snap a 10-10 tie and hand the Minutemen their first loss of the season. There were 10 ties and neither team led by more than one goal in what can only be described as one of the closest games in school history.

"I'm not sure what the situation was," said Cannella, whose team dropped from No. 6 in the United States International Lacrosse Association Coach's poll after the loss. "I know Penn State played really well."

This week's contest isn't any easier, as UMBC is ranked No. 17 in the nation and handed Penn State a 12-10 loss on March 22.

In fact, the season won't be getting any easier for Cannella and Co. as five of their six games will come against top 20 teams, including three against top 10 teams.

"We're looking to bounce back," Cannella said. "The guys were pretty angry [at practice] on Monday. As a coach, you try to get them to move on and look at the good points. We're 7-1."

Cannella, whose team has played seven of its eight games at home this year, is also looking forward to getting his Minutemen on the road this weekend.

"We're psyched to get on the road," Cannella said. "For us, it presents an opportunity to travel together, eat together, have a meeting together ... We're looking at this as a business trip.

"Our guys are more focused on the road than they are here in the dorms."

So focused, in fact, that Cannella isn't worried about his tough upcoming schedule that includes No. 3 Georgetown, No. 4 Syracuse, and No. 8 Rutgers.

"As cliché as it sounds, you have to take it one game at a time," Cannella said.

Cannella also reported Senior All-American defenseman Tom Fallon was unlikely to play. Fallon injured his groin in Nov. 8th's 10-9 win over then-No. 9 Navy.

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Chris Fiore and the Maroon and White will look to rebound from their upset loss to Penn State with a week-end contest at UMBC.

Minutewomen sweep past Maine at home

Cross shines in doubleheader

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Brandi Cross is a terror.

After going 5-for-6 with six runs batted in, three runs including a huge homer, Cross was all the offense needed for the No. 25 Massachusetts softball team to prevail in this afternoon's doubleheader at the UMass softball complex. The Minutewomen cruised to a pair of wins in their home opener, 6-1 and 5-0, over Maine.

UMass	6	after-
Maine	1	noon's double-header

Cross was a dominating force her freshman year (.383 batting average, nine homers and 37 RBIs) but struggled over the last two. This season, she's on her way to an All-American selection with a .354 BA, nine homers, and 27 RBIs in a meager 29 games. Cross plans to make the best of her last year on the diamond.

UMass	5	force her
Maine	0	freshman year (.383

"I've just relaxed a lot more this year," said Cross with a beaming smile. "I've taken all that pressure of trying to repeat my freshman year off. Now, it's my senior year. I'm just out there trying to have a good time and it's working."

Providing the firepower from the hill as well were aces Kaila Holtz and Kelli Arnold. After

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Kaila Holtz and the Minutewomen swept a doubleheader from the Maine Black Bears Wednesday afternoon at the UMass Softball Complex.

An inside look at the 2003 NCAA Men's Final Four

A look at the Final Four:

Game one:
Kansas Jayhawks (#2 Seed-West)
vs. Marquette Golden Eagles (#3 Seed-Midwest)

What Kansas needs to do to win:
The Jayhawks enter the Final Four after surviving the toughest bracket in the tournament with consecutive victories over powerhouses Duke and Arizona. They are led by All-American seniors Nick Collison and Kirk Hinrich, and will need strong games out of both of these players to have the opportunity to play on Monday night. Each player took turns dominating their last two games, and if both can play up to their potential on the same night, Kansas is virtually impossible to beat. The Jayhawks, however, have the least depth of the remaining four teams and really only give seven players significant minutes.

Defensively they will have their hands full trying to slow down Marquette's lethal scorer Dwayne Wade, but Keith Langford is a strong defender. The Jayhawks also have a strong inside-outside game, and if they can get balanced scoring from young wing players Miles and Langford, they can give Roy Williams an opportunity to win his first NCAA title.

What Marquette needs to do to win:
There are few secrets in Marquette's game plan. Dwayne Wade is their best player and Marquette will only go as far as their talented junior takes them. Wade was spectacular in posting a triple-double against heavily favored Kentucky, and if he can somehow play close to that level Marquette will give Kansas fits.

Wade, however, isn't Marquette's only weapon, as sharp shooting sophomore Travis Diener has elevated his game in the tournament, and has been helped from the perimeter by Freshman Steve Novak, who hit five threes against Kentucky. Both players must show up in the biggest games of their lives for the Golden Eagles to have a chance.

Defensively, Marquette's front line must do a good job rebounding, and their best low post player, Robert Jackson, will have to work hard to limit Collison's effectiveness while doing his best to get Kansas's thin front court in foul trouble.

What will happen:
This game should be a track meet, as both teams like to get up and down the court when the opportunity arises. Both squads, incredibly, have scored over 100 points in previous tournament wins. The difference in this game will be Kansas's senior leadership and Collison's all-around skills. Marquette will have trouble handling Collison, as he will do his best to bounce back from an 8 point performance against Arizona.

The Golden Eagles will be ready to play however, as Dwayne Wade is a true competitor and will make Kansas work hard at the defensive end. Marquette is a strong defensive team themselves and should keep this game close throughout. Kansas's strong half court execution and poise should prevail and in the end it will be too much Collison and Hinrich for Marquette to contain.

Final Score: Kansas 85, Marquette 79

Game two:
Texas Longhorns (#1 Seed South)
vs. Syracuse Orangemen (#3 Seed East)

What Texas needs to do to win:
Texas enters New Orleans as the lone remaining number one seed in the tournament. Texas reached the final four with the same ingredients that made them so successful during the regular season: superb point guard play, tough defense, rebounding and balanced scoring. The Longhorns boast the National Player of the Year in sophomore guard T.J. Ford, and he will dictate the tempo for Texas. Ford has the ability and quickness to get in the gaps of Syracuse's tough 2-3 zone that gave fellow Big 12 rival Oklahoma all they could handle.

Ford is the best penetrating guard in the country, and he will have to be able to spread the zone and get open shots for their best shooters, Brandon Mouton and Brian Boddicker. Inside, James Thomas must continue to be a monster on the boards to limit Syracuse's shot opportunities. Texas will look to be very physical with a young Syracuse team and try to get them rattled early. If the

Continued on page 9

Crane hurls gem as UMass blanks SHU

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It's hard to believe a pitcher could cruise through an outing in the bitter, early-spring weather of New England, but sophomore Mike Crane opened up the afterburners yesterday and pitched the Massachusetts baseball team to a complete game shutout win over Sacred Heart 7-0.

Crane struck out 12 batters, and surrendered just three hits and two walks en route to his third victory of the season. It was the third straight win for the Minutemen, bringing them to 7-9 on the season.

UMass	7
Sacred Heart	0

Sacred Heart suffered its third loss in as many games, and drops to 6-12.

Game conditions were less than conducive for pitching, but Crane insisted that things got easier the further he went.

"I felt that as the game went along I got more loose," he said. "It was tough getting loose in the first few innings with the cold, but I just got it out of my head and got going."

The effort solidified Crane's case to become the staff ace. Should he do so, he would be filling some very large shoes, namely those of Jesse Santos, who held opponents to a .247 batting average last year before graduating.

As for the offense, the UMass bats provided more than enough run support for Crane, with three multi-run innings.

Matt Reynolds, who was impressive in the Maroon and White's doubleheader against La Salle last weekend, again shined, going 3-for-4 with one run scored.

Frank Curreri also chipped in with three RBIs, two of which came on a single in the two-run UMass sixth. That single knocked out SHU pitcher Adam Dinihanian, who gave up earned three UMass runs, although seven crossed the plate under his watch.

The biggest offensive explosion of the day came in the fourth inning. Altieri started things off by reaching on an error, and Jason Twomley moved him over to third with a single. Matt Boulanger then scored Altieri on a double down the left field line, and Curreri brought him home on a fielder's choice.

Tom Ellerbrook showed some hustle in attempting to stretch a single to left center into a double, and before he

Continued on page 10

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Mike Crane hurled a complete game three-hit shutout as the Minutemen trounced Sacred Heart University 7-0.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, APRIL 4, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 111

Greeks deal with rent issues

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Omega Delta house, now located on North Pleasant Street, moved there after having problems with leasing their former property at 118 Sunset Avenue. Alpha Tau Gamma has plans to take over the house on Sunset Avenue.

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

Alpha Tau Gamma, Inc. (ATG), may have put its properties on the market prematurely in direct response to disagreements they had with Omega Delta, some say.

ATG, Inc. last month purchased an ad on Internet auction website eBay, offering the houses on North Pleasant Street currently occupied by Alpha Epsilon Pi, Alpha Tau Gamma, Delta Upsilon, Sigma Alpha Mu, and Zeta Beta Tau for a combined asking price of four million dollars. The company intends to move its fraternity, Alpha Tau Gamma, to newly acquired 118 Sunset Avenue, the former location of Omega Delta.

According to junior Jason Fossello, treasurer and house manager of Omega Delta, none of this would have occurred so soon had ATG, Inc. taken the time to negotiate a lease with Omega Delta that both parties could consider acceptable. Omega Delta, which was interested in remaining at 118 Sunset Avenue, felt the need to move after several failed attempts to work out an acceptable lease. This left the property ATG, Inc. had recently purchased uninhabited.

Omega Delta was not expecting to move from Sunset Avenue. Their old lease contained a clause for an automatic renewal, assuming no new negotiations were underway by Dec. 1. According to Fossello, the date passed and Omega Delta had not been informed of any changes, even though ATG, Inc. already owned the property. At that point, he assumed that the lease was still in effect.

"We said, 'well, at least we're here for another semester,'" Fossello said.

ATG, Inc. Treasurer Jim Mulcahy had a different story. He said ATG, Inc. had informed Omega Delta of potential changes in the lease within the required timeline.

"As soon as we knew we were going to buy 118 Sunset Avenue, I made four trips to 118 Sunset and gave them a lease a month in advance," Mulcahy said.

Fossello feels that differences in the lease came as a surprise. He said Mulcahy told Omega Delta that the lease would be the same, but that that he found details that were changed when closely inspecting the fine print. Issues arose in the exact terms of the lease over the amount of money Omega Delta would have to pay.

However, Mulcahy insists that the lease offered Omega Delta the same rent they were paying to former property owner, Delta Kai.

"The rent that we were charging them was the same rent that they were paying to the previous owner," Mulcahy said.

Fossello argued that while the price of the rent was the same, the new lease ATG, Inc. offered to Omega Delta gave their fraternity additional responsibilities for water and maintenance. Fossello feels that these additional items cost the fraternity extra money in addition to the rent. The price of the water alone is an additional $4,000. For Omega Delta, moving the responsibility for water makes the same difference in the bottom line as increasing the rent.

"They tried to fix the lease so that we would be paying for our own water," Fossello said. "[That] amounts to raising the rent $4,000 without actually raising the rent."

Mulcahy admitted to problematic parts of the lease, but said that ATG, Inc. made attempts to resolve them. He said he was confident that Omega Delta would be a long-term tenant at the property.

"We had gone back and forth in this lease, and there were little things we were working out," Mulcahy said. "You get down to the point where there are only a few little sticking points."

But Fossello said he got the impression that ATG, Inc. was unwilling to negotiate on major issues, and that only matters of lesser significance were open for discussion.

"They would not budge on some things," he said. "It was basically, this is your lease, take it or leave it."

Omega Delta moved from the property after frustrations with ATG, Inc. Lambda Kal Alpha's shutdown left property on North Pleasant Street available and Omega Delta jumped on the opportunity instead of continuing to work with what they felt was a problematic lease.

"The lease with Alpha Tau Gamma wasn't looking to be acceptable," Fossello said. "There was too much in it that was either illegal or questionable."

Now, Omega Delta is located on North Pleasant Street. The property at 118 Sunset Avenue sits empty waiting for Alpha Tau Gamma to move in.

ATG, Inc.'s eBay ad for its five lots on Frat Row expires in the middle of the month, and as of last week, although there had been interest, no one had made an offer.

Students fighting for hunger and homelessness

By Amy O'Neill
Collegian Staff

The 19th annual Hunger Cleanup, a fundraiser for anti-hunger and homelessness agencies, will take place on Saturday.

Gathering at the Amherst Town Common at 9:30 a.m., student volunteers will work at local shelters and soup kitchens, taking on a variety of projects including painting, cleaning and minor construction.

Participants will raise money through hourly sponsorships for local, national and international hunger relief programs. It has been asked that students try and raise $30 each to be donated, but it is not a requirement to volunteer.

"Anybody's welcome, even if they don't raise $30," said Alex Pugh, Cleanup Coordinator for the event.

Organizers are hoping for a turnout of at least 100 students in order to reach their goal of $2,000, which will then be donated to different local, national and international efforts.

Cleanup efforts will take place at 14 different locations in the area including The Salvation Army in Amherst, The Food Bank of Western Massachusetts Farm in Hatfield and the YWCA Kid's Community Garden Project on Route 66 in Northampton. In addition to the cleanup, other advocacy activities will take place as well.

"We are doing a whole bunch of things at once," Pugh said. " [We will also be doing] letter writing to state representatives about cutbacks, hunger and homelessness and child nutrition. [Essentially we will be] educating the community, getting students to do service and getting people out there and seeing what's going on in the hunger and homelessness arena. We are going to be hitting all different aspects at the same time which is cool."

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 8
COMICS PAGE 7
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

SKEPTICISM OF U.S.
SADDAM SEEN AS LESSER OF TWO EVILS
PAGE 4

SUSAN TEDESCHI
SERENADING HER AUDIENCE IN BOSTON
PAGE 5

XU COMES TO TOWN
THREE GAME SERIES AT LORDEN
PAGE 8

2Mass project completed

By Kathryn Corazzelli
Collegian Correspondent

Astronomers at the University of Massachusetts led a $40 million high-resolution survey of the sky that is now available online for scientists and the public.

The Two Micron All-Sky Survey, or 2Mass, was completed over 10 years, and details nearly half a billion objects. It is the first survey of the sky to use infrared light.

Martin Weinberg, a UMass astronomer involved in the project, said that dust that builds up in the galaxy makes it hard for astronomers to see vast distances. He said that the infrared telescopes allow astronomers to see through the dust, letting them see much further into the galaxy.

"The sky has been surveyed before, but by looking at infrared light 2Mass was able to detect some objects that were invisible at optical wavelengths," said Stephen Schneider, an astronomer involved in the project. "Even known astronomical sources reveal many new things about themselves in infrared light. There are hundreds of discoveries waiting to be made in this immense database."

Weinberg said that the aim of the 2Mass science team was to produce a comprehensive map of the sky that could be shared with the rest of the scientific community.

"We as scientists were motivated to do the project by the promise of the science that will result from it in coming years," Weinberg said. "This is a major astronomical archive that will have context and worth for decades."

According to Weinberg, 2Mass covers the entire sky and has already made a number of discoveries. He said that astronomers have confirmed the existence of a new class of stars called brown dwarfs, or "failed stars," that are too cool to have been seen by previous survey methods. He said that astronomers have predicted the existence of these stars for a while.

The survey has also given astronomers a more complete understanding of our own galaxy's structure, along with a new view of a nearby universe.

Weinberg said that astronomers hope to use 2Mass to find "new kinds of stars or phenomena that haven't been discovered."

Weinberg said that the survey is now available for download into an existing PC through two catalogs. The first catalog distinguishes many different sources of light, from the brightest stars to sources that are tens of thousands of times fainter. The second, Weinberg said, includes over a million galaxies and nebulae, some at distances of billions of light years away.

University of Virginia professor Michael Skrutskie, principal investigator for 2Mass, said that different groups will take different things away from the project.

"The public will 'oooooh' and 'aaah' at the pictures, while scientists will mine the data for decades, learning more about our Milky Way galaxy and hundreds of millions of its stars, and about the millions of galaxies in the nearby universe," he said.

Students lend a hand during Spring Break

By Caitlin M. Ott
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts students spent their days refurbishing and demolishing houses, caring for the children of the community and talking to those associated with the Concerned Citizens of Cape Charles during an alternative spring break program.

The 22 anthropology students learned the basics of grassroots organizations and lent support in rebuilding a community in Cape Charles, Va.

"I've really started to see the difference between social justice work and community service and can better understand their relationship now," Sarah J. Davis, a senior politics major at Mount Holyoke College, said. "I've also been able to experience how grassroots organizing helps people empower themselves."

Students stayed in a vacant house across the road from the construction site of a $2.5 million summer home. They met with members of the Concerned Citizens of Cape Charles to gain a better understanding of the area and situation in Cape Charles. The group formed a coalition because the land has been developed into upper class housing.

"I suppose that most problems facing communities are inter-connected," said UMass student Nick Demas, a member of the class. "These problems are top-down. They are caused by someone at the top, be it government, the rich, realtors, whomever, and trickles down to affect the less wealthy."

According to residents, Cape Charles has become a "hot spot" for real estate. Real estate agents first bought small plots of land, turning it into high cost housing. The value of the land increased along with that of the homes, increasing property taxes. With taxes rising, those of lower wealth were unable to pay for the homes that often had been in they're family for generations. Many decided to leave their community.

"I was disgusted at the way the people of Cape Charles were being treated by wealthy developers," said Marc Antonelli, a senior psychology and anthropology major. "On one side of the street there were low income housing, and on the other a multimillion dollar house."

Alternative Spring Break, Grassroots Anthropology began six years ago with the work of Professor Art Keene of the UMass Anthropology Department. Beginning with about 20 students, the project has expanded to include an application process, a minimum of two student facilitators to each classroom, and a required retreat before spring break. With these elements, along with hundreds of pages of reading and hours of contemplative thought, the program is designed for students to hone their skills and talents to tackle issues of social justice and reform.

"I applied for the class because I had been active in community service on the Mount Holyoke College campus since my first year, but never really had a chance to reflect on my experiences," Davis said. "I also wanted to have the opportunity to meet more people who where passionate about creating social change."

Meeting once a week, the students and their peer facilitators laid the groundwork with a deconstruction of the modern cultural, sociological, and anthropological approaches to social reform.

With students doing mostly independent work, the classroom is used mainly for discussion and application of the knowledge gained. Set up in a nontraditional manner, each trip is lead by a team of student leaders, alumni of past Grassroots Anthropology trips.

Spring break became a time for the students to put what they were learning into practice. Students made the 12-hour trek to Cape Charles, a town just a few miles away from Arlington.

"For me specifically, on an emotional level, I learned a great deal from the women in Virginia," continued Liz Hartunian, a sophomore anthropology major. "Lenora Miller (a prominent member of the community as well as the only paid staff member of the Concerned Citizens of Cape Charles), said to us, 'some people do not choose, they are chosen.' Social action is almost more powerful than ourselves, and something that we need to keep doing. The most important insight I have gained is as simple as that...that I have to keep going and working for the social and political changes that I believe are necessary."

For more information on the course visit: http://courses.umass.edu/anth397h/resources/general/index.html or http://courses.umass.edu/anth397h/index.html

CAITLIN OTT/COLLEGIAN

Nina Lesser-Johnson, facilitator of the Cape Charles trip, peers out a window on the top floor of a vacant house.

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

"What do you think of the potenial change in campus smoking policy?"

By James Schaffer

David Falvey
Junior
Political Science

"Against the proposal because I do not think they have to have a specific distance. It doesn't bother me. Just let them do their thing."

David Peterson
Junior
Environmental Design

"I do not think it is going to be effective. Putting an ashtray twenty feet away from a building would put it in the road."

Emily Willis
Senior
English

"I think twenty feet from the building is good but you cannot smell the smoke from the lounges so I do not think it is a problem."

Peetri Putcha
Sophomore
Neuro Science

"It is not going to be helpful. People will just do it anyways. There will just be more cracking down but no behavior changes."

Josh Maslin
Sophomore
Linguistics

"It's a silly rule and probably will not be enforced well, it seems meaningless."

Ross Thoms
Freshman
Engineering

"If people have to go too far to be able to smoke then they maybe more likely to smoke in their rooms. However I do not like smoke so I guess I am impartial to the rule change."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jaime Lee Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Fertilio Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

hit
the road

Visit AAA and Start Packing!

- Cruises, tours & all-inclusive packages
- Eurail Passes
- Amtrak Tickets
- Passport & IDP Photos/Forms
- International Driver's Permits
- Travelers Cheques

Open to the Public
M-F: 9-5:30; T/Th: 9-7; Sat: 9-2

Hadley 41 Russell St. 586-5547 | Springfield 270 Cooley St. 796-7252 | W. Springfield 150 Capital Dr 739-5663

AAA Travel

www.dailycollegian.com

Boston University
SUMMER TERM 2003

Experience a Boston Summer!

Call us at 617-353-5124 or visit the Summer Term website at:

www.bu.edu/summer

Boston University is an equal opportunity/affirmative action institution and employer.

Anti-war rally set for this weekend in D.C.

Tomorrow, Five-College students plan to travel to Washington, D.C. to attend an anti-war rally. The UMass Anti-war Coalition and the Campus Anti-war Network are organizing mobilization for the rally.

The event will consist of festivals, workshops, theatre, music, and a candlelight vigil, all to promote peace.

The rally is scheduled to take place at NW 17th Street and Constitution Ave. in Washington, D.C.

The most prevalent message of the rally is to end the United States' current attack on Iraq. However, there are other messages that the protestors would like received by President Bush and the United States government, according to Genevieve Castleman of the UMass Antiwar Coalition.

Federal lawmakers have already approved $370 billion for the U.S. Defense Department for this year, and that number could increase.

"Because of this war, the government is taking money from critical services, such as education and healthcare. The money could also be used for creating new jobs," Castleman said.

For more information on attending the rally on Saturday, contact Genevieve Castleman at 535-0577 or Adam Meringo at 546-2352.

-Dan O'Brien

Committee votes on immunity

BOSTON (AP) – University of Massachusetts president William Bulger said he plans to bring "a cooperative spirit" to a House committee set to question him about his fugitive mobster brother.

In a brief interview with The Boston Globe, Bulger reiterated comments by his attorney, who has stressed Bulger's desire to cooperate. The stance is a change from a previous position in which Bulger refused to answer questions for the House Government Reform Committee, citing his right against self-incrimination.

"There is a kind of cooperative spirit presently, and we intend to maintain that good mood with the committee," Bulger told the Globe.

The committee has delayed until April 9 a vote on whether to give Bulger and convicted mob boss Francis "Cadillac Frank" Salemme immunity in exchange for testimony about James "Whitey" Bulger. No reason was given for the delay.

William Bulger appeared before the panel in December, but invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination when asked the whereabouts of his brother, James "Whitey" Bulger, who is wanted by the FBI in connection with 21 murders.

The committee has been investigating the Boston FBI's ties to its mob informants. James Bulger, a former high-level informant, is considered a central figure in the probe.

Plans for the immunity vote came together quickly this week, but a spokesman would not say if the committee negotiated an agreement with William Bulger to testify.

James Bulger disappeared in January 1995 after former FBI Agent John Connolly told him he was about to be indicted.

Connolly, who grew up in the same South Boston neighborhood as the Bulger brothers, was convicted last year of tipping off James Bulger and other mobsters about their indictments. He is serving a 10-year prison sentence for racketeering.

William Bulger, 68, the former president of the state Senate, testified before a grand jury that he talked with his brother shortly after he fled in a prearranged phone call at a friend's house, but maintains he hasn't had contact with him since.

Salemme, 69, a mob associate of James Bulger, was released from prison in January after serving nearly nine years in prison for racketeering and extortion.

Salemme cooperated with prosecutors in their case against Connolly. He has already testified before the committee, but requested immunity before providing any further information.

-Associated Press

Mounted patrol

A police officer takes advantage of some favorable spring weather and uses the mounted patrol outside the UMass Fine Arts Center.

DERALTH LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Troops roll into Baghdad

By DAVID ESPO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Army forces launched a nighttime attack on Saddam International Airport just outside Baghdad on Thursday and fought running battles with Iraqis along the city's southern fringes.

"A vise is closing on the regime," President Bush told cheering Marines stateside.

Some front-line units went on heightened alert against the threat of chemical weapons, ordered to wear rubber boots and suits despite temperatures that soared into the 90s.

There was fierce fighting in Kut, to the south, where desperate Iraqis armed with rifles charged tanks in a suicide raid.

"We mowed down" the attackers, said Lt. Col. B.P. McCoy.

Tracer rounds lit the night sky and artillery boomed near the airport a few miles from the heart of Saddam Hussein's capital. Army units encountered little resistance along the airport road, their convoy passing dead Iraqi soldiers and piles of discarded military uniforms.

Along the city's southern edge, Army tanks and Bradley vehicles destroyed more than seven Iraqi armored personnel carriers and more than 15 Iraqi tanks in fighting that went on for more than four hours.

Two weeks into the war, American commanders reported a string of successes – on the battlefield and within an Iraqi population initially reticent about embracing invading troops. Kurdish fighters in the north chipped in, when a top leader suggested they may agree not to seek control of the northern city of Kirkuk.

Despite declarations that tough fighting lies ahead, the nation's top military official indicated there may not be an all-out battle for Baghdad. Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, suggested isolating members of the old regime in the capital – cut off from the country – with an "interim administration" in place to begin work on a postwar government.

There were battlefield setbacks, as well. An Army soldier investigating a destroyed tank in central Iraq was killed by friendly fire when he was mistaken for an Iraqi, the military said. Two Marines were killed and one injured in the close-quarters fighting in Kut. The Navy mounted a search for a pilot missing since his Hornet jet was lost to unknown causes on Wednesday.

The toll of American troops dead passed 50, and Bush visited Camp Lejeune, N.C., which has lost 13 – more than any other installation.

Iraq issued the latest in a series of exhortations in Saddam's name. "Fight them with your hands. God will disgrace them," it said, referring to invading American and British troops.

But the daily urgings seemed increasingly at odds with the military situation across the country, and Myers said Saddam had lost control of 45 percent of Iraq's territory.

As conventional units fought their way to the outskirts of the capital, officials said special forces had raided the Tharthar presidential palace near Tikrit, Saddam's hometown. Documents were seized at the site north of Baghdad, said Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks at U.S. Central Command in the Persian Gulf, but no ranking members of the regime were found.

"That's all right, he added, "there's other operations ongoing."

To the far north, U.S. special forces and Kurdish militiamen captured the town of Bardarash and a nearby bridge, one of few routes into the city of Mosul near government-held oil fields. Iraqis had held the town for 13 years.

In the country's southern region, British forces penetrated closer to the center of Basra, and warplanes dropped 500-pound and 1,000-pound laser-guided bombs on an Iraqi intelligence complex. Die-hard defenders have held out for days inside the city of 1.3 million.

Fundraiser for hunger and homelessness tomorrow

Continued from page 1

Nationally, over 8,000 students participate in this event, which is being sponsored in the Amherst area by MASSPIRG and other local service organizations such as the Five-College Soup Kitchen and the Food Bank of Western Mass.

In case of rain, organizers are asking that people come to the same location; representatives will be there to direct them where to go. Pugh noted that rain may deter people from participating. She also noted, however, that they will have other accommodations and encouraged students to participate even if it does rain.

"A lot of effort has been put into this," Pugh said. "Hopefully we can build rapport so that it will be even better for next year."

For more information contact MASSPIRG at 545-0199.

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.

Results you can feel.

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society

Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

Looking for a job

in Amherst this summer? Full and part time jobs are available with Summer Conference Housing! Come and get an application and job description at the Conference Services Office, Room 918 Campus Center.

http://www.aux.umass.edu/ConferenceServices

McMurphy's
welcomes
Live Music
every sunday
Ray Ray
NO COVER
positive ID required

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/4/03 - Thursday 4/10/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
PHONE BOOTH (R) 1:55 4:50 7:45 9:50*
A MAN APART (R) 1:35 4:25 7:05 9:40*
WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 1:50 4:35 7:25 10:10*
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:00 9:35
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:15 4:10 7:25
OLD SCHOOL (R) 10:30
DREAMCATCHER (R) 7:10 10:15
THE CORE (PG13) 1:10 4:15 7:15 10:20*
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:00 7:40 10:00*
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55*
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:05
VIEW FROM THE TOP (PG13) 7:55 10:25
BOAT TRIP (R) 9:00*
PIGLET'S BIG MOVIE (G) 1:05 3:00 4:55
THE HUNTED (R) 1:25 4:30 7:30 9:45
AGENT CODY BANKS (PG) 1:00 4:05
Senior Show 4/10/03
- SPIRITED AWAY
*-no passes/supersavers
•NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Dar Williams
the beauty of the rain
The stunning new album from one of today's most acclaimed songwriters

NOW IN STORES
SEE DAR LIVE
Calvin Theatre, Monday, April 14
TIX: 413-586-8686
WAZOO & TIM darwilliams.com

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
- HUGE DISCOUNTS
HOUSING FAIR ONLY
WIN AN X-BOX!
- NOW RENTING FOR THE SUMMER
- COME FIND YOUR NEW HOME!
Visit Mill Valley at the Housing Fair
In the Campus Center on Wednesday April 9th

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, APRIL 4, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The first two weeks are the beginning of a long road

"So take heed, take heed of the western wind, take heed of the stormy weather."
-Bob Dylan

Take heed of the weary nature of war.

At the two-week point of the United States led war on Iraq, people are already expressing their disinterest, displeasure and fatigue from watching the 24-hour coverage and hearing the news from the front.

There is no immediate end – and some would argue no end – to this or any other war. War has its lasting effects through the enduring pain and suffering to a people.

Save a handful of brief military endeavors, wars have presented long-term effects. Two weeks of fighting in Iraq will likely be a fraction of the time we see spent there as fighting flows into police action, potential rebuilding and occupancy of unknown length.

We will see "stormy weather" ahead, urban warfare on the immediate horizon and other unknowns will present challenges to the U.S. forces as they take on Baghdad. More battles lost, more battles won, more lives lost – though no lives won – and countless other victories and setbacks are ahead.

From the pro-war camps, or pro-America as some wish to delineate, more campaigns will surface supporting the president and his administration. From the pro-peace – also pro-America in some eyes – more protests against the incursion.

The nightly news will still feature videophone coverage with bombs going off overhead and concussions interrupting the satellite service reports. Flames and smoke will still rise. Peter Jennings, Tom Brokaw and Wolf Blitzer will still sit, steely-eyed and gray haired, and tell you the latest from the front.

This will likely go on for months – the shortest time the networks will focus on Iraq is the length of the war though they will likely concede that their coverage will continue long after.

Swift battles will add up, long war will result. Arguably Baghdad could fall tomorrow and the regime could change by Monday and the war would still have been far too long. Soldiers and civilians have already been lost, parents have already said their goodbyes and lives have been utterly changed.

We've been at war for a long two weeks.

Follow the news, keep tabs on the military, the politicians at home and abroad and the issues that come and go. Pay attention not only to the foreign policy that has led to war, but on the issues in the state and the country.

And occasionally shut it off, watch a sitcom, listen to a favorite album, read a good book, go out and have fun. Keep well informed but don't overflow – keep a balance of things in your life and remember self preservation.

We are in this for the long haul – by no personal choice – on all fronts, home and abroad.

Unsigned editorials are the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Protestors need to grow up

Johnny Donaldson

I was originally going to chime in with my two cents on the war on Iraq. Since I am against this unnecessary war, I was going to explain my feelings on why I thought Bush was a fascist and a Nazi who was endangering lives in a needless assault on Iraq.

And then the protests happened.

Approximately 300 people gathered in downtown Northampton and blocked traffic at the intersection of Main, King and Pleasant Streets. Protestors marched from Haigis Mall to the Hamp-shire Mall, clogging the highways in the process. Protestors acted in a way that demonstrated just how pathetic, immature, careless, ignorant and stupid they are.

I am staunchly against the war, but I may be even more against the protestors or at least the dumb, hypocritical ones that have been the norm the past few weeks. Instead of responsible activism, these bullies and buffoons have done nothing to help, and everything to hurt, their cause. These staged "dicins" have no worth to anybody. These protestors are nothing but a nuisance, a headache that can't seem to think five seconds into the future or contemplate what effect their actions have.

Am I being a little to harsh, cruel and mean here? I don't think so. These protestors have made a mockery of the entire anti-war movement. They turn activism into a way to grab attention to themselves, not the cause.

It paints the stereotype that all people who are against the war are ranting, whiny, liberal brats. These protestors made the people who actually know what they are talking about sound bad; their rash actions have set their fellow anti-war activists back about two decades.

But like them I am anti-war. I think this war is useless and an excuse by the Bush administration; I just don't know what it is an excuse for yet. I find it hard to support an administration that blatantly lies to the public about its actions. I cannot support a war from a president who wasn't elected fairly or honestly. I cannot support George Bush in an attack when the motives are muddy, the reasoning is vague and the rhetoric so thick with propaganda. This is a country that has a long history of civil rights abuses itself: the Salem Witch Trials, the McCarthy hearings, segregation and, oh yeah, a little thing called slavery. This is a government that illegally sold arms to Iran and used the profits to fund a guerrilla group, the Contras. This is a government that has funded coups that have led to the ascensions of dictators like Augusto Pinochet and Manuel Noriega. How can we support a war with a history such as this?

Still, while I can't support Bush's actions in the Middle East, I can't support the actions of the peace protestors either. The actions of these people were selfish and intolerable. They blocked off traffic on Route 9, not allowing people to pass through. Now what would have happened if an ambulance or fire truck needed to pass through? Same thing applies to the rally that cordoned off traffic in downtown Northampton. Doing stuff like this puts people's lives at risk, and you show yourselves to be no better than the Bushes and Ashcrofts sending our troops to their deaths.

"Do these kids volunteer in a soup kitchen; give money to people collecting charity for whatever, hold a door open for somebody or even show common courtesy? Probably not."

If I am in class, I don't want my education disturbed by people engaging in a walkout. If I am trying to get somewhere, I don't want a 15-minute drive turning into three hours. I don't need to be bombarded with pamphlets and fliers and whatnot beckoning me to join their tribe of morons. I don't want to be the person who causes other people headaches.

How many of these protestors actually support the cause? Many are probably just whiny trust fund babies who find that being liberal is cool. Do these kids volunteer in a soup kitchen, give money to people collecting charity for whatever, hold a door open for somebody or even show common courtesy? Probably not. If you ask me what I do to help, just look at the question above. I donate money and I act with decency and courtesy towards my fellow man. It may not sound like a lot, but it certainly helps more than waving banners and chanting "No Blood For Oil." When given the choice between action and reaction, I'll choose action, because it's the small moments – not the big hurrahs – that make a difference. I'm not going to fall into a knee-jerk response that calls for the oh-so-helpful tactic of pouring red juice on myself. Because, yeah, that'll help.

Most of these protestors buy into cheap liberal rhetoric without taking a good long look at the issues. They are just as bad as the conservative, warmongering blowhards who think Bill O'Reilly is an analytical genius. How many can give a devil's advocate viewpoint on the war? Anyone? At least I came about my opinions honestly, through looking at the issues, rather than exclaiming "War Bad!" or "War Good!"

These protestors make me sick and ashamed to say I am anti-war. If I feel like I am sympathetic, it is not because of pro-war advocates but because of my fellow anti-war campaigners. I feel sorry for the true activists who would rather use education to teach people about the wrongs of this war. Their image has been sullied by a thoughtless band of hooligans. These protestors should just grow up.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian Columnist.

They hate him less

Yousef Munayyer

Since the war was deemed Operation Iraqi Freedom (I guess Operation Let's Make Terrorists or Operation Who's Your Daddy? didn't fly) I've begun questioning the assumptions of the American foreign policy makers in regards to how the Iraqi people would react to this war. Many "analysts" predicted the war would end in a week. I believe one Bush administration official even called this a "cake-walk." But this war is very different from the last Gulf War. The last Gulf War featured a long air campaign and then a brief ground campaign to "liberate" Kuwait and restore the royal family. This war is very different. Soldiers are now deep into Iraq facing an enemy that they had not "war gamed against," as Lt. General William Wallace said.

Dick Cheney said on MSNBC (in one of his rare actual appearances). "The read we get on the people of Iraq is there is no question that they want to get rid of Saddam Hussein and they will welcome as liberators the United States when we come to do that."

Though there have been reports of surrenders, we have not seen the Iraqis welcome their liberators as expected. Though we are hearing that Saddam is a brutal tyrant, which he undoubtedly is, we do not see people leaving his side so easily. We have seen images of an old farmer, Ali Obied-Minghash, who is supposedly responsible for bringing down an Apache helicopter over Iraq with his dated hunting rifle. Why is this happening? Why aren't these ungrateful Iraqis welcoming American and British soldiers with open arms? Why is an old farmer firing upon a war machine that can easily destroy him? Why is there Iraqi resistance? And finally why do they still stand beside Saddam as opposed to fight against the dictator? The answer is: Iraqis hate Saddam less than the United States.

The image of the United States as a Great Satan, as the Ayatollah said, and the hypocritical foreign policy, which the United States has carried out in the Middle East leaves many people, including Iraqis, questioning whether this attempt to liberate them is genuine. The American CIA has declassified documentation describing their extensive involvement in insurrections and coups across the globe that have put into power some of the world's worst war criminals and dictators. American and British involvement in Iran in 1953 lead to an Islamic counter-revolution in 1979, which backfired against the United States and democracy. There is evidence showing how the CIA was involved in Saddam's rise to power against President Kassem. When Kassem was killed and Saddam returned from hiding to take power in Iraq, it was the CIA that supplied him with a list of names of dissenters. Saddam removed them in a most Stalinist fashion. America has failed to recognize a democratically elected Islamic government in Algeria in 1991. It seems that once an Islamic government is involved, democracy takes a back seat.

"There are countless reasons for the arab world and the Islamic world to dislike the United States' actions."

After American intervention in Afghanistan to remove the Taliban, the U.S. helped install a government with minimal control over the nation and tribal groups. We have almost abandoned Afghanistan now.

Many Iraqis see the sanctions placed on their country as very punitive. Countless amounts of people have died as a result of these sanctions. They hear this idea of implementing democracy by force, an idea that has been proven unsuccessful. In Alexis De Tocqueville's "Democracy in America," he explains in his introduction, that democracy cannot be implemented by force but has to grow internally with help from the development of social and economic factors.

They see a lot of blind American support for Israel, a nation often condemned for its human rights violations in the West Bank and Gaza. These human rights violations lead to the deaths of Palestinians. They hear President Bush call Iraq part of an "Axis of Evil" and they hear him using words such as "crusade." They consider the history of the Middle East and how, since the fall of the Ottoman Empire, it has been dominated by westerners (European Jews in Palestine, British or French Imperialism, or American Intervention in the governments of oil rich nations). They hear claims of democracy being advocated from the United States but question its relations with the dictatorial Gulf Kingdoms.

They see American planes dropping bombs and then food. They see realistic and horrific images on Arab news stations of civilians, women and children blown to bits by American weapons – images which are lacking in Western media. There is no way to justify those deaths. They see American arrogance boasted around the globe, in the United Nations, and in other places. And the list goes on and on. There are countless reasons for the Arab world and the Islamic world to dislike the United States' actions. This is highlighted wonderfully in the book "America and Political Islam" by Fawaz Gerges. I would recommend that to anyone who wishes to scratch the surface of American relations with the Islamic world and further understand why Americans aren't as welcome as is believed.

This is what Iraqis are thinking about when they see Apaches above their land. They are not thinking about how much they hate Saddam, they are thinking about how much they hate the people responsible for putting him in control. And you can be sure they will be very skeptical about letting the U.S. do that again. If the United States has had a history of hindering other people's development, creating dictators, acting hypocritically, supporting brutal regimes and making the bombs that end up killing civilians, how on Earth can we expect Iraqis to welcome this "liberation?"

The question I have now is, when this effort to fight for "democracy" is over and someone has to be put in charge, will we do it right this time?

Given the history, I don't blame anyone for being skeptical.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian Columnist.

Faking the bakin'

Erica Lovley

Spring has sprung, but the warm weather certainly hasn't raised itself to a particularly balmy standard. For all the sunbathers on campus, this season has been downright pathetic in the clear skies department, and it has put a major damper on any pre-summer tanning. Disappointing yes, but a life crisis, no. Nonetheless, even though spring break is but a faded memory, more glowing faces are shedding their luminous shine on campus by the day. This is no plague of the Tan-In-A-Can, nor is it a side effect of cruising down University Drive drop-top. This influx of golden bods is the result of the Britney Spears phenomenon: the tanning booth.

In case you were unaware, or simply trying to forget, let me remind you that we live in New England. As a seven-year resident of New England, I realize that it's normal to be transparently pale for nine months out of the year. A break from constant UV rays gives your poor skin a rest from harsh radiation filtering through the weakening ozone layer. Honestly, when you spot a fellow student walking around campus looking like a jungle native in the dead of March, instinct tells you something isn't right.

"What's the point of cooking your skin when the daily highs still require sweaters and a full parka."

So your Cancun tan is gone and you find yourself spiraling back into the depths of winter weather depression. Don't head for the nearest booth to bake like a Shake n' Bake chicken. What's the point of cooking your skin when the daily highs still require sweaters and a full parka? If it's because you're dying to wear your new, white, summer wardrobe, save it for the real summer weather. You'll wind up looking like a burnt s'more among the sea of your marshmallow-colored peers. You aren't making any more tulips pop up with your reflective attire.

From what I can tell, being a tanning booth junkie is much like being a smoker. You know its bad for you. Studies prove it. Cancer rates enforce it. Yet, people can't seem to make the connection until the activity becomes a direct personal problem, such as melanoma.

Ask any regular at the Tanorama why they won't heed the warnings. One of the most common responses I got was "Everything causes cancer." Hmm. These junkies are the type of people who believe that Pop Rocks and Coke make your stomach explode and that cell phones cause brain hemorrhages. If this train of thought is correct, half the campus should be dead of Diet Coke cancer after finals week.

I suppose it doesn't help that most gyms are now equipped with full tanning beds, available with unlimited baking time. Funny, I was under the impression that gyms are made to improve your health, not shorten the average life expectancy. If you purchase that tanning package right now, you might as well purchase your chemo cocktails to boot.

I do realize that for some medical conditions, such as seasonal affective disorder (SAD), it is suggested that tanning once a month can replace the sunlight exposure lost during the winter months and prevent depression symptoms. This is an acceptable excuse to fake the bake. However, one girl excused her tanning sessions as her way of "warming up" during the winter. I've hear of hot showers, coffee, or polar fleece?

In order to gain an objective view of this self-broiling craze, I decided to go tanning for the first, and last time. I chose a standing stall, in order to keep the UV rays as far away from my skin as possible. I guess I expected to find some sort of pre-tanning sunscreen to make the UV rays a bit less intense. Instead, the woman at the booth wanted to slather me in oil to help "enhance" my new tan. I think it was to aid the second degree burning. Closing the door and clicking on the fans, I felt the alien lights penetrating my winter skin. I admit it did feel nice and toasty. I sat, enjoying myself for a few minutes. Then I decide to take a quick peep from under the goggles. I was aghast to see my body illuminated by the piercing blue lights. My skin was glowing a horrible unnatural shade of deathly purple. I swear I could feel my healthy skin cells transfonning into malignant tumors by the minute. It's a feeling I never want to experience again. Needless to say, I've had my five minutes of fame as a rotisserie chicken.

To the ladies, and growing number of gentlemen who flirt with death in the fluorescent coffins, consider this. Ever take a look at the women who run most of the Tan Land resorts? They are thirty-year old ladies who look fifty, have wrinkles for cheekbones and are more leathery than Harley jackets. Believe it or not, there will be a time in our lives when we'll stop wanting to look older than our fake IDs. Perhaps sometime in the distant future, looking 20 might serve a purpose other than getting thrown out of a bar. When that day comes, suffering as a victim of pallor won't seem so traumatic.

Erika Lovley is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

Letter to the Editor:

Support our troops rally turns into pro-war statement

To the Editor

On the steps of the Student Union building Wednesday, a rally was meant to be held in support of U.S. troops. According to an article printed in the Daily Collegian on Wednesday, it was to be a "peace rally" in an attempt at supporting our troops without a political message."

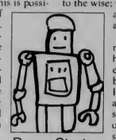
However, the message turned almost immediately political, with a statement from an ex-Marine who read a letter from a soldier which derided peace protesters in the United States, and then the speaker went on to justify the war in Iraq, by speaking about a couple of obscure sources which claimed to link Iraq with not only the World Trade Center attacks, but the Oklahoma City bombings in 1995. The speaker claimed that "Iraq has been attacking the United States," since the 1990s.

Unfortunately, there were two glaring flaws in the arguments the speaker made: first, one source he quoted, Jayna Davis, has formed conspiracy theories which would make Oliver Stone blush. In fact, Ms. Davis has apparently refrained from publicly speaking because she has been sued for libel and defamation of character. These theoretical claims have apparently been repeatedly dismissed by the FBI, and at no point has the Bush administration, even with its zeal for going to war with Iraq, cited any of these claims as linking terrorism to Iraq.

The other glaring problem with using a link between the bombing of the Oklahoma City bombing and Iraq as a justification for war, is that absolutely no one has denied Timothy McVeigh had the primary role in the bombing. If bombing and invading Iraq can be considered a repercussion for links to terrorism, why didn't the speaker call for bombing of Oklahoma, where McVeigh came from? It is widely understood that Timothy McVeigh's actions were, at the very least, supported by white supremacist militias in Oklahoma and likely other areas, but the same people who argue for bombing Iraq for terrorism wouldn't presume to call for bombing parts of the United States for internal links to terrorism.

This disjointed logic, spread of misinformation, and an underlying jingoistic feeling to the rally Wednesday made it uncomfortable to some who came to it for the purposes of genuinely supporting our troops. I would hope that the pretense of an apolitical rally not even be suggested in the future.

Jeffrey Napolitano
UMass student



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 4, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Link captures the hearts of game industry again

Press Start to Play

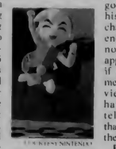
Reid Davenport

This week's column is a follow up to my pre-Zelda release column from a few weeks ago. Well, now that I have been fully drawn to this masterpiece, I can honestly say this is possibly the greatest "Legend of Zelda" game of all time. Beyond the obvious childish look of the hero, the entire game plays smoothly with outstanding graphics, great control and unique characters to the Zelda world. This is the one game that should make you purchase a GameCube.

"The Legend of Zelda: The Wind Waker" is the latest in the Zelda saga. There are twists and turns around every corner as well as new and amusing characters that Link runs into along his journey. Before you start up the game, there are a few things you need to understand. First, Link is not the same hero from the past games. This is all explained through a little story background in the opening; it creates the beginning to the ultimate story.

'The Legend of Zelda: The Wind Waker'

GameCube



Published & Developed Nintendo

Adventure

Rated E for Everyone

Here's a quick rundown of the history of "Link" relating to the game titles. The Link we all know from "Legend of Zelda" up to "Majora's Mask" is dubbed as a legend in "Wind Waker." The new Link is simply attempting to become a living legend, literally, as he follows the same path. Of course, I could tell you the rest, but I wouldn't want to ruin the game.

The characters, including Link, are very animated. They each add humor to the cartoonish graphics; for example, you run into a young boy in the beginning with a long booger hanging from his nose. (Needless to say, the boy's actions entertained me for about 15 minutes.) The characters also have quick-witted lines, including some very unique ones, which are always expected in most Zelda games. Furthermore, the forest elves, called koroks, are possibly the neatest and most unique characters in the game. There is even an unexpected Elvis impersonator found on one of the many islands you visit.

The details of Link's actions make this game great for extended play. His facial expressions for danger, sneaking and surprise are most especially impressive. (The best is possibly when he's pressed against the wall and looks left and right as enemies near both sides.) Link's movement and expression throughout the game gives him all the more advantage over characters in other games on the market. He can climb, battle, crawl, sneak, swing and slash his way through any obstacle.

Speaking of obstacles, some of the enemies in the game are old classics with a new attitude. Classic enemies like Knights, Octoroks, Horsemen and Skeleton Knights have returned along with some new foes. The bosses are also modeled after some bosses that Zelda fans will recognize, but they pack a much bigger punch. Some of the ways to defeat these bosses are extremely tactical and unexpected from a video game. Word to the wise: when you fight a boss, be aware of your equipment and surroundings.

Link has also added a new arsenal of moves and has picked up some excellent looking "bling bling" for this adventure. Link is able to counter-attack with a rolling slash. Also look for two of the newer items: a skull-shaped hammer and the Deku Leaf. There's also a new twist to his boomerang, as he can now target up to five hittable targets. It's very useful for out of reach items or fighting enemies.

This game wasn't titled "Wind Waker" for just any reason. Link's other new toy, the Wind Waker, gives him the ability to control the direction of the wind. The wind is needed to sail your talking boat (yes, the boat talks) to get to your next objective. The instrument also provides Link with warp, time and magical tunes. For those who have played "Ocarina of Time," it works similar to the ocarina. The controls for it take some getting used to, but it isn't impossible to learn.

There are two big questions people wonder about the game before they play it. One. Does Link grow up? Two. Where is Zelda?

Well, I can honestly say the game's producer, Mr. Miyamoto, was very accurate in saying Link appears to grow up, in a sense, as the game goes on. You can notice his actions and attitude changes as you gain legendary powers. He does not grow inside – just appearance. As for Zelda, if you've seen the commercial or the online previews, you most likely have seen her. I cannot tell you anymore than that, or else I would ruin the game for you.

Finally, one of the great parts of this game is the soundtrack. The Nintendo group has put together a wonderful set of the Zelda themes in different styles. The very opening piece is possibly one of the coolest versions of the theme I have ever heard. It sounds as if it was played on a harpsichord and a violin. The music gives a legendary feel to the background story. The in-game music also accompanies the mood changes perfectly. Everything – from sailing music to enemy music – adds even more drama to the game.

"The Legend of Zelda: The Wind Waker" is possibly the single greatest adventure game of all time. With unique styles in all portions of the game, it revives one of the most classic gaming stories in history. The game sells for approximately $49.99 and is well worth the price tag.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian Columnist.

By KATE BIELMAN-GOLEMME

BOSTON – But [illegible] Susan Tedeschi rocked Laughed, cried and crowded the Orpheum [illegible] Tedeschi Trucks Band [illegible] Tedeschi [illegible] Tedeschi [illegible] Tedeschi

Millar time for Sox

Continued from page 8

New Tampa Bay manager Lou Pinella was satisfied with his offense.

"That's enough to at least split when you get decent pitching," he said.

Casey Fossum (1-0) allowed three runs and six hits over five innings. The left-hander eight – including four of his first five batters – and walked two.

Rey Ordonez had three RBIs for Tampa Bay, giving him seven this season – he had 42 all of last season with the New York Mets.

Bierbrodt allowed seven runs and eight hits over four innings in his first major league appearance since Oct. 4, 2001. He was dropped from the rotation after severe wildness during spring training last year.

After taking part in extended spring training, Bierbrodt made one start at Class-A Charleston on June 5. Early in the morning two days later, the left-hander was shot in the right arm and chest while a passenger in an automobile at a Charleston drive-thru restaurant.

"I treated it like, or at least felt like, I never left," Bierbrodt said. "After that first out, it was just go get 'em like any other game."

Bill Mueller had an RBI double and Hillenbrand hit a two-single as Boston went up 5-0 in the third. Mueller scored on catcher Toby Hall's throwing error after Garciaparra reached on a wild pitch while striking out.

"I felt good physically," Bierbrodt said. "After the wild pitch, I couldn't get that third out. They have a good lineup. I just didn't execute."

Hall hit a solo homer in the bottom half.

Garciaparra had a two-run single in the fourth and homered in the eighth.

Ordonez's two-run single in the fourth pulled Tampa Bay to 7-5, and he added a sacrifice fly in the sixth.

Notes: Millar has two homers, a double and walked once in four plate appearances against Sosa. He hit a tiebreaking homer in the 16th inning of Tuesday's 9-8 win. . The Red Sox have scored 18 runs with two outs the past three games. . Tampa Bay rookie CF Rocco Baldelli had an eventful first inning at-bat. On the first pitch, he hit teammate Aubrey Huff in the on-deck circle with a foul ball. On the next pitch, Baldelli tripled to right-center, giving him his in all four games. . Red Sox DH Manny Ramirez singled in the third, extending his hitting streak to 17 games, dating to last season.

—Associated Press

All-Americans named

Continued from page 8

Denton Deacons to their first outright regular-season league championship in 41 years and a No. 2 seed in the NCAA tournament. The 6-6 forward received 47 first-team votes and 303 points to become the first Wake Forest All-American since Tim Duncan in 1997.

Collison gives Kansas an All-American for the second straight year (Drew Gooden was selected in 2002 as a junior). The 6-9 Collison averaged 18.4 points and 9.3 rebounds, helping the Jayhawks win the Big 12 regular-season title, and earn a No. 2 seed in the tournament and a second straight Final Four appearance.

Collison, an honorable-mention pick last season, was on 42 first-team ballots and had 281 points.

Wade was the first Marquette player to make the first team since Butch Lee in 1978. The 6-4 Wade averaged 21.5 points, 6.3 rebounds and 4.1 assists to lead the Golden Eagles to the Conference USA championship, and then to the school's first Final Four since coach Al McGuire's team won the national title in 1977.

Wade, an honorable-mention selection as a sophomore, had 273 points and received 43 first-team votes.

Hollis Price of Oklahoma was one of four seniors on the second team. He was joined by Kyle Korver of Creighton, Troy Bell of Boston College and Jason Gardner of Arizona. Freshman Carmelo Anthony of Syracuse was seventh in the voting with 203 points, 58 behind Price.

Seniors made up the third team: Brian Cook of Illinois, Reece Gaines of Louisville, Kirk Hinrich of Kansas, Keith Bogans of Kentucky, and Ron Slay of Tennessee.

Hinrich, an honorable-mention pick as a junior, was also on the preseason All-America team this season with West, Gardner, Luke Walton of Arizona and Erwin Dudley of Alabama.

DiMarco leads BellSouth

Swing finally makes grade

By Keith Parsons
Associated Press

DULUTH, Ga. (AP) – Chris DiMarco has done pretty well this season while battling a balky swing. So when that part of his game finally caught up with his putting Thursday, he went to the top of the leaderboard.

DiMarco shot a 5-under 67 in the first round of the BellSouth Classic, taking advantage of several short birdie chances after solid iron shots. He narrowly missed two more birdie putts from close range.

Six players were tied one shot back, including defending champion Retief Goosen, and another seven players were two shots behind. The event is the final tuneup for the Masters, the first major of the year.

"I've been fighting my swing a little bit all year," said DiMarco, who has three top-10 finishes in nine starts. "Today was one of the better swinging rounds I've had, where I was very consistent with my iron play and had a lot of really good shots at the hole.

"I was very much in control of my game, which I have not been that much this year."

With a lack of rain, the TPC at Sugarloaf played uncharacteristically hard and firm in the opening round. That made the greens less receptive to approach shots and forced players to be more conservative.

"The faster the better for me," DiMarco said. "I don't know why, but I just like really fast greens. I can see the lines better. I like this course, especially when it plays like this. I think it plays better fast and hard."

Rookie John E. Morgan briefly took the lead at 6 under with a two-putt birdie on the par-5 fourth, his 13th hole, but a bogey three holes later moved him back into a tie with DiMarco. Then Morgan made a double bogey on his final hole, the par-4 ninth, and joined that large group at 69.

Goosen, the 2001 U.S. Open champ, followed his victory in this tournament last year with a second-place finish in the Masters behind Tiger Woods. Like DiMarco, Goosen would like to see the greens stay the same for the final three rounds.

"I prefer the firmer greens," Goosen said. "There won't be anybody just running away with it – keeps the field bunched up, and the better players go to the top.

"A few holes, you have to land it 15 yards short of the flag to get it to stop. It's certainly a different golf course than it was last year."

DiMarco also reached 6 under before a late bogey, this one at No. 17. With an in-between distance from the middle of the fairway on the par-4 hole, he pulled his 7-iron left of the green, and he couldn't get up and down to save par.

Then on the par-5 18th, a bad bounce in the fairway forced him to lay up with his second shot, and after an indifferent pitch to about 25 feet, he made a 5-footer for par.

"I don't think you necessarily, unless you've got an absolute perfect yardage...that you can really even go at that green," DiMarco said of No. 18. "Once you can get it on that green and put it where you want to putt it, with the greens being this hard and fast, it isn't really worth it."

Among those two shots back were Fred Couples and past tourney winners Paul Stankowski and Mark Calcavecchia. Stankowski was especially pleased with his round, which came a day after he struggled in the pro-am.

"They were ducking for cover most of the day," Stankowski said of his amateur partners. "I got it kind of figured out a little bit and hit enough good shots to give myself enough opportunities.

"So I'm encouraged. There's more than one way to skin a cat, and I found one. It's a good start."

Phil Mickelson, playing in his first tournament since taking a month off for the birth of his third child, shot 73.

Musketeers come to town for three

Continued from page 8

"Crane may start to become a weekend pitcher for us too," Stone said. "His arm is getting better."

"I want to get my arm strength up," said Crane, who mowed down 12 batters on Wednesday. "I want to be able to get stronger and throw harder."

The offense has also been clicking on all cylinders of late for the Minutemen, as University of Maine transfer Matt Reynolds has provided the spark.

The infielder went 5-for-9 with three doubles, four runs scored and two runs batted in a doubleheader sweep of La Salle, and followed that up by going three for four against Sacred Heart.

The Minutemen are getting consistent offensive production from first basemen Jeff Altieri, who drove in two against SHU. Couple that with timely hitting from players such as senior Matt Boulanger, who doubled and drove in a run against the Pioneers and homered twice in the previous week, and freshman Frank Curreri who drove in a pair against Sacred Heart, and Stone is happy with what he sees at the plate.

"We're swinging the bats pretty well," Stone said. "We're getting in a good rhythm out there, putting the bat on the ball and making things happen. I just hope it carries over [into the weekend]."

Division I Men's Lacrosse

No.	Team	Record	Points	Previous
1	Johns Hopkins(9)	5-1	190	1
2	Princeton	4-2	129	3
3	Georgetown	6-0	178	4
4	Maryland	6-1	166	7
5	Syracuse	5-2	160	5
6	Virginia	5-2	162	2
7	North Carolina	5-3	136	8
8	Rutgers	8-1	131	9
9	Massachusetts	7-1	119	6
10	Duke	7-3	109	11
11	Loyola	5-2	94	10
12	Cornell	5-2	78	14 (T)
13	Hofstra	5-3	76	14 (T)
	Towson	5-3	76	16 (T)
15	Notre Dame	5-3	69	13
16	Navy	4-4	36	12
17	UMBC	4-2	31	17
18	Villanova	6-1	24	18 (T)
19	Ohio State	4-2	23	20
20	Yale	4-2	22	16

Others receiving votes (in order): Bucknell, Penn State, Dartmouth, Hobart, Pennsylvania

Men's Lacrosse ECAC
2003 Standings

Team	Conference W	L	Pct.	Overall W	L	Pct.
Georgetown	3	0	1.000	6	0	1.000
Rutgers	2	0	1.000	8	1	.888
UMass	1	1	.500	7	1	.875
UMBC	1	2	.333	4	2	.667
Penn State	1	2	.333	2	5	.290
Navy	0	3	.000	4	4	.500

	GF	GA	GF	GA
Georgetown	27	19	59	35
Rutgers	25	19	98	63
UMass	20	20	111	55
UMBC	30	34	72	54
Penn State	30	33	80	75
Navy	20	27	70	60

Atlantic 10 Baseball
2003 Standings

	Conference W	L	Pct.	W	L	T	Pct.
East
URI	5	1	0	.833	11	13	0 .458
St Bonas	3	2	0	.600	11	7	0 .611
UMass	3	3	0	.500	7	9	0 .438
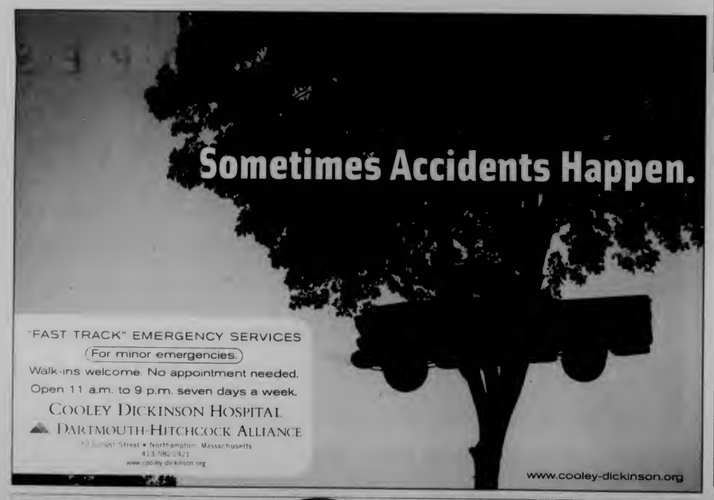
Fordham	2	4	0	.333	6	13	0 .316
St. Joseph's	2	4	0	.333	6	15	0 .286
Temple	0	5	0	.000	6	13	0 .316
West
Duquesne	5	1	0	.833	13	13	0 .500
Richmond	4	1	0	.800	21	5	0 .808
La Salle	4	2	0	.667	6	11	0 .353
Xavier	2	4	0	.333	10	14	2 .423
GWU	1	2	0	.333	19	7	0 .731
Dayton	1	5	0	.167	7	17	0 .292

Atlantic 10 Softball
2003 Standings

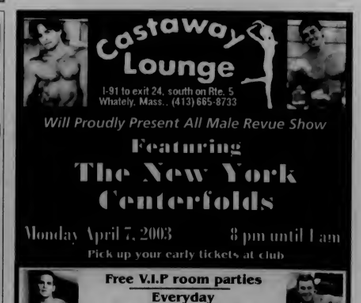
	Conference W	L	T	Pct.	Overall W	L	T	Pct.
UMass	4	0	0	1.000	19	10	0	.655
Temple	4	0	0	1.000	14	14	0	.500
Dayton	1	1	0	.500	14	11	0	.560
URI	1	1	0	.500	9	8	0	.529
St. Joseph's	2	2	0	.500	10	7	0	.588
Fordham	0	2	0	.000	19	11	0	.633
La Salle	0	3	0	.000	6	14	0	.300
GWU	0	4	0	.000	2	17	0	.105
St. Bona	0	0	0	.000	10	8	0	.556



A10 Women's Lacrosse
2003 Standings

	Conference W	L	Pct.	Overall W	L	Pct.
St. Bonnies	1	0	1.000	5	0	1.000
Richmond	1	0	1.000	5	4	.555
Massachusetts	1	0	1.000	5	4	.555
Geo. Wash.	1	1	.500	5	3	.625
Duquesne	0	2	.333	4	4	.800
La Salle	0	1	.000	0	7	.000
Temple	0	0	.000	4	4	.500
St. Joseph's	0	1	.000	2	5	.286

Softball, Division I



No.	Name	Record	Points
1	UCLA (22)	51-2	550
2	Arizona	54-3	528
3	Washington	52-4-1	496
4	Oklahoma	50-5	474
5	Texas	27-6	470
6	Nebraska	24-8	440
7	California	29-9	410
8	Georgia	36-5	365
9	Cal State Fullerton	22-12	329
10	DePaul	21-4	351
11	LSU	27-11	318
12	Arizona State	26-9	313
13	Stanford	26-11	291
14	South Carolina	24-8	246
15	Michigan	19-8	254
16	Florida State	26-9	210
17	Oklahoma State	27-6	205
18	Alabama	26-13	165
19	Texas A&M	26-12	146
20	Ohio State	17-10	116
21	Oregon	17-9	107
22	South Florida	39-10	100
23	Kansas	21-9	50
24	Florida	27-10	45
25	Louisiana-Lafayette	18-5	39

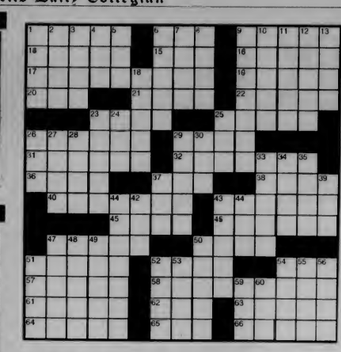
Others receiving votes: Oregon State 26, Illinois 11, Iowa 10, Mississippi State 10, Southwest Texas 7, Southern Illinois 6

ERNIE HOOPER • By Kelly Tebbetts

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

THE PEPPER PADDIDLE EXPLOSION • By Aaron Warner

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • By Derrick Gerstner



THE TORQUES • By Ken Frederick

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • By Chris Sease

ACROSS
1 Russet potato
6 — chay
9 Birthday number
14 Spock portrayer
15 Pizarro's quest
16 Go along with
17 No-cost item (2 wds.)
19 Photo shop output
20 Authorizes
21 Not lake
22 Flies and ants
23 Teases
25 Quotes
26 Noblesse —
29 Thor's father
31 Went belly-up
32 Military unit
36 Get steamed up
37 "The Thin Man" co-star
38 Throw hard
40 Spring last site
43 Jungle queen
45 Poet's eyes
46 Charters
47 Western capital
48 Ferrous prefix
51 Plants with fronds
52 Made yarn
54 Young grizzly
57 Kelps
58 Office
61 Hits
62 Collection
63 Theater part
64 Canvas shelters
65 Singer — Tormé
66 Tidy up

DOWN
1 The skinny
2 Highlander's dagger
3 ISU location
4 Work the soil
5 Popeye's Olive —
6 Femur and ulna
7 Bo Derek film
8 Ancient cosmetic
9 Barking
10 Wading bird
11 Originate
12 Play the landlady
13 Mounts gemstones
18 Prodded on
23 NBA coach Pat —
24 Mellow
25 Nero's 102
26 Switch position
27 Oz creator
28 Kind of bean
29 Woodwinds
30 Thirsty
33 Gut in front
34 Country-club lees
35 Osprey kin
37 Attorney's deg.
39 — Cruces, N.M.
41 Own
42 Mine product
51 Pussyfoot
44 Biddy
47 Debutante
48 Ballpark fixture
49 Not appropriate
50 Part of RFD
51 In a hurry
52 Went to the pool
53 Corncake
54 Box
55 NCAA Bruins
56 Has- — (former star)
59 Felt boot
60 Small, in Dogpatch

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-1-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

FRIDAY
- High: 42
- Low:29

SATURDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 28

SUNDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 20

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Vegetarian Vegetable Soup
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Fish Nuggets
- Vegan Cutlets (vegan)

DINNER
- Vegetarian Vegetable Soup
- Sweet & Sour Shrimp
- Beef Strudel/Gravy
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Production Crew
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schatter
COPY EDITOR
Ferron Salniker
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Adam Shane / Jolene Rousseau

QUOTE OF THE DAY

It's a sad world...but even the scars forget the wounds.

- Grüvis Malt

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't take the stairs today, be lazy, and just take an elevator.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Be cautious of unexpected visitors, they aren't who they say they are.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Don't complain, people have it far worse than you so just shut up and deal with it.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Runaway, don't look back, just run and hide under your covers.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
If there is something in your way, don't let it stop you, just back up and take a runnng leap on over.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Be aware of the six fingered man, he killed your father, now prepare to die.

leo • Jul.. 23-Aug. 22
Sit back, relax, put your feet up, and enjoy the crazy ride we call life.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Duck! Watch out for crazy flying swans near the UMASS duck pond.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Listen to more Rod Stewart, he is under-appreciated, so crank it up.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Be ready, something awesome will happen when you least expect it.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Go for a run or hit the gym, all those wings are catching up to you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Try something new today, climb a tree, or do some finger painting, you'll be glad you did.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Get Greek Stuff F-A-S-T! Group orders get great discounts. Lettering, embroidery, novelties. Visit on-line at Connectsports.com 1-800-929-1897. alantran@star-power.net.

Term Paper Editing! Editing performed by professors and graduate students Visit us at www.paperscheck.com or call us toll free 866-693-EDIT

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Apt. located in Brandywine Furnished Apt. Seeking Female Roomate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sandy @ 413-546-0489

Sublet one Bedroom. Cliffside, month of May. Can continue lease if desired. Price Nego. E-mail silverjuliet@hotmail.com

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? COME TO THE COMPLEX FAIR, WED APRIL 9, 10 TO 3 ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE. SPONSORED BY COMMUTER SERVICES, 428 STUDENT UNION WWW.CSHRC.ORG

APARTMENT FOR RENT

FREE DELL COMPUTER OR UP TO $1000 IN SAVINGS WHEN YOU MOVE_IN Delux 2 bedroom apartments FREE HEAT & HOT WATER Plenty of free, on site parking Minutes from UMass-On free busline CALL SUGARLOAF ESTATES 413-665-3856 Visit us at sugarloafestates.com *limited time offer

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincol-nrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincol-nrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Honda Accord LX 1992 Great Shape $1500 obo 413-253-1456

AUTO FOR SALE

89 Volkswagon Jetta standard good condition driven everyday $600 or best offer 413-549-3545

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise line entry level on board positions or yearround. 941-329-6434 cruisecareers.com

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available. Raises commensurate with performance, potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

HOUSE FOR RENT

Large 4 bedroom house in Hadley 1 mile and 3/4 to UMass. Available June 1st $2,650 Call Lincoln Real Estate 253-7879

5 Bedroom plus Newer house minutes from UMass $2700/ month 548-8900

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS

Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

STS America's number one student tour operator is now hiring on-campus reps 2003-04 18006484849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break with STS, America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/ Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSWEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 4, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Waiting on the rain pays off for tennis

By ANNA EDWARDS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Entering the most important two weeks of the spring schedule did not phase the University of Massachusetts tennis team on Wednesday, when it powered its way to victory against Rhode Island at the Upper Boyden Tennis Courts in a dominating 7-0 triumph and its first Atlantic 10 win of the season.

This victory follows a trend of five defeats for the Maroon and White since its last victory on March 8, when it defeated Binghamton 6-1, and lifts it to a 4-9 record.

While the rain held off, the Minutewomen refused to give the Rams an opening in both the singles and doubles play.

Sophomore Sasha Edelstein did not give opponent sophomore Cynthia Taylor much of a chance in the number one singles position. Her consistent display of powerful serves and volley skills proved her strength, as she gave up only one game on her way to a 6-0, 6-1 victory.

Playing number two singles for the Minutewomen was sophomore Stephanie Price, who defeated freshman Erin Fleming 6-1, 6-2 in a demonstration of superior strength and agility.

While nursing a sprained foot, freshman Dorothy Iwanowicz speedily broke her opposition in a straight set defeat over sophomore Erin Dwyer, 6-0, 6-0.

Hyams was another straight set winner, defeating sophomore Lindsey Taylor 6-0, 6-0 with ease.

In doubles, junior Jafra Depontes partnered with Price at the number one position, where the pair earned an 8-1 victory against Taylor and Dwyer while Edelstein and Iwanowicz powered past Fleming and senior Jess Collins 8-2.

The strong doubles partnership of Hyams and freshman Camilla Knight added to their successful history by defeating freshman Becca Hedden and senior Brigette Laflamme 8-0 in a display of strong teamwork.

Cruising past Rhode Island puts the Minutewomen in good position for the A-10 championship in two weeks, and sets them up nicely for the weekend ahead, when they will be hosting Boston University on Saturday and Fordham on Sunday.

"Fordham is the match we are really prepared for to determine how we get seeded for the Atlantic 10," Hyams said.

UMass coach Judy Dixon is worried that the early spring weather may have an effect on her troops.

"[I am] afraid of illness outplaying tennis at this time of year," Dixon said.

Though Iwanowicz is suffereing from a sprained foot, the team is mostly healthy coming down the homestretch.

The match play will also aid the Minutewomen in preparation for the A-10 championship, and Dixon says her squad is happy.

"If we beat Fordham we are assured of the number five seed in Atlantic 10," Dixon said. "Team morale is good."

Bolduc returns to Temple under a different banner

By BOB MCGOVERN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Basketball isn't the only sport that has history between the Massachusetts and Temple. Today, coach Carrie Bolduc is leading the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (5-4, 1-0 Atlantic 10) into this important A-10 match up, with more in mind than just the game.

Bolduc is no stranger to the lacrosse program at Temple, as she spent two successful years as a Lady Owl. This will be Bolduc's first game on Geasey Field as a coach and will give Temple (4-4, 0-0 A-10) its first conference contest of the season.

The Lady Owls have not had the same success as they did with Bolduc in 1997 when they went to the Final Four. Temple has, however, showcased a series of talented teams over the last few years, including last year's A-10 champion.

The similarities between the two teams are striking, especially on the offensive side of the field. Both the Minutewomen and the Lady Owls have balanced scoring attacks lacking one true superstar.

The Lady Owls have 20 out of 22 letter winners returning. Of the two lost, only one was a starter on last year's team.

Temple has four players that have been lighting up the net this season while dishing out the occasional assist. Dianna Radcliffe and Tiffany Pulaski lead the team in goals with 17 and 16 respectively.

Also adding to the scoring are Patty Glavin with 14 goals and six assists and Liz Frengs who has netted 12 in with three helpers.

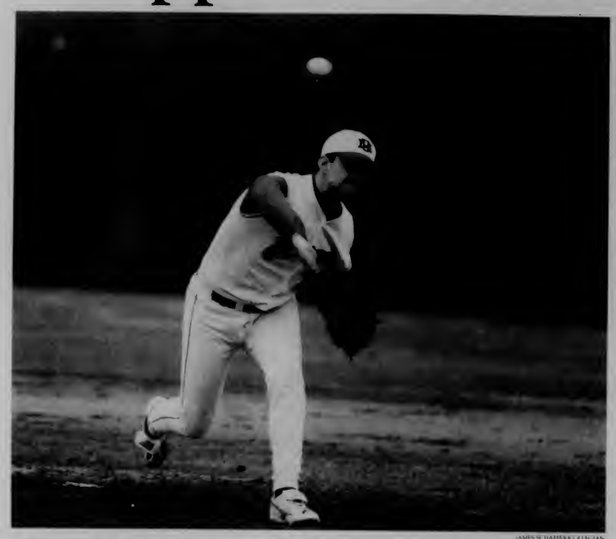
On defense, the Lady Owls have had their share of troubles, giving up big scores with no real retaliation.

Part of the problem stems from a lack of solidarity in the goal. Temple has been splitting time between their two keepers, and neither player has been the answer recently.

Megan McLouth and Sheena Oomnen have been exchanging time, but due to the recent barrage of goals there is no certainty in who will come to play.

Temple has been on a three-game losing streak, with all three losses coming against ranked opponents. Like the Maroon and White, the Lady Owls have yet to beat a ranked opponent this season.

The Minutewomen have also had their share of disappointments, recently dropping a heartbreaker to Hofstra 9-8.



In that game the Maroon and White saw a spark from Lydia Robinson, who netted four of the team's goals. But the offense has been up and down all season.

The Minutewomen have been relying on their strong defense and stifling goaltending to keep them in games, and will be facing a tough test today on Geasy Field.

Temple has won three of its four games at home, and is looking to win the first of a four-game homestand. The Lady Owls haven't faced an unranked team like UMass in three weeks, and they are looking to start their A-10 quest on the right foot.

The last time the two teams met, Temple took a 14-2 victory at Garber Field. This year, the Minutewomen and the Lady Owls are both contenders for the A-10 crown, and today's game should prove to be a good measuring stick.

Opposites attract

JAMES W. HAPPEN/COLLEGIAN

Mike Crane hurls one plateward in UMass' victory over Sacred Heart on Wednesday. The Minutemen look to use the momentum from Crane's stellar performance this weekend when they host Xavier for a three-game set.

Struggling Xavier, rolling UM meet

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Winner of three in a row, the Massachusetts baseball team (7-9, 3-3 Atlantic 10) will return to Earl Lorden Field this weekend for its first Atlantic 10 home series of the season.

The Xavier Musketeers (10-14-2, 2-4 Atlantic 10) will enter play Saturday having lost three of their last four, and are on the road for the second consecutive week. XU lost two of three at Saint Joseph's last weekend.

UMass coach Mike Stone hopes the success of sophomore righthander Mike Crane will carry over into the rest of his young staff this weekend. Crane shut out Sacred Heart in a complete game effort Wednesday afternoon, but Stone knows the competition is still there to be the staff's ace.

"I expect that out of all the pitchers," Stone said after witnessing Crane's gem. "We have some guys that are throwing the ball well, and we just need to get them some work to see where we're at. We just need to get some guys in some ballgames."

The sophomore duo of southpaw Keith Doherty and righthander Anthony Gallo will likely see action this weekend, as will promising freshman Matt Torra. Stone also did not rule out bringing Crane in on short rest for some weekend work against Xavier.

Continued on page 6

Bruins and Devils tie it up

By TOM CANAVAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) – Boston goaltender Steve Shields made five of his 28 saves in overtime and the Boston Bruins skated to a 1-1 tie with the New Jersey Devils on Thursday night in what might be a first-round matchup in the playoffs.

Joe Thornton scored in the second period for Boston, while Joe Nieuwendyk tallied for the Devils in the first period and lost an apparent winner in overtime because of a controversial penalty.

Bruins	1
Devils	1

Nieuwendyk beat Shields at 49 seconds of the overtime with a shot in close, but referee Mick McGeough immediately waved off the goal.

The play was set up when Jamie Langenbrunner put his arm around the waist of Bruins defenseman Nick Boynton as he skated around his own net. The little hold caused Boynton to lose the puck in front, and McGeough to call the penalty.

The tie and the point increased the first-place Devils' lead over Philadelphia to two points in the Atlantic Division with each team having two games left in the regular season. New Jersey can win the title with either a win or a Flyers' loss in the last two games since the Devils hold the tiebreakers should the teams finish with the same amount of points.

Boston is now 0-2-3 in its last five games. It has 85 points, and will probably finish seventh in the Eastern Conference, which would set up a series with the Devils if they win the Atlantic.

Shields got the Bruins to overtime by stopping Pascal Rheaume on a short-handed breakaway with just under three minutes to play in regulation. He also made a good save in close on defenseman Brian Rafalski in the extra period.

Nieuwendyk put New Jersey ahead 3:36 after the opening faceoff. After getting around Boston defenseman Dan McGillis in center ice, Langenbrunner skated into the right circle and sent a cross-ice pass that Nieuwendyk put into an open net before Shields could react.

Millar steps up

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) – Kevin Millar is fitting right in with the hard-hitting Boston Red Sox.

Millar homered and drove in four runs Thursday as the Red Sox beat the Tampa Bay Devil Rays 14-5.

"We have great hitters. We have a great team," Millar said. "It shows what we did this series. We had four different lineups in there. It shows the confidence this team has."

Millar, sent to Boston by Florida after he backed out of a deal with the Chunichi Dragons, was 6-for-12 in the series with two homers and six RBIs.

He had an RBI single off Nick Bierbrodt (0-1) in a five-run third inning, a solo homer off reliever Jorge Sosa in the fifth and a two-run double in the sixth. With a chance to hit for the cycle, he flied out in the eighth.

Nomar Garciaparra and Shea Hillenbrand had three RBIs each for Boston, which has won three straight after losing its opener to Tampa Bay. Jason Varitek went 6-for-11 in the series with four doubles and a homer.

"The offense has started clicking," he said.

Boston outscored Tampa Bay 34-24 despite only a 45-44 advantage in hits.

"We're a confident bunch of players," Red Sox manager Grady Little said. "You'll have those peaks and valleys throughout the season, but right now we've got a lot of guys playing well."

Continued on page 6

UMass Weekend Schedule

Friday, April 4

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Softball	vs. St. Joseph's	3:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. St. Joseph's	5:00 p.m.
Women's Lacrosse	at Temple	3:00 p.m.

Saturday, April 5

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	vs. Xavier	12:00 p.m.
Baseball	vs. Xavier	2:30 p.m.
Women's Crew	at SD Classic	10:00 a.m.
Men's Outdoor Track	at So. Conn. Invite	11:00 a.m.
Women's Outdoor Track	at So. Conn. Invite	11:00 a.m.
Women's Tennis	vs. Boston U.	12:00 p.m.
Men's Lacrosse	at UMBC	1:00 p.m.

Sunday, April 6

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	vs. Xavier	11:30 a.m.
Softball	vs. Temple	12:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. Temple	2:00 p.m.
Women's Tennis	vs. Fordham	10:00 a.m.
Women's Crew	at SD Classic	10:00 a.m.
Women's Lacrosse	vs. Geo. Wash.	12:00 p.m.

West gets the vote

By JIM O'CONNELL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

David West knows how to get the most, whether it's points on the court or votes off of it.

He became the first Xavier player to earn AP All-America honors Thursday as the leading vote-getter on the 2002-03 team.

The three-time Atlantic 10 player of the year was joined on the first team by fellow seniors Nick Collison of Kansas and Josh Howard of Wake Forest, along with junior Dwyane Wade of Marquette and sophomore T.J. Ford of Texas.

Collison, Wade and Ford play Saturday in the Final Four.

The 6-foot-9 West, a second-team All-American last year, averaged 20.3 points and 12.0 rebounds for the Musketeers, leading them to a Top 10 ranking and a No. 3 seed in the NCAA tournament.

His most remarkable performance came against Dayton on Feb. 8, when he scored 47 points and had 18 rebounds, just missing a double-double in each half.

West, the only preseason All-American to earn the postseason honor, received 64 first-team votes and 344 points from the 72-member national media panel that selects the weekly AP Top 25. Each voter picked three teams and players received points on a 5-3-1 basis. The voting was done before the NCAA tournament.

The 5-10 Ford averaged 15.0 points and 7.5 assists to lead the Longhorns to a No. 1 seed in the tournament, and then to the Final Four, the school's first since 1947. An honorable mention pick as a freshman, Ford became the first Texas player to be selected for the first team since Chris Mihm in 2000.

Ford had two more first-team votes than West but finished with 343 points.

Howard was the Atlantic Coast Conference's player of the year, averaging 20 points and 8.1 rebounds to lead the

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 112

Student dies in duplex blaze

GERALYN LING/COLLEGIAN

A duplex at 98 Sand Hill Rd. stands empty and boarded up following a fire early Saturday morning. The blaze claimed the life of UMass student Katya Yerozolimsky.

By DAN LAMOTHE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A University of Massachusetts student died in a fire Saturday morning that broke out in a duplex north of campus on Sand Hill Road.

Katya Yerozolimsky, 21, of Andover, Mass., was rushed to Cooley Dickinson Hospital from 98 Sand Hill Road. She was pronounced dead at the hospital.

According to the Amherst Fire Department (AFD), the fire was discovered and called in by Capt. David Miner as he was on his way to work. Miner made the call at 7:08 a.m. By 7:14, the first groups of firefighters arrived. Firefighters David Bennett and David Martell rescued four other occupants of 98 Sand Hill Road while Miner evacuated one person from 100 Sand Hill Road, the other side of the duplex.

The four evacuated from 98 Sand Hill Road and one other occupant who arrived after the fire department arrived were taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital for counseling, AFD sources said.

Damage to the building, which is owned by Amherst resident Shirley Tang, was estimated at about $50,000. The building stood boarded up with plywood yesterday, with some debris still remaining on the grass in the front yard.

According to AFD, 31 firefighters, four pumper trucks, an aerial ladder truck, two ambulances, four squads, three chief officers and the fire department chaplain were dispatched to the scene Saturday morning. Three other off-duty firefighters covered the station.

State Trooper Frank Hart and other fire investigators determined yesterday that the fire originated in the living room of the apartment in or adjacent to a couch. They ruled that the fire was accidental and that it did not involve electrical problems. AFD sources said that there was also "ample evidence" of discarded smoking materials, but that the fire's cause could not be pinpointed to that.

UMass spokesperson Barbara Pitoniak said that she had no additional information readily available on Yerozolimski yesterday. She said that Interim Dean of Students Gladys Rodriguez released a statement in regards to the fire and death.

"Katya's death is a tragic loss for the University community," it stated. "We extend our sincere sympathies to her family and friends."

Docter Harry Rockland-Miller, director of Mental Health Services, has said previously that counseling is available both for individuals and groups "whenever there is a significant event like a student death."

Rockland-Miller said that anyone seeking counseling should call Mental Health Services at 545-2337.

Yerozolimski is the third undergraduate to die this semester. On Jan. 22, senior Jessica Harpin, 21, died after going into cardiac arrest in a Belchertown apartment. Francis Dippolito, 19, of Revere, Mass., was also found dead on March 9 in the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity house at 510 N. Pleasant St.

The fire is also the second major fire involving UMass students this semester. On Feb. 9, two apartments in the North Village family housing section of UMass were destroyed when an electrical fire that started with a second floor bathroom ceiling fan rapidly spread to the roof of the building.

SGA representatives meet with Romney higher education aid

By KRISTIN SHREWSBURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Student Government Association members Dan Saunders and Jared Nokes met with Secretary of Higher Education Peter Nessen to discuss Governor Mitt Romney's proposed higher education changes.

In an effort to establish a student voice in Boston, the SGA Senate formed an ad-hoc committee to research the recently proposed state budget for higher education. Members of the committee brought before the Senate a motion in support of parts of Romney's proposal claiming that portions of it would be beneficial to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The proposal suggested restructuring the budget system and would eliminate the President's Office in Boston. The proposal would also separate the Amherst campus from the other three UMass sites.

"We would be working on an individual level apart from the other universities and we would have our own board of trustees. We would be competing separately from everyone else," said Nokes, who chairs the committee.

Romney's plan also proposes level funding for each of the UMass campuses. In addition, the Amherst campus would see a $26 million increase in revenue from higher tuition costs. The proposed plan calls for increases of roughly $850 for in-state student tuition and up to $3,000 for students who are out-of-state residents.

"We are expected to grow and regain grants as a University and take on the role as the flagship university," Nokes said. "As far as tuition increases go, they are expected to be high."

At the time of the ad-hoc committee's first presentation to the SGA, the Board of Trustees had yet to release its tuition increases for the 2003-2004 year. Tuition has since been increased by $1,000 for in-state students and over $2,000 for out-of-state.

"It's unfortunate a lot of people don't understand why we're supporting the new proposal," Nokes said. "Last year we lost 10 percent of our faculty and now were paying more money to go here. When you add it all up, students would be paying less money with Romney's plan. We'd have our own board of trustees, Chancellor John Lombardi would become our President and we'd have control over our own budget."

Nokes and Saunders, speaker of the Senate, met again with Nessen to discuss what the future will hold for Romney's proposed plan. Saunders explained that in light of positive features, many state legislatures are very tightlipped about the issue.

"The meeting went great. We were able to talk with Peter Nessen for about 40 minutes and gain a lot more information regarding the proposal,"

Continued on page 3

Blue Wall Pub opens to hundreds

Mixed reaction to bar on opening evening

By COURTNEY CHARLES AND AMY O'NEILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Student nightlife was brought back to the center of the University of Massachusetts campus Friday with the much-anticipated grand opening of the Blue Wall Pub.

Hundreds of students roamed in and out of the pub throughout the night, beginning with a large rush at 5 p.m. Students came out wondering if the Pub would live up to all the hype that surrounded it. The first 100 Bud Light Draft customers from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. received a 16-ounce pint glass.

"I came for the free glass," said senior Noah Ditto. "It's fun to drink on campus legally."

Live music started at 7 p.m., with performances by Ed Vadas and the Fabulous Heavyweights, who reportedly performed at the original Blue Wall Pub in the 70's. From 10:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. the band Adios Pantalones performed, as well. The reaction to the music was mixed.

"[I think] the bands are really good," said Hilary Blowers, senior.

Other students however, did not feel as positive about them.

"I'll be honest, they need to do away with the five bands," said student Dave Nolan. "In five years in this school, this is the best I've seen. That doesn't say much."

Crowds gathered around the two 50-inch screen televisions, cheering on the two Massachusetts sports teams that were playing: the Boston Red Sox vs. the Baltimore Orioles and the Boston Celtics vs. the Sacramento Kings. Some students, however, felt that the atmosphere was not enough.

"They should have more TV's and more entertainment," said senior management major Jorge Perez.

The Blue Wall, normally wide open, was sectioned off into three different parts with an unused dance floor. Younger students congregated in the section closest to the windows and bar, while a mostly older crowd gathered in the area in front of the band.

Senior Chris Renn had a suggestion for an improvement of this setup:

"Dance floor, dance music."

Other complaints about the atmosphere concerned the lighting in the pub.

"I think it's definitely too bright in here," said Laura Nixon, a senior accounting major.

GERALYN LING/COLLEGIAN

Senior Matt Wamback chats on his cell phone while enjoying a beer Friday evening in the Blue Wall Pub. The bar's grand opening garnered a mixed reaction from students attending.

"I'm glad there's a bar on campus, but I think the whole blue lighting thing is kind of weird," said junior Joe Drury.

Generally, many students who came to check out the Blue Wall Pub found the novelty of it exciting, but most agreed it would probably soon wear off. Students felt that although it's a new place, it would take more to keep bringing people back.

"I think it's going to be fun this weekend, but for the rest of the time there's going to need to be a lot of advertising to keep [it] going," said senior sports management major, Nick Morash.

Other students echoed these feelings.

"I don't know if this place will be successful in the future," said senior nursing major, Jessica Kilson.

"[I think they need] maybe more promotional stuff to get people to come," Perez said.

However, many students found the new bar a good place to hang out and were glad to see it come back after all these years.

"Years ago the Blue Wall was the place to be and I'm upholding the tradition at UMass," one student noted. "I want to make our alumni proud."

"I think it's going to be fun. It's a great beginning and it will make a lot of money for the school," Amanda Degen, a junior, said. "Campus life will definitely improve."

Brenda Ryan-Newton, Retail Food Services operations manager and coordinator for the opening, noted that there is always room for improvement, and that students had been giving her suggestions throughout the night.

"The night is going great. [We are] really pleased with the turnout. It's nice to see them [the students] on campus and having a good time," she said.

Open until 1 a.m., the crowd began to clear out by about 9 p.m. Many students commented that it was a good place to begin the night but that they would be continuing their partying uptown.

As noted by one student, "The Blue Wall counts as a new pre-game place."

"[I came out tonight] because it's the grand opening and I wanted to get drunk," said another student, who wished to remain anonymous.

"It's a good time. [There is] a good mix of people and fast service," said senior sociology major, Brian Kenney. "I think it will be a good place to go after [UMass sports] games."

KELLY FARRELL/COLLEGIAN

Jason Alexander, a sophomore engineering major, scrubs the floor at the Grove Street Inn homeless shelter Saturday.

Hunger Cleanup draws 75 helpers

By KELLY FARRELL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As hunger and homelessness reach their highest levels since the Great Depression, approximately 75 students from the Amherst area participated in the 19th Annual Hunger Cleanup, a national fundraiser to fight hunger and homelessness, on Saturday.

Students from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst College and Smith College wrote letters to State Representatives, raised over $2,500 in cash, collected food, and did general labor at the Salvation Army, food banks and shelters around the valley area to help battle hunger and homelessness.

"Hunger isn't just about food," said David Sharken, Executive Director of the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts. "It's not about canned food and peanut butter. It's about American policies that keep people in these situations. What I like about this [Hunger Cleanup] is that it includes increasing public awareness, action through working with your hands, and addressing policies. They're hitting on all three levels, which is great."

The students planned to meet at Amherst Common at 9:30 a.m., but due to the freezing rain, the Amherst Martial Arts Center offered accommodations for the students to gather inside. After a brief breakfast donated by Henion's Bakery, Bruegger's Bagels, Stop 'n Shop and Atkins Farms, students broke into groups and went to their designated volunteer sites. Similar to a walkathon, students found individual sponsors to donate money for each hour they volunteered.

"We did well considering we were thrown a lot of curve balls, one of which was the sleet [causing outside work to be cancelled.] And considering we were asking students to be up at 9:30 a.m. and to bring money, I think it went really well," said Alexandra Pugh, project coordinator.

"It's better than sleeping on a Saturday," said Jason Alexander, a sophomore engineering major, as he mopped the floor of Grove Street Inn, a homeless shelter in Northampton.

Alexander was one of ten students in the volunteer group at Grove Street. The group of ten volunteers was comprised primarily of residents of the Nuance Multicultural Program at Gorman Hall. The students scraped and cleaned windows, fixed storms, and scrubbed the floors at Grove Street, while other volunteer groups worked at soup kitchens, such as Kate's Kitchen in Holyoke, The Salvation Army in Amherst, and several other sites.

Grove Street is more than a typical shelter said one of its twenty anonymous residents. "It's a big old farm house, I really like that," the man said.

Two young local residents came by Grove Street to make a donation while the students were working. The MS Walk, another national event scheduled for the same day, was rained out and dozens of fresh sandwiches were left-over and brought to Grove Street as a donation. Help from local residents continues to be called for, as the rates of hunger and homelessness are growing nationally, and the funding for social services, such as Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF), continue to be cut.

Fifty percent of the funds raised will go to the Five-College Soup Kitchen and the other 50 percent will benefit national and international efforts. The event was sponsored locally by MassPIRG, the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts in Hatfield, and other organizations. Nationally, over 8,000 students participated in the event, sponsored by the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness.

Students interested in getting involved in similar events may visit the MassPIRG office in room 423A of the Student Union. Future events sponsored by the Hunger and Homelessness Campaign include a food and clothing drive to be held at the end of the semester. Students clearing out their dorms and apartments or other students wishing to make donations may bring clothes and non-perishable food items to the office.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 5
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

SPRING AT UMASS
THE AWAKENING OF OUR INNERMOST DESIRES
PAGE 5

'WHAT A GIRL WANTS'
NEW FILM RUNS A BIT STALE
PAGE 6

BUTLER HONORED
SENIOR NAMED ALL-AMERICAN
PAGE 10

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

WHAT WILL TODAY'S STUDENTS BRING TO TOMORROW'S WORLD OF BUSINESS?

A new era for corporate America is upon us
New standards in financial reporting and new obligations to investors are being created.
The effect these new standards will have on the future of business remains to be seen.
What is certain is that everyone, in every field, will be affected.
But let us not forget that the integrity of business lies on the shoulders of individuals.
Beyond laws, beyond rules, regulations and processes, integrity is and always has been a personal responsibility and obligation.
Integrity is about asking the tough questions, making the right decisions, and simply doing the right thing when the consequences are great and even when they are small.
Over the past few months, PricewaterhouseCoopers has been working to help rebuild public trust from the inside out.
By beginning a much needed conversation,
internally and externally.
By helping to create new standards and accepting new responsibilities.
By not only embracing the letter of the law but the spirit, as well.
In the months and years to come,
you too will have the opportunity to stand up and be an example of integrity.
To make decisions that will have a profound impact on the future.
We urge you to proudly accept this responsibility.
We urge you to stand and be counted,
alongside those who have already begun.

www.pwcglobal.com/lookhere

Look beyond the numbers.

© 2003 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, a Delaware limited liability partnership, or, as the context requires, the network of member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

SGA meets with Nessen

Continued from page 1

Saunders said. "When we were done, we walked around the State House and asked legislators what they thought."

Saunders said that they weren't very talkative about the issue and that he "really didn't see much energy" in the State House, either.

Despite questions surrounding the budget, Saunders said that many of the state legislators are making a concerted effort to get the budget out on time.

"In the past we've had to wait three to four months to get the budget and plan around it. This year hopefully we'll have it on time," he said.

As the proposal is being discussed in the State House, members of the UMass system continue to actively speak out against Romney's plan. The President's office has continued to express opposition to the plan, saying that it would dismantle the University.

John Hoey, spokesman for President William Bulger, stated that the President's office does see problems with the proposal and that the University should be judged on its merits.

As the release of this year's budget grows closer, so does the amount of concern and questions about what is in store for the University. Saunders said that the Senate will work on the issue throughout the summer, as roughly six weeks remain left in the semester.

"Peter Nessen was very willing to talk to us and get the information out, and [he] encourages open discussion about the plan," Saunders said. "The problem is that we have six weeks left to get an open forum going on campus. Hopefully the Senate will be making more recommendations and the coordinating council will be taking it over in the summer. We've heard a lot of numbers in the millions thrown out there, and hopefully we'll get them and go from there."

Bulger says he's ready to cooperate

BOSTON (AP) – University of Massachusetts president William Bulger said he plans to bring "a cooperative spirit" to a House committee set to question him about his fugitive mobster brother.

In a brief interview with The Boston Globe, Bulger reiterated comments by his attorney, who has stressed Bulger's desire to cooperate. The stance is a change from a previous position in which Bulger refused to answer questions for the House Government Reform Committee, citing his right against self-incrimination.

"There is a kind of cooperative spirit presently, and we intend to maintain that good mood with the committee," Bulger told the Globe.

The committee has delayed until April 9 a vote on whether to give Bulger and convicted mob boss Francis "Cadillac Frank" Salemme immunity in exchange for testimony about James "Whitey" Bulger. No reason was given for the delay.

William Bulger appeared before the panel in December, but invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination when asked the whereabouts of his brother, James "Whitey" Bulger who is wanted by the FBI in connection with 21 murders.

The committee has been investigating the Boston FBI's ties to its mob informants. James Bulger, a former high-level informant, is considered a central figure in the probe.

Plans for the immunity vote came together quickly this week, but a spokesman would not say if the committee negotiated an agreement with William Bulger to testify.

James Bulger disappeared in January 1995 after former FBI Agent John Connolly told him he was about to be indicted.

Connolly, who grew up in the same South Boston neighborhood as the Bulger brothers, was convicted last year of tipping off James Bulger and other mobsters about their indictments. He is serving a 10-year prison sentence for racketeering.

William Bulger, 68, the former president of the state Senate, testified before a grand jury that he talked with his brother shortly after he fled in a prearranged phone call at a friend's house, but maintains he hasn't had contact with him since.

Salemme, 69, a mob associate of James Bulger, was released from prison in January after serving nearly nine years in prison for racketeering and extortion.

Salemme cooperated with prosecutors in their case against Connolly. He has already testified before the committee, but requested immunity before providing any further information.

– Associated Press

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Part of a celebration

Hip-hop artist Wyclef Jean sits during yesterday's Haitian Student Conference in the Student Union Ballroom. For more information on the conference, see tomorrow's Collegian.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1582 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

2003 MAKING ART Making a Living

Wednesday workshops for emerging artists

Wednesdays, 4:30-6:30 p.m., Campus Center, UMass Amherst

- Visual Artists and Writers April 2
  - Marketing • Galleries
  - Distributors • Contests
  - Agents

  Daniel Grant, author of How to Start and Succeed as an Artist
- Performing Artists April 9
  - Marketing • Agents
  - Contracts • Working in Education
  - Collaborations

  Jazz guitarist Michael Gregory and theater artist and educator Tracy Vernon
- Art and the Law April 23
  - Co-sponsored by Volunteer Lawyers for the Arts of Massachusetts
- Art-Related Careers for Artists April 30
  - Web sites • Teaching • Licensing
  - Careers involving additional study (art conservation, art appraisal, art therapy, architecture, interior design, scientific and medical illustration)
  - Arts Management
  - Publishing, art galleries, museums, the theater, collectibles
  - The design field

  Daniel Grant

Who should come?

- UMass and Area Students in the Arts
- Dancers • Visual Artists
- Musicians • Actors • Writers

No workshop fee, but for 5-College students, suggested donation $10 or $40 for the series. Call Arts Extension Service at 413-545-2360 or e-mail aes@contined.umass.edu to reserve a seat.

For more information: www.umass.edu/aes

plus Arts and Activism Thursday, April 15
Find out about the power of the arts to make a difference in your community.
Media artist and 5-College visiting professor Liz Miller joins visual artist Beverly Naidu in showcasing their community-based cultural work.

Arts Extension Service
Division of Continuing Education
UMASS University of Massachusetts Amherst

Engineering and Science Majors
Expand Your Potential – Fast Track Your Career

Master of Science
program in the Management of Technology
at the
University of New Hampshire
Whittemore School of Business and Economics

The MBA alternative for technology entrepreneurs and those seeking leadership positions in technology intensive firms

- Focused on the development and commercialization of emerging technologies and managing technological change
- Emphasis on team projects and problem solving
- Industry sponsored projects and internships
- Small class size with high level of student/faculty interaction
- 18 month trimester format
- Next class starting September 2003
- Financial Aid available

For more details call 603-862-3370
or email warren.lackstrom@unh.edu at the
Hamel Center for the Management of Technology and Innovation
Preparing Technology Professionals for Technology Leadership

www.unh.edu/wsbe/grad

America at War

Forces surround Baghdad

Officials declare Iraqi capital cut off from outside

Iraqis try to pull a destroyed U.S. tank off the road in Al Dorah, on the outskirts of Baghdad, yesterday. The tank was destroyed during a U.S. offensive Friday.

By Calvin Woodward
Associated Press

Chipping away at the vestiges of Saddam Hussein's power, U.S. forces encircled Baghdad yesterday and began living into the capital's airport. British forces in the south made their deepest push into Iraq's second largest city.

A hulking U.S. C-130 transport plane landed at the Baghdad international airport, carrying unknown cargo but wielded with symbolism and tactical importance. The arrival presaged a major resupply effort by air for U.S. troops, dependent until now on a tenuous line stretching 350 miles to Kuwait.

U.S. officials declared Baghdad cut off from the rest of Iraq.

"We do control the highways in and out of the city and do have the capability to interdict, to stop, to attack an Iraqi military forces that might try to either escape or to engage our forces," said Gen. Peter Pace, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Intense fighting took a growing toll on combatants and civilians. Injured Russian diplomats and a convoy of America's Kurdish comrades in arms were among unintended victims caught in crossfire and friendly fire Sunday. Kurds said 18 of their own died in the mistaken U.S. air strike.

Assorted prizes fell into allied hands, some after hard fighting, but U.S. forces had yet to confront Baghdad's last-ditch defenders on a large scale.

"They are extremely weakened, but that does not mean they're finished," Pace said of the Republican Guard.

Southeast of Baghdad, Marines seized one of Saddam's palaces, poked through remnants of a Republican Guard headquarters and searched a suspected terrorist training camp, finding the shell of a passenger jet believed to be used for hijacking practice.

U.S. forces consolidated positions around Baghdad and declared they controlled all highways in and out – a day after raiding the capital and killing perhaps several thousand Iraqi shooters, by rough U.S. estimates.

Pace said the Republican Guard's main weapons systems are gone and the force probably cannot assemble more than 1,000 men in any one place.

On another vital front, British troops thrust to the center of Basra, Iraq's second largest city, with a sense they were finally shaking Saddam loyalists loose.

British Desert Rats went into the city of 1.3 million with more than three dozen tanks and armored cars, a column similar in size to the American unit that probed suburban Baghdad, then got quickly out. But the British found resistance softer than expected, picked up reports that the local Baath Party leadership was crumbling and fought into the core, losing at least three soldiers and finding their arrival cheered by hundreds of citizens.

"We have a lot of it occupied," British Maj. Gen. Peter Wall told the BBC. He said it might take days to put down renegades.

In chalking up military gains, the United States accelerated a campaign of persuasion, too, aimed at getting the Iraqi Republican Guard to give up. And Washington's attention began turning to postwar Iraq.

Pace said the United States would welcome Republican Guard division commanders and troops in a postwar government if they surrendered now.

"I mean, there's a small clique around Saddam Hussein who are the perpetrators of all the crimes against humanity," Pace said on ABC's "This Week."

"Below them are still many senior leaders and troops who have their free will to decide what their life is going to be like. They can surrender and become part of the future free Iraq, or they can fight and die."

The United States is deploying some of Iraq's exiles and internal dissidents around the country to help root out pro-Saddam elements, keep order and distribute aid, according to one such organization, the Iraq National Congress. The group said several hundred of its members were flown to an area near the city of Nasiriyah.

Bicyclers protest against war with rally on wheels

By Jesse Hirsch
Collegian Correspondent

In the midst of chilling temperatures and freezing rain Friday evening, over 20 artists, activists, and bicyclers met on the Amherst town common for a "Critical Mass" anti-war bike rally, which traveled to Northampton.

Participants in the event brandished colorful handmade signs, dressed in bright clothing for safety, and remained upbeat despite the bad weather.

Billed as a celebration, the event was intended to counter the stereotype that student activists are always acting in opposition to things.

"So often the [anti-war] movement is framed as something built on negativity, angry voices always shouting against something," said University of Massachusetts STPP C major Erika Arthur, one of the bike rally's organizers. "We want to show that we also have a vision for something better."

Critical Mass is a movement, begun in 1992 in San Francisco that now has tens of thousands of participants internationally. Sometimes boasting as many as 3,000 riders, streets are taken over from motor vehicle traffic, if only for a short while. The intent was to show that there are alternatives to petroleum-based transportation.

Typically held on the last Friday of every month, the events are renowned for their outlandish costuming, artfully decorated bikes, and generally festive air. The ride from Amherst to Northampton was no exception.

At around 5:00 p.m., people started congregating on the common. Introductions were made, doughnuts and water were distributed, and colorful signs were affixed to the bikes using duct tape.

The signs, bearing statements like "gardens not bombs," and "Americans need a new dream," were crafted the night before at a preparatory meeting at the Root 9 Collective in Hadley, a non-profit space for art and activism.

The Collective was formed last year to provide a creative outlet for activists who found themselves frustrated and disillusioned with recent world events. Members recently returned from a successful Northeastern touring production of "Oligarchy," political theater aimed at the worldwide drive for petroleum resources.

The bike rally was intended to follow a similar theme. "For this specific action we are riding to protest the war in Iraq," Arthur said, "but more importantly to put into action our visions of peace, democracy, and safe and sustainable transportation alternatives."

After outlining a game plan that emphasized safety for all the bicyclists, the group gathered into a cohesive traveling unit and moved to Route 9.

After a short while, they were met with a police escort. This ensured angry motorists wouldn't attempt to disrupt the group, as has happened in some semi-violent confrontations in San Francisco. At times, vehicle traffic was backed up for a mile, but the bikers reached Northampton later that evening without incident.

The group has plans to restage the event this Friday at the same time, hoping for more favorable weather conditions. There are also plans to consolidate efforts with MassBike Pioneer Valley, the official Critical Mass group that rides on the last Friday of every month.

For more information on Critical Mass, contact MassBike via e-mail at: james@eart.ast.smith.edu. For more information on the Root 9 Collective, call (413) 586-4792.

Allies working together with Kurds

By Borzou Daragahi
Associated Press

SOZ BLAKH, Iraq (AP) – American forces supporting Kurdish fighters against President Saddam Hussein's army took up positions in the mountain s land south of the Kurdish autonomous region and in the north where U.S warplanes hit Iraqi positions near the commercial center of Mosul.

The combination of American air strikes and Kurdish ground attacks in the north has driven Iraqi government forces back from the Kurdish frontiers toward the two main population districts in Baghdad-handed Mosul and the important oil center around Kirkuk. The Kurds are now less than 20 miles from each city.

Overnight Saturday to Sunday, about 60 fighters, fighter-bombers and support aircraft from the USS Theodore Roosevelt flew strike missions over northern Iraq. Officers [illegible] the carrier, located in the eastern Mediterranean, said targets included Iraqi troop concentrations, armored tanks and armored vehicles.

Iraqi Information Minister Mohammed Saeed al-Sahhaf speaking to Al Jazeera Arabic television as U.S. forces moved into Baghdad on Saturday, was dismissive of the Kurdish gains.

In the north he said, moving a position here and there "does not mean a thing."

We have different calculations for the northern region. It does not worry us at all," he said.

In the southeast where the autonomous region runs along the Iranian border and reaches down to within 100 miles of Baghdad, Kurdish fighters have been massing along the frontier within striking distance of the oil city of Khanaqin.

U.S. Special Forces have joined them apparently to lend the kind of support they have in the north calling in air strikes on Iraqi positions. They could be seen Friday and Saturday in the no-man's land between the sides in an area about 35 miles from Khanaqin.

Kurdish troop strength along the southern frontline has risen from less than 400 several weeks ago to between 1,300 and 1,400 now. Mola Bakhtiyar a Kurdish political and military leader, said it would rise quickly to about 5,000.

The Kurds, long oppressed by Saddam's regime, established an autonomous region in the north in 1991 under the protection of U.S. and British air patrols.

In the northwest near Mosul, U.S. aircraft carried out a sustained attack Saturday on Iraqi positions outside the village of Khazer, where Kurds seized an important bridge on Friday. The front line appeared to have moved several kilometers west into formerly Iraqi-held territory.

A large convoy of soldiers from the U.S. 173rd Airborne Division took up positions less than 10 miles to the east of Khazer, and about three miles east of Kalak, where the Iraqis had abandoned a large position on Thursday.

The 25 vehicles carried some 250 soldiers – about a fifth of the paratroopers dropped in to the Kurdish north on March 26. One group of 14 vehicles took up position on a ridge outside of Kalak in pastures and freshly plowed fields.

At the town of Tida, about 25 miles north of Mosul, eight to 10 Special Forces troops and about 150 Kurdish fighters came under intermittent artillery fire and heavy machine gun fire during a coalition reconnaissance mission.

Kurdish fighters celebrate on their trucks in Shaikhan, about 45 kilometers (29 miles) northeast of Mosul in northern Iraq, yesterday. Kurdish soldiers assisted by U.S. special forces took control of Shaikhan from the Iraqi regime.

UMass Summer Session 2003

Over 200 credit courses in more than 40 academic departments–evenings, daytime, weekends, and online.

Summer Session I: June 2–July 10

Summer Session II: July 14–August 20

And one-, two-, and three-week courses.

For a free catalog: call 545-2414 or e-mail contined@contined.umass.edu.

www.umass.edu/contined

Division of Continuing Education

UMassAmherst

D.P. Dough®
Delivers Calzones
— The Pizza Alternative® —
256-1616

2 CALZONES & 2 DRINKS FOR $10.00
With this coupon • Exp 5/31/03 • One Coupon per 2 Zones
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616

2 CALZONES & 2 DRINKS FOR $10.00
With this coupon • Exp 5/31/03 • One Coupon per 2 Zones
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616

D.P. Dough = Great Calzones + Fast Delivery + Low Prices

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dying for the news: The perils of frontline reporting

Over the past few days the world was again reminded of the perils of the journalistic world when it comes to covering a war.

Last Thursday, Michael Kelly, a columnist for the Washington Post, was killed when the Humvee he and a U.S. soldier were traveling in drove off the road into a canal. Yesterday David Bloom, an NBC news correspondent and weekend co-anchor for "The Today Show," died of a blood clot.

According to an NBC spokesman, Bloom's death was not combat related. He was packing gear when he collapsed. Medical officials stated later that he died of a pulmonary embolism. He is the second American journalist to die while covering the war in Iraq.

A number of other journalists around the world, including Terry Lloyd from Britain's Independent Television News (ITN), while covering the war in Iraq. ITN is reporting that they have sufficient evidence to believe that Lloyd was killed in a battle he was covering in Southern Iraq. His cameraman, Fred Nerac and translator, Hussein Osman, are both missing.

"We believe his body to be in Basra hospital, which is still under Iraqi control," a statement from ITN declared.

Stories like that of Kelly and Lloyd are fresh alerts to the world, particularly those in the news industry, about the dangers of war coverage. This war is different from previous conflicts with scores of reporters who are embedded in military units, providing unprecedented up-close coverage. It is also putting those reporters in perilous situations.

A journalist's job is to go out and get the story at all cost. With the advent of instantaneous media – mainly cable news and the Internet – the public is constantly demanding more, and reporters are providing.

Sticking reporters on the inside has yielded unparalleled coverage. It has also cost some reporters their lives and gotten others into trouble. Peter Arnett was dismissed from NBC News for granting an interview with Iraqi television, while Geraldo Rivera was withdrawn from the front lines by Fox News after he drew sand diagrams of troop locations.

Certain occupations come with inherent danger built in. Police officers, firefighters, and of course military personnel. The public needs to remember to include journalists in this group. Reporters give up life and limb to bring the news to the rest of the world. They often go long hours with no sleep under miserable conditions just so we can sit back in our living rooms and watch what is going on.

When Daniel Pearl was executed nearly a year ago in Pakistan, America became outraged at the brutal nature of his death and the photographs and videotapes released by his captors. As far as is known, journalists in the war are being killed in accidents and armed conflict, rather than as prisoners, but their deaths are no less noble. They are dying in the line of duty, bringing us the news.

We must remember that although they may seem larger than life in front of us on television, they are all still human beings like the rest of us. They are mortal.

Information from ABC News, Sky News, and ITN was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Spring of sexuality at UMass

Katy Noone

After being cooped up indoors for the seemingly endless winter, University of Massachusetts students appreciate warm air against their bare arms as they walk or bike to class. They eagerly – perhaps too eagerly – throw their wooly sweaters and corduroy pants up in the attic, or more likely, in the back of their dorm room closet, and replace them with brightly colored tank tops, shorts, dresses, and flip-flops. Spring teased us last weekend with gorgeous weather, but this past week we were all knocked back to reality as we donned scarves, winter jackets, and hats for our treks across campus.

What makes spring at UMass so amusing is not just seeing girls and guys sunning themselves on the Southwest basketball courts or on the more serene Central lawns, but seeing all of our college age hormones come alive as soon as bare skin starts to show. You all know what I'm talking about. It's as if once the snow melts the convertible tops come down and we all become dogs in heat. Literally.

Guys and girls are on the prowl, hoping to end their almost semester-long hibernation. Guys look at girls in their short jean skirts, while girls check out the few decent looking men at this school (just kidding guys) wearing baggy khaki shorts, flip flops, and a white t-shirt (my favorite combination.) Guys driving Jeeps turn most girls' heads, but guys, just because you drive a Jeep doesn't mean you're attractive or fun or interesting. It just means you might know how to spell Wrangler.

Last weekend, a friend of mine took an innocent stroll around Amherst center. Being an athletic, attractive blonde, she usually attracts male attention. However, she told me that she had an abnormal amount of men staring at her, practically licking their lips, making her feel like a "hunk of man meat," as she called it. Did her white tank top make the difference?

Or was it her bare legs, well defined from running miles a day? Dr. Katy thinks it may be due to the heat and everyone's sexual frustration being let out into the fresh, warm air.

The winter seems to be a dead time for relationships, dating, and just plain old flirting and checking people out. I always seem to meet more guys in the summer, as I'm sure most of you reading this do. Sunshine and daylight until 9 p.m. makes people happier and able to go out and have a good time without having to worry about snowstorms and bundling up in winter gear. There is a sense of freedom, of throwing self-consciousness and inhibitions to the wind, of letting negative feelings about love and relationships melt with the snow.

"There is a sense of freedom, of throwing self-consciousness and inhibitions to the wind, of leaving negative feelings about love and relationships behind with the snow."

Just walking down the street in town or on campus, I see many more members of the opposite sex saying hello to each other and exchanging pleased glances and smiles. After all, what better way to make yourself go to class than to know you may get to not only see your crush, but maybe see them with less clothing on. This does not mean, of course, that we should hurry spring. Leave your sandals and halter tops at home girls until it's warm enough to wear them! Boys, what is the point of wearing a t-shirt with a winter hat? Where's your coat?

All of my friends notice a significant difference in the behavior and attitude of guys and girls on the UMass campus at this time of the year. Two of my friends have been asked out numerous times in the past couple of weeks, when all winter they felt invisible. It is a time of limbo – midterms are over, finals haven't started, it's almost time to start working again, but not quite. So many of us are left with one thing on our minds.

The spring is a time for all of us to realize how happy we can be, how great it feels to enjoy the outdoors, and how we probably should have the same attitude all year round. Sometimes UMass seems like a lonely campus, most of us walking around with wind-chapped faces from the damn library wind tunnel, in our own little worlds, avoiding eye contact with anyone else. We owe it to tube tops, sandals, shorts, and sunglasses for giving all of us an excuse to be outgoing, friendly, and in love with the weather, with our good friends, a great class or two, and maybe another spring-hearted soul who we'll find as soon as we look up from the snow covered ground.

Katy Noone is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

Letters to the Editor:

SMOKERS BEWARE

To the Editor:

After reading the "Campus Perspectives" in Friday's paper, I couldn't help but think, "Has everyone been brainwashed by the tobacco companies?" Not one person interviewed thought the policy was a good idea. What kind of completely biased poll is that? I wish they had asked me what my perspective was. I would've said, "I fully support it! It's about damn time that something was done to help solve the horrendous smoking problem we have on campus."

Those of you who dismiss the fact that smoke fumes are a health hazard and those of you who don't wish to speak out about the issues with smoking because you have friends who smoke, wake up! Smoking is a major problem on campus! This policy is a great step in the right direction. Whether it's going to be very effective or not, we all should be in full support of it. The policy shows where the University of Massachusetts stands on this very controversial issue. It shows that UMass is working to get rid of smoking on campus entirely.

If problems arise when trying to get this new policy to work, it's mainly going to be because of uncooperative smokers. In my experience, smokers are often disrespectful to other people who don't smoke or have problems when breathing in secondhand smoke. Either smokers just don't care, or they are so addicted that they cannot control themselves and must smoke up whenever possible. It will take some effort from us non-smokers on campus to pressure those disobeying the policy and make them realize they are aggravating their fellow students.

Let me make it clear that I don't hate smokers. I understand that smokers are also victims themselves. They are victims of the tobacco companies, which make up the most immoral industry in America. But you don't have to let those companies think for you. You can make the smart choice and quit.

This great new smoking policy is a message to all you smoke addicts out there on campus; you're a dying breed. You had better kick the habit, or you're going to be kicking the can sooner than you want to.

David Isbitz
UMass student

SUPPORT AND PROTEST GO HAND IN HAND

To the Editor:

Last night while I watched the news, the tally of dead American soldiers and MIAs flashed across the screen. Had it not been for the high-tech cobalt blue graphics, it could have just as well been 1970 when I was a twelve-year-old boy watching NBC's Chet Huntley report the weekly casualties from the Vietnam War. Back then our government surely had its arguments for why we needed to stop the spread of communism throughout Southeast Asia. I guess things didn't go quite as planned.

Now, three decades later, it's troubling to accept that this country, not to mention the majority of Vietnam veterans, still grapples to find meaning in a war that costs countless dollars, but much more importantly, the lives of tens of thousands of American men and women. As U.S. citizens you'd think we'd know better by now than to blindly trust the government, or trust the liberal or conservative media, or even those pesky Hollywood movie stars. So, whom should we trust?

Frankly, I find the problem of my opinion being "skewed by so many outside forces...mainly the liberal media" far less troubling than when someone like you, in your infinite undergraduate wisdom, or Mr. Bush, who brandishes his Christian righteousness and excellent oratory skills, implies that if I question U.S. policy or action, then I must be one of those un-American types who is in the "against us" camp.

Gasp! Say it ain't so, Mr. Cote, because I just can't sit idly by while you infer that Hollywood is a true representation of progressive thought or liberal media for that matter, and that an anti-war stance precludes compassion and respect for our troops. I know it's cliche, but since you didn't finish the sentence, I will. Support the troops...bring them home.

This country's success rides on the minds of free-thinking individuals, not a bunch of sheep.

When a Rupert Murdoch publication (a.k.a. the Bush administration) makes a statement in fact, you bet I'm going to skew my brain with as many outside sources as I can get my hands on. And it goes the other way, too.

Any electronic media munch-meat who flatly disrespects U.S. policy because some tanned Hollywood actor turned political neophyte tells them to do so, should immediately tune out and pick up a history book. But you make it sound like this country is going down the road to ruin and that troop morale will be shattered because of a bunch of flighty movie stars.

Give me a break! It's Mr. Bush's pals like Ken Lay at Enron whose pornographic corporate behavior does far more to endanger the strength of our country and put everyone, not to mention our troops, at risk. Sure, I could go into the details of how U.S. isolationism has caused most of our allies to distance themselves from us. And how we don't need their stinking help since we can protect our country just fine. Oh, but then there's that Sept. 11 thing.

Suffice it to say you hit the nail right on the head. Yes, France and Germany have corporate oil interests in the Middle East and it's this kind of corporate greed and diplomatic ineptitude on the part of the Bush administration that scares me a whole lot more than George Clooney and definitely makes me think twice about putting Americans in harm's way.

I'll give you another point, Saddam is one bad dude – he should definitely be removed. But just remember who bankrolled him less than 20 years ago. It's just plain wrong to put any of this into simplistic terms and to ask Americans to stop questioning or thinking about the efficacy of U.S. policy for that matter. So when folks like you and the rest of the Murdoch media pundits refuse to ask the underlying questions about terrorism and corporate greed, and then really skew the issues regarding freedom, love of country, and sacrifice, I just can't sit still.

It baffles me how you can connect the dots between the merits of rigorous thinking and disgracing our brave men and women who are willing to take a bullet for you and me. Believe me, they aren't the ones who booked the flight to Baghdad, and the sad thing is, they were just probably looking to get a free education. The question has never been whether the anti-war movement disrespects these brave young souls. The real question is and will continue to be: will their sacrifice be in vain?

The expression "zhi ji ma gou" comes from the Dai people who live in the Yunnan region of China. It translates to: "scold the dog but point to the chicken." In other words, curse one thing but mean another, Mr. Cote, you can rant all you want about the indignant war protesters disrespecting out troops or their fallen predecessors. But I think you know as well as anyone that they don't really feel that way at all. The real issue here concerns the right to question U.S. policy.

I agree with you that walking out of a classroom to protest the war is about as effective as setting one's house on fire to protest the high cost of insurance. But it would have been a great day for the independent thinkers, the one's who made this country great, if every student sunning themselves during spring break in Ft. Lauderdale had packed up their beach blanket and immediately caravanned back to their college campuses to protest on the night the war started. I think the fact that they didn't is why you're hearing our ancestors rolling over in their graves.

Doug Plavin
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Often overlooked women's condition up for discussion

To Sea Diversity:

[illegible] something I'd like to talk about and feel is important for all women to know about, so they can [illegible] there are some sort of freak.

For the past 10 years, I have just had these mild [illegible] abnormalities I just brushed them off. [illegible] no big deal. Things such as having irregular menstrual periods since I began menstruating, [illegible] unprotected sex as a teenager and never getting [illegible] fluids secreting from my breasts even [illegible] never getting pregnant, having acne and being overweight as a [illegible] teen.

[illegible] 18 years old, maybe the hardest thing to deal with has been having abnormal hair growth on my neck. Fed up and sick of plucking, last year I decided to go to University Health Services to talk to a doctor. She had my hormone levels tested, and we found out I have a high level of male hormones, particularly testosterone and [illegible] low levels of estrogen, the female hor-

Sex-iversity

Sara Brumfield & Winnie Chen

[illegible] referred to a fertility doctor to further tests, [illegible] learned that I have Polycystic Ovary Syndrome [illegible] would explain all of my so-called female [illegible] another side effect is infertility, but [illegible] conceive with fertility drugs if you want [illegible].

[illegible] Are there other female students [illegible] symptoms? Is it hereditary? When [illegible] it preventable? Is it related to your [illegible]?

[illegible] you can obtain on PCOS would be [illegible].

[illegible] addressed an important and relatively [illegible] medical condition that is not widely [illegible] in communities of young women at [illegible]. You've listed symptoms I think [illegible] have experienced or have had people [illegible] have experienced and can relate to.

[illegible] shown that PCOS affects women during [illegible] reproductive years. About 30 percent of [illegible] symptoms of PCOS. Five percent to [illegible] women between the ages of 20 and 40 [illegible] addition to the symptoms you've mentioned, [illegible] also a correlation with diabetes for [illegible]. Studies have also been known to become [illegible] often show a presence of an abnormal [illegible].

[illegible] a wide range of symptoms, and because [illegible] considered a syndrome and not a disease, [illegible] the cause of PCOS is still unclear, and [illegible] cure." However, there are various [illegible] to relieve symptoms and preventative [illegible] long-term complications.

[illegible] treatable medical condition and has been [illegible] at different rates (both early and grad- [illegible] concluded that if a woman has had an irregular [illegible] for over two years, she should see her [illegible] the possibility of PCOS. Like all medical [illegible], it's always good to detect things sooner rather [illegible].

[illegible] treatment and detection are obviously very [illegible] to every woman, it is also extremely important [illegible] that those symptoms do not feel they are a [illegible] in any way. All of us have differences [illegible] psychologically, and "normal" is an ambiguous [illegible]. PCOS or symptoms connected with it [illegible] the same no one should feel embarrassed.

[illegible] you were willing to share your experi- [illegible] gulfs in the future, other women will [illegible] their symptoms may be something more [illegible] that above all, they are neither alone nor [illegible].

[illegible] information, contact your physician or organization like the Polycystic Ovarian Syndrome [illegible] (pcosupport.org). Research can also be [illegible] accredited medical site like WebMD at [illegible] as well as on various search engines [illegible] from where such sites get their information.

[illegible] article largely came from WebMD.

[illegible] and Winnie Chen are Collegian [illegible].

Latest Hollywood fairytale needs a fairy godmother of its own

By JOHNNY DONALDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ladies and Gentlemen. I have seen "The Princess Diaries," and "What A Girl Wants" is no "Princess Diaries." Instead, it's a sluggish and sugary little girl fairytale that offers nothing more than a repeat of "The Princess Diaries" minus its wit and vigor. "What a Girl Wants" should have a better script and better material. Hope as we may, it does not.

The one saving grace "What a Girl Wants" offers is a cast that makes this glossy fantasy a bit easier to endure. Amanda Bynes, the popular Nickelodeon teen star, shows star potential in her first cinematic leading role. Colin Firth turns out to be the perfect charming, stammering rival for Hugh Grant. Too bad the movie straightjackets them into a fluffy bore that covers everything in coating of cliches.

Bynes plays Daphne Reynolds, a sunny, independent New York teen who jets off to London behind her

Continued on page 7

'What a Girl Wants'
Directed by Dennie Gordon
Starring Amanda Bynes, Colin Firth
Warner Brothers
Rated PG
101 mins.

New thriller 'Phone Booth' takes its toll on our senses

By JAKE D. LEWIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Phone Booth" is a relatively simple story, almost too much so, but this voyeuristic thriller seems to press most of the right buttons with its audience. Bad boy Colin Farrell plays Stu Shepard, a cocky publicity agent who is considering cheating on his wife of just one year. Stu wears expensive Italian clothes to hide his insecurity, and takes off his wedding band when he makes a daily phone call to his maybe-mistress from what is reported by an unknown narrator as the last actual phone booth in New York City.

On the day before the booth is to be torn down, a madman with a super-duper rifle wants to play an evil joke on Stu. If he hangs up the phone, the crazy guy will kill him. The only way Stu can get out of the trouble is to admit to himself and the world (because the media shows up right away) that he's an unfaithful, self-centered, lying jerk. It's no joke, either. The sniper takes target practice on a semi-innocent bystander, making it look like Stu pulled the trigger, and soon we see his defenses come down in order to act – to save himself.

Kiefer Sutherland, but off his success with the TV show "24," has the most difficult role to play in the film, besting that of Colin Farrell. Sutherland plays the unnamed man with the plan (whom I'll call Mr. X for all intents and purposes). The viewer never really sees Mr. X – only hears his voice, so the bar is set relatively high for him to successfully pull off a bad guy routine without the use of body language or other skills actors employ. It's a treat to see him be so evil in contrast to "24's" Jack Bauer who would give his life to save the world. Stu

Continued on page 7

'Phone Booth'
Directed by Joel Schumacher
Starring Colin Farrell, Kiefer Sutherland
Fox 2000
Rated R
80 mins.

Breuer on schedule for Fine Arts Center show

ONE OF THE FUNNIEST [illegible] the Will Ferrell era of [illegible] Night Live," is coming to [illegible] Center Wednesday [illegible] Jim Breuer will visit Amherst [illegible] to Lighten Up Comedy [illegible].

[illegible] is known from "SNL" for [illegible] Goat Boy character and as Joe [illegible] of "The Joe Pesci Show." His [illegible] include a role after leaving [illegible] that Brian from "Half-[illegible] Story," then, he has done [illegible] Comedy Central and had [illegible] roles in movies such as [illegible] MC, "Crooked Lines" and [illegible] Dummy.

Launching his career reveals [illegible] hyperactive comedian still [illegible] a love for stand up. Breuer, a native of Valley Stream, NY has a [illegible] lineup for the show Wednesday. According to Jim Breuer.com, he will provide his audience with updated versions of Goat Boy and Joe Pesci and magic segments with his traveling band.

"You rock hard and laugh harder," Breuer reported online of the new routine.

Tickets for the event are available at the FAC box office for $5. The show, sponsored by UPC, begins Wednesday at 8 p.m.

Reid Davenport

The ladies bring advice on proper party behavior

Running with Scissors

Melissa Hammel & Lizzy Nielsen

Let's face it, parties are a way of life in college, and like everything else, there are rules of etiquette on how to both throw a party and how to behave at one. So, once again the ladies of "Running with Scissors" are here to give you some advice on the best way to handle the party scene.

THE RULES OF DD

Always have a designated driver. Always. No one wants to be left at the end of the night stumbling around a stranger's apartment looking for a ride back home. Be sure you decide on a designated driver before everyone starts drinking rather than force the least drunk person to play chauffeur to everyone else. Furthermore, if you are the designated driver, then don't drink. Seems like a no-brainer, but still often people fail.

THE HOOK-UP FACTOR

If you are at a good party, chances are there will be members of the opposite sex in attendance. This is overall a good thing. Maximize your opportunities to hook up at all costs. However, don't do so in the home of the party's host. No one wants to see you slobbering on a complete stranger on the couch and serving as the party entertainment. Also you may want to avoid hooking up in bedrooms that are not your own for fear that you may give either the host or the other partygoers a heart attack. If you do desire to hook up, do so in the privacy of your own home or car.

DRESS THE PART

Similar to all of our other columns, we will once again touch upon the importance of dressing well and adhering to the rules of general personal hygiene when attending a party. Always shower before you go out and use some deodorant. Also you might want to also try dressing well. Don't show up to someone's house in a pair of knee-high boots and a leather skirt or dressed as though you are ready to attend an 80s disco club. Simply put, try to dress to impress while at the same avoiding dressing like an idiot.

NEVER SHOW UP WITH NOTHING

Momma always told us you should never visit someone's house empty handed. This includes parties. Most likely, the host or hostess is providing alcohol and some food. Bringing some of your own to contribute to the fun is always a good idea, and shows that you care. Spare $10 and grab a bottle of cheap wine or vodka, or bring some party food such as chips or cookies. Don't be greedy. You'll end up with no friends and no more party invites that way. On the same wavelength, always offer to contribute to the booze fund. Alcohol's expensive, and even if you don't have to pay, it is always better to offer.

FOOD SUPPLY

It's a proven fact that once people get substantial amounts of alcohol in their systems, they develop a dire need for food. If you're hosting a party, have some finger foods like chips or cookies on hand as when those Inebriation munchies kick in. Partygoers will happily be the source

Continued on page 7

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England
COMPILED BY CAMERON J. WOODS

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. – The Young at Heart Chorus is celebrating their 21st anniversary with performances at the Academy of Music on Thursday, April 10 at 8 p.m. and on Sunday, April 13 at 2 p.m.

The group has been on a wild ride for the past five years, according to their show schedule; they went to Rotterdam, Netherlands with a show called "Road to Heaven" in 1997. With a swell of positive feedback, they have returned to Europe 10 times since, performing in London, Berlin, Munich, Wales, Norway, Ghent and Brugge, Belgium, Zurich, Utrecht and a second trip to Rotterdam. They have also performed at the Festival des Ameriques in Montreal.

The show at the Academy will feature new material (everything from Purple Haze to U2's "One") and some music from past productions. Tickets are $10 in advance and $15 at the door and are available at State St. Fruit Store in Northampton, Cooper's Corner in Florence, For the Record in Amherst and Mom and Rico's in Springfield.

For more information, call 413-587-1269 or go to www.youngatheartchorus.com.

GREENFIELD, Mass. – The Pioneer Valley Symphony will perform "The Art of the Violin" concert and art exhibit, featuring violinist Nurit Pacht, on Saturday, April 12 at 7:30 p.m. This performance will be held in the Greenfield High School Auditorium, located at 1 Lenox Ave.

Pieces in this performance will include Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini Overture," Max Bruch's "Violin Concerto No. 1" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6." An art exhibit of 12 violins, transformed by Eric Carle, Barry Moser, Robert Markey and others, will also be featured.

Tickets range from $18 to $5. For more information, call (413) 773-3664 or (800) 681-7870.

GREENFIELD, Mass. – The final casting call for the Country Players rendition of "A Chorus Line," for males only, will be held on, April 13 at 7 p.m. at Dance Fever Studios (1 Osgood St.)

The production premier will be held in mid-July at the Shea Theater in Turners Falls, with rehearsals beginning in May. Please note this show has some very adult themes and its roles may contain some profanity and/or sexual content. For further information, call 413 772-8631.

BOSTON – The Museum of Fine Arts Film Program will host a special screening of filmmaker Valerie Weiss' debut film "Dance by Design" on Saturday, April 19 at 11 a.m. The Harvard University Dudley Film Program wrote "Dance by Design" collaboratively. Over the past 10 years, Dr. Weiss has directed numerous plays in New Jersey and Boston. In 1999, she founded The Dudley Film Program to provide an opportunity for Harvard graduate students to learn the craft of filmmaking as well as to produce their own short films.

Dancers from the film "Dance by Design" will perform live following the screening. Local choreographers will lead the dancers Blonder and Melissa Costa. Both Blonder and Costa teach and perform at various venues around Boston, including The Dance Complex and the South Shore Arts Center. Tapes and images are available.

Tickets are $8 for MFA members, seniors and students and $9 for general admission. The rate for groups of 20 or more is $6. For more information, call (617) 369-3306.

BOSTON – The Museum of Fine Arts Film Program will premiere filmmaker Laurie Kahn-Leavitt's documentary "Tupperware!" on Thursday, April 24 at 8:15 p.m. and on Saturday, April 26 at 1 p.m.

Laurie Kahn-Leavitt's production company, Blueberry Hill Productions, was founded in 1992. Her first independent venture was the film "A Midwife's Tale." Based on the Pulitzer Prize winning book, the film was broadcast on PBS as the opening show of the 10th season of "The American Experience." It won a national Emmy for outstanding non-fiction.

During the 80s and early 90s, Kahn-Leavitt worked on many acclaimed documentary series, including "The American Experience" (senior associate producer), "Eyes on the Prize: America's Civil Rights Years 1954-1965" (senior researcher) and "Frontline Special Report: Crisis in Central America" (assistant producer).

Tupperware is a plastic product, a company, a marketing phenomenon and an enduring icon. A Tupperware party takes place somewhere in the world every 2.5 seconds, the show's press materials report.

"Tupperware!" tells of how the concept first began and is reported to trace the story of Earl Silas Tupper, an ambitious but reclusive small-town inventor, and Brownie Wise, the self-taught saleswoman who built an empire out of bowls that burped.

The film includes rare footage collected from basements, attics and back rooms. Included are color home movies taken by Tupperware Ladies and Jubilee footage shot by Tupperware Home Parties as well as ads and television excerpts from the period. The footage is interwoven with humorous stories told by Tupperware Ladies who witnessed the company's early years.

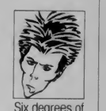
Tickets are $8 for MFA members, seniors and students and $9 for general admission. For more information, call (617) 369-3306.

Kiefer Sutherland brings chills in 'Phone Booth'

Continued from page 6

Shepard could learn a thing or two from Sutherland's alter ego and Sutherland works his rough, purring voice to get the point across.

Like Kevin Spacey in "Se7en," or that unknown fat guy in "8 MM," Mr. X is one of those realistic wackos who might appear on the news. And the story "Phone Booth" describes isn't a far cry from the recent sniper attacks in the Washington D.C. area, which was what originally delayed the film's release from its scheduled date last fall. This is the least of my worries with the film, however. After all, art imitates life.



Mr. X explains his reason for putting Stu in this pickle as a ploy to get Shepard to admit his faults and confess to his wife. Stu asks him, "Why me? Why not a child molester or a rapist?" While I don't approve of Stu's philandering, it's still a hard concept to buy. And why does Mr. X take such a strong interest in this nothing of a man? Is it just to show the arbitrary nature of it all – to make it more terrifying to the viewer? It makes you wonder.

These minor details don't detract from the movie's simple, rainy day entertainment value (especially when you get the discounted first-show-of-the-day admission.) Don't be deterred, as some are, from its 88-minute running time. When the film wraps up, you will agree you've seen enough. Since the whole film has one setting (the phone booth and the street around it,) it would be monotonous if it were any longer.

Actually, if Joel Schumacher's directions weren't so agile, "Phone Booth" would be disconnected from the audience sooner than that. It goes to show that in a season of suspense movies that don't let up on the scene-changing and repetitive storylines (like the reeent "Cradle 2 the Grave"), we can have fun with one as undemanding as "Phone Booth."

Game Two; Round Five

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon

Jake D. Lewis

Last week's puzzle:
KEVIN BACON & MARY-KATE AND/OR ASHLEY OLSEN

It seems that this week's puzzle stumped several people, and I received quite a lot of varied responses.

(Only feature films/direct-to-video movies were accepted. Television credits were not, nor were as-yet-unreleased films.)

GOLD SOLUTION: SHORTEST ROUTE, FASTEST TIME – 15 POINTS
Kevin Bacon was in "Diner" (1982) with Steve Guttenberg;
Steve Guttenberg was in "It Takes Two" (1995) with Mary-Kate & Ashley Olsen.
Submitted by Adam Shapiro
Ball State Univ. Junior, Theatre
Total Accumulated Points: 19

SILVER SOLUTION: FASTEST TIME ONLY – 10 POINTS
Kevin Bacon was in "Wild Things" (1998) with Denise Richards;
Denise Richards was in "Drop Dead Gorgeous" (1999) with Kirstie Alley;
Kirstie Alley was in "It Takes Two" (1995) with Mary-Kate & Ashley Olsen.
Submitted by Daniel Reiche
UMass Freshman, Undeclared
Total Accumulated Points: 28

BRONZE WINNER: MOST CREATIVE/THEMATIC ROUTE – 5 POINTS
"TV Stars"
Kevin Bacon is in "Apollo 13" (1995) with Tom Hanks ("Bosom Buddies");
Tom Hanks was in "Bonfire of the Vanities" (1990) with Bruce Willis ("Moonlighting");
Bruce Willis was in "Look Who's Talking" (1989) with Kirstie Alley ("Cheers");
Kirstie Alley was in "It Takes Two" (1995) with Mary-Kate & Ashley Olsen ("Full House").
Submitted by Mike Ouellette
UMass Senior, English
Total Accumulated Points: 9

HONORABLE MENTION: ALL OTHER PLAYERS WITH VALID SOLUTIONS – 1 POINT
Jennifer Eastman-Lawrence (23), Marcos Bachman (19), Marty Norden (19), Camille Torres (9), Mike Dunn (5), Justin Hiller (5), Melanie Chase (3), Conor Shanahan (3), Matthew Helman (3), Adam Polanger (3), KC Strehorn (2), Erin Wallace (2), Jonathan Brett (1), Joe Charter (1), Betsy Stone (1).

This game ends on April 25.

A 'Running with Scissors' party able to indulge in some Doritos. If you don't supply food or don't ask people to bring food, you could end up with some cranky drunks on your hands.

Continued from page 6

CLEAN HOUSE

If you're having a party, nobody wants to see a toilet with nasty "calling cards" all over it. Clean your bathroom, and make sure there's an ample supply of toilet paper and hand soap. Make the extra effort to vacuum and take out your trash. Nobody wants to go to a disgusting, smelly house or apartment for a party that smells like ass. So scrape the fungus out of your sink and fire up your dishwasher and try not to be a slob for a few hours.

PUKE AND WANDER

The worst thing you can do at a party is puke and wander. This anomaly has several variations – all of them deplorable. The first is the "no flush" move, where the culprit overdoes the booze and forgets to finish with the clean up flush. This is totally no good and – if caught – should result in party expulsion.

The second indoor variation is the "while walking: no cleanup." One party saw this executed in perfect stride – not a step was missed – and the purger kept on traveling, paying no heed to his leftovers.

The third would be the "outside: poor locale" move where the courtesy of taking the nausea outside is met head on with a sidewalk, patio or other place of public gathering. Keeping post-drinking expulsion to the bushes and overgrowth is key.

Vomiting is expected at parties – the puke and rally is the biggest defense of this claim – but have the decency to straighten up after your infraction. And if you can't do it, find a friend, confidant or hetero-lifemate to help you out.

• • •

With these simple guidelines, you can throw or attend a successful party. Avoid our advice, and fear the wrath of the consequences. As usual, call us shallow, but we know we're right.

Melissa Hammel and Lizzy Nielsen are Collegian Columnists. Scott Eldridge II, a guest Running with Scissors "lady," contributed to this column.

'What a Girl Wants' is not delivered mother's back to meet her long-absent father. The father happens to be Lord Washburn (Firth), a royal looking to further his political career by gunning for a seat in the House of Commons.

Continued from page 6

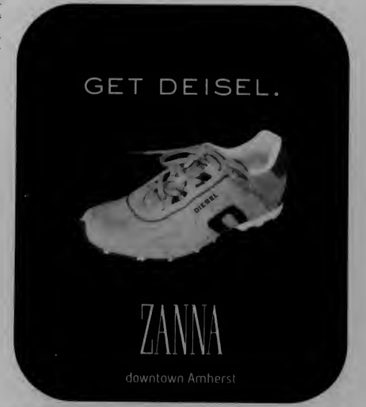
Is there really anyone out there who can't see where this is heading?

Daphne will have to contend with a snooty stepmother and stepsister who try to do everything in their power to cause her to fail. She will uneasily try to reconcile her outgoing American ways with the stiff upper lip attitude of the Brits. She will win the heart of the cute, cool boy (appealing newcomer Oliver James). Her spirit will draw her closer to her father, who will relax and learn to appreciate life, rather than the responsibility of power. In short, "What A Girl Wants" goes places other movies have gone before and better.

With her chipmunk cheeks and big, wide eyes, Bynes shows plenty of what the movie asks for: spunk, sweetness, sass and vulnerability. Bynes is charismatic. What she doesn't necessarily show is the ability to handle more emotional material – not that Bynes is asked here to handle anything more. Firth is given even less to juggle, though he maintains his dignity even when he has to "rock out" in leather pants.



There's much wrong with "What A Girl Wants." The clumsy staging of the big comic moments robs the movie of humor and momentum. The screenplay indulges in cheap stereotyping of British and American attitudes. There are times when Bynes lapses into mugging rather than acting. And the movie overall has the musty, stale fee.

"The Princes Diaries" was a true fairy tale. This just feels like teenybopper junk.

Introducing
Natalee Prince
Ethnic Hairstylist

Casimir Kocot
79 So. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
413.256.3440

Gain International Experience, Adventure and Knowledge -- Enrich Your Teaching Career
Jump start your career by joining more than 6,500 Volunteers now working around the globe to make the world a better place one community at a time in countries such as Paraguay, Botswana, Mali, Tonga and Guatemala. Get hands-on experience, benefits, and the adventure of a life time.
Wednesday, April 16, 2003
Visit us at the Educator's Career Fair
Peace Corps
Redefine your world
www.peacecorps.gov
800-424-8580

Munchie Madness 3-6PM
TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Veggie Potato Skins $4.25 4.18
Nachos Especial $4.25 4.18
Sweet Potato Fries $3.75 3.38
1/2 PRICE!
TJudies
FOCMP Welcome Here
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
www.tjudiesrestaurant.com

UMass CAMPUS RECREATION
SIGN UP TIME TO ENTER
Swim Meet (M/W)..... A.S.A.P.
Weekend Flag Football (M/C)..... A.S.A.P.
Weekend Lacrosse (W)..... A.S.A.P.
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY
Tennis Doubles (M/W/C)..... 4/22
Quickball, Diamond Derby (M/W)..... 4/22
World Cup Soccer (M/W)..... 4/22
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: http://www.umass.edu/umim

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
Results you can feel.
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

Neil Lundberg and UMass shook off a shaky first period to dispatch UMBC and improve their league record to 2-1 on the season. Lundberg collected one goal in the effort.

Minutemen rebound

Continued from page 10

boosted us up because they just got a goal."

"When we got in the locker room we said that has no bearing on what we did in the second quarter," Cannella said. "We outscored them 6-1 in the second quarter. That's just something that happens to us."

Bill Schell was yet again the backbone of a defense that was void without senior Tom Fallon, who has missed five games with a groin injury. Schell made 15 saves to seal the victory for UMass.

"Billy was excellent," Cannella said. "Hopefully he'll continue to improve every day. He was solid specifically in the third and fourth quarters, he was excellent. If your goalie does that and we can shoot the way we shot, you'll be successful."

Cannella also felt that the competitive play in UMass' last two games – Saturday's win over UMBC and last weekend's loss to Penn State – were indicative of the power in the ECAC conference this season.

"That's a very good team that we beat [Saturday] on their home field," Cannella said. "So [the conference] is very competitive. It'll continue to be very competitive. Hopefully in the end, that will pay off for the entire league."

Jim Pignatiello contributed to this story.

Sports briefs: Hillenbrand carries Sox

Continued from page 10

(AP) – Shea Hillenbrand homered, doubled twice and had a career-high six RBIs as the Boston Red Sox beat Rodrigo Lopez and the Baltimore Orioles 12-2 Sunday.

Nomar Garciaparra homered, scored four runs and fell a single short of the cycle. He doubled in the first inning, tripled in the third, walked in the fifth and hit a two-run shot in the sixth.

Bidding to become the 20th Boston player to hit for the cycle, Garciaparra flied out in the eighth.

Hillenbrand has 15 RBIs in seven games. Manny Ramirez drove in two runs and extended his hitting streak to a 20 games, matching a career best.

Tim Wakefield (1-0) allowed two runs and four hits in six innings. The knuckleballer walked three and struck out three.

By winning two of three from Baltimore and going 3-1 at Tampa Bay, Boston has won its first two road series for only the fifth time in franchise history.

The Red Sox scored eight runs against Lopez (0-1), who went 4-0 with a 2.48 ERA against Boston as a rookie last year. This time, the right-hander yielded nine hits and three walks in 4 2-3 innings.

Jay Gibbons homered for the Orioles, who went 2-4 in their opening homestand.

Up 4-1, the Red Sox pulled away with a four-run fifth. After Kevin Millar doubled in a run, Lopez issued an intentional walk to Trot Nixon to load the bases before Hillenbrand grounded a three-run double inside the third base line.

Garciaparra hit his second home run of the season off Rick Bauer, and Gibbons homered in the Orioles' half.

Hillenbrand hit a two-run shot off Kerry Ligtenberg in the ninth.

Boston went up 1-0 in the first on successive two-out doubles by Garciaparra and Ramirez. Doubles by Nixon and Hillenbrand and an RBI single by Jeremy Giambi made it 3-0 in the second.

Garciaparra led off the third with a triple and scored on a sacrifice fly by Ramirez. Brook Fordyce doubled in a run in the Orioles' half.

Notes: Giambi's RBI single ended a 1-for-16 skid....Bauer retired the first 14 batters he faced this season before walking Todd Walker ahead of Garciaparra in the sixth....Orioles SS Jose Morban made his major league debut, entering as a defensive replacement in the eighth.

UMass softball, baseball home games cancelled

University of Massachusetts softball Head Coach Elaine Sortino has announced that the doubleheader scheduled for today with Temple has been cancelled due to the ice storm that hit the area this weekend.

This marks the second cancellation of the weekend after the Minutewomen's doubleheader with Saint Joseph's was cancelled on Friday. Under Atlantic 10 rules, since the game cannot be played on its scheduled date or on the make-up date (tomorrow), it cannot be made up.

Massachusetts will host Central Connecticut on Tuesday, April 8. The doubleheader will begin at 3:00 p.m.

The baseball series between the University of Massachusetts and Xavier University scheduled for this weekend was also cancelled due to the weather.

The two teams currently have no plans to make up the games. The Minutemen are scheduled to return to action on Tuesday, April 8, when it plays at Holy Cross at 3:00 p.m.

Information from UMass Media Relations was used for this story.

UMass senior Tim Turner is currently playing with the Cincinnati Cyclones of the ECHL.

PLAN AHEAD FOR NEXT YEAR

Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Collegian Sports

We cover sports by committee...

Sports@DailyCollegian.com

THANK YOU HOCKEY FANS!

Dear UMass Students, Faculty & Staff:

The Coaching Staff and Players want to express their utmost appreciation for the great support you gave our team this past season. With your help and enthusiasm we hope to continue to represent "THE MASS ATTACK" in a positive way! Thanks again and we all look forward to seeing you next year!

Sincerely,

Toot Cahoon

Don "Toot" Cahoon
Ice Hockey Coach

When beginning

an exploration of unknown lands, challenges arise. Winds are unpredictable. Storms hit unexpectedly. Uncertainty rules. Superstitions abound. Why explore alone? USAC, a consortium of 27 U.S. universities has berths* available for stout-hearted individuals. With programs in 19 countries and as many years of experience, no one is better equipped to help you reach your study abroad goals. USAC. Your gateway to the world.

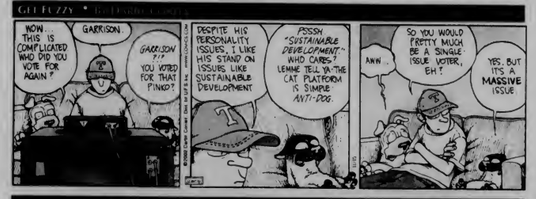
Your Gateway to the World

Australia
Chile • China • Czech Republic
Costa Rica • Denmark • England
France • Germany • Ghana • Ireland
Israel • Italy • Malta • New Zealand • Scotland • Spain
Sweden • Thailand

University credit
Scholarships available
Language classes at all levels
Month, summer, semester & yearlong programs
Wide range of academic courses
Internships
Field trips & tours
Small classes

UNIVERSITY STUDIES ABROAD CONSORTIUM USAC

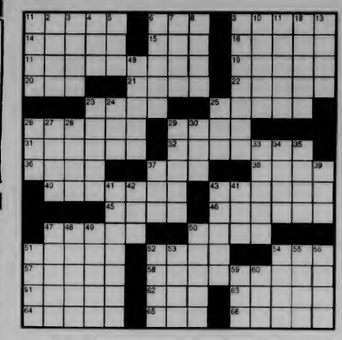
*Translation: Apply now! Spaces fill up quickly!



BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Lincoln Gerard

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley



GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Leiknes

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • By Connie Fox

ACROSS
1 Russet potato
6 ___ choy
9 Birthday number
14 Spock portrayer
15 Pizarro's quest
16 Go along with
17 No-cost item (2 wds.)
19 Photo shop output
20 Authorizes
21 Not taken
22 Tiny tropical ants
23 Tussles
25 Quotes
26 Noblesse ___
29 Thor's father
31 Went belly-up
32 Military unit
36 Get steamed up
37 "The Thin Man" co-star
38 Throw hard
40 Spring fest site
43 Jungle queen
45 Fairy types
46 Chariot
47 Western capital
50 Lemon peel
51 Plants with fronds
53 Made yarn
54 Young grizzly
57 Kelps
58 Office
61 Hits
62 Collection
63 Theater part
64 Canvas shelters
65 Singer ___ Tomie
66 Tidy up

DOWN
1 The skinny
2 Highlander's dagger
3 ISU location
4 Work the soil
5 Popeye's Olive ___
6 Femur and ulna
7 As Derek film
8 Art ___ cosmetic
9 Barking
10 Wading bird
11 Originate
12 Pays the landlady
13 Mounts gemstones
18 Prodded on
23 NBA coach Pat ___
24 Mollow
25 Rocky 102
26 Switch position
27 Oz creator
28 Kind of bean
29 Woodwinds
30 Thirsty
33 Out in front
34 Country club
35 Osprey kin
37 Attorney's org.
39 ___ Cruces, N.M.
41 Jawa
42 Soap product
43 Pussyfoot
44 Bebop
47 Debutante
48 Ballpark fixture
49 Not appropriate
50 Part of FBI'D
51 In a hurry
52 Want to be paid
53 Corncake
54 Box
55 NCAA Brains
56 Hair ___ (former fan)
59 Felt boot
60 Small, in Dogpatch

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-1-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

HOROSCOPES

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
You can have things you want on schedule today.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
A late start lets you build much needed confidence.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
WARNING: you may lack patience today.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You're going to be more stubborn today than usual.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You're not about to give up until the bitter end today.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
A special gift may come your way today. Pay more attention!

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Take care that you aren't so objective so you cannot be sympathetic.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Be forthright and honest today to reach your goals.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
This is a good day to get more practical and realistic.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You must be sure that you know what you're getting into.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Someone is likely to face you with a challenge today.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Why do you insist on telling only part of the story? Let it all out!

THE HARP IRISH PUB
THE DECK IS COMING!
Monday
$5.95 all you can eat buffet
8:30 p.m. -11:00 p.m.
Tuesday
Harp Pub Trivia Night
9 p.m.
Wednesday
Reggae Night
Thursday
The Missing Lance Project
Saturday
HiNus

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

MONDAY
- High: 35
- Low:23

TUESDAY
- High: 41
- Low: 26

WEDNESDAY
- High: 47
- Low: 25

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Leafy Vegetable Soup
- Pizza Casserole
- Santa Fe Chicken
- Red Beans (vegan)

DINNER
- Leafy Vegetable Soup
- Mediterranean Cod
- Szechuan Beef & Broccoli
- Szechuan Tofu & Broccoli (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald Ling
COPY EDITOR
Scott Eldridge, II
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION STAFF
Shannon Farrington / Scott Ciruso
Fedrich Torres

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"A true war story is never moral...If a story seems moral, do not believe it. If at the end of the war story you feel uplifted, or if you feel that some small bit of rectitude has been salvaged from the larger waste, then you have been made victim of a very old and terrible lie."
- Tim O'Brien
"The Things They Carried"

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups: Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risk. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Term Paper Editing! Editing performed by professors and graduate students Visit us at www.paperscheck.com or call us toll free 866-693-EDIT

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Apt. located in Brandywine Furnished Apt. Seeking Female Roommate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sandy @ 413-546-0489

Sublet one Bedroom. Cliffside, month of May. Can continue lease if desired. Price Negs. E-mail silverjulie@hotmail.com

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? COME TO THE COMPLEX FAIR, WED APRIL 9, 10 TO 3 ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE. SPONSORED BY COMMUTER SERVICES, 428 STUDENT UNION WWW.CSHRC.ORG

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlinks.ohrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlinks.ohrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

BMW 528 E 1987 Good Shape $125000 413-531-7580

89 Volkswagon jetta standard good condition driven everyday $600 or best offer 413-549-3545

Honda Accord LX 1992 Great Shape $1500 obo 413-253-1456

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors – Town of Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, experienced working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. old. 5 range for both positions: $8.19-9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week; June 30-Aug. 15 Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept. 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

EMPLOYMENT

WSI/Lifeguards The Town of Amherst, Department of Leisure Services and Supplemental Education (LSSE) Aquatics Program is now accepting WSI applications for summer 2003 season. All Applicants must possess current WSI and Lifeguard certifications. Previous experience preferred, $8.19-9.48 hr. Application deadline: 4/21. Applications are available from the Town Hall Human Resources Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Opportunity Employer

Economic / Business Development Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

Fall internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands on experience in the legal field- work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary; training provided. Deadline to begin application process is 4/22/03. Contact the Legal Services Office- 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Need Free Photos? Professional Photography students seek models of all races, ages for portfolio assignments. No experience required. Email for details @ msgriswold@yahoo.com

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

HOUSE FOR SALE

Large 4 bedroom house in Hadley 1 mile and 3/4 to UMass. Available June 1 $2,650 Call Lincoln Real Estate 253-7879

5 Bedroom plus Newer house minutes from UMass $2700/month 548-8800

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1678

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUBLET

Pufton Sublet from June 1st, August 31st 3beds 2baths 1140 per month Call Mark 253-1479

TRAVEL

STS America's number one student tour operator is now hiring on-campus reps 2003-04 18006484849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

YOUR AD HERE

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Butler an All-American

UMass star only A-10 player honored by Associated Press

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts senior center Jennifer Butler was named an honorable mention All-American by the Associated Press, becoming the first Minutewoman to be given the honor since Sue Peters was a Kodak Regional Selection in 1980.

The only Atlantic 10 player picked for the team, Butler finished her Maroon and White career in style. The Brooklyn, N.Y. native led the nation in rebounding at 14.7 per game, and was second in the conference in scoring, averaging 17.5 per game.

The A-10 Defensive Player of the Year, Butler led the conference in steals, swiping 2.43 per game, and was fifth in blocks, swatting away an average of 1.25 per game.

Butler, who is also a 2002-03 Kodak All-American finalist and first-team All-Atlantic 10, ranks fifth on the all-time scoring list for the Minutewomen, having scored 1,490 points. Also the school's all-time leading rebounder with 1,328, she is the only Minutewoman to ever reach the 1,000-plateau in both points and rebounds.

She is also first on the Maroon and White's career list in free throws attempted with 688, steals with 239, and rebounding average with 11.6 per game. She is also the A-10 career leader with 719 rebounds in regular season league games.

Butler posted a double-double in 23 games this season, including three 30-plus point performances and four 20-plus rebounding games.

She was a four-time Atlantic 10 Player of the Week and three-time Dinn Brothers/UMass Athlete of the Week selection.

On December 28, 2002, she became the first player in conference history to grab 30 rebounds in a game. Her 30 boards against the University of Florida were also the fifth highest total in NCAA Division I history and the most by any Gator opponent.

Two weeks later, her career-high 31 points set a Mullins Center record for points by a women's basketball player as the Minutewomen defeated the Temple Owls in overtime.

The Minutewomen, who surged out to an 8-1 start, finished the season at 14-14 and were eliminated by La Salle in the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament.

"Being an All-American is an amazing feat for Jen, and it is well deserved," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "She has had a tremendous career here, and this is a very fitting way for it to end. She should certainly be very proud of herself, and this award speaks to how great of a player she is and how hard she's worked to get there. It's just a great honor for any basketball player."

"She's an extremely dedicated player who gives her all to me and her teammates, and really hope she enjoys this. It truly is a testament to her abilities as a player, to her team, and to the Atlantic 10."

GERALD LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

The Associated Press named Massachusetts senior center Jennifer Butler an honorable mention All-American. The nation's leading rebounder in 2002-2003, Butler guided the Minutewomen to a 14-14 record and leaves Amherst as the school's all-time leading rebounder.

Minutemen back on track

Fiore, Glenz lead Maroon and White past UMBC

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

BALTIMORE, Md. – Bouncing back is something that every team of national prominence has to do. Following last week's 11-10 loss to Penn State, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team (8-1, 2-1 Eastern College Athletic Conference) was faced with having to bounce back in only its second road contest of the season against yet another underrated conference foe.

And after a first quarter where Maryland-Baltimore County (4-5 1-3 ECAC) held the ball for a large majority of time and held a 5-1 advantage, things looked somewhat bleak for the Minutemen.

"I think we were still playing with last week's mentality – we were still in last week's game, we didn't get out of it yet," senior midfielder Chris Fiore said. "Once we got a goal on the board it was back to playing lacrosse again."

And then the floodgates opened. The Minutemen outscored the Retrievers 10-5 the rest of the way en route to an 11-8 victory, including a six-goal run at the beginning of the second quarter to pull away from UMBC to end the first half.

Fiore (three goals, one assist) and Kevin Glenz (two goals, two assists) led the Maroon and White with four points apiece, while Kevin Leveille and Jeff Zywicki tacked on two goals each and an assist of their own. In total, six different Minutemen scored in the contest.

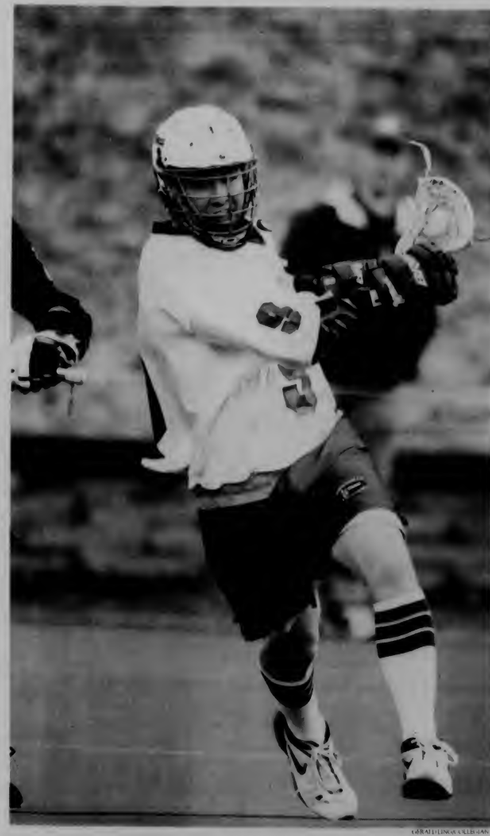
UMass	11
UMBC	8

"Anything to bounce back from last week and give the guys a little more confidence," Fiore said in reference to the importance of the game. "We started a little slow but once we got going it felt like we were getting back on track to our normal selves again so it was nice."

The Retrievers' in-tight zone defense took away most of the prime passing lanes for the UMass attack, and quickly collapsed on any Minutemen setting up in the slot. This forced the Maroon and White to change its strategy.

"We're not typically a patient team, so we just made sure our guys were patient with it," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "I told our guys to try to find the seams, move the ball one or two or three times, and we'll get open shots and fortunately we did."

"Usually when they are in a zone, they're trying to force us to shoot from the outside, and we don't mind shooting from the outside, but you'd like to get it easier," Fiore said. "But once we started shooting from the outside, and they started falling, it was like, why not shoot from the outside if they're going to give it to us?"



UMBC dominated the first quarter of action, outshooting the visitors by a 9-2 margin. Only a goal by Fiore with 4:13 to play prevented the Minutemen from finishing up the first with a zero on the scoreboard.

"UMBC came out, they were ready to play – we didn't win any faceoffs there at the beginning of the game," Cannella said. "We didn't have the ball until after the first couple of goals. If you don't have possession, you can't score. You can't ask the defense to continue to shut down people. UMBC took some great shots and they worked their offense. UMBC is a really good team."

But a six-goal run to start off the second frame staked the Minutemen to a 7-3 lead with 35 ticks left in the half. However, a late goal by Josh Gerber on a fast break trimmed the lead to three and cut off UMass' momentum going into the locker room.

"We scored six unanswered goals right before that," Fiore said. "It sucked, 15 seconds left and they scored a goal. It's not like we let up, they just got a lucky break…I don't think it really put us down at all, if anything, it just

Continued on page 8

GERALD LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Jeff Zywicki and the Minutemen managed to right their ship following an upset loss to Penn State last weekend, knocking off Maryland-Baltimore County 11-8 Saturday in ECAC play.

Mass Attack holds year-end banquet

The Massachusetts hockey team hosted its annual awards banquet Sunday afternoon at the Top of the Campus. The Minutemen celebrated a year in which they finished with an overall record of 19-17-1 and earned their first trip to the FleetCenter and the Hockey East Semifinals.

Awards included Rookie of the Year, presented to Stephen Werner, the Minuteman Award, presented to Tim Turner, the Jack Canniff "Unsung Hero" Award, presented to Mike Warner, Most Improved Player, presented to Jeff Lang, the Academic Award, presented to Peter Trovato, the Coaches' Awards, presented to Kelly Sickavish and Nick Kuiper, and the team's Most Valuable Player Award, presented to Thomas Pöck.

Turner a Cyclone

UMass captain Tim Turner is currently playing minor league hockey for the San Jose Sharks' East Coast Hockey League affiliate, the Cincinnati Cyclones. He currently has two points in three games.

Track teams come in first

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams both placed first at the Southern Connecticut State Invitational Outdoor Track Meet held at the Jess Dow Field and Moore Fieldhouse on Saturday afternoon. The Minutemen shared first place honors with the host school, SCSU, with 150 points each, while the women's team clinched first place with 168.50 points.

The Minutewomen were carried by five first place finishes on Saturday. Sophomore Christina Huff (Springfield, Mass.) claimed gold in two events in the team's first meet of the outdoor season, winning both the 100-meter dash (12.51) and the 200-meter dash (25.83). Junior Shannon Jackson (Bridgewater, Mass.) was victorious in the 100-meter high hurdles at 15.98, while junior Chanie Soares (New Bedford, Mass.) won the long jump at 18' 2-1/2". UMass also placed first in the 4x100 meter relay with a time of 50.12.

In the men's competition, UMass placed first in seven events. The Minutemen won two sprinting events when senior Kwesi Frimpong-Boaten (Accra, Ghana) won the 100-meter dash in 10.86 and freshman Chris Brayley (Chicopee, Mass.) took first place in the 200-meter dash in 22.46.

Junior John O'Neil (Reading, Mass.) clinched the gold in the 400-meter Intermediate hurdles at 55.25 and Robert Schumann won the 110-meter high hurdles at 15.82. Sophomore Henry Smith (Ellington, Conn.) was victorious in the triple jump at 44' 2-1/2".

The Minutemen tallied their last two first place finishes in the throwing events when senior Eric Uliano (Haverhill, Mass.) won the shot put with a mark of 53' 11-1/4" and sophomore Mike Carr (Rehoboth, Mass.) won the javelin throw when he hit the 177' 9" mark.

The UMass track and field teams will next compete on April 12 when they travel to Providence, R.I. for the Brown Invitational.

Men's Team Scores: 1. UMass, 150; 1. SCSU, 150; 3. Holy Cross, 103; 4. BC, 97; 5. Sacred Heart, 80; 6. Stony Brook, 72; 7. New Haven, 32; 8. Fordham, 29.

Women's Team Scores: 1. UMass, 168.50; 2. BC, 156.50; 3. Holy Cross, 116; 4. SCSU, 107; 5. Sacred Heart, 99; 6. Stony Brook, 68; 7. New Haven, 13; 8. Fordham, 7.

Continued on page 8

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 2003 · NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY · EST. 1890 · VOLUME CIX ISSUE 113

Gun fired on campus, third rape reported

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

The arrest of an intoxicated man who allegedly fired two shots with a handgun near Thompson Hall late Saturday night and the report of an acquaintance rape highlighted a busy weekend for the University of Massachusetts Police Department.

According to UMPD spokesman Jim Lyons, an officer patrolling the area around Thompson Hall Saturday night heard a loud bang. He called it in at 11:13 p.m. and investigated. Before arriving on the scene, a second bang was reported.

"He came upon a gentleman with handgun," Lyons said. "He was disarmed and arrested. It was alert work on the ball by that officer."

Chimaeze D. Ugwuegbu, 24, of 424 Great Rd. in Acton, Mass., was arrested and charged with multiple crimes, including discharging a firearm within 500 feet of a building, carrying a firearm on school grounds, possession of a firearm while intoxicated, and disorderly conduct while armed.

Lyons couldn't say why the gun was fired and could not recall a firearm being discharged for any reason earlier in the year.

The acquaintance rape, reported Sunday night at 10:46 p.m. in Kennedy Tower, was between two people who knew each other, Lyons said.

"There's no facts in dispute. The case is under investigation," Lyons said.

This is the third rape reported on campus this year. In October, a female in Chadbourne Hall reported that she was sexually assaulted in first floor bathroom at about 4:30 a.m.

In that incident, the victim told police that she was grabbed from behind while in the bathroom and assaulted by a man in black ski mask. The resident reported that she was eventually able to elude her attacker and escape to her room. According to Lyons, the woman immediately called UMPD and reported the incident.

The attacker in that incident was described as a tall, very thin male dressed in black clothes. Because of the ski mask, the victim was not able to get a look at the attacker's face. No arrest as of yet has been made.

Last year, at least five rapes were reported on campus.

Lyons said that it was the first weekend on duty for the new police cadets, and that they got to see a lot, with bad weather and a lot of police activity.

"The fact that it was a busy spring weekend with a lot going on made it a fast start for them," he said.

UMass students take on Dell

By Justin Chellman
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts recently joined other students on college campuses across the country in "The Computer Take Back Campaign" (CTBC) in an effort to pressure Dell Computer Corporation to take back discarded computers and other electronic waste that they manufactured.

Students hope that Dell will lead the way in the electronics industry towards a "sustainable solution to electronic waste or e-waste" through "full and physical producer take back."

"Dell's ad's target college age computer buyers, so as consumers, students can push for corporate accountability for electronic waste," said UMass alum Matt Kozuch, who helped spearhead the effort here on campus. "Computers and consumer electronics pose significant threats to public health and the environment because they contain lead, mercury, chromium, dioxin-like flame-retardants and other hazardous materials."

The CTBC hopes that by holding the manufacturers responsible for their waste, it would create a market incentive to reduce their costs by eliminating hazardous materials and designing products to be more durable, less toxic and easier to recycle. At this point, the Office of Waste Management, at the cost of the colleges and the students, collects most of the electonic waste from the University and the surrounding areas.

Dell has a new program that it announced in May called "Dell Exchange," which requires individual customers themselves to mail back their computers to the company.

"Consumers don't want to pay to mail back their computers when they are finished with them. IBM has a similar program that collected about 1,000 computers in two years, which is pathetic," said student Chris Montoya, who will also be bringing the CTBC resolution before AL ANA caucus. "After consumers have spent thousands of dollars on computer equipment, it is burdensome and inconvenient for them to individually mail back their dead machines. Requiring consumers to ship back their products creates a disincentive for participation in the program."

CTBC hopes that the ALANA caucus will pass along its resolution to the Student Government Association. From there they hope to have the support of the SGA and the University in pressuring Dell to adopt new methods in dealing with electronic waste. The resolution states that the University of Massachusetts has an institutional buying contract with Dell Computer Corporation, and as a major purchaser of computers and electronic equipment, UMass can significantly influence the practices of companies like Dell.

CTBC says that the University can do this by including in all future information technology equipment contracts clauses that require Dell to take back used equipment at the end of its useful life or at the end of the contract. CTBC also recommends that the University ask Dell to establish a time frame within which they will offer equipment that does not contain some of these hazardous materials.

"Dell is required by law to take back its computers by 2006 from its European customers, but in the United States we do not have such a law in place. If Dell is taking back computers from its European customers, why can't they take them back from their American customers?" Kozuch said.

If the ALANA caucus passes along the resolution, then the SGA will most likely be deciding on it in the near future. Students involved with CTBC urge students to get involved and help urge the University to take a stand on this issue. The students will be setting up tables in the campus center and passing out flyers during the following school weeks. They also plan to get in touch with faculty and staff on campus to get them involved in the campaign as well.

CHRISTINA VERDA/COLLEGIAN

UMass students stand together in "The Computer Take Back Campaign." The students are trying to hold Dell accountable for old and unusable PC's.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

DIVERSITY? UMass Requirement Fails in Mission PAGE 4
JAMES CHANCE A New Album For No Wave PAGE 5
LACROSSE AWARDS Pair of Minutemen Win ECAC Honors PAGE 10

U.S. forces topple statue after seizing Iraqi palace

ALYSSA TUCKER/MCT

U.S. Army Spc. Harrison Grimes from A Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry Regiment, walks past the damaged model of the Saddam Hussein palace he is searching, after a bombing in Baghdad Monday.

By Chris Tomlinson and David Esp
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) – More than 100 U.S. armored vehicles rumbled through downtown Baghdad with unstoppable force on Monday, seizing one of Saddam Hussein's opulent palaces, toppling a 40-foot statue of the Iraqi ruler and pushing his regime to the brink of irrelevance.

Some Iraqi soldiers jumped into the Tigris River to flee the advancing Americans. More than a dozen others were captured and placed inside a hastily erected POW pen on the grounds of the bombed-out, blue-and-gold-domed New Presidential Palace.

An estimated 600 to 1,000 Iraqi troops were killed during the operation, said Col. David Perkins. "We had a lot of suicide attackers today," he said. "These guys are going to die in droves ... They keep trying to ram the tanks with car bombs."

Tank-killing A-10 Warthogs and pilotless drones provided air cover as Americans briefly surrounded another prominent symbol of Saddam's power, the Information Ministry, as well as the city's best-known hotel, the Al-Rashid. Tanks rolled briefly up to another one of Saddam's many palaces.

It was the third straight day the Army penetrated Saddam's seat of power. This time, though, there were plans to stay. Rather than withdrawing at nightfall, as units did over the weekend, members of the 2nd Brigade of the 3rd Infantry Division hunkered down for the night at the sprawling, splendored New Presidential Palace where Saddam once slept.

Several miles away, two soldiers and two journalists were killed in a rocket attack on the 3rd Infantry Division south of Baghdad, the U.S. Central Command reported. Another 15 soldiers were injured in the attack on an infantry position south of the city.

On the other side of town, Marines encountered tough fighting as they entered Baghdad for the first time, coming under machine gun fire. Lt. Col. B.P. McCoy said two Marines were killed and two were injured after an artillery shell hit their armored personnel carrier.

Marines crossed into Baghdad from the east, their engineers deploying a temporary pontoon bridge over a canal at the southern edge of the city after Iraqis rendered the permanent structure unsafe for heavy, armored vehicles.

Hours later, the sound of occasional American artillery split the night air.

The regime, its brutal hold on a country of 24 million slipping away, denied all of it. "There is no presence of American infidels in the city of Baghdad, at all," insisted Iraqi Information Minister Mohammed Saeed al-Sahhaf.

The Iraqi government maintained its hold over state-run television and radio – arguably its most important remaining levers of control over the country – and broadcast emotional appeals to resist U.S. forces. Also shown were images of Saddam meeting with key advisers.

The American military flexed its muscle in downtown Baghdad while British officials said one of the regime's most brutal leaders, Ali Hassan al-Majid, had apparently been killed in a weekend airstrike in the southern city of Basra.

A cousin of Saddam, al-Majid was dubbed "Chemical Ali" for ordering a poison gas attack that killed thousands of Kurds in 1988.

Defense officials also said testing was underway on samples taken from a site where soldiers found metal drums possibly containing nerve gas or another type of chemical weapon. A local commander said it was possible the substance was a pesticide, since it was found at an agricultural site near Hindiyah, south of Baghdad.

After a two-week siege, British forces claimed control over Basra, a city of 1.3 million. Hundreds of civilians, women in chadors and barefoot children among them, poured into the street to welcome the invaders. Some handed pink carnations to the British troops in appreciation.

American and British troops advanced in Iraq as their political leaders were meeting in Belfast, Northern Ireland. For President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair, it was the second summit since the fighting began.

"The hostilities phase is coming to a conclusion," Secretary of State Colin Powell told reporters. Without elaboration, he said the U.S. government is sending a team this week to Iraq to begin laying the groundwork for an interim authority.

In the war zone, Americans felt confident enough for Gen. Tommy Franks, overall commander of Operation Iraqi Freedom, to visit troops in Najaf and elsewhere. The four-star general wore camouflaged body armor and a black beret as he flew by Blackhawk helicopter from Qatar into Iraq.

Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of staff, said all but "a couple of dozen" of the Iraqi military's tanks had been destroyed in less than three weeks of combat.

Senior officials at the Pentagon said the Army assault into Baghdad was part of an attempt to persuade Iraqi forces that further resistance was futile. The military would like to avoid an all-out urban battle in Baghdad, with its five million inhabitants.

"We can basically go wherever we want, whenever we want, even if Saddam is still alive," said Perkins, who commanded the Army troops inside the city.

Missiles screamed overhead and explosions shook buildings inside the city as more than 70 Army tanks, more than 60 Bradley fighting vehicles and an estimated 3,000 troops pushed their way into the heart of Baghdad.

Iraqi snipers fired on soldiers from rooms in the al-Rashid hotel, and tanks returned fire with their main guns and .50 caliber machine guns.

Across the river from the New Presidential Palace, Iraqis took up positions around the University of Baghdad, firing heavy machine guns across the 400-yard width of the Tigris River. Americans responded with mortar fire and close air support to rout the Iraqis.

The New Presidential Palace showed the effects of recent U.S.-led bombing. Even so, once inside, Americans found creature comforts undreamed of in a country where more than half the population is dependent on international food assistance.

Hundreds turn out for Haitian conference

By Barbara Lotto
Collegian Staff

An estimated 600 people, varying in age and cultural background, turned out for last weekend's National Haitian Student Conference at the University of Massachusetts. This year marked the first time a public university has hosted the three-day event.

The Haitian Student Conference is a yearly event that seeks to edify, celebrate and explore the Haitian culture and society. The conference originated in 1997 as an event solely for colleges in New York City. Since then, it has grown to one that is attended by students, scholars, professionals and celebrities from around the world.

"It was really phenomenal," said Frantzlyne Monestime, president of the Haitian-American Student Association (HASA). "I've never seen it [the Student Union Ballroom] so packed. We pulled it off with flying colors."

The sixth annual conference, which was held from April 4 to 6, was entitled "Blood, Sweat and Tears – The Spirit of Survival." Its theme was symbolic for many reasons, explained HASA secretary Michelle Monestime.

"The Haitian people as a whole got their independence through blood, sweat and tears, the spirit of survival. All over the world it takes blood, sweat and tears for Haitians to survive the struggles they face. And we came to find out over the weekend that it took us all blood, sweat and tears to get through the entire conference."

This weekend's itinerary consisted of workshops, speeches, presentations, musical performances, award ceremonies and more. Special guests for this year's conference included hip-hop artist and Grammy winner Wyclef Jean, film director Jonathan Demme and nationally acclaimed Haitian motivational speaker Rene Godefroy.

Michelle Monestime said an important issue to address over the weekend was that many Haitian-Americans deny their heritage today.

"They just refer to themselves as African-Americans," she said.

A goal of hers was to have Haitian-Americans take pride in where they

Continued on page 3

GERALD LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Grammy winning hip-hop artist Wyclef Jean speaks to the crowd with the wife of activist Jean Dominique, who was killed for his political views. Dominique's wife spoke about her husband's life as a political activist.

police log

Man shoots gun at Thompson Hall; Acquaintance rape reported

compiled by Dan Lamothe

MONDAY, MARCH 31

8:04 a.m.: Two toilets were reported damaged by fireworks in Kennedy Tower on Massachusetts Avenue.

9:18 a.m.: A card reader to a washing machine in the basement laundry room of Hamlin Hall on N. Pleasant St. was reported damaged.

11:48 a.m.: Graffiti was found on a wall directed at a particular person in McNamara Hall on Eastman Lane.

1:18 p.m.: A medical emergency was reported at the University Health Services Center. UMPD assisted the UHS staff.

7:58 p.m.: A report of a people throwing glass bottles out of the upper floor of Patterson Hall was made. No suspects or witnesses were available at the time.

TUESDAY, APRIL 1

12:00 p.m.: A diabetes-related medical emergency was reported in Coolidge Tower on Massachusetts Avenue. One person was transported to the hospital.

2:26 p.m.: A scanner was reported stolen from the Campus Center.

4:59 p.m.: Environmental Health and Safety (EHS) reported that a fire alarm in Washington Tower sounded because an apple struck the smoke detector on the 20th floor.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2

11:57 a.m.: A caller in Prince Hall reported two or three prank calls each day for a week.

11:34 a.m.: A sick student was transported to the hospital by ambulance.

THURSDAY, APRIL 3

12:18 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Washington Tower on Fearing Street.

6:53 p.m.: A wallet was reported stolen sometime since Monday morning.

FRIDAY, APRIL 4

12:01 a.m.: An RA in John Adams Tower reported people in a room who refused to quiet down.

1:40 a.m.: Student security reported a fight on the north side of Thoreau Hall on Massachusetts Avenue.

3:08 a.m.: A caller reported that a trashcan was on fire in Van Meter Hall on Clark Hill Road. F-1 extinguished the fire.

6:13 a.m.: A student called to report an unwanted male in her room in Kennedy Tower on Massachusetts Avenue. The male stated that he came home intoxicated and went into the wrong room.

7:04 a.m.: The staff in Herter Hall reported that a homeless person has been found in the building for the past three mornings.

11:30 a.m.: A cell phone was reported stolen from a Kennedy Tower dorm room.

3:32 p.m.: A report of damage to the vending machine on the street level side of Patterson Hall was made.

4:13 p.m.: The Amherst Police Department (APD) reported sending an ambulance for a report of an unresponsive male who is bleeding from the mouth. The person was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

SATURDAY, APRIL 5

1:21 a.m.: A disturbance was reported in Coolidge Tower on Massachusetts Avenue. A person was allegedly trying to start a fight. No weapons were involved and the person was sent on their way.

3:39 a.m.: A suspicious vehicle was reported in lot 22 on University Drive. The vehicle's engine was running with the operator apparently passed out. The person was transported to his residence hall.

5:33 a.m.: Two vehicles in lot 32 were damaged in a hit and run car accident with property damage. Two students, ages 21 and 20, were taken under protective custody.

7:20 a.m.: A two-car accident with injuries was reported on Governors Drive. A Sunderland ambulance responded to the scene.

12:38 p.m.: A breaking and entering was reported in lot 32 on Massachusetts Avenue. A stereo, 50 CDs and a radar detector were taken from a vehicle, which had no visible damage to it.

6:05 p.m.: Amie L. McCarty, 19, of 7 Crawford St. in Worcester, Mass., was arrested for liquor law violations and charged with possession of liquor while under 21 years of age.

11:13 p.m.: Police responded to a call after Chimaeze D. Ugwuegbu, 24, of 424 Great Rd. in Acton, Mass., allegedly fired a gun near Thompson Hall on Hicks Ways. Ugwuegbu arrested and charged with discharging a firearm within 500 feet of a building, carrying a firearm on school grounds, possession of a firearm while intoxicated and disorderly conduct while armed.

SUNDAY, APRIL 6

12:09 a.m.: An officer in the Blue Wall Pub reported a fight outside of the Campus Center building. Joe M. Tuutalatasi, 20 of 116 Brown Avenue in Holyoke, Mass., and Sok Lon, 21, of 1017 Bedford St. in Fall River, Mass., were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

1:31 a.m.: An RA reported 20 to 30 people in a Kennedy Tower dorm room who refused to quiet down. One person, age 22, was taken into protective custody.

3:08 a.m.: A motorcycle was reportedly pushed over in lot 54 in Southwest Circle.

3:34 a.m.: The attendant in the Campus Center garage reported having problems with a person who refused to pay to leave the garage.

5:48 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Moore Hall on Southwest Circle. A caller reported finding an unresponsive breathing male in the lobby.

6:32 a.m.: Vandalism was reported to a vending machine in Cance Hall on Fearing Street.

7:17 a.m.: The glass in a vending machine in Mackimmie Hall on Sunset Avenue was reported smashed during the night.

7:58 a.m.: A computer monitor was reported stolen from the Physical Plant building on Campus Center Way.

6:20 p.m.: A bike was stolen from a rack outside of Field Hall on Orchard Hill Drive.

10:46 p.m.: An acquaintance rape was reported in Kennedy Tower on Massachusetts Avenue. The incident is still under investigation. More information will be made available by UMPD as it becomes available.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. In 1906 it became the College Signal; in 1907, the Weekly Collegian; in 1914, and then the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500, weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

UMass Daily Collegian
Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives for Fall 2003

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, for more information.

All Majors & Classes Welcome to Apply

Wearing what your parents wore in 1967?
Scary.

Paying less than your parents paid for a student loan in 1967?
Groovy.

Leaving college with heavy student loan debt can be a drag. So why not take advantage of the lowest interest rates in the history of the student loan program by consolidating your loans.

The Connecticut Student Loan Foundation offers First Rate Consolidation Loans with some far-out benefits.

* Lower your interest rate by up to 1.25%*
* Reduce your monthly payment by up to 50%
* Lock in a low-fixed interest rate for the life of your loan
* Simplify your repayment to a single source

For more information, contact the Connecticut Student Loan Foundation at 1-800-901-1480 or visit www.cslf.com to download an application today.

Act Now!

Love beads and headbands are already out of style, and soon these rates could be too.

* A 1% interest rate reduction is valid through December 31, 2003. An additional 0.25% interest rate reduction is available to borrowers who have payments automatically deducted from a checking or savings account as long as the automatic debit payment option remains active.

CSLF
Connecticut Student Loan Foundation
525 Brook Street, P.O. Box 1009
Rocky Hill, CT 06067
1-800-901-1480 www.cslf.com

Haitian conference attracts hundreds

Continued from page 1

come from and claim their social identity.

Having Wyclef as a special guest for the conference took little effort on HASA's part. Wyclef contacted the group during the planning stages of the event to express his interest in participating. His focus would not be to perform as a world-famous artist, but to discuss his role as a Haitian-American in today's society.

Wyclef and his crew were described as down-to-earth, polite, respectful, accessible and even thankful. On Saturday evening, while the conference attendees were waiting for dinner to be served, Wyclef held a spontaneous jam session in the Campus Hotel lobby. And one HASA member said that while Wyclef was eating lunch one day in the Campus Center, he encouraged fans to ask for his autograph, saying that he "won't bite."

"He's just a really cool guy," said HASA Vice President Marvin Alcide.

Frantzlyne Monestime's most memorable event from the weekend-long conference was the "Roles of Women Workshop." The workshop featured three prominent black women including Sophia Pasquis, a past star on MTV's hit show "Road Rules." The purpose of the event was to create an inspirational, interactive environment for the discussion of women's successes in the Haitian community.

Alcide was most impacted by the presentation of Demme's documentary on the life of Jean Dominique, a Haitian activist and radio host who was killed for his political views. Dominique's wife spoke about her husband's life as a political activist.

"It was so powerful to hear her talk about her husband," Alcide said. "It was like he was living through her." Alcide recognized that it would take more than three days to make any difference in the situation in Haiti. The purpose of the conference, he said, was to inspire people, to raise awareness and to be a catalyst for change.

"Only through unity can we solve problems prevalent in Haiti," he said.

The members of HASA expressed their extreme thanks to everyone who offered support, contributed time and played key roles to organize and sponsor this event from the beginning. They had been planning the conference since the spring of 2001, said Alcide.

"We had a strong team with us. The RSOs banded together to help us out and we got a lot of outside help from volunteers, many who weren't even from the Amherst area," Frantzlyne Monestime said. "People whose job it was to help us didn't help us as much as those from the outside who were supposed to be there just for support."

"I'm happy about the turnout. It was great seeing all types of people leave with so much knowledge because our number one objective was to teach the community something that they don't already know."

Attendees ranged from high school students, to residents of North Dakota, to a UMass alum from the graduating class of 1972, according to Monestime.

All three HASA members plan to participate in the conference as alumni after they graduate. Recognizing the contributions of current alumni, Alcide said "it's because of them and their experiences that we were able to do this."

The location for next year's National Haitian Student Conference, which will mark the 200-year anniversary of Haiti's independence, is yet to be determined. In the past, universities have bid for the chance to host the event at the end of each year's conference. Development of an online method for applying to host the conference, which includes proposal submissions, is currently in the works. This enables universities whose representatives cannot attend the conference one year to be eligible to host it the next.

Seminar to discuss benefits of new economic strategy

By MARK OSTROFF
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Developers from the nonprofit group E2M (Economic Model for the Second Millennium) will be hosting a seminar at the Isenberg School of Management tomorrow night, discussing how the University of Massachusetts could benefit from adopting the their new economic strategy.

E2M is a program that focuses on socially responsible business standards and how communities can benefit from them. The group was founded in 1999 by UMass alum Michael Garjian.

"We will detail methods that will enable the western Massachusetts community, in partnership with the University, to generate significant income in the face of current and future reductions in state financial support," Garjian said.

The group is hosting the seminar, following a recent vote of endorsement by the Students for Sustainability, a student committee affiliated with the Faculty Senate.

The model, also called "community conscious capitalism," allows communities to become stakeholders in E2M-compliant business, while purchasing their goods and services. As their stocks grow in value, businesses would enjoy more profits while communities would have more income as well. Depending on how successful the strategy is, communities would be able to rely on their source of income for local budgets, reinvestment in other E2M businesses, or even low-interest loans for local entrepreneurs.

E2M.org is already creating the first E2M regional model in Western Massachusetts, according to their website.

Speaking at the event will Garjian, as well as Alan Singer, manager of the Franklin County Community Development Corporation's $2 million business loan fund.

"The University could become a very entrepreneurial and powerful catalyst for positive social, economic, and environmental change in the region," Singer said.

The seminar will be held at the School of Management at 6 p.m. in room 210 and is open to everyone interested. For more information, the group can be reach through its website at www.e2m.org.

ANDREW TAMULONAS/COLLEGIAN

That's affirmative

Professor Arnold Silver makes his argument during the affirmative action debate held in room 168C of the Campus Center Monday night.

High honors for Chemistry

By KATHRYN CORAZZELLI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The University of Massachusetts' Chemistry Department has recently been named one of the nation's top 25 programs in numbers of Ph.D. degrees awarded.

The UMass program was included on the list published in February by Chemical and Engineering News, the professional publication of the American Chemical Society. The article, "Anatomy of a Chemistry Class," lists UMass as the 25th program in the country, and is based on federal data that recorded the number of degrees granted by various graduate programs.

Professor Peter C. Uden, the chemistry department's graduate program director, said that the rank reflects the department's high caliber.

"Our department continues to show a high profile that supports the university's recognition as a high quality research institution. It is not every day that a department makes a top 25 listing from a major professional publication."

Professor Bret Jackson, head of the Chemistry Department, said that UMass tends to attract students working towards their Ph.D.s because they are "a very broad department," and have a good history of finding jobs for graduates.

UMass is one of more than a thousand institutions in the nation that grants Ph.D.'s in chemistry. Uden said that with more than a thousand institutions in the nation, the department doctoral program's new rank is very notable.

"Given the number of Ph.D.-granting institutions in the country, it is quite prestigious for us to be given such notice by the American Chemical Society."

Uden also noted that the UMass doctoral program in chemistry has received numerous acclaims in recent years, including several major awards won by graduate students. The awards ranged from materials research, to organic chemistry, to top doctoral dissertation.

The University granted 15 doctoral degrees in chemistry last year, and expects to grant 16 to 18 this coming May.

Chemical and Engineering News noted that between July 1, 1999 and June 30, 2000, a total of 1,990 Ph.D.s were granted from 1,052 institutions of higher learning in the U.S. and Puerto Rico. The article's findings were based on data from the National Science Foundation.

www.dailycollegian.com

2003 MAKING ART
Making a Living

Wednesday workshops for emerging artists

Wednesdays, 4:30-6:30 p.m., Campus Center, UMass Amherst

• Visual Artists and Writers April 2
  • Marketing • Galleries
  • Distributors • Contests
  • Agents
  Daniel Grant, author of How to Start and Succeed as an Artist

• Performing Artists April 9
  • Marketing • Agents
  • Contracts • Working in Education
  • Collaborations
  Jazz guitarist Michael Gregory and theater artist and educator Tracy Vernon

• Art and the Law April 23
  • Co-sponsored by Volunteer Lawyers for the Arts of Massachusetts

• Art-Related Careers for Artists April 30
  • Web sites • Teaching • Licensing
  • Careers involving additional study (art conservation, art appraisal, art therapy, architecture, interior design, scientific and medical illustration)
  • Arts Management
  • Publishing, art galleries, museums, the theater, collectibles
  • The design field
  Daniel Grant

Who should come?
• UMass and Area Students in the Arts
• Dancers • Visual Artists
• Musicians • Actors • Writers

No workshop fee, but for 5-College students, suggested donation $10 or $40 for the series. Call Arts Extension Service at 413-545-2360 or e-mail aes@contined.umass.edu to reserve a seat.

For more information: www.umass.edu/aes

plus
Arts and Activism
Thursday, April 15
Find out about the power of the arts to make a difference in your community.
Media artist and 5 College visiting professor Liz Miller joins visual artist Beverly Naidu in showcasing their community based cultural work.

UMASS Arts Extension Service
Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Dream it. Do it. Disney.®

We're recruiting on campus!
Univ. of Massachusetts-Amherst
Wednesday, April 9, 2003
4:00 PM, Goessmann 20

Mark your calendars — All majors and all college levels invited. This is your chance to go inside this world-famous resort, build your resume, network with Disney leaders and meet students from around the world.

Check out a Walt Disney World® College Program paid internship. 24-hour secured housing is offered. College credit opportunities may be available. Visit our website at wdwcollegeprogram.com and then come to the presentation. Attendance is required to interview.

Walt Disney World COLLEGE PROGRAM wdwcollegeprogram.com

EOE • Drawing Creativity from Diversity • ©Disney

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Penalizing foreign students doesn't aid fight against terror

There is a bill in front of the Florida state legislature that would ban state aid to university and college students who are citizens of countries on the State Department's list of countries that sponsor terrorism.

The bill would bar aid to university students from six out of the seven countries on the list: North Korea, Libya, Sudan, Syria, Iraq and Iran. Cuba is also on the list, however, it was taken out of the proposal since the state has a large Cuban population. The proposal was drafted by state representative Dick Kravitz, who said he is opposed to educating people who could possibly return home to regimes that oppose America.

"In these hard times we need to put as much taxpayer money as possible into programs for residents of the state of Florida who are citizens," Kravitz said.

Kravitz also feels that foreign students from terrorist nations aren't poor and could be related to government leaders.

"It is naive to think that any of them are not well-to-do or connected to the regime in power," he said.

The Department of Education reported that state universities and community colleges used $ 508,717 to provide financial aid to 822 students from the original seven countries on the 2001 and 2002 list.

Victor Johnson, the public policy director at the Association of International Educators said he doesn't know of any other states that are targeting aid to foreign students. Ahmed Bedier, a spokesman for The Council on American-Islamic Relations in Tampa, Fla. said the students are "innocent bystanders."

"They have nothing to do with terrorism," said Bedier.

Hadia Mubarak, president of the Muslim Students Association at Florida State University, said the bill unfairly targets Muslim students. Mubarak said its discriminatory because most of the countries on the State Department's list are Islamic.

"What he's saying is if you're born in Libya or Syria you're more likely to be a terrorist than anyone else," Mubarak said.

Currently the bill has passed the House of Higher Education Committee but still needs to pass four other committees. We at the Collegian hope it goes no further than that.

This proposal is clearly discriminatory, penalizing students based on their citizenship. Needing more money for students in the state of Florida and the assumption that foreign students may be relatives of government officials in their home countries are weak and unfounded excuses for the creation of a law like this.

It's also wrong to assume that foreign students that are in our schools are any more likely to become terrorists than U.S. citizens are. One doesn't have to go very far on any given college campus to find students who disagree with certain aspects of the U.S. Should we take away their financial aid because of this?

No. Passing a law like this would put civil rights behind decades. Universities and colleges are institutions of higher education that, ideally, are meant to provide education to anyone who seeks it. Mixing up higher education with the war on terror conflicts with this mission and provides the grounds for legally sanctioned racism in schools. If the state legislature of Florida believes it is preventing the spread of terrorism by barring aid to these students, they are sorely mistaken and would be doing this country a great disservice.

Information from CNN.com was used in this opinion.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

An annoying week

Courtney Charles

I'm annoyed this week. Very annoyed. I have two exams and little or no outlet for my frustration.

One of the only places I can vent my aggression is at the gym, but there too, I find things that annoy me. As soon as I walk in the gym, I spy one treadmill left, and so I hurry to take off my coat and hand in my card.

The treadmill is the ultimate fitness machine, because let's face it: the J-lo booty does NOT need the Stairmaster.

But anyways, there's this chick who drops whatever she's doing the minute I come in the door to take that last treadmill. It doesn't matter if she's doing weights or sit-ups or whatever. She busts her own booty to get on that one last treadmill as soon as she sees me. And then she gives me this shady, sinister look, like she hates me because I too, recognize the superiority of the treadmill. Why the sinister, leaky look? Why the rude attitude? What's the big deal? I mean, so what. I prefer the treadmill. It doesn't mean it should turn into some bizarre competition to beat me to it.

There are a lot of other things that I don't think should be such a big deal, but then people make them into one and it really annoys me. It makes me want to sit with a pile of blow darts and just shoot them at people's behinds whenever they freak out about something of moot value.

And last week there was this other individual that really pissed me off. I went to the Bluewall for dinner because I was too lazy to pack a real meal for myself when I had to work late. I ask for extra pickles and the sandwich nazi, who was obviously a student, was like "I can't do that." She then proceeds to count out three pickles. You know what, I'm sorry I was polite and asked for something extra, but it's not like I was putting all sorts of other crap on my sandwich. All I had on it was lettuce and tomatoes, no mayo, no cheese, no other fancy crap. I think I deserved at least four pickles. I mean, come on now. It's not like the Bluewall is going to go bankrupt because I feel like a few extra pickles. How much does a slice of pickle cost anyways? Like a quarter of a cent?

> "There are a lot of other things that I don't think should be such a big deal, but then people make them into one and it really annoys me."

I seriously almost told the chick to forget about it and just walked away, but I'm not that much of a jerk, although if she had caught me in the kind of mood I am in now, it would have been a different story.

You may think I'm contradicting myself because I'm getting all ridiculous over some incidents that aren't a big deal, yet I'm criticizing people who make a big deal out of things that aren't. So you think I may be a hypocrite? That's fine. You want a freaking medal for it?

And you know what else really, really annoys me? When people that are allegedly your friends decide to say personal things about you, in front of you, to people that you really don't know. The next day your friend will say something like, "Oops, I was trashed. Sorry." Actually, if they're anything like the friend I'm talking about, you probably won't even get that.

I hate it when people borrow things from me and don't give them back, especially writing utensils. Or what's even worse is when they openly gnaw on a pencil you lend them for a single class period, then hand it back to you with a smile, because they know they're a tool.

I hate it when you're two feet away from a bus stop and the bus leaves without you anyways, or just neglects to get you in the first place.

I really hate when people who clearly look nothing like you insist they are the same size as you when they are obviously not. I hate it when people make fun of your chest size when they are obviously grossly lacking that feminine quality at all.

But whatever, at this point I'm just letting my annoyances get the best of me. But then again, I do have my own column to write about my opinions, to vent out my frustrations with the world as I see it. So by now I'm in a better mood now that I have published my complaints for the world to witness.

Courtney Charles is a Collegian Columnist.

Speak out for the UMass system

Susan Tordella

Governor Mitt Romney's business acumen must be wilted after a few months in office. State government is a more difficult beast to tame than an under-performing business.

While I admire his courage to slay the dragons of waste and patronage, some state services – while necessary – aren't profitable. Such as welfare, drugs and health care for seniors, education – and especially higher education.

Romney and a crew from his former employer Bain Capital have applied a business model to public education, and it's like mating an elephant with a dragon. It doesn't work, especially with faulty data. UMass-Boston Chancellor Jo Ann Gora described the information Bain used to evaluate the state college system as, "misleading."

For one, Bain referred to U.S. News and World Report's college rankings – which are so flawed that some colleges have refused to participate in the annual evaluations that go about as deep as icing on a cake.

Dropout and graduation rates aren't the profit and loss model of a school's success.

It's hard for a Harvard graduate like Mitt to understand how only 28 percent of UMass-Boston students graduate after six years.

Statistics don't tell the whole story.

For example, I recently took 15 credits at Middlesex Community College. My experience there helped me decide to go to graduate school.

Statistically, I'm considered a Middlesex dropout because I dropped in temporarily for an interlude that helped identify my next step.

However, there are more nuances to education statistics than just the icing on the cake.

Romney has gone after what he perceives to be a cash cow – UMass President William Bulger and his staff. The state established Bulger's office in the early 1980s after a Bain-esque consultant evaluated the UMass system and recommended it to avoid infighting.

Bulger's $325,000 annual salary and staff of 68 seem exorbitant. However, how much would Romney compensate a top CEO who raises $300-million plus to the state schools?

Bulger has the political connections and acumen to effectively advocate for UMass.

Could his staff be trimmed? Perhaps, but why dismantle a system that's working? If Romney cut Bulger's office, it would be like taking away the Pentagon from the military.

Could Salem State's bloated administrative staff – the highest ratio of administrators to students in the state – be trimmed? Most likely. Romney's proposal has brought to light some weaknesses that can and should be tightened up.

However, Romney ignores other aspects that need attention.

UMass facilities have been allowed to disintegrate. Many campus buildings have received minimal maintenance and renovations over the years. Some are plain depressing.

Going beyond paint, for example, UMass-Amherst still uses a coal-burning heating system – a relic of the Great Depression.

Some of the $371 million bond authorized by former governor Jane Swift that Romney has put on hold – would have replaced the outdated heating system. The Amherst campus is waiting for $82 million of that bond.

Another $271 million would go to UMass-Boston to build dormitories. Lowell wants $9 million for a parking garage and Dartmouth would get $2 million for maintenance work.

> "At this time last year, UMass advocates barraged Beacon Hill for more money. Where is that action now?"

What's more distressing about Romney's plan to make UMass a profitable business and his lack of action on the capital improvement bond, is the silence from the UMass community.

My state representative Geoff Hall (D-Westford), asked, "Where's the outcry?" from UMass advocates over the governor's proposal.

At this time last year, UMass advocates barraged Beacon Hill for more money. Where is that action now? The state faces alarming deficits this year. Yet the need for public education is greater than ever in a weak economy. The UMass community should speak loudly and often during the budget planning season to clamor for every dollar possible at the State house.

And start by calling Romney and tell him UMass-Amherst needs a new heating system.

Susan Tordella is a mother of a UMass student and is editor of the Littleton Independent. She lives in Westford

Non-existent diversity on campus

Allison Leshefsky

Each year the Admissions Office at UMass interviews thousands of students from Massachusetts and beyond to enroll in the university because it offers many positive aspects such as student life, athletics and of course academics.

No one's a UMass known as the most flaky for your buck and one of the largest party schools in New England, it also claims to be a diversified campus. Though the first two have some truthful qualities, in no way do they make up for the latter claim of diversity, a falsity that needs further investigation. The universities has been trying for years to incorporate a diverse background for its students using several tactics such as an academic diversity requirement for all undergraduates and affirmative action in its admission procedures. Still, this isn't enough. True diversity exists by means of social interaction, not academic obligation or statewide diversity laws.

UMass students are required to fulfill a Social and Cultural Diversity requirement consisting of two courses. According to the Undergraduate Student Catalogue the purpose of this requirement is to emphasize the need for educated citizens to understand that different cultures and societies provide unique contexts for human experience.

These courses are also supposed to analyze and appreciate the ways in which norms and values differ across cultures and societies and to encourage pluralistic perspectives. The UMass Social and Cultural Diversity requirement states that the courses designed to satisfy this requirement should reach beyond the perspectives of mainstream North American culture and Western tradition.

Though UMass offers about fifty courses each semester that fulfill this requisite, students enroll in these classes simply to fulfill the diversity requirement needed to graduate. If every undergraduate student at the university is obligated to take the same classes, eventually this becomes routine and mis-pid as students unwillingly force themselves to attend class and pass meaningless scantron exams. In the end, it is nothing more than a little plus sign that appears next to the diversity requirement on everyone's degree audit, symbolizing the artificial sincerity in the completion of one's diverse.

Another effort taken to create diversity on campus is affirmative action, which is severely needed, yet greatly misinterpreted. The statement of Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity states that the University of Massachusetts recognizes that affirmative action is mandated by federal and state laws and affirms its commitment to those laws. Although statistics show a slight increase in minority enrollment, numbers can be misleading, and this only makes the student body diverse in appearance, not in reality.

> "True diversity exists by means of social interaction, not academic obligation or statewide diversity laws."

The same stereotypes that exist on a global scale also exist within the walls of UMass. These stereotypes are clearly visible when observing the dramatic contrast between the five residential areas on campus. Upon entering the university as a freshman, students are bombarded with stereotypes based on the residential area of their choice. It is important to realize that all stereotypes, despite how bogus or pathetic they might be, have some degree of truthfulness.

These stereotypes state that Sylvan is full of introverted, antisocial, semi-suicidal outcasts, unless of course you got placed there unwillingly. Northeast is full of Asians and lazy people that lack ambition to walk long distances to class. Southwest, also known as the ghetto, is full of alcoholics, fraternity-like chauvinism and a majority of African-American students. Orchard Hill is full of freshmen that don't know any better, computer nerds and Commonwealth College geeks. And Central, of course, is occupied by white, marijuana smoking, tree-hugging hippies.

This deficiency in diversity can also be seen at our segregated dining halls in which students voluntarily place themselves with others that share similar race or ethnic backgrounds. These communal instances are mentioned as a clear example of the lack of diversity on campus as it pertains to the desperate need for social interaction among students.

In order to attain true diversity, the Social and Cultural Diversity requirement must be evaluated and re-examined as to its success. It then must be revised in an effort to fully succeed in its mission to "provide unique contexts for human experience," both on and off campus. Alongside learning about other cultures and traditions, students should be asked to demonstrate a personal understanding of diversity as it pertains to them as individuals.

UMass acknowledges the need for affirmative action, which ultimately creates diversity, but only in appearance. Attempts to create this diversity have been acknowledged from groups like the Delta Xi Phi Multicultural Sorority (est. March 2002), whose efforts help to create a beginning in an arduous struggle to achieve unity. The university and its students must work together in order to take full advantage of the splendor of affirmative action and the wonders it can be responsible for creating.

Allison Leshefsky is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the author's name, phone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed to "Editor." Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed to "Editor." All submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to us:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A new opportunity to shine for wrestler Bill Goldberg awaits

Corner to corner

Emilie Duggan-Hicks

When Vince McMahon bought World Championship Wrestling (WCW), just about half of the wrestling audience stopped watching. These were WCW fans that Vince was trying to win over and his systematic destruction of everything these fans held dear – the NWO, Ric Flair and Scott Steiner – made the wrestling product less desirable to watch. There is, however, an opportunity right now for Vince McMahon and World Wrestling Entertainment (WWE) to grab hold of the portion of WCW holdouts and bring them into the WWE fold.

That opportunity goes by the name of Bill Goldberg.

From childhood, Bill Goldberg was a talented athlete, but it was his skills on the football field that got him noticed. Scouts from around the Midwest descended on Tulsa, Okla. to watch him play. Eventually, he was offered a scholarship to play college football, but it wasn't to the University of Oklahoma or Texas A&M, as his family would have liked. Goldberg was recruited by the University of Georgia, a school whose team he had never watched and didn't even know its colors. He was an aggressive player, constantly being warned by officials for illegal acts on the field.

"I don't do anything bad or illegal, until they do it to me," was his response on BillGoldberg.net. It was this attitude that set the tone for his football career, as well as for his career in professional wrestling.

He earned all-star honors during his junior year, but college wasn't completely positive for Bill Goldberg. On one occasion, he experimented with marijuana and was caught the next day when the team held a random drug test and he failed. As a result, he was banned from playing in the Gator Bowl against Michigan, and he returned to Tulsa in disgust. While serving his suspension at home, Goldberg used the opportunity to start eating healthier and he added 25 pounds to his already large frame. He returned to play his final season in Georgia and thoughts of the NFL became his focus.

He was drafted by the Los Angeles Rams in 1990. He failed to make the final pre-season cut, but was invited back the following season, only to be cut once more. Eventually, he would settle for a spot with the Atlanta Falcons where he played from 1992 to 1994. But life with the Falcons was far from idyllic, and Goldberg found himself in a constant battle against nagging injuries that wouldn't heal. He finally quit the Falcons and found himself without direction for the first time in his life.

While out one night in an Atlanta nightclub, Goldberg found himself face to face with Diamond Dallas Page, a professional wrestler with WCW. Page took one look at Goldberg and told him to get himself into training – Goldberg was just what the doctor ordered for wrestling. Or maybe wrestling was just what the doctor ordered for Goldberg. With his size and his athleticism – not to mention he studied martial arts for many years – Bill Goldberg was perfect for professional wrestling.

To make a long story short, Goldberg trained for four months at WCW's Power Plant – their training facility – before he was ready to make his debut. On September 22, 1997 – with his mind 100 percent focused on the match ahead and looks that were eerily similar to Stone Cold Steve Austin – he made his way to the ring and squashed his opponent in a matter of minutes. To say that Bill Goldberg made people stand up and take notice would be the understatement of the century.

On March 31, during "RAW," the proverbial hell froze over and pigs learned to fly, because Bill Goldberg made his debut for the WWE. The rumors had been flying for two years about when he would sign, or even if he would sign, with the McMahon promotion. The hype has been huge, and it will be interesting to see if Goldberg can live up to it in the coming months. It will be even more interesting to see how long he'll make it before doing something to anger the

Continued on page 8

PHOTO COURTESY TIGER STYLE

Entertainment BRIEFS

Radio station consultant posts 'Media War Manual' on web site

CLEVELAND (AP) – Cleveland-based McVay Media Inc., a consultant to 150 radio stations across the country, has published a "Media War Manual" on its Web site.

Suggestions include playing the national anthem at a certain time each day, along with other patriotic music.

"We're not telling stations they should be patriotic," Mike McVay, president of McVay Media, said last week. "We're telling them if their community is patriotic, they should follow."

With polls showing that about 70 percent of Americans support the war in Iraq, some media analysts see an inherent pressure to be positive about the war.

"They don't want to appear unpatriotic," said Joe Angotti, chair of broadcast department at the Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern University. "This very basic, fundamental responsibility of journalists – to critique and question – is being diminished."

He said broadcasters need to put traditional journalism ahead of ratings.

Minnesota Opera, facing budget deficit, scales back next season's schedule

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) – The Minnesota Opera is scaling back from five operas to four next season because of an expected budget deficit.

The 2003-04 season will include Donizetti's "Lucrezia Borgia," Stephen Sondheim's "Passion," Verdi's "Rigoletto" and Mozart's "The Magic Flute."

"We don't want to dumb down the repertoire or the way we do it," artistic director Dale Johnson said last week. "We push our audience a lot at times, but they keep coming – our numbers are still very strong – and I'm not going to give up on what I think makes us special."

The opera is building sets and recycling them rather than renting, and it is trimming and reshaping the stage and bringing it forward into the audience, to heighten intimacy.

The company's endowment has shrunk below its initial investment, and the opera expects to finish the 2002-03 season with a deficit.

Tony Bennett heads lineup at Rochester jazz festival

ROCHESTER, N. Y. (AP) – Tony Bennett, Al Jarreau, George Benson, the Dave Brubeck Quartet

Continued on page 8

Signs of a second maturity

Angels Of Light CD hits shelves

By Mike Barrett
Collegian Staff

COURTESY KATHY ANDERSON AFFILI

Angels of Light, led by Michael Gira, make long strides on the band's third release, "Everything is Good Here/Please Come Here."

Angels Of Light — Everything is Good Here / Please Come Home — Young God

It took Michael Gira only two and a half years to get the Angels Of Light off the ground when the Swans ended in 1996. The first two albums, 1999's "New Mother" and 2001's "How I Loved You" were a vast divergence from the epic drone of the last few Swans releases, and showed a return-to-roots approach, of sorts, for Gira.

Now, on their third album, "Everything is Good Here / Please Come Home," Gira has recorded, possibly, his swansong. Aside from the output of the Swans for 15 years, aside from his novels, this album is as clear and true as dawn. Here he goes beyond the first two Angels Of Light's albums – a more sober, personal and concise take on the Swans' legacy has come to full fruition.

On the second track, "All Souls' Rising," songwriting is stripped

Continued on page 8

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS:

The Stones, Edgar Allan Poe and Paul Walker

BOMBAY, India (AP) – Thousands of fans waved posters and shouted, "We love you Mick Jagger!" as the Rolling Stones opened their Bombay concert Monday with their hit "Brown Sugar."

The city's Brabourne Stadium, which holds 25,000 people, was sold out for the Bombay show, the band's second appearance in India after Friday's concert in the southern city of Bangalore.

The Rolling Stones opened their Bombay concert Monday.

Piyush Prasanna, a 38-year-old advertising manager, bought his ticket far in advance. He said the concert was a "trip down memory lane" for him and his former college friends.

The Rolling Stones, with their entourage of 150, canceled what would have been their first concerts in China because of a deadly flu-like disease that has infected at least 2,400 people worldwide and killed at least 100 people, mostly in Asia.

Travel warnings from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the World Health Organization about severe acute respiratory syndrome, or SARS, prompted the band to cancel performances in Shanghai and Beijing scheduled before the India shows.

No cases of the disease have been reported in India.

The band's next performance is set for Wednesday in Bangkok, Thailand.

• • •

MILWAUKEE (AP) – A letter bearing the swirling black signature of Edgar Allan Poe could bring a church $20,000 or more at an auction this week.

Paul Haubrich found the letter 15 months ago inside a walk-in safe at St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Milwaukee.

"I was absolutely stunned when I saw the letter," said Haubrich, a church volunteer. "It's in great shape, done on very high-quality paper that, when folded up, creates its own envelope."

Christie's in New York will auction the letter Tuesday with other literary materials. The final bid is expected to range between $15,000 and $20,000, or possibly more, said Chris Coover, a senior specialist in manuscripts for the auction house.

Poe, best-known for poems and horror stories such as "The Raven" and "The Telltale Heart," wrote the letter Feb. 12, 1840, to "J.C. Passmore Esqr.," who became an Episcopal priest and later served as rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church.

Passmore, who lived in Lancaster, Pa., at the time, had proposed providing some articles for Burton's Gentleman's Magazine in Philadelphia, where Poe was an assistant editor.

Continued on page 8

Collegian Book Section

UMass professor's textbook adds a new chapter to slavery debates

Edited by Mason I. Lowance, Jr.

By Jessica Pelletier
Collegian Staff

Lowance's publishing of English department professor Lowance. It's book "A House Divided: The Antebellum Sermons in America 1776-1865" yields the results of over a decade's research in both anti-slavery and pro-slavery documents.

Until now, many of the documents included in the textbook have been inaccessible to the public. Teachers and scholars alike can appreciate the straightforward manner in which information is presented. The introductions themselves are written concisely and are devoid of obscure references, which usually provide more confusion than clarity. Also the theories covered include biblical proslavery arguments, ethnological debates concerning Anglo-African biological differences and the crusade of Garrison and the institution of slavery in America.

Those persons who supported the institution of slavery would often use the Bible to justify ownership of other human lives. Two of the most prominent sources cited occur in the Old Testament where Abraham procreates with his slave mistress Hagar and bears Ishmael, patriarch of the Ishmaelites. The other source appears in the account of Noah during the aftermath of the flood when his son, Ham, witnessed his father in a state of drunken nudity. The result of this discovery was a curse on Canaan, which coupled with the mark of Cain – another distinguishing characteristic referred to in the book of Genesis – was interpreted by those who supported slavery to be representative of the African race.

At other times, science was employed to justify the destructive system in place. The prosperity of the 18th century slave trade led "enlightened" men to suggest that the Caucasian race was somehow superior both mentally and physically to those they enslaved. These documents remain some of the most racist pieces of literature parading as scientific fact ever produced in America.

There were, however, persons opposed to the ownership of slaves, and their thoughts are shared as well. William Lloyd Garrison was one of the most influential of the American antislavery advocates. At age 24, he presented a speech now known as "Address to the American Colonization Society." The depth and insight to this speech is incredible when one considers the limited formal education Garrison possessed. Other abolitionist speakers include Lydia Maria Child, Charles Sumner, Horace Mann, Walt Whitman and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

In addition to this textbook, Lowance is the author of "The Language of Canaan: Metaphor" as well as "The Stowe Debate: Rhetorical Strategies in Uncle Tom's Cabin." He is also a graduate professor at Harvard University in Cambridge.

But to give credit to one person would be unjust to those other scholars who helped the textbook take shape. Faculty members from college universities around the country and students from the graduate level to those completing work on their doctorates contributed to this work as well. These persons deserve recognition for their efforts and they are as follows: Sandra Duvnier of UMass-Amherst, Lan Gougeon of the University of Scranton, Dean Grodzins of the Meadville/Lombard Theological Seminary, Christopher Hanlon of Eastern Illinois University, Melba Jensen of UMass-Amherst, Arthur F. Kinney of UMass-Amherst, Adam Linker of UMass-Amherst and William Pannapacker of Hope College.

The text stands as one of the most helpful documents with regards to slavery debates and would be an excellent secondary source for scholars looking for ways to solidify an essay on the subject. History buffs may also enjoy the readings and illustrations provided. As time passes, pieces of our nation's history may become lost or forgotten, this novel is an assurance that this should never happen and that history must be learned from or tragically repeated.

The Pulitzer Prizes in arts go to Caro's Lyndon Johnson biography

2003

By Hillel Italie
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – "Master of the Senate," Robert Caro's epic third volume of the Lyndon Johnson series, won the Pulitzer Prize for biography Monday.

The fiction prize went to Philip Roth's tale of Middlebury, a town it would fund their identity.

Big books prevailed in the arts. Caro's work runs 1,000 pages. Ingamides more than 900 pages and the winner for history, Rick Atkinson's "An Army at Dawn," is just over 500 pages.

Reaching Atkinson, who's book is the first of a planned World War II trilogy, especially challenging. He's currently in middle East is with the 101st Airborne.

This is Caro's [illegible] and final [illegible] fifths and completes the life of Lyndon Johnson, who won a Pulitzer for national reporting, in 1965 when he was at The Austin City Times. He recently was a columnist for The Washington Post.

In the drama category, Doug Wright's [illegible] Pulitzer winner Edward Albee's tribute for "The Goat, and Who, Ella, little Sylvia." Albee is the Tragic... Is Silvia Cruz.

In the play category, Lynn Nottage's daughter became than with Fetter [illegible] and [illegible] to the works of his, she told. One of the book, Jeremy for Johnny Anna Karenina, and the novel Lion and Mouse. Its action on stage.

Cruz said on that he had to [illegible] the prize, while at the Juan station in New Haven County, where he was teaching at Lyndon playwrighting. "I'd done [illegible]."

"I was in bed, he said. Jhumpa Lahiri's book, debuting young Indian-American [illegible] Paradise. My play has to do with Anna Karenina, which the heroine commits suicide by jumping in front of a train. So it was so appropriate."

The [illegible] fiction prize went to "A Problem From Hell: America and the Age of Genocide," by Harvard lecturer Samantha Power, who has already won the National Book Critics Circle Award. The winner for poetry was Mary Szybist for Granted," by Paul Muldoon, and the prize for music went to "Of the Transmigration of Souls" by John Adams, which the New York Philharmonic premiered.

Adams' work is a tribute to victims, survivors and heroes of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. One of America's most successful composers, he has a history of taking on difficult subjects, including Nixon trip to China and the rise of the Reagan presidency in his opera Nixon by Pat Smoot [illegible] Lahiri [illegible] Laura.

Caro has been known for his [illegible] Johnson, who won the Pulitzer for [illegible] and [illegible] Robert Moses. He has spent [illegible] Johnson's great acclaim [illegible] and [illegible].

The first two books, The Path to Power and Means of Ascent, [illegible] Years of Lyndon Johnson: Master of the Senate [illegible] Johnson's [illegible] and [illegible] Master of the Senate [illegible] Johnson [illegible] the 20th century.

Each book [illegible] Johnson [illegible] book [illegible] Caro said Monday [illegible] would [illegible].

He [illegible] Johnson [illegible] Johnson [illegible] Johnson

Familiar foes to square off for women's NCAA title

By Chuck Schoffner
Associated Press

ATLANTA (AP) – So Connecticut was too young to do this again, huh? Too many players missing from last season's unbeaten national championship team, right?

Ha!

Connecticut is back in the title game again and look who the Huskies are playing on Tuesday night: None other than those dreaded Tennessee Lady Vols, their bitter rivals for supremacy in women's basketball.

The third championship game between the two was set up when both earned tough semifinal victories Sunday night. Connecticut came from nine points down in the second half to beat Texas 71-69 and Tennessee pulled away late to defeat Duke 66-56.

Regardless of how it plays out, I think it's going to be a heck of a game," UConn coach Geno Auriemma said. "I know that's the game everyone's been waiting for and now that it's here, let's enjoy it.

"And, let everyone
[illegible] is the best thing for the sport because it's expect-

The UConn women's basketball team will take on Tennessee tonight for the NCAA Championship.

ed," Texas coach Jody Conradt said. "I think the more suspense you have in a sport, the more interest it draws."

Like it or not, the season will end with either Connecticut (36-1) or Tennessee (33-4) adding to its title collection. Tennessee has won six championships but its last was in 1998. Connecticut is going for its third title in four years and fourth overall.

UConn beat Tennessee in the 1995 and 2000 championship games and defeated the Lady Vols in the national semifinals last year before topping off a 39-0 season with a win over Oklahoma.

Four starters from that team graduated and Auriemma's lineup now includes two freshmen and a sophomore. Another freshman is a key reserve.

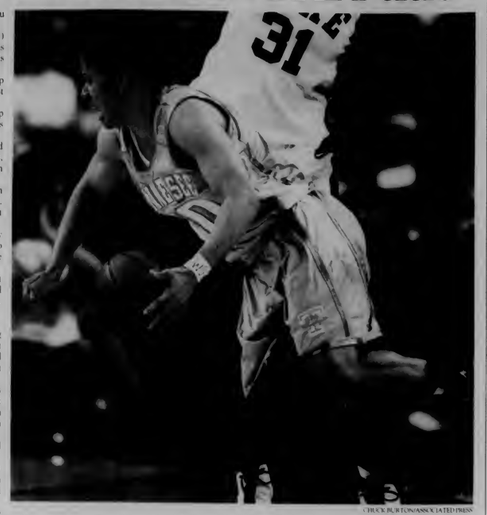
But he also has Diana Taurasi, an incomparable talent around which to build a team. Taurasi scored 26 points against Texas, including a long 3-pointer to put the Huskies ahead to stay with 2:07 left.

"She's just one of those special people that God blessed with an incredible amount of self confidence and talent," Auriemma said. "The biggest thing that you can say about her is that she's not afraid. She wants the ball in crucial situations."

Tennessee avenged one of its losses by beating Duke and now has a chance to make amends for another. The Lady Vols lost to UConn 63-62 in overtime on Jan. 4. They have won 24 of 25 since then.

"I think the level of confidence is so much different from last year," Tennessee's Tasha Butts said. "Last year we got here and didn't know what to expect. But now we're back and we know what to expect."

A championship maybe?



Tennessee started its march to the title game after a humbling 78-62 loss to LSU in the Southeastern Conference tournament final. The Lady Vols had almost two weeks between that game and the start of the NCAA tournament and, as usual, coach Pat Summitt had them ready.

Playing the first four rounds at home, Tennessee breezed to its 14th Final Four by an average margin of 25.6 points. Then, against Duke, the Lady Vols used their defense and rebounding to hold on until Gwen Jackson closed with a tremendous performance down the stretch.

Jackson scored 13 of her 25 points in the final 6:08 and finished with 15 rebounds.

The Lady Vols also showed off their depth. Loree Moore, not usually a big scorer, came up with 11 points. Brittany Jackson scored seven off the bench, getting three key baskets in the second half.

So it'll be Tennessee's depth and experience vs. the exuberance of Connecticut's youth and brilliance of Taurasi – definitely a game worth watching.

CHUCK BURTON/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tennessee guard Kara Lawson drives around Duke's Wynter Whitley (31) in the first half of their semi-final round game at the NCAA Women's Final Four on Sunday.

UMass off to Holy Cross

[illegible] currently sit at 7-13 [illegible] a 3-3 record in the [illegible] Division.

[illegible] against Atlantic [illegible] dropped a [illegible] to Bonaventure in [illegible] Pa.

[illegible] earn an away latch win- [illegible] splitting a [illegible] with Lafayette [illegible] Siena and [illegible]

[illegible] Crusaders had [illegible] damage in succession [illegible] to UMass-Lowell, Boston College and twice being swept by Bucknell in doubleheaders.

The non-league contest will be the first of two for the Minutemen this week before they will travel to the Bronx, N.Y. for an A-10 series with Fordham this weekend.

The Maroon and White will play host to Hartfield on Thursday afternoon.

"We struggled early in the season while we were in Florida," Stone said. "But we're starting to play better baseball and we're winning games because of it."

Same story for Griffey – hurt before first trip

By Joe Kay
Associated Press

CINCINNATI (AP) – Ken Griffey Jr. just can't get started.

For the third straight year, the All-Century outfielder has a significant injury before the first road trip. A separated shoulder will sideline him for six to 10 weeks, and surgery is possible if it doesn't heal properly.

"He's certainly been snakebit, no question," Cincinnati Reds manager Bob Boone said. "They've all been significant injuries, and they've all come from trying. That's basically Junior's history."

He came to the Reds in a February 2000 trade with a history of durability and consistency. His only major injury in 11 years with the Seattle Mariners was a broken wrist from running into an outfield wall in 1995.

No matter how hard he tries, he can't stay healthy in Cincinnati.

The latest injury came when he tried to make a diving catch Saturday during a 9-7 loss to the Chicago Cubs. He landed on the shoulder and knocked the bone completely out of the socket.

Tests found no broken bones and no significant damage to the rotator cuff. Like Yankees shortstop Derek Jeter, who dislocated his left shoulder on opening day, Griffey will try to come back without surgery.

"If he had surgery now, he'd miss the season," Dr. Timothy Kremchek said. "If we rehab him and he's unable to get back, he still has surgery and misses the season.

"Looking at the tests and examinations we've done on him, I think there's an excellent chance he'll be able to return this year."

Griffey was discouraged and in a lot of pain when Kremchek examined him on Sunday.

"He's down," Kremchek said. "Yesterday, he was in shock. He had worked very hard and looked very good in spring training, and was looking forward to the season. He's discouraged. I think the fact that we can rehab this and get him back to playing this year has given him some hope."

When he joined his hometown team, Griffey was on pace to make a run at Hank Aaron's home run record. Injuries have limited him to 71 homers in three-plus seasons and raised doubts about the 33-year-old outfielder's future.

"If he didn't have bad luck, he would have no luck at all," outfielder Adam Dunn said.

It began during his first season with the Reds, when he pulled a hamstring and was forced to run carefully.

He tore the same hamstring while rounding third base in a spring training game in 2001, causing him to miss opening day for the first time in his career. Griffey also missed out on the All-Star game for the first time since he was a rookie in 1989.

Last year, he made it through spring training without a problem, then tore a tendon in his right knee during a rundown in the sixth game of the season.

The injuries inspired him to work hard over the winter to strengthen his legs, stay healthy and prove he's still one of baseball's best. He hit six homers during spring training and seemed poised for a throwback season.

Now, he's back in rehab.

"I know how important it is for him to stay healthy and play, coming off the years he's had and all the criticism that he's had about, 'You're not playing hard, not playing hurt,' all of the negative that surrounds him," shortstop Barry Larkin said. "It's unfortunate and undeserving and too bad."

The Reds haven't decided how to shuffle the roster to get through Griffey's absence. Reggie Taylor started in center on Sunday, dropped a fly ball and struck out in all three at-bats during a 5-4 victory over the Cubs.

Boone planned to start Larkin in center field, but changed his mind after talking to him for a half-hour.

Larkin played one game in center this spring, the first time in his pro career that he had appeared in the outfield. Boone said Larkin will practice catching fly balls before games this week to get used to the position.

"At some point, you'll probably see him out there," Boone said. "It's really a matter of when and how to do it."

Larkin felt nervous and awkward during his outfield appearance this spring, when no fly ball was hit his way. He needs practice before he's ready to try in a meaningful game.

www.dailycollegian.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
Boston Bartenders School of America
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher
• ID Card
• Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

A gig you can bank on.

Local supermarket branches are seeking:
Bankers
(selling products, providing customer service, and processing transactions)
Call 1-877-INAISLE to apply today.

When it comes to banking, Citizens Bank supermarket branches are different. We're dedicated to helping you live better, work, play, and bank the way you want. With extended hours and great benefits for full-time and part-time employees, it's as easy as finishing layered pie.

Citizens Bank
Not your typical bank.
www.citizensbank.com/employment
Citizens Bank is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer committed to building a diverse workforce. M/F/D/V

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
Results you can feel.
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

GET HOT.

Sandals are here! Steve Madden, Diesel, and Dansko.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Celebrate Israel's Contributions to the World

• The cell phone was developed in Israel by Motorola, which has its largest center in Israel.
• Israel is the only country in the world that entered the 21st century with a net gain in its number of trees.
• Intel's new high-speed Centrino chip, which will double battery life on laptops, was developed entirely in Israel.
• Israel has airlifted a total of 22,000 starving Ethiopian Jews to safety in Israel.
• The technology for AOL Instant Messenger was developed by Mirabilis, a company founded by four young Israelis.
• Mighty Morphin' Power Rangers was produced by Haim Saban, an Israeli whose family fled persecution in Egypt.
• KISS's legendary band member, Gene Simmons, is a native Israeli, born Chaim Witz.

For information about campus events, visit www.israelcelebration.com
SPONSORED BY: THE ISRAEL CAMPUS ROUNDTABLE CONVENED BY:
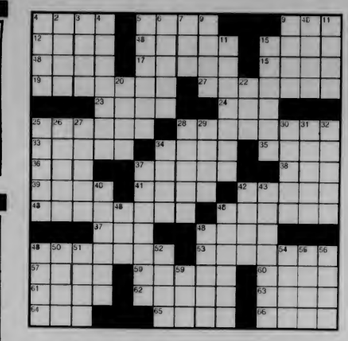
COMBINED JEWISH PHILANTHROPIES, JEWISH COMMUNITY RELATIONS COUNCIL AND HILLEL COUNCIL OF NEW ENGLAND
MEMBERS INCLUDE:
ADL, AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE, AIPAC, CAMERA, CONSULATE GENERAL OF ISRAEL TO NEW ENGLAND, THE DAVID PROJECT, HASBARA FELLOWSHIPS, ISRAEL ALIYAH CENTER, HAMAGSHIMIM AND USD/HAGSHAMA

Buttercup Festival • By Thomas Gronbeck

Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley

Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley

Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley



JayHoo and JawHoo • By Mark Vicente

Valley of the Squirrels • By Conrad X

ACROSS
1 Mountain pass info
5 Big pitcher
9 TD passers
12 Urban cruiser
13 Tibet's — Lama
15 Pants and jacket
16 Tease
17 Fairy tale brother
18 Polynesian image
19 Heartburn soother
21 Trooper's prey
23 For the guys
24 Ga. neighbor
25 Pawning
28 Highway warning (2 wds.)
33 Frighten
34 Expel
35 Sport for heavyweights
36 Out of the ordinary
37 Emery boards
38 Gun pellets
39 Judy Garland's daughter
41 Shakespeare play starter
42 Gets nosy
44 Grouch
46 Stick together
47 Involuntary movement
48 Say it's false
49 Candidate
53 Former (hyph.)
57 Some nest eggs
58 Name
60 Pitchdown man, e.g.
61 S.F. transit system
62 Scoff at
63 Wagon-train puller
64 Guileful
65 Not hard
66 JFK arrivals

DOWN
1 Singer — James
2 Grass
3 Gate
4 A, B or C
5 Border
6 Precincts
7 Gin inventor — Whitney
8 Rear-ends
9 Tobacco wad
10 Kid's wheels
11 Agitate
14 Has an effect on
15 Creeps forth
20 Small change
22 Large deer
25 Rock stars, maybe
26 Wireless set
27 Southern wine
28 Wall Street
29 optimists
30 Functions
30 Jazzman — Blake
31 Palette color
32 Marshall's band
34 Lubricates
37 Taps
40 Monet or Gauguin
42 Ducks' haunt
43 Beats
45 Fasten temporarily
46 Tuna salad ingredient
48 Alloys
49 Robins' beaks
50 Spoken
51 Crèche figure
52 One in Munich
54 Cash substitutes
55 Ale ingredient
56 Former spouses
59 Herbal drink

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	M	I	T	H		G	Y	M	S		H	A	F	T
L	A	N	K	A		H	E	A	P		A	W	E	S
A	H	S	O	N		E	L	S	A		C	L	A	R	K
T	S	P		O	A	L	S		C	O	I	N	S
		E	J	E	C	T		D	I	E	T	S
E	S	C	O	R	T		W	E	E	D	S
T	O	T	E		R	O	U	N	D		D	O	M
C	R	O	S	S	C	O	U	N	T	R	Y	S	K	I
H	E	I	R		W	H	A	L	E		E	T	R	E
		B	E	A	R		B	U	L	L		A	R	A	S
	M	I	P	E	D			N	U	S	H
T	A	R	O	T		D	E	L	T	A		C	A	M
S	N	O	W		D	U	P	O		B	A	H	I	A
A	N	N	S		O	U	T	I		E	M	E	R	Y
R	A	Y	E		A	L	E	S		L	A	S	S	O

1-27-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

Attention Collegian Staff: Voting for Editor-in-Chief ends Friday afternoon

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

TUESDAY
• High: 38
• Low: 25

WEDNESDAY
• High: 44
• Low: 24

THURSDAY
• High: 50
• Low: 30

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Tomato Soup
• Chicken Tetrazzini
• BBQ Beef Sandwich
• Curried Vegetables (vegan)

DINNER
• Tomato Soup
• Grilled Pork Chops
• Turkey Divan
• Grilled Portabella Mushroom Steaks (vegan)

HOROSCOPES

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Bored? Think of something fun to desire.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Just put the chocolate in the bag and no one will get hurt.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Beware of an offer that sounds too good to be true.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You are a crispy noodle in the vegetarian salad of life.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You have an evil heart and are greatly despised.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Stop lying to someone you care about, they know about it anyway.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Any doubts you have will disappear by the end of the week.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You just got rid of wicked comfy shoes for a pair that isn't even going to last.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Try something new this week, you'll find it to be very worth while.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Toothpaste will cover the thumbtack holes on your walls nicely.

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
A pig's tail is often curled, sometimes a dog's too.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Smile at a stranger, it will confuse them.

Quote of the Day

"It's the same old story. Boy finds girl, boy loses girl, girl finds boy, boy forgets girl, boy remembers girl, girl dies in a tragic blimp accident over the Orange Bowl on New Year's Day."

- The Naked Gun

Production Crew
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andy Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Jennifer DiMeglio
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lloyd / Gerry Auger

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you speak English? We need you! The department of linguistics is looking for monolingual speakers of English high school (foreign language ok). You will be paid $9 for a one-hour experiment. For more information, contact Dr. Joe Pater: pater@linguist.umass.edu

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups: Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Term Paper Editing! Editing performed by professors and graduate students. Visit us at www.paperchick.com or call us toll free 866-693-4TPT

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6803. Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstbiz.com/realty.com 253-7879

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? COME TO THE COMPLEX FAIR, WED APRIL 9, 10 TO 3 ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE. SPONSORED BY COMMUTER SERVICES, 428 STUDENT UNION. WWW.CSHRC.ORG

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstbiz.com/realty.com 253-7879

Apt. located in Brandywine Furnished Apt. Seeking Female Roommate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sandy @ 413-546-0499

AUTO FOR SALE

BMW 528 E 1987 Good Shape $1250.00 413-511-7580

89 Volkswagen jetta standard good condition driven everyday $600 or best offer 413-549-3545

Honda Accord LX 1992 Great Shape $1500 obo 413-251-1456

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise line entry level on board positions or year round. 941-329-6434 cruisecareers.com

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS: Pennsylvania children's sleep-away camp. If you love children we have positions for Directors, Asst Dir's, and Counselors for Tennis, Golf, Drama, Camping/Nature, High & Low Ropes, Gymnastics, Sports, Sailing, Water-skiing, Ceramics, Jewelry, Guitar, Aerobics, Self-Defense, Video, Piano, and Nurse (RN). Dates 6/19-8/16/03. On Campus Interviews arranged. Call 1-800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors – Town of Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. old. 5 range for both positions: $8.19-9.48/hr, 15-40 hrs per week. June 30-Aug. 15 Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept. 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

WSI/Lifeguards The Town of Amherst, Department of Leisure Services and Supplemental Education (LSSE) Aquatics Program is now accepting WSI applications for summer 2003 season. All Applicants must possess current WSI and Lifeguard certifications. Previous experience preferred. $8.19-9.48/hr. Application deadline: 4/21. Applications are available from the Town Hall Human Resources Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Opportunity Employer

EMPLOYMENT

Technical Writer for Policy Analysis Consulting/Software firm. Resume to Fred Trevz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or Fred@REMI.com

Economic / Business Development Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Trevz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com.

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Trevz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038 info@remi.com

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Need Free Photos? Professional Photography students seek models of all races, ages for portfolio assignments. No experience required. Email for details @ msgriswold@yahoo.com

Fall internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands on experience in the legal field- work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary; training provided. Deadline to begin application process is 4/22/03. Contact the Legal Services Office- 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Part time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database structure. Year round 665-2779

MOVIES EXTRAS/$40/DAY. ELS NEEDED Earn up to $150/450/day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX60 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

HOUSE FOR RENT

Large 4 Bedroom house in Hadley 1 mile and 3/4 to UMass. Available June 1 $2,650 Call Lincoln Real Estate 253-7879

5 Bedroom plus Newer house minutes from UMass $2700/month 548-8800

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1678

RENTAL PROBLEMS

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TEST-ING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUBLET

Pelham Sublet from June 1st - August 31st 4 beds 2 baths $1140 per month Call Mark 253-1479

TRAVEL

STS America's number one student tour operator is now hiring on-campus reps 2003-04 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break with STS America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Fiore, Schell honored

Earn ECAC offensive, defensive player awards

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

The Eastern College Athletic Conference honored a pair of Massachusetts men's lacrosse players Monday.

Senior midfielder Chris Fiore and sophomore goaltender Bill Schell were named ECAC Offensive and Defensive Players of the Week, respectively after the No. 7 Minutemen downed No. 17 University of Maryland Baltimore County in Baltimore Saturday, 11-8.

Fiore led the way offensively for the Minutemen who bounced back from an upset 11-10 loss to Penn State the week before – logging a hat trick and an assist against the Retrievers.

UMass came out sluggish, falling behind 2-0 early, but once Fiore put his team on the board with a goal from inside, the Minutemen came alive.

"I think we were still playing with last week's mentality ... we were still in last week's game, we didn't get out of it yet," Fiore said after the UMBC game. "Once we got a goal on the board it was back to playing lacrosse again."

The goal seemed to push the Minutemen into another gear as they scored six straight times in the second half, turning a 3-1 first quarter deficit into a 7-4 halftime lead.

UMass never trailed in the second half.

Schell, who has been forced to pick up the slack since senior All-American defenseman Tom Fallon went down with a groin injury in the win over Navy on March 8, made impressive save after impressive save to keep the Minutemen in the game despite their early struggles.

"Billy is unreal," Fiore said. "When I'm not looking at the game I'm playing defense, and I know the guy is going to shoot it past me, I'm breaking up the field because I have 100 percent confidence in Billy to save the ball. He starts everything. He talks the defense up, he gets the defense going.

"I'm not a defensive player, but I listen to Billy. He talks me through everything."

Schell turned away good UMBC offensive chances throughout the afternoon and finished the day with 13 saves, the second highest total of his career.

"Billy was excellent," Cannella said. "Hopefully he'll continue to improve every day. He was solid especially in the third and fourth quarters, he was excellent."

Schell entered the weekend in the nation's top 10 in save percentage, and goals against average.

Fiore ranks third on the team with 27 points (22 goals, five assists).

Chris Fiore was named the ECAC Offensive/Defensive Player of the Week after netting a hat trick and an assist in Saturday's 11-8 win at UMBC. Goaltender Bill Schell was also named Defensive Player of the Week.

Softball hoping to squeeze in twinbill

By Jeff Boyd
Collegian Staff

The toughest opponent for the Massachusetts softball team this week has been Mother Nature. With more snow in the forecast, the Minutewomen remain hopeful that today's weather conditions will allow them to play their scheduled doubleheader against Central Connecticut at 3 p.m.

The Minutewomen (19-10) have not seen live competition since their win over Maine last Wednesday and are anxious to free themselves from the confines of Boyden Gym.

"I do think that it's getting old being in the gym, but I also don't think that it matters," captain Jamie Cahalan said. "All of us love to play and we're just itching to get out there."

UMass coach Elaine Sortino is confident that today's matchup against the Blue Devils will be postponed due to the inclement weather conditions, but is looking ahead to the match up, if it does occur.

"You look forward to your competition. That's what we thrive on," Sortino said. "We're going to have to wait a little bit. I think that we're pretty much going to be like a caged tiger at this point. We just need to get out of the zoo and start playing."

Central Connecticut (5-17) comes into the twinbill with UMass riding a seven-game losing streak in which its was outscored by a combined margin of 42-12. The last time that the Blue Devils posted a win was on March 29 when they beat St. Francis 8-7. Inconsistency has been the trend for Central Connecticut this year as they have yet to post consecutive wins all season.

Should the weather allow the Minutewomen to play this afternoon, they will look to add to their current winning streak of 10. Much of UMass' recent success can be credited to its offense, particularly the ability to put runners in scoring position. The Minutewomen have already stolen a combined 61 bases in just 29 games, more than doubling their total at this time last season.

"You can score 10 more different ways from third than you can from second," Cahalan said. "It just opens up a whole new way for us to execute and put more runs on the board."

With the toughest part of the schedule in the rearview mirror, UMass has been able to produce more runs against less talented teams. Runs early in the game have also taken much of the pressure off of the UMass pitching staff.

Senior Brandi Cross has been one of the primary reasons for UMass' current wealth of offense. Cross is batting .354 with 27 RBIs and nine home runs. She was also named the Atlantic 10 co-Player of the Week following UMass' four wins over Fordham and Maine. In those four games, Cross went 7-for-11 with two homers and 10 RBIs.

"Coach and I changed my swing which has really helped a lot," Cross said. "I keep my weight back more and I feel more solid with my swing."

Offensive production is not the only aspect of the Minutewomen's game that has showed improvement. The Maroon and White's defense has also shown signs of greatness and has become more consistent. According to Sortino, it is the defense that will determine the team's success down the road.

"Defensively, we are playing solid and that's really important because defense will win you a championship," Sortino said.

Sophomore pitcher Kelli Arnold was also honored by the conference, named the A-10 co-Pitcher of the Week. Arnold received the award following her performances against Maine and Fordham. Arnold shut out both teams while giving up just five hits and striking out 11 in 12 innings of work. Arnold's ERA has reached a miniscule 1.87 while limiting opposing batters to an average of .220.

Lax splits in talented A-10

Hope Zelinger and the UMass women's lacrosse team split two Atlantic 10 games this weekend, falling to Temple Friday and beating George Washington Sunday.

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 is proving to be one of the more competitive conferences in women's lacrosse this season. The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has been witness to varying levels of the talent pool recently, splitting two conference games this weekend.

The weekend ended on Sunday, when the Minutewomen (6-5, 2-1 A-10) dismantled George Washington (5-4, 1-2 A-10), 17-6.

In the confines of Richard F. Garber Field, the Maroon and White flexed its offensive muscles while shutting down any Lady Colonial rebuttal. Leading the offensive push was the veteran duo of Hope Zelinger and Jada Emery, who outscored the George Washington offense alone.

"For one of the first times this season, we found a way to play our game the entire second half and it's evident in not only the score but also in our attitudes," sophomore goalie Joey Rubin said.

All in all, the Minutewomen were playing better on both sides of the ball. The Lady Colonials were forced to defend most of the second half, while the Maroon and White attack laid on a 30-minute onslaught.

The Minutewomen were stifling on defense, exhibiting perhaps their best performance, aside from the 20-1 massacre of Albany on March 20.

"Our team has an unbelievable defensive unit and when we play together, we're truly almost unbreakable," Rubin said.

As the middle of the season nears, the Minutewomen have been either on or off. If the instances of brilliance can change into halves, the Maroon and White exhibit one of the stronger teams in the conference.

The Minutewomen have a streak of three straight A-10 games coming up. After the George Washington game it appears they are starting to gel on both sides of the field.

"Though our goal of being undefeated in the A-10 is already gone, where we go from here and what happens in the A-10 tournament in May is completely in our control," Rubin said.

The Minutewomen started their weekend on Friday with a trip down to Philadelphia to face a very equally talented Temple team. The Lady Owls (5-4, 1-0 A-10) won the contest 14-11, in a game that showed two momentum-packed halves.

Temple seemed to blow the game wide open in the first half, going into the break with a 9-2 lead. The Maroon and White had no answer for Temple's Dianna Radcliffe, who tallied six goals in the game.

The Minutewomen turned the game around after the break and began chipping away at the sizable lead. Maura Garrity and Lydia Robinson turned up the heat for a stagnant UMass attack, each netting three goals for the game.

"The first half of the temple game, both offensively and defensively, is a really bad portrayal of the talent that we have on our team," Rubin said.

The nine-goal half wasn't enough for UMass, as the Temple offense would not be fully denied. A five-goal second half capped an explosive offensive performance by the Lady Owls in their first A-10 victory of the season.

Minutemen head off to the Cross

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team will look to extend its season-high, three-game winning streak as it travels to Worcester to face Holy Cross this afternoon.

The Minutemen (7-9 3-3 Atlantic 10) will be well-rested, as they have not played since shutting out Sacred Heart last Tuesday at Earl Lorden Field. UMass' three-game set with Xavier over the weekend was cancelled due to snow. This will leave coach Mike Stone with a full compliment of arms to throw at the Crusaders.

Leading the way will be potential staff ace Mike Crane. The sophomore right-hander currently stands at 3-0 on the season while posting a 2.79 earned run average. His 23 strikeouts in 19-1/3 innings lead the team, as do his three victories.

Stone believes the ability to get ahead of the hitters is the story behind Crane's success. The Boston College High School graduate holds opponents to a paltry .194 batting average.

"[Crane] has thrown the ball well for us both starting and out of the bullpen," Stone said. "He started in Florida, and his ability to get his pitches over for strikes and get ahead of the hitters makes him effective."

Along with Crane, the sophomore duo of southpaw Keith Doherty and right-hander Anthony Gallo are looking to become the ace of the young staff. Combined with freshman Matt Torra, Stone has some promising young hurlers at his disposal.

"[Doherty and Gallo] have been giving us some good work," Stone said. "[Torra] is young and we still want to see him work to know what he can do, but so far he's performed pretty well. We're just still at the point where we need to get some guys in some games and watch them work so we know more and more of what we have."

The Minuteman offense will again look to be sparked by Maine transfer Matt Reynolds. The junior, who has played first, second and third base for the Minutemen, is batting .346 this year with three doubles, two runs batted in and five runs scored.

"We're swinging the bats well," Stone said. "We're making things happen, getting guys on base, moving them along and getting them in. Those are the kind of things you need to do to win ball games."

Continued on page 8

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 2003 — NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 — VOLUME CIX ISSUE 114

Backing the Romney plan

SGA responds to Romney's claim of support

PATRICIA MCDONNELL/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney speaks during a news conference about his higher education initiatives at the Statehouse in Boston, Monday. Behind Romney are members of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club, from left are: Gina Palumbo, Christopher Carlozzi, and David Falvey.

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club rallied in support of Governor Mitt Romney's higher education restructuring proposal on Monday morning.

The UMass Republican Club spearheaded the petition drive in an effort to inform students about Romney's proposed changes within higher education. At a press conference at the Massachusetts State House, UMass Republican Club President Chris Carlozzi addressed reporters, supporting Romney's plan. Carlozzi, along with eight other UMass students, presented 300 student signatures also in support of Romney's proposal.

"Our petition started last Wednesday and it went for a few days and we got about 300 signatures," Carlozzi said. "The governor's office was eager to hear what we had begun and we set up a press conference in which we gave him the signatures. It was great because I had the chance to talk to him before the press conference and here what he had to say."

The petition established by the Republican Club, which has since named its coalition Students for Higher Education, states that it supports Romney's plan and that with every student that signs its petition, the more the coalition will grow.

Republican Club Vice President David Falvey said that despite the short notice of the event, he felt that it was just the beginning of mobilizing student support at UMass.

Falvey continued by explaining that he feels a lot of misconceptions are being heard around campus, and he hopes to inform students of what the proposal is really about.

"Monday was our first effort and it went well, we were able to get some press and learn a lot more," Falvey said. "There are a lot of misconceptions by students about the plan and we hope to continue circulating our petition and informing student's as they sign it."

The Student Government Association responded to Monday's press conference, stating in a press release that it does not support Romney's plan in its entirety. It further explained support expressed by Romney does not represent the campus as a whole, nor the SGA.

"I don't agree with what the Governor is doing, using us as a public relations tool," SGA President Dave Carr said.

Speaker Dan Saunders said the reference Romney made about support from UMass does not truly represent the sentiments of the campus as a whole, or the SGA.

"The UMass Amherst Student Government Association has never issued a formal resolution endorsing the Governor's plan," Saunders said. "When the issue was addressed, the SGA's resolution noted both the positive and negative aspects of the plan.

"The Student Government Association will not be used as a PR tool by anyone. We will continue to take an objective look at the Governor's proposal and make a recommendation on its merits."

Aside from issues surrounding the Romney's proposal, members of the Senate are gearing up for the remaining semester, as well as getting used to new additions made by members of the SGA around campus.

Tonight members will be voting on some of Carr's appointed executive cabinet positions, however, the names or positions that senators will be addressing have yet to be released.

With the grand opening of the Blue Wall Pub occurring last Friday and a new ATM located in Southwest, members of the SGA are confident in what the future holds for student life on campus as it looks toward next year.

"I think it [the Blue Wall Pub] is great and a step in the right direction," Carr said. "I believe the Blue Wall Pub served roughly 1000 people on its first day and I've been told it was a raging success and I think it's setting up to benefit student life."

Other new additions to the UMass community have been a newly placed ATM machine in the Southwest residential area, a project that has been on the SGA to-do list for the 2002-2003 school year.

The SGA Senate will meet tonight at 7 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center to address these issues. All Senate meetings are open to the public.

Professor discusses military myths in the media

By Kelly Farrell
Collegian Staff

Last night's "Pizza and Prof," sponsored by Commonwealth College, featured Bob Benway, Professor of Aerospace Studies, discussing "American Service Men and Women: Media Myths vs. Reality."

In addition to being a Professor, Benway is also Lt. Col of the Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps (AFROTC). He said it was important people know he was discussing his own opinion and was not representing the U.S. military during the discussion.

"It's Bob Benway talking," he said, temporarily stepping out of his military role. "It's not proper for military members to comment on the policies of our leader. That's why I'm not wearing my uniform."

Benway gave one more disclaimer, the warning that his presentation included obscene language and graphic depictions of war. He continued, comparing Hollywood's depiction of war, the military and service personnel, to the realities that he has seen in his own life.

Benway deconstructed Hollywood movie characters such as the "half-crazed, physically abusive drill instructor." He showed a clip from a movie in which a drill instructor choked one recruit and shouted at others, "You're the lowest form of life on Earth! Do you maggots understand that?"

Benway and several of the student cadets who were present acknowledged there was some truth in the clip's representation. Shouting at recruits is part of a drill instructor's role, they said.

"But in reality drill instructors do not verbally and physically abuse recruits," said Benway.

Benway acknowledged that part of the reason for "one dimensional characters" in Hollywood is the reduced amount of time movie makers have to develop their characters. Nonetheless, Benway said it was important to look at the myths versus reality because Hollywood plays a large role in creating people's images of war and the military.

Benway addressed Hollywood's glorification of military personnel and war as well as Hollywood's unrealistically negative portrayals. For example, he said the occurrence of veterans being psychologically damaged from war was not as common as Hollywood might cause people to believe.

"I've seen it, but it's not a common, everyday occurrence," Benway said.

He also shared statistics on military demographics versus the U.S. as a whole. For example, only 12 percent of the U.S. population is African American, he said, while 20 percent of

Continued on page 3

Flag controversy reheats in Amherst during wartime

By Kelly Farrell
Collegian Staff

After two years of periodic controversy concerning flying additional American flags in downtown Amherst, the issue is back in the town's spotlight.

What began as a typically mild discussion between Amherst Select Board members and residents on Monday, April 7, turned into a heated debate with residents calling members names, swearing at the board and interrupting the board members.

"At a time like this, it's easy to be torn apart," said Vietnam War veteran Gordo Fletcher-Howell regarding the escalating controversy regarding the added flags, particularly during wartime.

The issue is whether the Amherst Select Board should uphold a town bylaw passed on Sept. 10, 2001, that called for 29 commemorative flags to be raised on six national patriotic holidays or if this law should be suspended for the duration of the American-Iraqi war.

Amherst resident Larry Kelley said the board should not uphold the bylaw during war. Kelley requested on March 24, the flags be put up throughout the war "to be displayed as a sign of support for troops killed, captured and those still in harms way."

Kelley said he hoped the board would address the issue at the select board meeting this past Monday. The board on the other hand, said it would put a broader issue of how Amherst could show support for the troops on the agenda for next week's meeting, April 14.

The flag issue escalated before either select board meeting took place. Preparing for the "Support the Troops Rally" last Sunday, April 6, rally organizers placed eight flags on the light poles in Amherst Common. The American flags remained on the poles throughout the rally and into Monday morning, until Amherst Town Manger Barry Del Castilho ordered the flags to be removed in accordance with the town bylaw.

Eight Amherst residents, growing more upset by the removal of their new, privately purchased flags, attended the select board meeting Monday night to discuss the issue of returning their flags and the town's 29 flags to the Amherst Common utility poles. A heated debate followed.

The group of eight residents opened the questions section of the meeting with resident Kevin Joy standing in the boardroom with a large American flag.

"I think it's the obligation of this board to stand up and say…'we are at war and we want to fly the American flag.' I would like you to do that tonight please," said a resident in attendance.

"We're not talking about rules. We're not talking about your petty little politics," Amherst resident Jim Ryan told the board.

"It's good to support the troops, but I thought the guys who came in here were belligerent and rude. They were demanding of the board. They could have made their case much better," said Amherst resident Chris Boid shortly after the meeting ended.

However, even a member of the select board had to admit that the resident flag supporters did have at least one good point.

"If you can't take a flyer down from the poles because it violates people's First Amendment rights, then how do you justify taking down flags from those same poles?" asked Kelley in his March 24 letter.

Other residents brought up the same argument and later Dolly Jolly, select board clerk, said she wished the board could get rid of the flyers too.

"That was the most truthful thing they [the flag supporters] said all night," Jolly said.

Board members made it clear that they were not opposed to flying the flag in Amherst. They noted there are flags in several locations including Town Hall, located directly across from the Amherst Common.

"Patriotism should not be a Trojan horse to intolerance and incivility," said Select Board Chairman Carl Seppala, who is also a U.S. Navy veteran. "It gives patriotism a bad name.

KELLY FARRELL/COLLEGIAN

Continued on page 3

IT minor program gaining ground

By Tom Brennan
Collegian Correspondent

Here at the University of Massachusetts, the information technology minor program is growing in popularity among students looking to gain an edge in an increasingly competitive job market.

Not just for "techies," the program has attracted students from a variety of different majors from journalism and communications to English.

Drawn from courses that are offered in a number of different departments on campus, the aim of the program is to provide a general study of information technology (IT) and its place in the world today.

Professor Bill Israel, the department chair, says that every professional or business field is looking for people with general IT skills.

"IT is needed in every discipline across the board," he said. "The demand for knowledgeable people is much broader [than you'd think]."

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, of the 10 top jobs in America, eight involve IT – but six of those eight are not specialist-oriented. IT is an integral part of all professions today and the jobs available aren't only for computer science students.

"It was a better fit," Frank said.

In his new job at Blue Note Records in New York City, Frank is putting the skills he learned in these classes to use every day. He feels creating databases and constructing web pages are practical skills that have real applications in the everyday work environment.

"Students still at UMass need to make time to learn this stuff," Frank said. "If you can learn these skills while you're in school, you're ahead of the game."

Joanna Zeitlin, also an IT minor and a graduating senior from the English department, agrees.

"I wish it was promoted more among students in the humanities [majors]," Zeitlin said. "It's so important to be well-rounded. And for students graduating with only history or English degrees, having this background puts you a huge step above the rest. It makes you stand out."

Zeitlin has used the skills she learned in the IT program to create an online portfolio/webpage to showcase her work for prospective employers.

Information technology is a competitive department. Of the 200 or so people that apply each semester, only 60 are accepted. Given the budget troubles the state and its universities are experiencing, the program still has some growing to do and, therefore, can't accommodate everybody yet. Students are chosen according to GPA and overall academic excellence.

But, just as the courses are taken from a wide range of departments such as art, journalism, business and even resource economics, Israel wants the students that make up the program to be just as varied.

"We're looking to get the best students we can get from all the different colleges," Israel said.

The program is the first of its kind in the Massachusetts public higher education system.

It was formed in partnership with the Commonwealth Information Technology Initiative – which supports computer science and IT education in the state through grants – to "mold a knowledge revolution."

Students are required to take 15 credit hours studying different forms of IT from programming to multimedia. There is enough flexibility and varied course selection, though, for students to be able to concentrate on their own specific interests.

Courses offered range from Computer Animation and Internet Business Design to Intro to Business Information Systems and Contemporary Legal & and Ethical Issues in Cyberspace. Programming in JAVA or Visual Basic is also available to students.

"What we're trying to develop here," Israel said. "Is a chance to get people IT fluent."

He says that so far the program is doing well. In December, IT saw its first two graduates, and will see at least two dozen more in May.

"It's going superbly well," Israel said. "It's really very exciting. We've created a program that's unique."

Students seem to agree. Frank says that while students do have to take some core technical courses, they still get a chance to see how IT works in the everyday world. IT is studied from a political and economic perspective to see how it affects society.

"I'm extremely happy I stayed an extra semester to finish the minor," Frank said. "[Adding this to the university curriculum] was a great idea. I would definitely encourage students to get involved while they're there."

Applications for the Fall 2003 semester are due today. An information session for those accepted will be held April 10 to help orient and prepare students for pre-registration April 11. Applications for the program can be found at the IT website www.umass.edu/itprogram/index.html and should be returned to Israel's mailbox in 108 Bartlett.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPORTS PAGE 12
COMICS PAGE 11
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

CENSORING OPINION
GOVERNMENT SHOULDN'T MEDDLE WITH FREE SPEECH
PAGE 4

AGING GRACEFULLY
MADONNA BATTLES AGEISM
PAGE 6

TIGER TOWN
WOODS AND CO. PREPARE FOR THE MASTERS
PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN COMMUNITY BULLETIN

WEDNESDAY APRIL 9

SMITH COLLEGE – The Image of Language: Contemporary Typographical Book Arts from the Mortimer Rare Book Room. An exhibition curated by Laurel Damashek, class of 2004, will be held in the Rare Books Art Gallery in Neilson Library.

SMITH COLLEGE – Six panels of the National AIDS Quilt will be on display as a memorial and tribute to AIDS victims and their loved ones. The display will open at 9 a.m. in Helen Hills Hills Chapel. Various service-related donations are appreciated but the quilt is free.

AMHERST COLLEGE – Zazen Meditation in the Seiso Ani Ethel Hosie. This event begins each week and is free.

UMASS – "Renaissance Wednesday: Discussion Circle and Violence in the Renaissance" will begin Wednesday beginning at 4 p.m. This session is free and open to the public and will be held at the Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies (530 East Pleasant St., Amherst). For more information call 577-3049.

UMASS – Jazz Guitarist Michael Gregory and Theater Artist and Educator Tracy Converse Heard have related to making a live performance meets such as marketing agents, contracts, working in education, and collaborations. For more info email aces@contined.umass.edu, call 545-2360, or visit the website at www.umass.edu/aes. Fee: 5-College students free; others $10 suggested donation; $40 for the 5 part series (April 2, 9, 15, 23, 30). Sponsored by Arts Extension Service, UMass Division of Continuing Education, and UMass Arts Council. This event will be held in Campus Center from 4:30-6:30 p.m.

UMASS – Creative Expressions Night in The Stonewall Center, Crampton House/SW. This event will be held from 5-9 p.m. and is free. For more info call 545-4824

UMASS – Join students from the Newman Center and Hillel House for a screening of the movie "Keeping the Faith" followed by a provocative discussion on Jewish and Christian stereotypes and how we perceive one another at the Hillel House at 7p.m.

AMHERST COLLEGE – "The Vatican and the Crisis in the Catholic Church" a lecture being held by Jason Berry, author of "Lead Us Not Into Temptation: Catholic Priests and the Sexual Abuse of Children." The talk will focus on international dimensions of the church's sexual crisis and its impact on Pope John Paul II's legacy. This event will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Cole Assembly Room, Converse Hall. For more info call 542-2181.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – "A Tale of Three Cities: Shanghai, Hong Kong, and Singapore," a lecture being held at 4 p.m. in the New York Room, Mary Woolley Hall.

THURSDAY APRIL 10

AMHERST COLLEGE – Lecture on the Roe v. Wade Case. Sarah Weddington, the attorney who successfully argued that women have a fundamental right to choose abortion, will speak. She is a law professor at the University of Texas at Austin and author of "A Question of Choice." Sponsored by the Amherst College Feminist Alliance, Women's and Gender Studies Department, the Association of Amherst Students, the Student Activities Fund, the Amherst College Lecture Fund, and the Everywoman's Center at UMass. This event will take place at 7:30 p.m. in Johnson Chapel.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – "Shakespeare: A Festival" presents an ensemble of actors resurrects Shakespeare's words with a collage-like script comprised of scenes and monologues from such celebrated works as Richard III, A Midsummer-Night's Dream, and Othello. For more info call (413) 559-5351. The show will start at 8 p.m and the prices are students $5; general admission $5.

UMASS – The Art of Living Club is holding the "Sound and Silence: Jam for Peace" today in the Campus Center, room 911-915 from 12 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. For more info call 374-7240.

UMASS – "Common Threads: Fabric and Traditional Asian Garment Design" – A Contemporary Interpretation featuring a talk, exhibits, models and sales by Master Designer and Weaver Leanore Alaniz. This event will be held from 3:30-5 p.m. on the 10th floor of the Campus and is $10.

UMASS – Kinsey Series Dialogue Lecture Series – "Radicalizing the Everyday: Feminisms and Participatory Action Research," will be held in the School of Management, Room 108 at 4:30 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – South Asian Film Festival will be held from 7:00 p.m. to 10 p.m. in Graham Hall, Hillyer, Brown Fine Arts Center.

UMASS – 2003 Magic Triangle Jazz Series presents David Murray and the Gwo-Ka Masters at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. Tickets are $12 public; $7 students. For tickets call Fine Arts Center Box Office, 1-800-999-UMAS.

UMASS – Passover meals at the Kosher Dining Commons at Hillel House during the week of April 17-April 24. Deadline to RSVP is today at the Franklin Dining Hall Meal Office.

FRIDAY APRIL 11

UMASS – A Workshop will be held on "Researcher's Identities: Lens for Viewing Our Work" from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the School of Education, room 105.

AMHERST COLLEGE – GLBT Alumni/Student Mentoring Weekend will be held at 4:30 p.m. in Cole Assembly Room, Converse Hall. Kevin K. Kumashiro, Ph.D., founding director of the Center for Anti-Oppressive Education will speak on the field of "anti-oppressive education."

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A Young Lady's Illustrated Primer: Mount Holyoke College Senior Thesis Dance Concert will take place at 8 p.m. in Studio Theater, Kendall Sports and Dance Complex. Prices are $5 general admission, $3 students, seniors and children. For reservations call (413) 538-2848 or e-mail dance-reservations@mholyoke.edu.

UMASS – Come and cook meals to eat with residents of the Anne Whalen House in Amherst. Meet at Newman Center 11:45 a.m. Contact Jillian at jmarcus@student.umass.edu.

UMASS – Go hiking with Hillel. Meet at 12 p.m. at the Hillel House. RSVP to Oren at bachutz@yahoo.com or 546-3013.

SATURDAY APRIL 12

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – Hampshire College Chorus and Friends presents a varied concert of light favorites. Elaine Broad, conductor; Danny Holt, accompanist; Dan Inglis, student conductor. Reception following the concert. This event will be held at 2 p.m. in the Recital Hall, Music and Dance Building, Hampshire College. It is free and open to the public.

UMASS – Seniors & Jewish Off Campus Connection BBQ at 6 p.m. Celebrate Spring with good food, good company and outdoor fun. R.S.V.P. to Robbie at rjmedwed@aol.com or Rachel at 549-1710.

UMASS – Israeli Dancing at 7:30pm, Hillel House, free. Come and learn.

MONDAY / TUESDAY APRIL 13

UMASS – Kehilat Hillel Hazzina. Monday at 7:45am at the Hillel House.

UMASS – Myths vs. Realities: Federal Income Tax Policies and Bush's Tax Initiatives Talk presented by John Fox, Mt. Holyoke College. Part of the Center for Public Policy and Administration Colloquium Speaker Series program. Faculty members from the Five-College community discuss public policy aspects and implications of their current research. Will be held Tuesday from 12 p.m. to 1 p.m. in Thompson Hall, room 620.

Compiled by Amy O'Neill

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating entirely from revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1934. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been entirely student-run since 1991. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Brandon McNatt Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

GET PAID TO GO TO SCHOOL. TALK ABOUT ROLE REVERSAL.

The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

UMass Daily Collegian
Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives for Fall 2003

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, for more information.

All Majors & Classes Welcome to Apply
Current Freshmen Strongly Encouraged

SARAH LOVETT/COLLEGIAN

E2M on the horizon

Michael Garjain, spokesperson for E2M as well as an UMass alumnus, spoke about the new philosophy for Community Conscious Capitalism. He was joined by Alan Singer of the Franklin County CDC as part of the E2M lecture Tuesday night in SOM.

Terror expert speaks on contributions to groups

By MORRIS SINGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Senior terror analyst, Evan Kohlmann, from the Washington, D.C. based counterterrorism think-tank, The Investigative Project, spoke yesterday at Amherst College about "fanaticism within religion" and terrorist activities in the Middle East directed toward America and Israel.

Kohlmann came in lieu of NBC Terror Analyst Steve Emerson, who had planned to speak last night. Emerson needed to cancel, and selected Kohlmann to take his place at the talk.

Kohlmann divided his talk into two sections, one on state-sponsored terrorism and the other on privately-sponsored terrorism. He said that Iran is, in his opinion, a considerable backer of terrorist activities and more specifically a large supporter of the terrorist group Hizbollah.

"Iran contributes more than $60 million to Hizbollah each year," he said.

According to Kohlmann, Hizbollah is based in and sponsored by Syria, but its terrorist cells have been found on the North American continent, including Canada, North Carolina and Michigan.

Al-Qaeda is one of the best known examples of privately-sponsored terrorism, Kohlmann said. He noted the beginnings of al-Qaeda activity against the United States reaches back beyond the recent past, and that the United States has been working for a long time to combat these illicit forces.

"The al-Qaeda war on terrorism is not something new," said Kohlmann.

Despite US conflict with this terrorist group, Kohlmann insisted ties between Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and al-Qaeda are not clear, contrary to what the Bush administration has repeatedly told American citizens and the international community.

"There is no hard evidence linking bin-Laden and Saddam Hussein, yet," Kohlmann said.

The question-and-answer session followed the talk and quickly became a place for the audience to voice their criticisms of American-lead action in Iraq. One audience member even engaged Kohlmann in an argument, eventually walking away from the microphone with a look of disgust and ignoring the remainder of Kohlmann's response.

One person chastised the United States for filtering weapons to now problematic Iraq because at the time it arguably worked in accordance with America's best interests against Iran.

Kohlmann responded, "If we're going to focus on the suppliers of Iraq's weapons, let's focus on the true suppliers."

He cited France, Germany, and the former Soviet Union in his remark.

Regardless of weapons and financial aid from European countries, Kohlmann said, the Baath Party regime must be put down.

"Generally the attitude is to use resources to free the Iraqi people and allow them to do what they want with their country," he said. "The regime of Saddam is fundamentally corrupt... Saddam has killed hundreds of thousands of civilians unnecessarily."

Amherst College Hillel President Leora Maccabee, who moderated the question-and-answer session, had to remind several participants to limit their inquiry so that everyone could have a turn. Nevertheless, the event concluded before all the questions had been answered.

A reception where attendees had the opportunity to talk in person with Kohlmann followed the audience's questions.

Saddam in limbo after latest airstrike

By JOHN J. LUMPKIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) – For U.S. leaders, the latest airstrike aimed at Saddam Hussein has returned the Iraqi president to the limbo he had occupied after the first bombs nearly three weeks ago. Officials just don't know if he is alive or dead.

After videotapes were aired last week in which Saddam seemed to refer to wartime events, officials said he probably had survived the March 20 strike aimed at killing him.

Then on Monday, U.S. intelligence learned that Saddam and sons were possibly going to attend a meeting with Iraqi intelligence officials in a building in the al-Mansour neighborhood of western Baghdad.

The site was in the same general part of Baghdad where Iraqi television had shown Saddam being mobbed by supporters on Friday, said one U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The intelligence information was passed to U.S. Central Command, which directed a B-1B bomber to the site. Forty-five minutes later, it dropped four bombs.

"We characterize that strike as being very, very effective," said Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal, vice director of the Pentagon's Joint Staff, to a news conference. "What we have for battle damage assessment right now is essentially a hole in the ground ... where we believed high-value targets were."

Three houses were destroyed. It was unclear who was within, and whether there were any survivors. Tuesday, Iraqi rescue workers recovered bodies from the debris with a bulldozer. The body of a child and part of a young woman were pulled from the site.

Iraqi security around the site was light, raising questions about whether anyone important had been inside.

Two of the bombs dropped were bunker-busters, designed to penetrate underground tunnels. However, officials said they had no specific information that there were underground facilities at the site. The bombs were apparently dropped in case there were.

Some U.S. officials described the target as a restaurant, although an AP reporter at the scene saw the only restaurant in the neighborhood was some distance away and still intact. American defense and intelligence officials insisted Tuesday the right target had been struck.

Determining Saddam's status remains the same challenge it has been since the war began.

Various sources, from electronic eavesdropping to spies on the ground, are presumably being pulled for any information, but officials described the overall intelligence on Saddam's whereabouts and status as often lacking, and sometimes frustratingly contradictory.

The status of Saddam's sons Qusai and Odai is similarly unknown.

American troops do not control the al-Mansour neighborhood and are therefore unable to search the rubble. Officials dismissed any discussion of forensic investigations of the site as premature and speculative.

In general, identifying remains depends partly on what is recovered. A corpse's teeth or fingerprints are the easiest identifiers, if dental records or a known print are on file for comparison.

With DNA analysis, even the tiniest fragment of human remains stands a good chance of being identified – again, as long as authorities can match the remains to a known sample of DNA from Hussein or a close relative.

A personal match could come from numerous places: Medical specimens stored in a hospital somewhere, a hair left in a comb, cells deposited on a cigar butt or drinking glass.

Barring that, a close relative's DNA might be used.

Scientists sometimes find analyzing mitochondrial DNA, which is passed down through the maternal DNA, better for identifying remains than analyzing the nuclear DNA passed on by each parent.

If Saddam's sons were killed with him, nuclear DNA testing could tell that a father and two sons were killed. DNA from the sons' mother would add to the evidence.

Associated Press writer Lauran Neergaard contributed to this report.

Flag controversy reheats

Continued from page 1

"I have a Support Our Troops bumper sticker on my car. I have flags on it," he continued.

Seppala also supported the idea of keeping the flags up following the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, which occurred less than 24 hours after the board had originally created the flag bylaw.

Although the controversy is receiving renewed attention, it began in the summer of 2001 when the town purchased the 29 commemorative flags fulfilling a request by local veterans. After the town decided, on Sept. 10, 2001, how, when, and where these flags would be flown, domestic and international issues changed drastically, including the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and the war in Iraq.

The controversy received national media attention with stories by the Wall Street Journal, the Associated Press, Los Angeles Times, CNN and Fox News. Several members of the media incorrectly reported the controversy, including several reports that the town had decided to restrict residents from hanging their flags to only six days a year.

Due to the errors, people on both sides of the issue were slightly hesitant to bring it up to the press again.

"I didn't want to go through that [national media coverage] again with the controversy between 15 flag supporters and ultra liberals disparaging the symbol of the flag," said Kelley.

Discussing military myths in the media

Continued from page 1

the U.S. military is African American.

Benway also shared some of the military's rules that applied only to women. Women cannot serve in submarines, Special Forces or some infantry, tank, and artillery units, he said. When a student asked why women could not participate in these divisions, Benway offered several reasons, such as women cannot serve on submarines because there is not enough room for separate bathroom facilities, he said.

As for the Special Forces, Benway said, "A lot of leaders aren't comfortable with the thought of a woman P.O.W." The idea of women being raped was one large concern, he said.

Following the discussion, Benway asked if anyone had any more questions or comments. After no one raised their hands or voiced any more ideas, Benway said he was a bit surprised.

"I thought I'd be walking in here with a bull's-eye on my chest," he said, expressing his expectation for students to be shooting out several questions on the issues raised.

Students did not have anything to add at the end of the presentation, but several said they enjoyed it.

"My boyfriend was a marine," said Tamara Stec, a junior majoring in Biology. "So I thought this was interesting. I have thought about movies and the media and compared them to him."

News meeting today at 5 p.m.

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
Results you can feel.
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

A Course for Everyone
TUFTS SUMMER

Consider Summer Study at TUFTS University.
Three Sessions
May 21–June 27
July 1–August 8
May 21–August 8
http://ase.tufts.edu/summer

McMurphy's welcomes Live Music

THE GUITAR DUDES every wednesday
NO COVER
positive ID required

moving off-campus? find your housing at the... apartment complex fair
TODAY 10 – 3 Campus Center Concourse
Brought to you by Commuter Services • 428 Student Union • 545-0865 • www.cshrc.org

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Censorship of war opinions is unconstitutional

We will not allow crime. The tumult began in the March when he and his other favorite moments unloaded the bar during a [illegible] with [illegible]

[illegible] Democratic primaries would have been further inflamed because the scathing comments for about the war. But he chose not to. And that decision is to be applauded.

Mr. DeGeneres and only [illegible] representatives [illegible] the letter to Columbia had no place [illegible] the right with the threat of [illegible]

Bumbaver was right in refusing to buckle under pressure from Hollywood's elite and outrage.

It should be noted however, that DeGeneres's comments were blatantly out of line and tainted the [illegible] and waiting for the death of Americans.

Part of a recently article on CNN.com read: Dixie Chicks and Ellen DeGeneres are staring [illegible] in unpopular views in writing or spreading [illegible] own [illegible] and [illegible] a million Michael Moore's [illegible] relieving [illegible] 247 tanks in Somalia that left the American serviceman dead and the body of one of them dragged in the street.

DeGeneres's remarks were admittedly controversial, and provocative at this time of war. But that [illegible] by Bumbaver have [illegible] to [illegible] them.

Information from CNN.com was used in this edi-

[illegible] editorial reminded the [illegible] Opinion [illegible] The Collegian editorial board.

© The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. Dist. by UFS Inc.

The songs of war

Regan McKendry

Music is one of those ever-present things in our lives.

Whether we are driving around in the car, resting in our dorm room or waiting around the airport for a connection as I'm doing right now, music is always there. If there is nothing to listen to, we still hum a song in our heart or sing a melody in the shower. In the movies, our fantasy worlds we put music in the background as mood pieces often wondering why our own lives don't have such a great accompanying soundtrack.

With such omnipresence, music is also used to make statements both about how Johnny and Suzy fell in love along with much more serious commentary. War has been on everyone's mind lately; musicians included. Previous battles in history have shrouded their own musical catalog of the times, be it the big bands on World War II, the protest songs of Vietnam, or even the rousing rendition of our national anthem that Whitney Houston performed at the Super Bowl during the Persian Gulf War.

Only time will tell what is remembered from this conflict with Iraq. In a more broad sense, there are already songs that people associate with the attacks on America. Anytime I hear Enya's "Only Time," Enrique Iglesias' "Hero," or U2's "Stuck In a Moment," I find it difficult to think of something else.

Music, much like views of the war, has taken a more pessimistic turn recently. Watching MTV late on Saturday night (that's right, MTV does still air music videos at select times between "The Real World" and "Road Rules," and "Sorority Life"), I saw for the first time the new song by System of a Down. Titled "Boom," the song is an anti-war protest end to end, featuring video footage of real demonstrations and animated caricatures of President Bush and Saddam Hussein, among others, riding missiles and bombs down to innocent civilians below.

Madonna's new single "American life" takes a more subtle approach, but who knows if we'll ever get to see the video that accompanies the single. She describes the lyrics of the song as a reminder to all Americans that we need to step back and gather perspective about what kind of world we are creating for future generations. The video has been so hushed up with rumors about taboo topics and sights that might be a bit much for the average person, that it likely will never be aired, aside from maybe a special late night viewing or two and a surprise for Madonna to be stirring up controversy.

> "The song has taken on the role as the de facto 'support the troops' anthem."

Pro-war supporters don't really need to resort to any new music to make their point. They just reach back for those old patriotic standards of "The Star Spangled Banner," "God Bless America," "America the Beautiful" and "God Bless the USA."

Amongst the rockets' red glare and another Madonna hallabaloo, there has been one song that I feel should be embraced by supporters and protesters alike. Three Doors Down's current hit "When I'm Gone" is eerily timely for the current state of world affairs. The chorus harkens this advice to all:

"Hold me when I'm here, love me when I'm gone. Hold me when I'm scared and love me when I'm gone. Everything I am and everything you need, possibly the one you wanted me to be. I'll never let you down, even if I could give up everything if only for your good. So hold me when I'm here, love me when I'm gone. Hold me when I'm scared, I won't always be there, so love me when I'm gone."

With a video combination of a concert filmed on the U.S.S. George Washington this past fall in the Mediterranean Sea and actual sights of military personnel and their families, the song has taken on the role as the de facto "support the troops" anthem.

While others are debating the merits of taking on Saddam and whether the war is just or not, Three Doors Down has transcended the political issues to simply offer encouragement and support to our soldiers. Such an approach is admirable and the band deserves credit. War hawks and protesters alike both agree that the military needs our support and should return home as soon as possible (they just disagree when that time is). Regardless, the song is a unifier, not a divider. In buzzword speak it is a multilateral approach to music's statement on current war conditions.

Years from now this war will be another chapter in the long anthology of American history. There'll be books to read and news footage to see in television specials. Personally, though the most key memory of the time will be anytime I hear those familiar guitar chords and am reminded to love those in the military when they're gone, off doing their duty.

Regan Mckendry is a Collegian Columnist.

A true sportsman

Nick Ames

I don't really think I am in a position to write an informed and knowledgeable article about the Boston Celtics. Considering, I have never played competitive basketball, I am a 6-foot-4-inch, gangly, white dude with a propensity for losing his balance, and – if they are cruel enough to publish my photo with this piece – someone who obviously needs to work on his game face. That said, I believe that all you really need to write about sports is a love of the game. My passion for watching basketball began when I first laid eyes on the Dallas Maverick's one-two punch of Dirk Nowitzki and Steve Nash. In an instant, I was confronted with two of the sketchiest looking basketball players I had ever seen. Steve Nash's long, greasy hair and his intense stare combined with Nowitzki's towering seven-foot frame complete with massive bed-head and wispy facial hair evoked a powerful emotion in me. These were my kind of guys. No longer would I have to satisfy myself with the occasional jump shot of Christian Laettner or watch the bumblings of Shawn Bradley. These two guys were good, very good at what they did despite their appearances. And that appealed to me.

Soon, I was watching the Mavericks' late night games on TBS and quietly pulling on my budding goatee, which despite several "danger zones" where no hair grew, was beginning to represent that of my idol's and soon the Nowitzki was added to the long list of facial hair jargon right beside the Fu Manchu and the soul patch. However, it wasn't long before the novelty of rooting for a team from Dallas, Texas lost its appeal and while I still love those two guys to death, I decided to start searching for a team closer to home. Now don't get me wrong, I knew the Celtics were there all along, but that was before my eyes had been opened to the beauty of the three, the quickness of Mr. Iverson, and the power of Kevin Garnett. With basketball suddenly in my veins, I was ready to accept the trials and tribulations of being a true Celtics fan. From the peak of the illest come-from-behind victory over the Nets in last year's playoffs to the despair of that recent loss to Sacramento, I have been in love with this team. I've even started to notice the little things about the team like Paul and Antoine's little on-court jokes and the fact that more and more, every game Eric Williams looks like the black Steven Tyler of Aerosmith. What the Celtics are to me is a damn good basketball team that relies too much on its two stars in Pierce and Walker and not enough on its other, very worthy talent, in such players as Walker McCarty and I.R. Bremer. Like any young team, the Celtics wait for their offense to click before they start playing defense and this has gotten them into trouble. It's no secret that Pierce and Walker carry the brunt of the offensive burden and other teams know this. For the Celtics to succeed against their two likely playoff matchups in either New Jersey or the Sixers, Pierce and Walker must use their abundant skills to create shots for McCarty, Williams, and Bremer if they are to advance past the first round.

In addition, our glorious Celtics must start off the game by playing good D, rather than waiting for the fourth quarter and the arrival of, as I believe Shaq quoted best, "The motherf@%$ing Truth!" Sure Paul might steal a game or two, but we want more than that. We want to see Jason Kidd forget to blow a kiss at the basket when shooting free throws because he's so goddamned scared of us. I mean the Celtics are the definition of a great team to watch: the young team, the superstar, the clutch three's by Toine, the comeback kings, oh and those uniforms.

Those of us from Massachusetts are spoiled. We have one of the richest traditions of sport of any city in the country. We have the original teams, we had (sob) one of the most hallowed sporting venues in the world, we relish our role as the underdog, we live for the upset, and we die by the Red Sox. This article was supposed to be about basketball, but it turned out to be more than that. It's about sports and the people who love them even if they can't play them to well. It's about people who wish they could still suit up, but who survive on those memories of that breakaway goal that scored in the freezer's or that interception they made in the Thanksgiving Day Pop Warner game. This is for the people who threw salsa out their windows in Southwest because they were so frenzied by the Patriots Super Bowl coup. This is for the people who made home videos of their own slam-dunk competitions. This is for that dude who built a replica of Fenway for his kids and town to play wiffle ball. Good luck to the Bruins and Celtics in the playoffs. I hate New Jersey and I love you, you UMass sports fans.

> "This is for the people who threw salsa out their windows in Southwest because they were so frenzied by the Patriots Super Bowl coup."

Nick Ames is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's [illegible] number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed to 'The Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as [illegible] be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

Operation Anfal's lone survivor

Dan Yagudin

[illegible] Department estimates that between 50,000 to 100,000 Kurds were killed in the 1988 campaign, of which Taimour is the only known survivor. The injustice done to Taimour was obvious. As an Iraqi citizen, he was not granted the right to life, liberty, or pursuit of happiness by his government. Quite to the contrary, the Iraqi government was the very cause of the alienation of these rights. To make things worse, the [illegible] of the Iraqis continued, and Iraqi Kurds are no freer to pursue their inalienable rights under Saddam than they were in 1988. Does this justify regime change?

No nation is free of sin. Not the Americans, not the French, [illegible] with their recent acts of self-righteousness, love to forget the atrocities they committed recently during the Algerian civil war, not any of the other nations of Europe, and of course not Iraq. All have, at one point or another committed crimes against their citizens. But the question that should be asked is one of accountabilities. In a democratic country, an undertaking such as operation Anfal could not happen for the simple reason that the government is held accountable to its citizens. If 100,000 United States citizens were killed today by the government, its people and army would not let it pass, and the government would be toppled.

> "What stares at you is not the natural face of a child, but a face that you somehow know has been face to face with the evils of this world."

The same thing goes for France, or Germany, or any other democratic country. But not Iraq.

As the sole remaining superpower in the world, America has no choice but to build an empire. It must build an empire to protect itself, because whether it likes it or not, the world is a big, bad, mean place, and even neglected backwards countries such as Afghanistan can serve as bases for the Sept. 11 attackers, and pose a danger to U.S. lives and interests. In its history of foreign policy, the U.S. has attempted to promote governments that bring stability to critical regions, and that are democratic, and compatible with American world view. These two prerequisites do not always go hand in hand, and the United States has often supported undemocratic regimes in the name of stability. But Iraq is neither of these. It is neither stable nor democratic.

The picture that made such a strong impression on me is the photograph that was taken of the interview while it was taking place. Taimour, draped in the traditional clothing of a Kurdish fighter, sit on pillows and answers the questions of the interviewer. What haunts me about the picture is the gaze that Taimour gives the camera. What stares at you is not the natural face of a child, but a face that you somehow know has been face-to-face with the evils of this world. Above everything, it is the face of a human being, which as the interviewer notes, "has a very good reason not to trust a human being ever again."

It seems to me that Sept. 11 has made the United States lose a lot of its faith in the rest of the world. It has decided for better or for worse, to reshape some of the world in the name of its interests and security. But to survive, empires must not overextend themselves and recognize their own limits. In order to continue to thrive, the United States, despite past mistakes, must strive to build a world of free nation states, in which people are free to govern themselves and pursue their unalienable rights. But by what means, and when – these are more complex questions.

One outcome of a democratic world order is certain, however. Save a few tyrants, I doubt anyone would mind a world free of operation Anfals.

Dan Yagudin is a Collegian Columnist. He is currently on exchange in Israel.

Neither right nor wrong

Jesse Greenspan

War is on TV 24 hours a day, and the media is making it seem more like a sports event than a combat situation. There are announcers, instant replays of bombs going off, multiple camera angles and sideline reporters – the similarities go on and on.

In this kind of atmosphere, people choose sides and root for one "team" or the other to win. Here in the U.S., the population has rallied behind the troops and it is considered treasonous to wish for an American defeat, but there are many other countries that would prefer to see Iraq pull off the upset.

So, the question remains: who is in the right and who is in the wrong?

Much propaganda has been levied against the Iraqi government for human rights violations, particularly the killing of thousands of Kurds during the Iraq-Iran conflict of the 1980s. However, during that time, Saddam Hussein was an American ally who received hundreds of thousands of dollars in weapons from the U.S. government, even after it discovered what Hussein was doing to his own people.

Less than two decades have elapsed since that time, but apparently the U.S. has had a serious change of heart and suddenly cares about the well being of the Iraqi people. In fact, the United States has never interfered in anything when its own interests weren't at stake, and such events as the Rwandan genocide of 1994 invoked no American response. Though thousands will die in the U.S.-led invasion, the war is even being called "Operation Iraqi Freedom," which is somewhat analogous to Hitler calling World War II, "Operation Save the Jews."

> "Here in the U.S., the population has rallied behind the troops and it is considered treasonous to wish for an American defeat, but there are many other countries that would prefer to see Iraq pull off the upset."

George W. Bush says this is all being done to bring democracy to Iraq, but the chances of that happening are slim to none. In actuality, the U.S. has repressed more democracies in its day than it has created, and a puppet government in Iraq would be more beneficial to American interests.

Another justification for war is to stop the threat of weapons of mass destruction, but even if Iraq does have these weapons, it does not have the capabilities to launch them at the United States. Instead, it is the U.S. that has nearly monopolized the weapons of mass destruction business, as America currently spends about as much money on the military than every other country in the world combined (over $100 billion per day, even in times of peace).

When it comes to U.S. interests, Bush implies in one sentence that the war has nothing to do with oil, but in the next he says that burning Iraqi oil fields is an inexcusable crime. American companies are already receiving contracts to fix the damaged oil fields once the war ends, making this a war that has at least something to do with natural resources.

Though the U.S. has chastised Hussein for killing his own citizens, it is certainly no stranger to just this act, from the complete annihilation of the Native Americans to the more recent Kent State and Orangeburg massacres of the 1960s. During countless labor strikes in the late 1800s and early 1900s, U.S. troops were called in to violently suppress numerous protests, killing hundreds in the process. Even naval yard workers suffered from greed and government cruelty, as many lives were shortened when they were never alerted to the dangers of working with asbestos (though these dangers were well known in the military).

However, recent U.S. history does not contain the types of crimes Hussein perpetuates on a daily basis. These are all well documented in the American press and include the gassing of the Kurds, the donation of money to the families of suicide bombers and the torturing of athletes.

After the first Gulf War, when U.S. bombs decimated the entire country, Hussein decided to rebuild his own palaces (yes, that is plural) at the expense of hospitals and other such necessities. And even though U.S. sanctions are in part responsible for the killing of hundreds of thousands of Iraqis, Hussein could have saved his own people simply by agreeing to American demands. Without a doubt, this is a man who only cares about himself.

On both the Iraqi and American sides, the greed and irresponsibility is staggering, and the price being paid is in human life. If war is to be treated like a sports event, then clearly neither side is worth rooting for.

Jesse Greenspan is a Collegian Columnist.

Until it's all over

Dan Cote

I must be stupid. I must be stupid because I don't think the limo liberal pinheads and the Michael Moore types should use an award show to slander a wartime president and what the troops are fighting for. I must be stupid because I don't understand how people can call Nicole Kidman courageous for pretending to be ugly while troops are getting shot at. I must be, otherwise I would be out there with the rest of the college students and the trust fund babies that are protesting this war. I must be stupid because I believe that 17 chances in 12 years is more than enough. I must be stupid for believing that the people who get shot at, so that these intellectually superior people can have a dissenting opinion, should get the benefit of the doubt.

The intellectually superior left is a wonderful thing isn't it? They're always there with that condescending and sanctimonious tone to tell everyone else how things are supposed to be. These people are so smart that if you ask them what should be done with Saddam instead of going to war – do you know what they will tell you? Not one thing. They're so smart they don't have another solution to dealing with Saddam. The really smart people like Senator Tom Dashcle, President Jimmy Carter, or actress Susan Sarandon know when to go war. It's when a democrat is in the White House because then the war is a humanitarian effort. I mean why didn't we hear a peep out of the left five years ago when Clinton unleashed a bombing campaign against Iraq. Why didn't we hear an objection from the left when he sent troops into Kosovo also? By the way, I know the geniuses from the left know this already but just to remind those of us on the right that, Clinton did both of these in the middle of a sex scandal. So could there have been an ulterior motive? You've got to love partisan politics and double standards that politicians like Senator Tom Daschle and Congressman Robert Byrd use to further their liberal agenda. Nice to see our own people rooting against the home team.

> "I thought we had already learned our lesson in how harmful appeasement and inaction was in dealing with dictators back in World War II."

Yet the left gets upset when they are called anti-american for opposing the war. When I hear the things the left says it sounds like they agree with France and the U.N. However, if the intellectuals got their way we would keep on appeasing Saddam Hussein, I thought we had already learned our lesson in how harmful appeasement and inaction was in dealing with dictators back in World War II. If America and Britain had gotten together 70 years ago like they are [illegible] today, then 20 million people wouldn't have died defeating a certain disgruntled Austrian gentleman.

Another thing I don't understand is the intellectuals saying there will be terrorist attacks in response to the war. If they believe that then why would they go out and protest. Which only serves to distract the police from watching out for these potential attacks.

On the front page of the March 24 edition of the New York Times appeared stories about how we are losing and taking heavy losses. The Iraqis are rallying and shooting down our helicopters and two pilots were taken prisoner. Here is the truth if you intellectuals can handle it: so far there are 20 dead from direct action and a few people have been taken prisoner. Twelve years ago at this point in the ground war there were over 150 dead from action. So I think we have the situation well in hand.

You don't hear these protesters or Amnesty International speaking out against the way the POW's are being treated. These intellectuals on the left want Americans to get killed and Bush to look bad. It's just that simple. The left never shows respect or appreciation to the very people that provide them with the right to dissent. Obviously they must know something those of us who support Bush and the troops don't.

Very soon the war will be over, the Iraqi people will be free, and the weapons of mass destruction will be found. And when those weapons are found with their "made in France," "Russia," or "Germany" stamps on them there will be a lot of explaining to do. Yet you won't hear the left apologizing for being wrong. People with egos that big never apologize. Now I'm not saying you can't have a dissenting opinion but for the time being I implore you to put your ego aside, keep your mouth shut, and throw your support behind the troops if you haven't already done so. Believe me, you can do this for a week or two. If this war is still going on in six months then you can go ahead and protest, but until then give the troops the support they need.

Dan Cote is a Collegian Columnist.

Exploitation on our airwaves

Elizabeth Carter

I turned on my television the other day and immediately upon doing so my stomach lurched. A powerful wave of nausea quickly passed over me as I lunged desperately for the remote, and in not a moment too late I changed the channel. Now the question must be posed, what possibly could have been splayed across the screen that was able to evoke such a powerful reaction from me (and no, it was not a Christina Aguileira video). The station I was viewing during those brief, nearly critical seconds was CNN. You see I was hoping that I would find some news on the television; however, I am prone to having silly thoughts like that! That hope was quickly bashed as I flicked through the stations, going from CNN to MSNBC, and I even gave FOXNEWS a try. Each time the result was the same. I wound up seeped in disgust at the fact that each and every one of these networks is taking the harrowing reality of war and turning it into a ratings grabbing 24-hour-a-day spectator sport. To be honest I'm not sure what is more disgusting: the exploitation of the horrors of war or the fact that the majority of the American public is lapping it all up like thirsty dogs.

> "These bloodsucking news stations are using the fact that the sons and daughters of our nation are fighting and risking their lives to give themselves higher ratings."

I am sincerely appalled at the fact that all of these supposed "credible" networks cover nothing but "breaking details on Operation Iraqi freedom" every waking (and sleeping) hour of the day. It's an utter travesty for them to do this to a war. These bloodsucking news stations are using the fact that the sons and daughters of our nation are fighting and risking their lives to give themselves higher ratings. The soldiers fighting in Iraq are experiencing all the horrors of war, which will probably stay with them for the rest of their lives. We can turn on the television and see a building explode and think to ourselves, "Woo hoo, that's sooo awesome! Big explosions are soooo cool, (must eat McDonald's...)." Then we can turn off the TV, or change the channel and reflect on how great it is that we're blowing things up and showing the Iraqi's "who's boss." Unfortunately, simply turning the television off, or changing the channel is not an option for the soldiers enmeshed in combat. The reality of that "big explosion" is that a human being, much like you or me, had to detonate it and, in turn, take many human lives.

Regardless of how great soldiers' contempt is for the enemy, they have to deal with the harsh reality that they are killing other human beings.

They also have to deal with the fact that many times not only are they killing the conniving republican guard, but also innocent Iraqi civilians which the republican guard has purposely put into harms way. To me all of this sounds unbearable, and to endure all that is entirely unfathomable to me.

Taking all of that into consideration, just imagine how much more horrible it must be to know that every single inch of the way some annoying embedded journalist is probing you about all these things. Take into consideration that you know the news stations back home are reporting every step you make, and every life you take. Now consider the fact that your fellow Americans are watching all this seething with anticipation to see what you will blow up next or who your next kill will be. These are the horrible burdens that the media has imparted on our modern day soldiers, and quite frankly it is not a fair burden for the soldiers to have to carry.

Yes, coverage of the war is necessary, but not to this sickening extent. War is a horrific thing, sometimes it's necessary and sometimes it's not. However, something this serious in nature should not be on constant display for all to see. The atrocities of war should not be treated in such a cavalier fashion. Human lives amount to more than just the rising numbers of those hewn down in battle, which we hear so easily tossed at us each day by bumbling news anchors. Warfare is not just some video game in which the rules of life and death are subject to a restart button. It should be treated with the reverie and respect that anything as grave as this deserves.

I will admit that some coverage of the war is needed, but when I turn on a news station, news is what I want to receive. I want to know what is going on in my country, and I want to know what is going on in the rest of the world.

Since the last time I checked, the world wasn't made of only two countries. I've really been wondering how North Korea is doing these days, or how the Japanese market is faring, or how about the French point of view on freedom fries (the food that valiantly gives you the freedom to have a fat ass). Sadly, none of these things I will find on CNN, or any of the other news networks. No, ironically I will only find the news networks exploiting those who protect their very freedom to exploit at all. So I say, shame on all the 24-hour news stations for being so utterly brazen in their war coverage. They'll do anything for ratings, even impart unnecessary duress upon the soldiers, and reduce war to an over-aired television show. And that is precisely what this war is becoming: the American public's favorite new reality TV show. To be quite frank I'm not sure what is sadder, the fact that this war is being flagrantly exploited, or that the American people are feeding into all this exploitation, and simply do not care.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian Columnist.

What about punk rock?

Stephanie O'Shea

Everyone knows that pop punk is the rancid underbelly of the punk genre, and not even in that fun, kitschy sort of way. For those of you that are in the dark about why, it is because it is the most commercialized brand of the obnoxious form of expression, and therefore the most accessible to the people that used to beat up future punk kids on the school bus. Pop punk is like an invitation to wear spikes and old school chucks that got sent out accidentally.

Strike that. Reverse it. I am not going to lie to you. Most of the bands from that controversial picture can be found in my music folder or under the seats of my car. If polygamy was legal, I would marry Less Than Jake. They owe it to me, to be my rock star husbands after all the browbeating I have taken for them. I liken my high school self to a boy scout. It is not because of the wholesomeness, but rather the allegiance to a lifestyle that most considered to be for losers. The ironic thing is that I did not get crapped on by kids from other cliques, but rather by my show-attending counterparts.

The late 1990s was the heyday of the Middlesex County punk scene. My hometown of Chelmsford contributed more than its share of bored rich kids to the community. Guestbook postings and weekend shows in Suburbia flowed almost as bountifully as the whining and screeching into microphones that took place in people's basements. High school was just a place to learn math, because anyone worth socializing with lived in a different town. The unity of the scene was laughable, however, because there were as many factions within it as there were types of punk.

Liking pop punk was frowned upon, yet somewhat permissible, but having the audacity to flip through ska CDs at Newbury Comics was an offense you could get your legs broken for. Not only was my nickname of Stephy Ska very telling to anyone I was introduced to, but I also was "so capitalist" for ordering all of my clothes off of Dellas.com during that brief period of opulence when I had a part time job, yet my parents did not expect me to play an integral role in funding my existence. The Skeletor-looking girls that hung out in the pit behind the Harvard Square T Stop entrance wanted me and my top notch personal hygiene dead.

> "If polygamy was legal, I would marry Less Than Jake."

There was a time when punk characterized my lifestyle, but I have changed a lot, and for the better. My close-minded era ended sometime during 2000, with high school graduation and the sad demise of my Punk Rock Mobile. Punk's present day stock share in my life is about as large as a modest collection of tattered hoodies, old stickers, and scratched CDs that I still like to drive around listening to. Once in awhile, I will have one of those bittersweet moments when someone random will call out Stephy Ska at the mall or when I am trying to make out with some coffee at Dunkin Donuts.

Music still plays a big part in my life, except I no longer fall victim to the false thinking that having a "broad music taste" is a euphemism for being a slave to the radio. I spend an exorbitant amount of my time listening to my neighbor freestyle, and my idea of hosting a party involves drinking 40s with Billy Joel's Greatest Hits on in the background. That Talib Kweli album is the greatest thing I have laid ears on this semester, and I made a small scene in the movie theatre when Snoop Dogg made a surprise appearance in Old School. I have not forgotten my roots, but I do recognize the importance of branching out.

Stephanie O'Shea is a Collegian Columnist.

Moving off campus

A few months ago, I was in the same boat that many sophomores and some other upper classmen are in. What should I do next year? Should I leave the dorms or should I go off campus? A lot of people consider this question to be a lot easier than it is. People I know, who are off campus said it isn't all it's cracked up to be.

No longer are your friends next door to you. You aren't surrounded by 500 people at any given time in Southwest. That could, however, be a positive or a negative. But I will be living in the Townhouses next year with two friends. I am leaving my roommate and a lot of other friends this year. There are certain things I will miss and a lot of things I won't miss.

Matt Elder

I won't miss DC food. As someone who is reasonably health conscious, I am aware the nutritional value in DC food is the equivalent to cardboard (and sometimes equivalent in taste). Also, something I won't miss are fire alarms at 3 a.m. on Saturday. There's nothing like rolling out of bed to stand outside in the freezing cold for 30 minutes.

> "After classes, I will have to wait for the bus to pick me up and take me home."

I won't be crying about leaving RAs. Granted my resident assistants haven't been that strict, I hate having to walk up or down a flight of stairs to go to the bathroom or shower. I will sometimes sneak in the ladies room for a quick "empty" but I know plenty of people who've been written up for that.

Even though I said I won't miss DC food, I will indeed miss food being served to me daily, without having to do any dishes. I am an above average cook, but I'm used to other people doing the dishes for me. Having to cook and clean for myself daily will certainly be a shock.

And I will also miss the convenience of the laundry. Both my years here I've had a laundry room on my floor, and I always have money on my U-Card so I can just swipe it without problems. Next year it will be a much bigger hassle with getting tokens and such from the landlord for laundry. Time to beg my mom for quarters like my sister.

Something I have taken for granted that I will miss is the convenience of getting to classes. Yes, sometimes it is a pain walking from Southwest to Herter in the dead of winter at nine in the morning, but usually it isn't bad. Next year, I will have to wait for a bus to come and pick me and a dozen other people up then drop us off somewhere on campus. After classes, I will have to wait for the bus to pick me up and take me home. As I fill out my schedule for next semester, I'm going to have to make sure all my classes are in a row so I don't have to go back and forth on the buses.

Most of all, as I previously said, I will miss friends who will be farther away. Right now, I can go up a few floors, down a few floors, or across the hall to hang out with people, watch TV, etc. Next year, however, I will have to drive to other friends' houses as most of the people I'm close with are moving to different apartment complexes or houses. It will definitely be something I will have to get used to.

I have been waiting to move off campus, so I can't say I'm upset at this decision. I think it will be a good move toward independence. There are plenty of negatives and positives that I had to weigh out, and I'm sure there are a lot that I won't realize until next year, but I felt the positives outweighed the negatives.

Next year will be a lot of fun and I'm excited for it. I'm living with two good friends away from the confines and restrictions of dorm life. It will be a lot of fun, and I hope I don't get in to much trouble!

Matt Elder is a Collegian Columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

How much does image count in rock 'n' roll?

I have a confession. I was criticized a couple of weeks ago.

Yes, I love criticizing other people and stuff, and you would think that if I could dish it out, I could take it. I can take it - but I'm not used to it.

A friend of mine read my column on Simple Plan a few weeks ago and said I'm becoming too cynical. I criticized Simple Plan mainly on their image and not so much on their music. I'm a rock columnist — if anything, I should only be criticizing the sound of a band and not the way they dress or gel their hair.

Rockin' Out

Samara Marblestone

That made me think. Which is a good thing I guess.

So yeah — I fell into the trap. What trap? The trap that little teeny-boppers fall into when they "like" a new boy band and what not. They only like them by virtue of what they look like. Similarly, they may not like a band because of the lead singer's hair or the fact that the drummer has a gap between his two front teeth and a huge brown mole on his left cheek.

Music is about the music. Since when is music about the image?

So I admitted that I'm guilty of being partial to image when it comes to criticizing or liking a rock band.

What about you over there? Yeah, you. You punk.

Even though you may not realize it, you're guilty too of caring about what a rocker looks like before you give his guitar riff a chance.

For example, let's say that you just heard Nirvana's "Smells Like Teen Spirit" on the radio, but for some weird reason you never saw what the band looked like yet. So an hour later you flip on MTV and happen to catch their music video.

One problem.

Kurt Cobain looks like Steve Urkel and the rest of the band members look exactly like gargoyles and Garbage Pale Kids. What do you think of them now? Do you still like their music, or are you a little sketched out?

Don't lie. I would be mad sketched out too.

What if you saw the Aerosmith video for "Crying" and all of the guys were dressed up like they were going to the prom — as women? What would you think if you saw Steven Tyler belt out that amazing song wearing a red Jessica McClintock dress with a matching scrunchie?

Sketchiness!

Okay, enough with my weird examples. Thanks you get the point now.

Unfortunately, image does play a major role in the liking of a rock band. A band may be really talented, but if they don't look like what their potential record label wants, they most likely won't get signed. That's just the way it is. I didn't make the rules, kids.

So let's try to change this. I promise I'll try to look less at image the next time I critique a band. It's going to be hard. I have to remember that I'm a music journalist and not an image columnist.

By the way, my opinion on Simple Plan still stands. Their music still sucks.

Samara Marblestone is a Collegian columnist.

Voguing in a new era

Sure Madonna's aging, but please — whatever you do — don't tell her to stop

By Nikolas P. Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

Madonna's challenged many icons in her career but the biggest was life ahead, agesuit.

Madonna, 44, has had to perennially endure critics who deem her passe (she's over faster than you can say "Swept Away?") - calculating how many months she has before she is "over." As Madonna continues to age she is likely to receive even more critical skewering.

The latest article trying to write Madonna off came last week from the New York Times, which claimed Madonna "may be looking at the final stages of a long career." After citing flawed sales figures that denoted a significant slump in popularity, a correction was later issued making the story insignificant.

By now Madonna is used to critical lynches. Since the beginning of her career, she's flirted with controversy, all while deconstructing orthodox values and attitudes of Western culture that ultimately drove Norman Mailer to call her "the greatest living artist of the 20th century."

Through it all Madonna's lucky star has never fallen out of the sky. The mere fact that publications devote entire articles questioning Madonna's popularity shows she rates of some cultural importance.

Of course, Madonna's aware of critics who are quick to brush her off, especially for being past her "prime." She's noted, "not only do we suffer from racism and sexism, but we also suffer from ageism. Once you reach a certain age you're not allowed to be adventurous, you're not allowed to be sexual. I mean is there a rule? Are you supposed to just die when you're 40?"

By calling her album "Music" in 2000, a reinvented cowboy-swinging Madonna practically kicked dirt in the face of rock critics who have short-changed her career. She's proven time and time again the only person who will decide when (and if) she goes away, is Madonna herself.

To be sure, rock stars are ageing blissfully nowadays (Mick Jagger, Cher, Tina Turner) but much of the media focuses its attention on Madonna because her power provides an irresistible target. No other pop star has been as prominent or as successful over such a long period of time.

Even critics who called her a "has-been" during her racy sex era and lambasted her after she published her 1992 "Sex" book were mistaken. Today copies of the coffee table book are going on eBay for more than $100.

No other artist has combined voice, sex appeal, and an avid, always-questing artistic vision in the way Madonna Louise Veronica Ciccone Ritchie has.

True, Madonna doesn't have the pipes of say an Aretha Franklin, but that's not why she's here. "The whole reason I got into show business wasn't because I thought I had a spectacular voice," she told an MTV interviewer, "It was because I thought I had something to say."

Looking past her headline-grabbing controversies, Madonna's music has actually been (gasp?) good. But people rarely speak of her musical command – her masterly way with a hook, her uncanny ability to pick the perfect collaborators, her spot on instinct for the next pop-cultural mood swing.

It's been a career that's seen her burn off nearly every competitor of her generation, selling more than 140 million albums worldwide, according to Warner Bros., and bewitching the planet with a matchless string of image transformations and pop anthems (not to mention more good music video than anyone, female or male). And while younger stars may crowd today's pop playground, Madonna's still in a league of her own.

Given the choice, which would you choose: A crotch grabbing Boy Toy or a Kaballah practicing wife and mother of two? Obviously the former. But let's face it – without Madonna the entertainment world would be an oddly empty place.

Unlike most entertainers who ascend to superstardom, Madonna never grows complacent; recognition of artistic legitimacy is important to her, but so is her ongoing role as pop-culture provocateur. The latest example came last week when MTV banned her war-themed video to her new single "American Life," off her new album due April 22.

Madonna's last two albums were lauded

Continued on page 7

Kweli and Common satisfy Pearl Street crowd

Talib Kweli (above) and Common showed 'Quality' at Monday night's show at Pearl Street creating a hip-hop purification.

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Common wasted no time telling the Pearl Street crowd his intentions.

"Welcome to the Electric Circus y'all," he pronounced into the shadowed crowd below him. "We about to take a ride through hip-hop. Y'all ready to be free. Get ready to get down because the circus is in town."

South Side Chicago native Rashied Lynn a.k.a. Common literally engrossed the audience in a jaunt along hip-hop's fate line.

The ride peaked when opening act Talib Kweli joined Common on the weathered stage to echo each other's verses from the Black Star hit "Respiration," a three-part personification of the city as an organism.

Kweli, whose name literally means "the seeker of truth," was much more than an opening act. He was just part one of a three hour hip-hop purification.

Armed with what gaudy, hip-pop artists would see as archaic, Kweli and Common brought only their microphones and skilled DJs on this trip. And they went against the ills that scar many live shows.

First, they showed up on time. The set began, shockingly, as scheduled at 8:30 as Kweli shuffled on stage with a fitted Yankees cap and his torso free underneath a red plaid shirt.

Second, they made the crowd feel like they were part of the show. Unfamiliarity can be the downfall of many non-pop shows of the Kweli/Common variety.

But as Kweli announced before "Good to you" a speedy, lyrical tongue twister off his recent "Quality" album, "I'm the emcee, y'all the crowd. I give to you, y'all give to me."

Kweli offered the beats and the verses and the crowd retorted with hands in the air for the duration. The Brooklyn native kept things fresh, looping between older hits such as "Move somethin'" ("Reflection Eternal") and "K.O.S. (Determination)" ("Black Star") to recent hits such as the Nina Simone tribute "Get by" and "Waitin' for the D.J." ("Quality").

Following a between set mix of hip-hop classics, Common did little to deter the crowd's enthusiasm. Binding his numerous storytelling monologues was the storytelling in his music.

On two occasions he brought a young lady up on stage as an object to

Continued on page 7

Talib Kweli
Common
Pearl Street
April 7

Vin Diesel falls 'Apart' in latest flick

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Remember when Vin Diesel was an actual actor? In movies like "Boiler Room," "Pitch Black," and "Saving Private Ryan," Diesel used his cocksure-tough guy persona to great, immediate effect. He was certainly charismatic but he also had levels. Diesel was a rare dichotomy: a hulking bruiser-god who could be anything from arrogant to vulnerable without skipping a beat.

Then Diesel decided he would rather be a star than an actor. Diesel was paid $10 million to star in the dreadful, steroidal James Bond wannabe "XXX," and you could see the promise of things to come dissipate from him like water vapor. Diesel learned to act less with his skill and more with his biceps; his body was like a granite slab and his face was, too.

'A Man Apart'
Directed by F. Gary Gray
Starring Vin Diesel Larenz Tate
New Line
Rated R
114 mins.

"A Man Apart" was shot two years ago, before Vin Diesel became Vin Diesel, yet it feels like just the kind of movie that a newly minted celebrity would make after making a movie like "XXX." Both movies are inert, messy action films that have the feel they were assembled from scuffed bits and pieces found lying on dusty shelves. "A Man Apart" is a movie that could further the de-evolution of Vin Diesel into marketplace friendly product.

In what will no doubt be derogatorily renamed "Traffic For Dummies," Diesel plays Sean Vetter, an undercover narcotics agent who's keen to let everyone know that he and his partner (Larenz Tate) learned everything he knows from

Continued on page 7

Panel approves stronger rules

By Michael Mello
Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) – Pyrotechnics would be banned in nightclubs such as The Station, in West Warwick, where a fire killed 99 people and injured nearly 190 others, under a bill unanimously approved by a House committee.

The Corporations Committee on Tuesday also approved several other fire safety measures, including eliminating an exemption from fire sprinkler requirements for most older buildings licensed to serve liquor.

"Now is the time to act on this," said Rep. Frank Montanaro, D-Cranston, who proposed an amendment calling for the ban on pyrotechnics for places licensed to serve liquor that have a capacity of up to 1,000 people.

The Station was originally a building built in the 1940s and had no sprinklers. Investigators believe sprinklers may have helped stymie the fast-moving blaze believed to have been sparked by a band's pyrotechnics.

The proposed bill called for eliminating the exemption of sprinklers for all older buildings. But a real estate agents' group and others argued that could force people to make costly and unintended upgrades to residences, churches and the like.

The panel approved amendments that allow some buildings with historical significance to qualify for the exemption, as well as structures that don't serve liquor.

Tom Coffey, director of the state Fire Safety Code Board of Appeal and Review, welcomed the changes. But he said he'll continue to push for eliminating the sprinkler exemption for most older buildings, including hotels, daycare centers and apartment buildings.

West Warwick Rep. Norman Landroche Jr., a co-sponsor of the bill and one of the first firefighters to respond to the Feb 20. fire, said the committee vote was particularly important for residents of his town.

"With the tragedy at hand ... it's important people see things are getting done," he said.

A state commission has been formed to investigate the fire and determine whether state fire and building codes need to be stiffened.

Landroche said his bill, which is backed by House leaders, isn't intended to supersede the efforts of the commission, which he said will focus on long-term changes to state codes.

Montanaro said the panel had to approve the bill to ensure the General Assembly has a chance to pass changes this year. The 17-member state commission isn't expected to report back to the part-time legislature until June, near the end of the session.

Other proposed changes include: Have a firefighter present in Class C buildings — those that allow 50 to 300 people at any one time — unless the requirement is waived in writing by the local fire chief. Make the illegal use of pyrotechnics a felony, punishable by imprisonment for up to five years. Transfer all regulation of pyrotechnics to the state. Increase authority of local fire marshals. Or, mandate exit signs at floor level in places of assembly with live entertainment and reduced lighting levels.

Common electrifies concertgoers his lyrical affection. First he dropped his new single, "Come close" to a blushing, dark skinned femme.

Continued from page 6

The rapper took a short break to let Brooklyn product D.J. Dummy spin some freestyle to the crowd. Then Common returned and invited another young lads to the stage.

This time a West Coast lady was the muse for one of his most popular tracks, "The Light" off of "Like Water for Chocolate."

The crowd was literally illuminated by a row of strobes as Common bobbed through his half dance jam, half love tribute.

Like Kweli, Common boogied through tunes, old and new. From the self-examining "Ghetto Heaven" to the authoritative "Soul Power," Common brings with him the full range of hip-hop.

And in true Common fashion, he always says something that means something. Even when he was spitting a freestyle about lesbians at Smith College and wings at the Hangar.

The jammes ended without so much as an encore. Apparently the crowd was satisfied with the experience.

Madonna strikes a pose in this month's W magazine.

Madonna marks 20th year in biz with critical accolades – all of which helps separate her from the waning "divas" that recycle their past hits (right, Mariah?). To further, how many acts 20-plus years into their careers are selling millions of records? She seems to be the only one left with something to say. Even the weightless pop tunes of today's Jennys on the Block fail to reflect the ugliness of the cultural or political climate.

Continued from page 6

While Madonna's foray into movies has been spotty, her continued determination is at least admirable. Her concerts show Madonna's audacity – her sheer blond ambition for combining music, video, dance and theater that frequently reaches spectacular levels.

To mark her 20th year in the business, Madonna is set to release a box set chronicling her fascinating journey at year's end. The release is likely to touch off another flurry of off base critics ready to prematurely send her on her way.

Madonna's all grown up now – and she's here to stay. If you have difficulty accepting that, perhaps it's time you do a little growing up of your own.

Latest action flick 'A Man Apart' lacks Diesel

Instead of creating a credible acting career, Vin Diesel has decided to become an overblown star who likes to appear in lifeless films, such as 'A Man Apart.'

Continued from page 6

the mean streets. In the flashy opening, Vetter and a crew of bulletproofed DEA agents bust into a strip club to take down notorious drug kingpin Memo Lucero (Geno Silva.) Vetter and his team are told not to bring any kind of ballistic weapon into a club full of heavily armed henchmen. Vetter and his team sneak in their weapons. What do you think transpires next? Vetter and his team peacefully arrest Lucero and extricate him from the premises? No, what we get is one of those long, bloody frenzied gun battles in which faceless men pump round after round of bullets into each other.

Vetter, ever the hero, chases down and captures an escaping Lucero. Vetter and his colleagues celebrate at Vetter's oceanfront home. The home is one of those modern-style glass-walled structures that no one with Vetter's income could ever afford. Is Vetter on the take? Does his wife (Jacqueline Obradors) make millions selling homemade candies? These are questions that shouldn't be asked during an action film, yet invariably will be because the thread-bare plotting doesn't have the strength to keep our attention.

Vetter and his wife share one of those ludicrously happy, carefree existences that it's inevitable that something will shatter their idyllic life. Never mind that the trailers show Mrs. Vetter getting fatally wounded when thugs invade the couple's home. This is just the kind of movie in which an innocent person must die so that the hero can...well, act all vengeful and vigilante like.

A new kingpin mysteriously named "El Diablo" has invaded Lucero's crumbling cartel. (Yes, "A Man Apart" is a movie in which the bad guy is named El Diablo.) Diablo sends in thugs to seek revenge for Lucero's capture, yet he also seems content to put his own regime in charge of the old man's cartel. The discovery of three dead bodies in the home of a low-level drug pusher – dead bodies that have been gruesomely tortured and carved with Diablo's name – leads Vetter on a vengeful warpath up the chain of command.

Vetter's a bad cop, just not in the corrupt sense of the word. He's been consumed by hatred and vengeance, yet we are supposed to sympathize with this angry brute of a man. In one scene, Vetter's rage-fueled actions lead to the deaths of a handful of cops and Vetter has his badge removed. Are we supposed to feel sorry for this man? His actions, motivated by his own struggles, cost people their lives. It's no surprise that he was suspended – in the real world, this careless hulk of a man would likely be expelled from the force.

It hardly helps matters that Diesel is such a one-note tough guy. He's meant to convey an arc that goes from devastating grief to burning rage to inner torment and finally to inner peace. Yet Diesel's grimace gives him the look of a man with indigestion. Diesel fares slightly better here than in the clunky mess of "XXX," yet he's strictly a one-dimensional muscleman.

Stuck in this mess of sadism and stupidity – the kind of stuff that would usually star Steven Seagal, in other words – are a couple of supporting performances that stand out against the gravel-voiced monotony of Diesel's performance. Tate, his hair split into fuzzy strings of cornrows, takes the standard issue role of the hero's supportive partner and imbues it with more energy and wit than expected in this kind of movie. He gives "A Man Apart" the heart that Diesel's stiff hero fails to find. Meanwhile Timothy Olyphant, as Hollywood lack, a hipster drug dealer/hairstylist dressed all in powder blue, crackles and dances and all but puts on a show far superior to the rest of "A Man Apart." Olyphant chews the scenery with relish – he jives and smirks and jokes his way through the role. In his few scenes he jolts "A Man Apart" from its lethargy. In a scant few brush strokes, he offers the one thing in "A Man Apart" that the growling Diesel does not: entertainment.

The latest Diesel action film is another hackneyed movie complete with overblown action scenes and a trite storyline.

The Scene is coming...

-with a circulation of at least 5,000 copies
-with distribution at this year's Spring Concert at the Mullins Center on May 4 and throughout the Pioneer Valley
-with a shelf life of 3-4 weeks, including UMass finals week
-with articles on the area's hottest entertainment spots and interviews with headlining bands like Sonic Youth

The Scene - The Collegian's hot new Arts and Living Magazine - is coming soon, and your business could be advertised within its pages.

Contact The Collegian business department at 413-545-3500 for more information today.

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995

STUDENT TRAVEL
web fares
and NOT just online
London.....$299
Paris.....$350
Rome.....$471
Amsterdam...$207
Fare is roundtrip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
ISIC www.statravel.com STA TRAVEL
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

PLAN AHEAD FOR NEXT YEAR
Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

GET DIESEL.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Entertainment Briefs

Exhibit relocated after theater closes

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — An exhibit displaying the works of a painter who is a Falun Gong member had to be relocated after a theater closed the show at the request of the Chinese embassy, the organizer said.

Two embassy officials disrupted the March 31 opening of the exhibit of paintings by Chinese-born Zhang Cui Ying, telling visitors they were taking part in an illegal event. The theater then shut down the exhibit, said organizer Adrian Sturdza, who is also a Falun Gong member.

"Last month, some Chinese embassy official told me that they would not allow this exhibit to take place in Romania," Sturdza said Saturday. "I laughed at him, telling them that Romania is not China."

Sturdza said the organization is legal in Romania as a cultural association. He said the exhibit would reopen Tuesday in the lobby of Bucharest's Intercontinental Hotel.

Zhao Deyong, a spokesman for the Chinese embassy in Bucharest, confirmed that the embassy had asked the theater to cancel the exhibit and that two diplomats had gone to observe it on opening day.

"The exhibit organizers were Falun Gong members ... they were spreading materials offensive to China and the diplomats had to stop it," he said by telephone.

The embassy faxed a statement to The Associated Press saying that "Falun Gong's spread in Romania would physically and morally harm the Romanian people."

Falun Gong has attracted millions of followers with a mix of traditional Chinese calisthenics and doctrines drawn from Buddhism, Taoism and the ideas of its founder, Li Hongzhi, a former government clerk. It was banned in China in 1999 as a threat to public safety and communist rule.

Since 1999, thousands of Falun Gong followers have been detained in China, and scores are reported to have died in police custody from beatings or mistreatment. Police deny mistreating anyone, though they say some have died from hunger strikes or from refusing medical help.

HBO orders pilot for military intelligence drama

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Hearts and Minds," a drama set in the world of military intelligence, is in the works for HBO by writer and television academy chairman Bryce Zabel.

HBO ordered a pilot script after reviewing materials that laid out the story line, Zabel said last week. Zabel heads the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences, organizer of the Emmy Awards.

The central character of the proposed series is a military reservist who returns to regular duty after Sept. 11 and becomes chief of a joint task force, he said.

The series would take viewers into two worlds that intersect with terrorism, modern military intelligence and nation-building, "winning over people, not defeating their armies," Zabel said.

Ball State University student gets one-day spot co-hosting 'Live With Regis & Kelly'

MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — A Ball State University senior will sit in Kelly Ripa's chair next to Regis Philbin — but only for a day — on "Live With Regis & Kelly" later this month.

Andy Beckman, 22, a telecommunications major, won a contest to co-host the syndicated daytime talk show on April 16.

Ripa, who's on maternity leave, plans to return to "Live" at the beginning of May.

"To have this happen is absolutely incredible," said Beckman, who beat out 5,000 contestants. He also won a $10,000 prize and a development deal with Buena Vista Television.

"He has a great energy, great personality and he comes across as very likable," producer Michael Gelman said last week.

After initial auditions in Los Angeles, a field of 10 semifinalists was chosen and then trimmed to five. The finalists went through on-air trials, including celebrity interviews, cue card snafus and man-on-the-street segments.

Viewers voted for their favorite finalist, and Beckman was the winner.

Ripa, 32, gave birth in February to her third child, Joaquin Consuelos. She and her husband, actor Mark Consuelos, also have a 5-year-old son, Michael, and a 1-year-old daughter, Lola.

– Associated Press

People in the news

Bono and Pavarotti to share stage

ROME (AP) – Nearly a decade ago, Luciano Pavarotti and Bono teamed up in a benefit concert for children in Bosnia after the war there. Now, the singers plan to perform together to help Iraqi war refugees.

The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees said Tuesday that Pavarotti and Bono will share the stage in a May 27 benefit concert in Modena, northern Italy, the Italian tenor's home town.

Pavarotti has given an annual benefit concert for the past 10 years. This year, the concert's funds will help the United Nations deal with the humanitarian emergency created by the Iraq war.

The U.N. refugee agency has set up camps in Jordan, Syria and Iran, which border Iraq.

In 1995, Pavarotti and Bono, in a concert that the late Princess Diana attended, performed together to help ease the suffering of children during the war in Bosnia.

Penelope Cruz sues magazine

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) – Penelope Cruz is suing an Australian magazine for defamation over an article it published, her lawyers said Tuesday.

Lawyers for the Spanish actress filed defamation proceedings against New Idea in the New South Wales Supreme Court. The case is scheduled to appear before the court May 30.

The action relates to a story the magazine published about Cruz and Tom Cruise, her co-star in the film "Vanilla Sky," whom she's been dating since summer 2001.

"The proceedings state that the article contains a number of false and defamatory statements concerning Ms. Cruz," her legal firm, Gadens Lawyers, said in a statement Tuesday. "Ms. Cruz seeks substantial damages and is confident that legal proceedings will vindicate her reputation."

New Idea did not immediately comment.

Cruz, 28, has made headlines in Australia ever since Cruise took up with her following his split from local heroine Nicole Kidman after nearly 10 years of marriage.

Queen Latifah to host 'VH1 Divas' concert

NEW YORK (AP) – Queen Latifah will reign as host of this year's "VH1 Divas" concert, which will feature performances from Mary J. Blige, Jewel and Chaka Khan.

The show is scheduled to air live at 9 p.m. EDT May 22 from the MGM Grand in Las Vegas. Other scheduled musicians will be announced later.

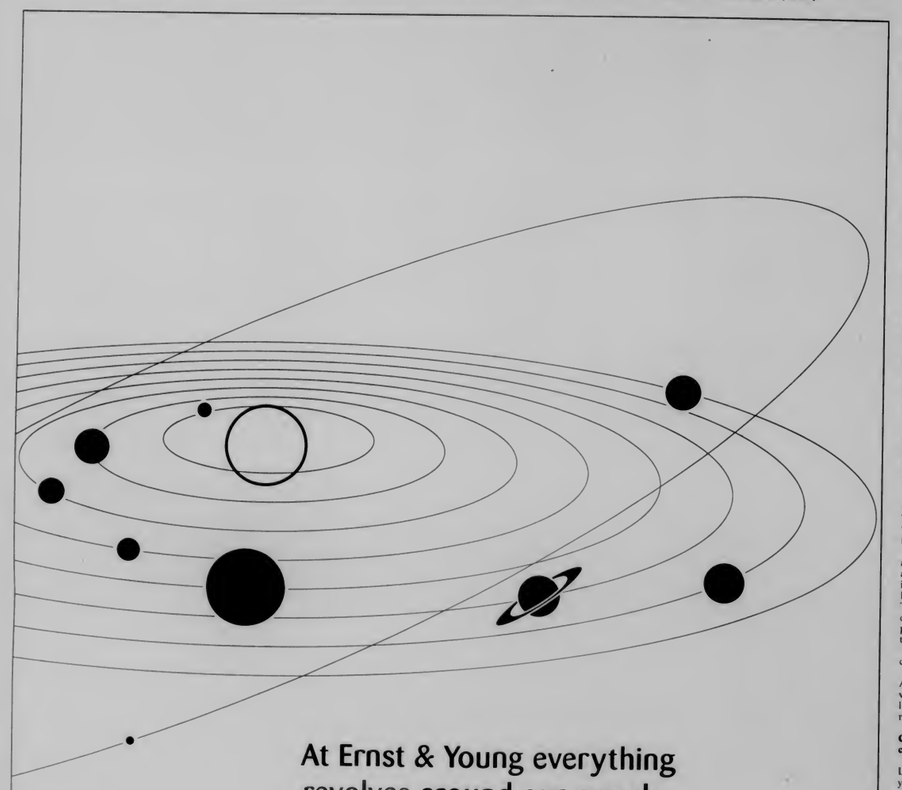
While previous "Divas" shows have included duets, this year's will have even more of an emphasis on them. The concert series, now in its sixth year, raises money for VH1's Save the Music Foundation, which restores music programs in America's public schools.

Latifah, the 33-year-old rapper and actress who was nominated this year for a supporting-actress Oscar for "Chicago," stars in the comedy "Bringing Down the House" with Steve Martin.

Lawyer for Motley Crue singer enters no contest plea in assault charges

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) – A lawyer for Motley Crue singer Vince Neil entered a no contest plea to misdemeanor battery in an assault involving a record producer outside a Sunset Strip nightclub last year.

Neil, whose given name is Vincent Neil Wharton, was not at Monday's hearing.



A Superior Court judge ordered the 42-year-old singer to complete 100 hours of community service, pay restitution and go through a booking process, which would place his fingerprints on file with the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department.

The charge came from a fight on April 28, 2002, at the Rainbow Bar and Grill in West Hollywood with record producer Michael Schuman. The two men had never met before that night.

Schuman's attorney, Trent Copeland, said Neil came up to Schuman in the club's parking lot and struck him several times in the face. His client fell and broke an elbow when he hit the ground, Copeland said.

Schuman has worked with Little Richard, Pat Boone and Stevie Wonder.

–Associated Press

At Ernst & Young everything revolves around our people.

Here, you will be listened to, respected, trusted and recognized for your achievements. We not only value your individuality and what it can bring to our firm, we encourage it. And we give you challenging opportunities so you feel empowered to succeed. Welcome to our world.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2003

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Augusta is Tigerland

Continued from page 12

any because the attention has shifted elsewhere – to Woods and his pursuit of history, to Ernie Els and his hot start to the year, to Davis Love III and his overwhelming victory at The Players Championship.

"The winner the last two years didn't slip in under the radar by any means," Mickelson said. "He played pretty well."

The focus also shifted off the course – specifically, to a 5.1-acre lot about a half-mile away where Martha Burk's National Council of Women's Organizations plans to protest Saturday against the all-male membership at Augusta National.

Woods joked in the weeks leading up to the Masters that he would need a parachute to get to Augusta National to avoid the controversy.

It followed him into the course Tuesday, although Woods wanted nothing to do with it.

He was asked about a commercial he did for Nike in 1997, when he said there were some golf courses he still could not play. Asked if he was as passionate about the issue, Woods stared back and said, "I am."

Told that didn't appear to be the case, Woods replied, "That's just your opinion."

The exchange was cool, and Woods steered clear of the dialogue until he was asked whether he would categorize women not being allowed to join a golf club as prejudice against minorities.

"Every one here knows my opinion," he said. "Should they be members? Yes. But I don't really have a vote in how they run this golf course, and this club. Even Jack [Nicklaus] and Arnie [Palmer], being members, I don't think they have as much say around here as people think."

Meanwhile, Burk criticized a judge whose ruling kept her group from protesting at the front gate of Augusta National, saying "party revelers are taking precedence over legitimate protesters."

"I didn't think they would be so blatant acting in the club's interest and not the public interest," Burk said.

Inside the gates, the interest was strictly on the Masters – and the weather.

It already has been a strange start to the week. More overnight rain and intermittent showers Tuesday limited practice for some players to only nine holes, and still more rain in the forecast for Wednesday.

Crews were spreading pebbles and sand along slopes to keep fans from falling, and players were bracing for a course that will seem even longer.

"This golf course is going to play 7,600 yards," Els said.

Sergio Garcia hit a driver and a 2-iron in the 18th, compared with an 8-iron when he played a practice round last Thursday.

"There's no doubt for the longer hitters it's going to be a little less difficult," Garcia said.

Woods falls into that category, although length isn't his only advantage. Woods also carries the experience of having won three green jackets, including the last two.

"You never know what's going to happen," Garcia said. "If he plays well, of course, there's no doubt he's going to be up there."

Snowed out

The Massachusetts softball team won't have a chance to celebrate for a while. Its game against Central Connecticut, as well as the baseball team's game against Holy Cross, was postponed indefinitely due to wintry weather. The games have not yet been rescheduled.

Losing Lasme

Continued from page 12

makes sense for some people to question his motivation, that he should be concentrating on the task at hand and not his future, but who hasn't thought about their post-college career?

While I don't agree with his decision to leave, I certainly understand his reasons for doing so. If I was at a college that didn't seem likely to place me in the right professional direction, I'd leave too.

Now he's leaving and I suspect he's probably going to regret the decision in the end. I would bet someone is giving Lasme some bad advice and he's going to suffer for it.

Lasme thought Anderson's play at the point would keep him from getting needed experience there, but it probably wouldn't have. I know Lappas (and Anderson) would have been happy to let Lasme take the ball up the court if he could handle it, especially in the motion offense that doesn't really require a true point guard. Never mind that the NBA will find you if you are good enough. If you are a shooting guard for three years and then play the point for one, they'll see your talent and draft you.

Regardless, the decision has been made and Lasme will have to sit out next season. He better improve exponentially to have a chance at the NBA.

The UMass program, which seemed to have a ton of young talent for next season, will probably struggle early next season, as the rookie post players and rookie shooting guard have to catch up to the learning curve.

But by Lasme's senior year, the Minutemen will be on track and he'll wish he was a part of it.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian Columnist.

Cup playoffs sizzle in long winter

Continued from page 12

can score with the best of them on the power play. Olaf Kolzig's solid play this season has been overshadowed by the fact that his team can't do much of anything defensively in front of him. He will have to steal a number of games for the Caps to advance.

Prediction: Lightning in six.

#4 Philadelphia Flyers vs. #5 Toronto Maple Leafs

Wow. Talk about a first-round matchup. This one features a pair of teams that have plenty of experience in the playoffs, have fantastic team chemistry and did the most to improve their rosters at the trade deadline.

Jeremy Roenick, Tony Amonte and Mark Recchi. Mats Sundin, Alex Mogilny and Owen Nolan. Two teams with talented, deep corps of forwards. Oh, and the goaltending only features Ed Belfour against Roman Cechmanek. This series head-to-head is incredibly even on paper. The major difference between the two teams is the Leafs have more of the grizzled veterans while the Flyers are more dependent on talented youngsters. This should be by far the tightest first round series.

Prediction: Maple Leafs in seven.

WESTERN CONFERENCE

#1 Dallas Stars vs. #8 Edmonton Oilers

The Stars pulled off the top seed in the West with a late-season surge fueled by this season's likely Vezina Trophy winner, Marty Turco. Turco was an absolute wall this season, posting the lowest goals against average in the modern era. Add to that the talents of experienced players throughout the lineup, such as Mike Modano, Billy Guerin and Sergei Zubov, and you have a force to be reckoned with.

The Oilers are a decent young team who have fantastic young depth up front, a couple of solid defensemen, and a huge problem between the pipes. Tommy Salo has been well below expectations, and if he falters even a little, the Stars will take advantage.

Prediction: Stars in four.

#2 Detroit Red Wings vs. #7 Anaheim Mighty Ducks

The Western Conference has been viewed as superior to the Eastern for many years now, but the gap has lessened. This is evidenced by the Ducks, who are the weakest seven seed from the West in quite some time. They are still superior to their Eastern counterparts, the Bruins, but it's not as big of a blowout as it was in previous years.

The Ducks have Paul Kariya, Adam Oates and Petr Sykora up front and Jean-Sebastien Giguere in net. But aside from that, they just don't have that much.

The Red Wings are still the best team in hockey and the talent, experience and will of the whole squad is enough to power them past the Ducks, unless Curtis Joseph and Manny Legace both go up in smoke.

Prediction: Red Wings in five.

#3 Colorado Avalanche vs. #6 Minnesota Wild

Everyone thought Jacques Lemaire would bring success to Minnesota, but he has done it far more quickly than expected. Lemaire's game plan is almost the sole reason for Minnesota's success this season. Marian Gaborik is an amazing player and Dwayne Roloson has been a pleasant surprise. But the Wild are built on pleasant surprises, and they tend not to be as pleasant in April.

The Avalanche may be in their swan song this year in terms of conference dominance, as Patrick Roy seems to be fading a little year by year. But Peter Forsberg is the best player in the NHL and his cohorts all over the ice have more than enough talent to dominate this series. And, now that Roy has been criticized, he will certainly take control and bring his team deep into the playoffs.

Prediction: Avalanche in six.

#4 Vancouver Canucks vs. #5 St. Louis Blues

Finally a series worth watching out west. The only other competitive series (Ass-Wild) will put you to sleep with its trap-oriented underdog. The Canucks have finally come into fruition this year, with Markus Naslund establishing himself as one of the best forwards in the league and Todd Bertuzzi and Brendan Morrison making significant jumps as well. Ed Jovanovski is a solid two-way defenseman and Dan Cloutier has more than held his own in net.

The Blues are still a team full of experienced veterans up front who work together well. And they still have Al MacInnis and Chris Pronger. Brent Johnson was shaky all year, leading St. Louis to pick up Chris Osgood, but even he is not the model of consistency. After all, the Blues have used seven different goalies this year. The lack between the pipes will likely cost them.

Prediction: Canucks in six.

Matt Brady is a Collegian Columnist.

Delgado, Jays slam Sox

TORONTO (AP) – Carlos Delgado homered and had four RBIs as the Toronto Blue Jays won their fourth straight, 8-4 over the Boston Red Sox on Tuesday.

Delgado hit a two-run single off Derek Lowe (1-1) in the third inning and a two-run homer off Alan Embree in the seventh, giving Toronto a 7-4 lead.

Delgado went 6-for-13 with six RBIs in Toronto's three-game sweep over the Minnesota Twins last weekend. He was booed after he went 0-for-4 with three strikeouts against New York last Tuesday.

Blue Jays	8
Red Sox	4

Boston's Manny Ramirez extended his hitting streak to a career-high 21 games with a double in the fourth. The Red Sox twice wasted two-run leads against the Blue Jays, who were swept by the New York Yankees in a three-game series last week.

Toronto's Chris Woodward went 3-for-4 with two RBIs, including a go-ahead single. Woodward tied it at 4 with an RBI triple in the fourth and gave Toronto the lead with a run-scoring single in the sixth.

Lowe allowed five runs, nine hits and four walks before leaving with one out in the sixth due to a blister on his right thumb. A 20-game winner last year, he has a 7.94 ERA after two starts.

Toronto starter Mark Hendrickson (1-1) gave up four runs – two earned – and seven hits in 6 2/3 innings.

After Woodward's fielding error at shortstop allowed Johnny Damon to reach in the third, Johnny Damon doubled and Todd Walker hit a two-run double for a 2-0 lead. Lowe got two outs in the bottom half before walking Shannon Stewart and Frank Catalanotto. Vernon Wells singled, loading the bases for Delgado, who tied the score.

Ramirez doubled in the third and Kevin Millar hit his third home run of the season, giving Boston a 4-2 lead.

Toronto's Greg Myers homered off Lowe in the bottom half, and Woodward's RBI triple retied it. Woodward then put Toronto ahead with an RBI single in the sixth.

Notes: Toronto's Eric Hinske ended an 0-for-17 skid with a double in the second....Attendance was 13,477....The Red Sox went 13-6 against the Blue Jays last season. Boston's high for wins against Toronto....Blue Jays reliever Pete Walker loaded the bases in the eighth, but struck out Jason Varitek to end the inning.

– Associated Press

Styles by Deborah

Featuring Foil Highlights & Designer Haircuts for Students

Complementary consultation with every visit

$10 off Foils with a Style Haircut with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03

$5 off Clipper Cuts with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03

65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 8
367 Russell St. 413-557-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/4/03 - Thursday 4/10/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
PHONE BOOTH (R) 1:55 4:50 7:45 9:50
A MAN APART (R) 1:35 4:25 7:05 9:40
WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 1:50 4:35 7:25 10:10
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:00 9:35
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:15 4:10 7:25
OLD SCHOOL (R) 10:30
DREAMCATCHER (R) 7:10 10:15
THE RING (PG13) 1:10 4:15 7:15 10:20
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:00 7:40 10:00
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:05
VIEW FROM THE TOP (PG13) 7:55 10:25
BOAT TRIP (R) 9:00
PIXLET'S BIG MOVIE (G) 1:05 3:00 4:55
THE BOXTER (R) 1:25 4:30 7:30 9:45
AGENT CODY BANKS (PG) 1:00 4:05
Sunday Show 4/18/03 - SPIRITED AWAY
*-no passes/supersavers
•NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Times & showtimes available @ cinemark.com

Burgers • Hot Dogs • Chicken Seafood • Fries • Onion Rings Shakes • Smoothies • Soft Serve
GREAT 8 ATE
Phantom Gourmet's 2003 Pick Top 8 Burgers in New England "Pete's Big Bopper Deluxe"
NOW SERVING BREAKFAST
287 RUSSELL ST
ROUTE 9 • HADLEY
585-0241
CREDIT CARDS OCMP

CASH FOR BOOKS
BRING 'EM IN OR CALL US
Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 S. Prospect St. Amherst 253-3870, 256-7816

Familiarity breeds content.

AMHERST downtown! we have it all!

UMass Summer Session 2003

Over 200 credit courses in more than 40 academic departments–evenings, daytime, weekends, and online.

Summer Session I: June 2 July 10

Summer Session II: July 14–August 20

And one-, two-, and three-week courses

For a free catalog, call 545-2414 or e mail contined@contined.umass.edu.

www.umass.edu/contined

Division of Continuing Education

UMassAmherst

Entertainment Briefs

Exhibit relocated after theater closes

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — An exhibit displaying the works of a painter who is a Falun Gong member had to be relocated after a theater closed the show at the request of the Chinese embassy, the organizer said.

Two embassy officials disrupted the March 31 opening of the exhibit of paintings by Chinese-born Zhang Cui Ying, telling visitors they were taking part in an illegal event. The theater then shut down the exhibit, said organizer Adrian Sturdza, who is also a Falun Gong member.

"Last month, some Chinese embassy official told me that they would not allow this exhibit to take place in Romania," Sturdza said Saturday. "I laughed at him, telling them that Romania is not China."

Sturdza said the organization is legal in Romania as a cultural association. He said the exhibit would reopen Tuesday in the lobby of Bucharest's Intercontinental Hotel.

Zhao Deyong, a spokesman for the Chinese embassy in Bucharest, confirmed that the embassy had asked the theater to cancel the exhibit and that two diplomats had gone to observe it on opening day.

"The exhibit organizers were Falun Gong members ... they were spreading materials offensive to China and the diplomats had to stop it," he said by telephone.

The embassy faxed a statement to The Associated Press saying that "Falun Gong's spread in Romania would physically and morally harm the Romanian people."

Falun Gong has attracted millions of followers with a mix of traditional Chinese calisthenics and doctrines drawn from Buddhism, Taoism and the ideas of its founder, Li Hongzhi, a former government clerk. It was banned in China in 1999 as a threat to public safety and communist rule.

Since 1999, thousands of Falun Gong followers have been detained in China, and scores are reported to have died in police custody from beatings or mistreatment. Police deny mistreating anyone, though they say some have died from hunger strikes or from refusing medical help.

HBO orders pilot for military intelligence drama

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Hearts and Minds," a drama set in the world of military intelligence, is in the works for HBO by writer and television academy chairman Bryce Zabel.

HBO ordered a pilot script after reviewing materials that laid out the story line, Zabel said last week. Zabel heads the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences, organizer of the Emmy Awards.

The central character of the proposed series is a military reservist who returns to regular duty after Sept. 11 and becomes chief of a joint task force, he said.

The series would take viewers into two worlds that intersect with terrorism, modern military intelligence and nation-building, "winning over people, not defeating their armies," Zabel said.

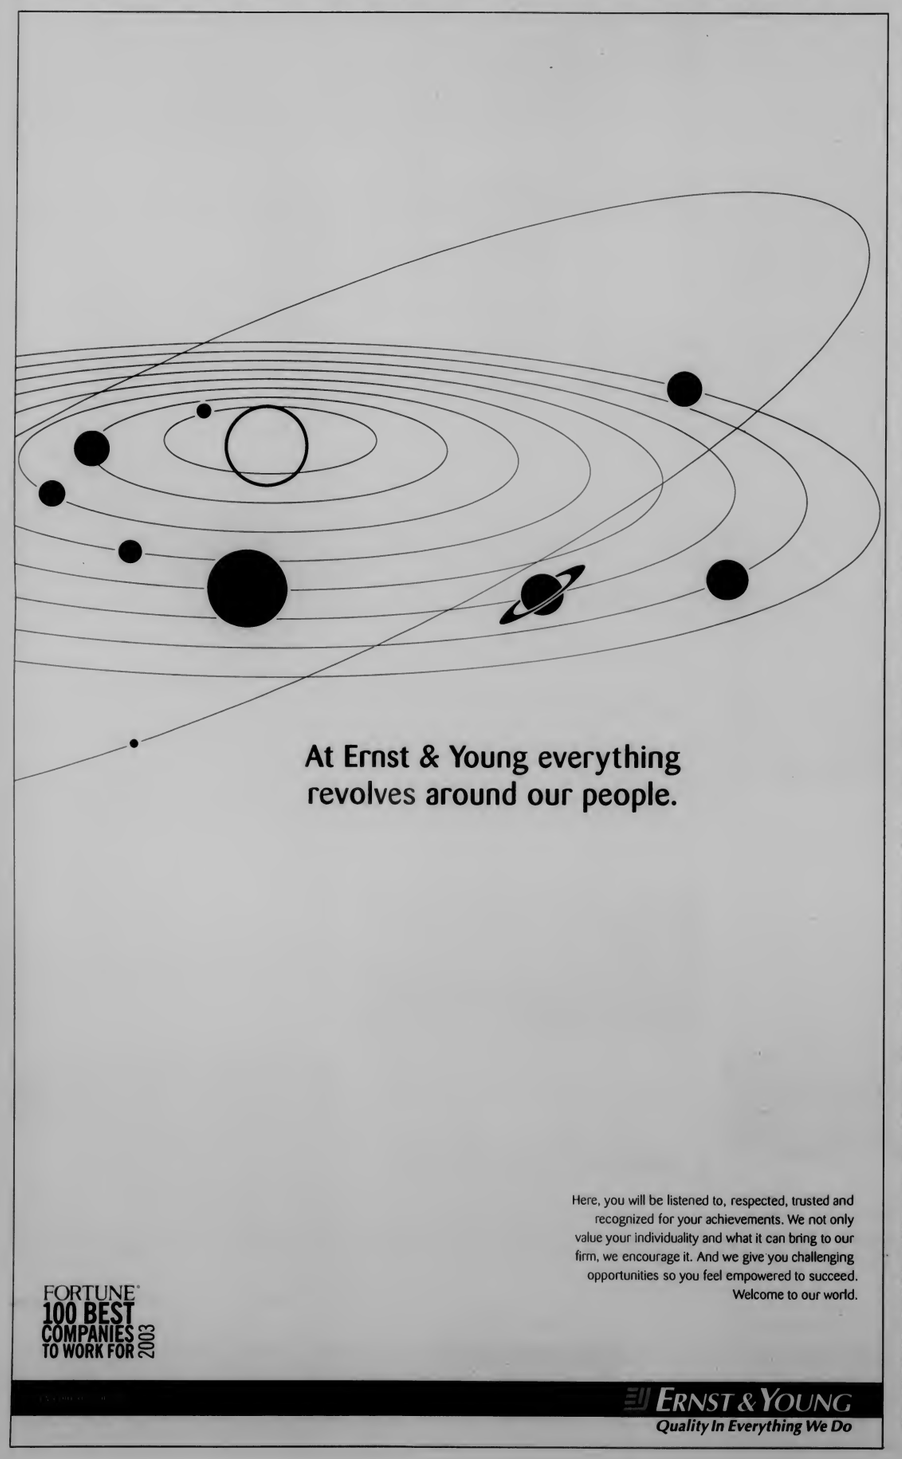
Ball State University student gets one-day spot co-hosting 'Live With Regis & Kelly'

MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — A Ball State University senior will sit in Kelly Ripa's chair next to Regis Philbin — but only for a day — on "Live With Regis & Kelly" later this month.

Andy Beckman, 22, a telecommunications major, won a contest to co-host the syndicated daytime talk show on April 16.

Ripa, who's on maternity leave, plans to return to "Live" at the beginning of May.

"To have this happen is absolutely incredible," said Beckman, who beat out 5,000 contestants. He also won a $10,000 prize and a development deal with Buena Vista Television.



"He has a great energy, great personality and he comes across as very likable," producer Michael Gelman said last week.

After initial auditions in Los Angeles, a field of 10 semifinalists was chosen and then trimmed to five. The finalists went through on-air trials, including celebrity interviews, cue card snafus and man-on-the-street segments.

Viewers voted for their favorite finalist, and Beckman was the winner.

Ripa, 32, gave birth in February to her third child, Joaquin Consuelos. She and her husband, actor Mark Consuelos, also have a 5-year-old son, Michael, and a 1-year-old daughter, Lola.

– Associated Press

People in the news

Bono and Pavarotti to share stage

ROME (AP) – Nearly a decade ago, Luciano Pavarotti and Bono teamed up in a benefit concert for children in Bosnia after the war there. Now, the singers plan to perform together to help Iraqi war refugees.

The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees said Tuesday that Pavarotti and Bono will share the stage in a May 27 benefit concert in Modena, northern Italy, the Italian tenor's home town.

Pavarotti has given an annual benefit concert for the past 10 years. This year, the concert's funds will help the United Nations deal with the humanitarian emergency created by the Iraq war.

The U.N. refugee agency has set up camps in Jordan, Syria and Iran, which border Iraq.

In 1995, Pavarotti and Bono, in a concert that the late Princess Diana attended, performed together to help ease the suffering of children during the war in Bosnia.

Penelope Cruz sues magazine

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) – Penelope Cruz is suing an Australian magazine for defamation over an article it published, her lawyers said Tuesday.

Lawyers for the Spanish actress filed defamation proceedings against New Idea in the New South Wales Supreme Court. The case is scheduled to appear before the court May 30.

The action relates to a story the magazine published about Cruz and Tom Cruise, her co-star in the film "Vanilla Sky," whom she's been dating since summer 2001.

"The proceedings state that the article contains a number of false and defamatory statements concerning Ms. Cruz," her legal firm, Gadens Lawyers, said in a statement Tuesday. "Ms. Cruz seeks substantial damages and is confident that legal proceedings will vindicate her reputation."

New Idea did not immediately comment.

Cruz, 28, has made headlines in Australia ever since Cruise took up with her following his split from local heroine Nicole Kidman after nearly 10 years of marriage.

Queen Latifah to host 'VH1 Divas' concert

NEW YORK (AP) – Queen Latifah will reign as host of this year's "VH1 Divas" concert, which will feature performances from Mary J. Blige, Jewel and Chaka Khan.

The show is scheduled to air live at 9 p.m. EDT May 22 from the MGM Grand in Las Vegas. Other scheduled musicians will be announced later.

While previous "Divas" shows have included duets, this year's will have even more of an emphasis on them. The concert series, now in its sixth year, raises money for VH1's Save the Music Foundation, which restores music programs in America's public schools.

Latifah, the 33-year-old rapper and actress who was nominated this year for a supporting-actress Oscar for "Chicago," stars in the comedy "Bringing Down the House" with Steve Martin.

Lawyer for Motley Crue singer enters no contest plea in assault charges

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) – A lawyer for Motley Crue singer Vince Neil entered a no contest plea to misdemeanor battery in an assault involving a record producer outside a Sunset Strip nightclub last year.

Neil, whose given name is Vincent Neil Wharton, was not at Monday's hearing.

A Superior Court judge ordered the 42-year-old singer to complete 100 hours of community service, pay restitution and go through a booking process, which would place his fingerprints on file with the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department.

The charge came from a fight on April 28, 2002, at the Rainbow Bar and Grill in West Hollywood with record producer Michael Schuman. The two men had never met before that night.

Schuman's attorney, Trent Copeland, said Neil came up to Schuman in the club's parking lot and struck him several times in the face. His client fell and broke an elbow when he hit the ground, Copeland said.

Schuman has worked with Little Richard, Pat Boone and Stevie Wonder.

–Associated Press

Augusta is Tigerland

Continued from page 12

any because the attention has shifted elsewhere – to Woods and his pursuit of history, to Ernie Els and his hot start to the year, to Davis Love III and his overwhelming victory at The Players Championship.

"The winner the last two years didn't slip in under the radar by any means," Mickelson said. "He played pretty well."

The focus also shifted off the course – specifically, to a 5.1-acre lot about a half-mile away where Martha Burk's National Council of Women's Organizations plans to protest Saturday against the all-male membership at Augusta National.

Woods joked in the weeks leading up to the Masters that he would need a parachute to get to Augusta National to avoid the controversy.

It followed him into the course Tuesday, although Woods wanted nothing to do with it.

He was asked about a commercial he did for Nike in 1997, when he said there were some golf courses he still could not play. Asked if he was as passionate about the issue, Woods stared back and said, "I am."

Told that didn't appear to be the case, Woods replied, "That's just your opinion."

The exchange was cool, and Woods steered clear of the dialogue until he was asked whether he would categorize women not being allowed to join a golf club as prejudice against minorities.

"Every one here knows my opinion," he said. "Should they be members? Yes. But I don't really have a vote in how they run this golf course, and this club. Even Jack [Nicklaus] and Arnie [Palmer], being members, I don't think they have as much say around here as people think."

Meanwhile, Burk criticized a judge whose ruling kept her group from protesting at the front gate of Augusta National, saying "party revelers are taking precedence over legitimate protesters."

"I didn't think they would be so blatant acting in the club's interest and not the public interest," Burk said.

Inside the gates, the interest was strictly on the Masters – and the weather.

It already has been a strange start to the week. More overnight rain and intermittent showers Tuesday limited practice for some players to only nine holes, and still more rain in the forecast for Wednesday.

Crews were spreading pebbles and sand along slopes to keep fans from falling, and players were bracing for a course that will seem even longer.

"This golf course is going to play 7,600 yards," Els said.

Sergio Garcia hit a driver and a 2-iron in the 18th, compared with an 8-iron when he played a practice round last Thursday.

"There's no doubt for the longer hitters it's going to be a little less difficult," Garcia said.

Woods falls into that category, although length isn't his only advantage. Woods also carries the experience of having won three green jackets, including the last two.

"You never know what's going to happen," Garcia said. "If he plays well, of course, there's no doubt he's going to be up there."

Snowed out

The Massachusetts softball team won't have a chance to celebrate for a while. Its game against Central Connecticut, as well as the baseball team's game against Holy Cross, was postponed indefinitely due to wintry weather. The games have not yet been rescheduled.

Losing Lasme

Continued from page 12

makes sense for some people to question his motivation, that he should be concentrating on the task at hand and not his future, but who hasn't thought about their post-college career?

While I don't agree with his decision to leave, I certainly understand his reasons for doing so. If I was at a college that didn't seem likely to place me in the right professional direction, I'd leave too.

Now he's leaving and I suspect he's probably going to regret the decision in the end. I would bet someone is giving Lasme some bad advice and he's going to suffer for it.

Lasme thought Anderson's play at the point would keep him from getting needed experience there, but it probably wouldn't have. I know Lappas (and Anderson) would have been happy to let Lasme take the ball up the court if he could handle it, especially in the motion offense that doesn't really require a true point guard. Never mind that the NBA will find you if you are good enough. If you are a shooting guard for three years and then play the point for one, they'll see your talent and draft you.

Regardless, the decision has been made and Lasme will have to sit out next season. He better improve exponentially to have a chance at the NBA.

The UMass program, which seemed to have a ton of young talent for next season, will probably struggle early next season, as the rookie post players and rookie shooting guard have to catch up to the learning curve.

But by Lasme's senior year, the Minutemen will be on track and he'll wish he was a part of it.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian Columnist.

Cup playoffs sizzle in long winter

Continued from page 12

can score with the best of them on the power play. Olaf Kolzig's solid play this season has been overshadowed by the fact that his team can't do much of anything defensively in front of him. He will have to steal a number of games for the Caps to advance.

Prediction: Lightning in six.

#4 Philadelphia Flyers vs. #5 Toronto Maple Leafs

Wow. Talk about a first-round matchup. This one features a pair of teams that have plenty of experience in the playoffs, have fantastic team chemistry and did the most to improve their rosters at the trade deadline.

Jeremy Roenick, Tony Amonte and Mark Recchi, Mats Sundin, Alex Mogilny and Owen Nolan. Two teams with talented, deep corps of forwards. Oh, and the goaltending only features Ed Belfour against Roman Cechmanek. This series head-to-head is incredibly even on paper. The major difference between the two teams is the Leafs have more of the grizzled veterans while the Flyers are more dependent on talented youngsters. This should be by far the tightest first round series.

Prediction: Maple Leafs in seven.

WESTERN CONFERENCE

#1 Dallas Stars vs. #8 Edmonton Oilers

The Stars pulled off the top seed in the West with a late-season surge fueled by this season's likely Vezina Trophy winner, Marty Turco. Turco was an absolute wall this season, posting the lowest goals against average in the modern era. Add to that the talents of experienced players throughout the lineup, such as Mike Modano, Billy Guerin and Sergei Zubov, and you have a force to be reckoned with.

The Oilers are a decent young team who have fantastic young depth up front, a couple of solid defensemen, and a huge problem between the pipes. Tommy Salo has been well below expectations, and if he falters even a little, the Stars will take advantage.

Prediction: Stars in four.

#2 Detroit Red Wings vs. #7 Anaheim Mighty Ducks

The Western Conference has been viewed as superior to the Eastern for many years now, but the gap has lessened. This is evidenced by the Ducks, who are the weakest seven seed from the West in quite some time. They are still superior to their Eastern counterparts, the Bruins, but it's not as big of a blowout as it was in previous years.

The Ducks have Paul Kariya, Adam Oates and Petr Sykora up front and Jean-Sebastien Giguere in net. But aside from that, they just don't have that much.

The Red Wings are still the best team in hockey and the talent, experience and will of the whole squad is enough to power them past the Ducks, unless Curtis Joseph and Manny Legace both go up in smoke.

Prediction: Red Wings in five.

#3 Colorado Avalanche vs. #6 Minnesota Wild

Everyone thought Jacques Lemaire would bring success to Minnesota, but he has done it far more quickly than expected. Lemaire's game plan is almost the sole reason for Minnesota's success this season. Marian Gaborik is an amazing player and Dwayne Roloson has been a pleasant surprise. But the Wild are built on pleasant surprises, and they tend not to be as pleasant in April.

The Avalanche may be in their swan song this year in terms of conference dominance, as Patrick Roy seems to be fading a little year by year. But Peter Forsberg is the best player in the NHL and his cohorts all over the ice have more than enough talent to dominate this series. And, now that Roy has been criticized, he will certainly take control and bring his team deep into the playoffs.

Prediction: Avalanche in six.

#4 Vancouver Canucks vs. #5 St. Louis Blues

Finally a series worth watching out west. The only other competitive series (Ana-Wild) will put you to sleep with its trap-oriented underdog. The Canucks have finally come into fruition this year, with Markus Naslund establishing himself as one of the best forwards in the league and Todd Bertuzzi and Brendan Morrison making significant jumps as well. Ed Jovanovski is a solid two-way defenseman and Dan Cloutier has more than held his own in net.

The Blues are still a team full of experienced veterans up front who work together well. And they still have Al MacInnis and Chris Pronger. Brent Johnson was shaky all year, leading St. Louis to pick up Chris Osgood, but even he is not the model of consistency. After all, the Blues have used seven different goalies this year. The lack between the pipes will likely cost them.

Prediction: Canucks in six.

Matt Brady is a Collegian Columnist.

Delgado, Jays slam Sox

TORONTO (AP) – Carlos Delgado homered and had four RBIs as the Toronto Blue Jays won their fourth straight, 8-4 over the Boston Red Sox on Tuesday.

Delgado hit a two-run single off Derek Lowe (1-1) in the third inning and a two-run homer off Alan Embree in the seventh, giving Toronto a 7-4 lead.

Delgado went 6-for-13 with six RBIs in Toronto's three-game sweep over the Minnesota Twins last weekend. He was booed after he went 0-for-4 with three strikeouts against New York last Tuesday.

Blue Jays	8
Red Sox	4

Boston's Manny Ramirez extended his hitting streak to a career-high 21 games with a double in the fourth. The Red Sox twice wasted two-run leads against the Blue Jays, who were swept by the New York Yankees in a three-game series last week.

Toronto's Chris Woodward went 3-for-4 with two RBIs, including a go-ahead single. Woodward tied it at 4 with an RBI triple in the fourth and gave Toronto the lead with a run-scoring single in the sixth.

Lowe allowed five runs, nine hits and four walks before leaving with one out in the sixth due to a blister on his right thumb. A 20-game winner last year, he has a 7.94 ERA after two starts.

Toronto starter Mark Hendrickson (1-1) gave up four runs – two earned – and seven hits in 6 2/3 innings. After Woodward's fielding error at shortstop allowed David Ortiz to reach in the third, Johnny Damon doubled and Todd Walker hit a two-run double for a 2-0 lead. Lowe got two outs in the bottom half before walking Shannon Stewart and Frank Catalanotto. Vernon Wells singled, loading the bases for Delgado, who tied the score.

Ramirez doubled in the third and Kevin Millar hit his third home run of the season, giving Boston a 4-2 lead.

Toronto's Greg Myers homered off Lowe in the bottom half, and Woodward's RBI triple retied it. Woodward then put Toronto ahead with an RBI single in the sixth.

Notes: Toronto's Eric Hinske ended an 0-for-17 skid with a double in the second...Attendance was 13,477....The Red Sox went 13-6 against the Blue Jays last season. Boston's high for wins against Toronto....Blue Jays reliever Pete Walker loaded the bases in the eighth, but struck out Jason Varitek to end the inning.

– Associated Press

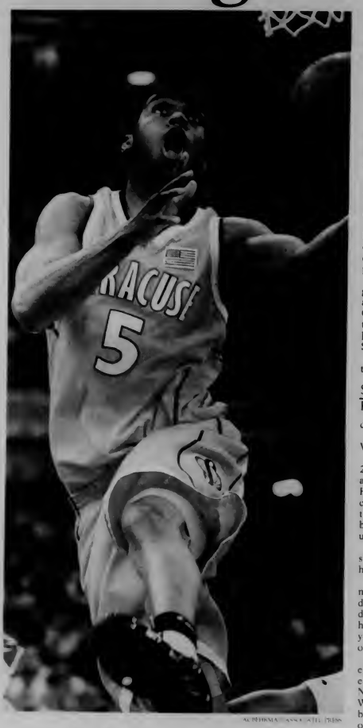
Styles by Deborah

Featuring Foil Highlights & Designer Haircuts for Students
Complementary consultation with every visit
$10 off Foils with a Style Haircut with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03
$5 off Clipper Cuts with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03
65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/4/03 - Thursday 4/10/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
PRIME BOOTH (R) 1:55 4:50 7:45 9:50*
A MAN APART (R) 1:35 4:25 7:05 9:40*
WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 1:50 4:35 7:25 10:10*
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:00 9:35
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:15 4:10 7:25
OLD SCHOOL (R) 10:30
BREAKADOWN (R) 7:10 10:15
THE CORE (PG13) 1:10 4:15 7:15 10:20*
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:00 7:40 10:00*
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55*
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:05
VIEW FROM THE TOP (PG13) 7:55 10:25
BOAT TRIP (R) 9:00*
PHILLY'S BIG MOVIE (R) 1:05 3:00 4:55
THE HUNTED (R) 1:25 4:30 7:30 9:45
AGENT CODY BANKS (PG) 1:00 4:05
Sunrise Show 6/16/03
- SPIRITED AWAY
*no passes/supersavers
cinemark.com

Burgers • Hot Dogs • Chicken
Seafood • Fries • Onion Rings
Shakes • Smoothies • Soft Serve
GREAT 8 ATE
Phantom Gourmet's 2003 Pick
Top 8 Burgers in New England
"Pete's Big Bopper Deluxe"
NOW SERVING BREAKFAST
287 RUSSELL ST
ROUTE 9 • HADLEY
CREDIT CARDS OCMP 585-0241
PETE'S DRIVE IN
petes-drivein.com

CASH FOR BOOKS
BRING 'EM IN OR CALL US
Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 S. Prospect St. Amherst 253-3870, 256-7816



Familiarity breeds content.

AMHERST downtown! we have it all!

UMass Summer Session 2003
Over 200 credit courses in more than 40 academic departments–evenings, daytime, weekends, and online.
Summer Session I: June 2–July 10
Summer Session II: July 14–August 20
And one-, two-, and three-week courses.
For a free catalog: call 545-2414 or e-mail contined@contined.umass.edu.
www.umass.edu/contined
Division of Continuing Education
UMassAmherst

Orangemen win in Big Easy

SYRACUSE'S JOSH PACE SCORED 12 POINTS, INCLUDING THIS LAYUP IN THE ORANGEMEN'S CHAMPIONSHIP VICTORY.

Syracuse is NCAA Champ; what next for the young stars?

By JOHN KEKIS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS (AP) – Decisions, decisions.

Seconds after Syracuse defeated Kansas for the national championship, coach Jim Boeheim was pondering his team's future – and he probably wasn't alone.

"I was thinking about what we're going to do next year," Boeheim said after freshman Carmelo Anthony and Gerry McNamara led the Orangemen to an 81-78 victory over the Jayhawks on Monday night at the Superdome.

Not only did Syracuse win its first title, the Orangemen produced their third 30-win season (30-5) in Boeheim's 27 years as coach of his alma mater.

Syracuse	81
Kansas	78

But what's next? An encore? With Anthony or without him?

The fabulous freshman, who had 20 points, 10 rebounds and seven assists and was named the Final Four's Most Outstanding Player, could declare himself eligible for the NBA draft. If so, he's certain to be a top pick, if not No. 1. He has until May to decide.

"That's his decision," Boeheim said. "I'm not going to make it for him. I'll talk to him."

Anthony said he's having too much fun and won't announce his decision until the semester winds down. "We're the national champs," he said after the game. "I had a fun year, a great year on the court and off the court in school."

Kansas coach Roy Williams is expected to make an even more eagerly anticipated decision. The North Carolina job is open, and Williams must make the hard choice between staying with the Jayhawks or taking over at his alma mater.

"Obviously, you want to avenge what happened this year," a teary-eyed Williams said after the game. "But right now, you just have to live the moment. Now we'll just go back to Lawrence and move on."

When the team returned home Tuesday, Williams and the players were greeted by fans at the Topeka airport.

Some held up a sign that made a reference to Williams' disparaging remark about the North Carolina job, when he uttered an expletive during a live postgame interview.

Kansas also must replace its best two players – Nick Collison and Kirk Hinrich – among others.

Syracuse should be loaded with talent next season, even if Anthony leaves. Winning a national title won't hurt recruiting, either.

The Orangemen lose senior guard Kueth Duany, but they have three solid freshmen waiting to begin their careers: Louis McCroskey from New York, Terrence Roberts from Jersey City, N.J., and Boston-born Demetris Nichols.

McNamara, forced to play more at point guard because of Billy Edelin's 12-game suspension at the start of the season, will see more time at shooting guard. Against the Jayhawks, he hit most of his six 3-pointers from well beyond the arc.

"You know, he's pretty good," Boeheim said. "I think that he will come out of his shell a little bit more next year."

Returning as a junior will be 6-foot-8 forward Hakim Warrick, who blocked Michael Lee's 3-point attempt in the final two seconds. He was voted the Big East's most improved player after averaging 15 points and nearly nine rebounds.

Josh Pace, who had eight points, eight rebounds, three steals and two assists in only 21 minutes against Kansas, also will be a junior. And Syracuse's centers – 7-foot center Craig Forth and shot-blocking specialist Jeremy McNeil – will return.

MICHAEL CONROY/ASSOCIATED PRESS

SYRACUSE HEAD COACH JIM BOEHEIM ACCEPTS THE NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP TROPHY AFTER THE ORANGEMEN BEAT KANSAS 81-78 AT THE FINAL FOUR ON MONDAY.

UMASS AMHERST
LEADERSHIP NETWORK

APRIL: Leadership at a Crossroads

The Leadership Network at UMass Amherst is pleased to draw your attention to the following workshops presented by the Isenberg School of Management

You Lead: Do They Follow? Secrets of Leadership Revealed

April 9th, 2003 6:30pm-8:30pm
Isenberg School of Management, Room 112

Bob Marx, a professor at the Isenberg School of Management, will present a 2 hour leadership seminar which will feature a leadership game designed to teach you leadership skills as you play for fun and prizes. You will be watching a video of a leader who is facing significant problems with his team. Can your team help him figure out what is wrong and how effective leadership can help him?

Pizza will be served at 6:00 PM in the ISOM Atrium

WANTED: Ethical Leaders

April 10th, 2003 4:30pm- 6:00pm
Isenberg School of Management, Room 106

Mzamo Mangaliso, a professor at the Isenberg School of Management, will discuss the present decline of ethics in corporate America, its causes, and its consequences. Using interactive cases, video clips, and examples from the corporate world, Professor Mangaliso will engage the audience in a discussion about what can be done to ameliorate this trend of declining ethics in corporate America.

Refreshments will be served at 4:00pm in the ISOM Atrium

Mill Valley E·S·T·A·T·E·S

HUGE DISCOUNTS
HOUSING FAIR ONLY

Visit Mill Valley at the Housing Fair in the Campus Center
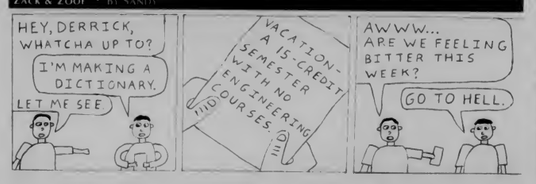
TODAY!
Win an X-Box!
Now renting for the summer

Come find your new home!

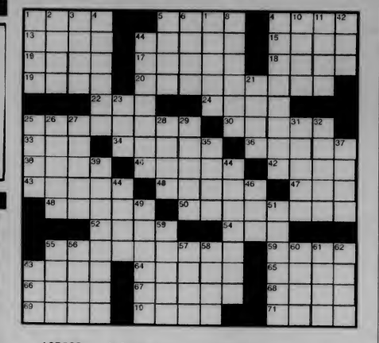
BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • BY ELLIOT C. CUMMINGS

ELSIE HOOPER • BY KRISTEN KRZYKOWSKI

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • BY CORMEL X



JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • BY MARK VELARDI



ELSIE HOOPER • BY KRISTEN KRZYKOWSKI

ZACK & ZOOT • BY SANDY

ACROSS
1 Sitar kin
5 Stare at 9 Benches
13 Mimicked
14 Brand name
15 Healing succulent
16 Writer — Morrison
17 Greased
18 Cooked slightly
19 Stops
20 Great Lakes port
22 Buckeye sch.
24 Eventful periods
25 Because of (2 wds.)
30 Baking ingredient
33 Popeye's Olive —
34 Europe's "boot"
36 RBI et al.
38 "Bronx" e.g.
40 Agreed (with)
42 Repeat
43 Kind of coffee
45 Open the door (2 wds.)
47 Ecru
48 Red-ink entry
50 Fastening
52 Temple image
54 "— had it!"
55 Mexican mesas
59 Waterlily leaves
63 Dull person
64 Shorthand pro
65 Essay byline
66 Drop
67 Exterior
68 Count, in England
69 Desires
70 Eject
71 It has a home page

DOWN
1 Like some trains
2 Current with (2 wds.)
3 Look after
4 Gramophone inventor
5 Spinner — Devers
6 Competent
7 Annoy
8 Tribal council
9 Flea, e.g.
10 Pizazz
11 Noun or verb
12 Take a gander
14 Grasshoppers
21 Swimmers' units
23 Compete in a slalom
25 — the line (obeyed)
26 Publicized
27 Wonderland girl
28 Comet feature
29 Of longer standing
31 Spiny plants
32 Patriot — Allen
35 Himalayan sighting
37 Melody
39 Advisory groups
41 Arithmetic term
44 Dog name
46 Ariz. neighbor
49 Body trunks
51 Plains dwellings
53 Illuminated (2 wds.)
55 Any
56 Gray or Moran
57 Antoinette lost hers
58 For a second time
60 Trim Shan range
61 Gossip
62 Price reduction
63 Lad

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-11-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Keep an eye on the squirrels, they are after you.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
There's nothing like sobriety. Put down the beer.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Your roommate is aggrivated about the empty milk carton.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Your best friend is likely to make a impact on you. With a fist

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Do not bring your radio into the shower. It's just a bad idea.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
If your cell phone rings at 8:55 p.m., don't answer it.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Today, a new romance will bloom for you. Hahaha, just kidkidding.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Please clean your toilet. It's very, very disgusting.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
If you are tired today, go back to bed. Tests are irrelevant.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Sorry, the Red Sox are not going to win the World Series ever.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Kiss a Collegian staffer today. They need love, too.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Please bend over and tie your shoes right now.

THE HARP IRISH PUB

THE DECK IS COMING!

Wednesday
Reggae Night
Thursday
The Missing Lance Project
Saturday
Hibus

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

WEDNESDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 26

THURSDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 30

FRIDAY
- High: 48
- Low: 33

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Vegetable Barley Soup
- Chicken Burrito
- Popcorn Shrimp
- Garden Vegetable Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Vegetable Barley Soup
- Extra Crispy Fried Chicken
- Meatloaf
Native American Stew (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matthew F. Sacco
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Sarah Lloyd
COPY EDITOR
Eric Soderstrom
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Ciruso
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jennifer Eastwood/Lizzy Nielsen

QUOTE OF THE DAY

When will I learn? The answer to life's problems aren't at the bottom of a bottle, they're on TV
-Homer Simpson

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Congratulations to the new sisters of Sigma Delta Tau: Jen Kolton, Ashleigh Louilholt, Erica Martin, Tricia McCabe, Shawna McCarthy, Stephanie McLean, Lauren Mihalsz, Molly Muckerjee, Liz Rothauser

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups: Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Term Paper Editing! Editing performed by professors and graduate students
Visit us at www.superchick.com or call us toll free 866-693-EDIT

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condominium for rent excellent condition 1/2 mile away from campus 4 bedroom apt for female roommates $550 full room, $350 to share plus utilities 413-592-0580

Apt. located in Branchwine Furnished Apt. Seeking Female Roommate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sandy @ 413-546-0489

Branchwine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.branchwine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstmgt.com 253-7879

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstmgt.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? COME TO THE COMPLEX FAIR, WED APRIL 9, 10 TO 3 ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE SPONSORED BY COMMUTER SERVICES, 428 STUDENT UNION WWW.CSHRC.ORG

AUTO FOR SALE

Saab 900S '95 190K Good Condition or B/O 413-549-5088 $750.00

BMW 528 E 1987 Good Shape $1250.00 413-531-7580

89 Volkswagon jetta standard good condition driven everyday $600 or best offer 413-549-1545

Honda Accord LX 1992 Great Shape $1500 obo 413-253-1456

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-1985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

MOVIES+EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150/450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors – Town of Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school-age children, and/or related course-work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. old, $ range for both positions $8.19-9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week, June 30- Aug. 15. Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept. 4 Bellrivod Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

EMPLOYMENT

New Store to open in Hampshire Mall looking for energetic and responsible individuals w/ retail experience Please call Barbara (413) 531-1020 or email bblakeclark@msn.com.

Technical Writer for Policy Analysis
Consulting/Software firm. Resume to Fred Trey, REMI, 413 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or Fred@REMI.com

WSI/Lifeguards The Town of Amherst, Department of Leisure Services and Supplemental Education (LSSE) Aquatics Program is now accepting WSI applications for summer 2003 season. All Applicants must possess current WSI and Lifeguard certifications. Previous experience preferred, $8.19-9.48 hr. Application deadline: 4/21. Applications are available from the Town Hall Human Resources Dept., 4 Bellrivod Walk, Amherst. Equal Opportunity Employer

EMPLOYMENT

Economic / Business Development Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Trey, REMI, 413 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. int-s@remi.com.

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Trey, REMI, 413 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. int-s@remi.com

Need Free Photos? Professional Photography students seek models of all races, ages for portfolio assignments. No experience required. Email for details @ msgmwadd@yahoo.com

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

EMPLOYMENT

Fall internships with the Student Legal Services Office, get hands on experience in the legal field - work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary, training provided. Deadline to begin application process is 4/22/03. Contact the Legal Services Office 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

SUMMER JOBS! Help new students get off to a good start. Peer Advisors needed for Summer Orientation. ~Competitive Salary ~20hrs/week~ Mid-May to Mid July Applications 615 Goodell Deadline: April 11

FOR SALE

For Sale 1 full couch, 1 love seat and 1 twin mattress and box. Great condition Call 549-4972

1 HP Equipment for sale 2 Numark TTAX Turntables 1 Gemini PMX50 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedroom house available this summer next year. Beautiful location, 10 minutes from Amherst Center. Call 256-0613

Large 4 bedroom house in Hadley 1 mile and 3/4 to UMass Available June 1 $2,650 Call Lincoln Real Estate 253-7879

4 Bedroom plus Newer house minutes from UMass $2700/month 548-8800

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1678

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUBLET

Putton Sublet from June 1st- August 31st 3beds 2baths 1140 per month Call Mark 253-1479

TRAVEL

STS America's number one student tour operator is now hiring on-campus reps 2003-04 1800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break with STS America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WANTED

Egg Donors Needed, non-smokers. Donors Ages 21-32 Generous compensation paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781) 769-6900

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

As usual, Tiger Woods is the favorite to win his fourth Masters championship. If he wins, he will put on the Green Jacket for the third year in a row.

Tiger's tourney again

An Augusta story

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Some things about the Masters never change.

As usual, Tiger Woods was first off the tee Tuesday morning when the rain relented at Augusta National, the first time he has played the course since he walked away last April wearing his green jacket.

And just like always, the question is not so much whether he can win another Masters, but whether anyone can stop him.

"I guess I'm still the favorite," Woods said with a wide smile.

The odds are even better, considering the circumstances. Heavy rains have pounded Augusta National since Sunday, conditions similar to last year when Woods walked through muddy fairways and walked over his competition to win by three shots.

Woods also is faced with the kind of challenge on which he thrives: making history.

No one has ever won the Masters three years in a row, and only two other players — Jack Nicklaus (1965-66) and Nick Faldo (1989-90) — even had a chance.

"I think it would be huge to win three Masters," Woods said. "No one has ever done it before. And I've been able to do certain things in golf that no one has ever done before.

If you're ever in that position, you want to take advantage of it, because it doesn't happen all the time."

It seems to happen to Woods quite often.

The last time he was in this position was two years ago at the Masters, when Woods was trying to become the first player in history to hold the four professional majors at the same time. He turned back his top two rivals and won two. He had a chance to become the youngest player to complete the career Grand Slam at age 24 in the 2000 British Open.

He won by eight.

Trying to become the only man to win three straight U.S. Amateur titles, Woods rallied from five down after the morning round to win on the 38th hole.

"He's attempting to do something that's never been done, but that's never stopped him before," Phil Mickelson said. "In fact, it's been a motivating factor, to do things that have never been done. So, I would be surprised if he played less than his best."

Mickelson is trying to do something he has never been before – win a major.

Some wonder whether this might be as good a chance as

Continued on page 9

Cup Celebration

Hockey heats up in the chill

Matt Brady

With the college basketball championships now finished, the beautiful weather of mid-April should be rapidly approaching. But instead, the ghosts of a horrendous winter still haunt us. Which is appropriate, as professional sports' top championship gets underway in the truly correct environment. The Stanley Cup playoffs simply seem better with snow on the ground.

So now it is time for another beautiful yearly tradition – time to dust off the old crystal puck, and predict the winner in every first round matchup.

EASTERN CONFERENCE

#1 Ottawa Senators vs. #8 New York Islanders

The Senators quietly had the best record in the NHL this year and did it with near-perfect balance. Marian Hossa blossomed this year as the scorer people expected him to be a few years ago, and ever-steady Daniel Alfredsson scored a point per game as well. Patrick Lalime has followed his team, quietly putting an incredibly impressive season together. Whether that translates to the playoffs is another question.

The Islanders were one of the NHL's biggest surprises at the beginning of the season, but since then have limped into the playoffs, with an 0-4-1 record in their last five. The Sens may want revenge on Alexei Yashin for his primadonna act of yesteryear, but it may be a moot point. Without incredible goaltending the Isles will certainly be pulling out their golf bags in a week or two.

Prediction: Senators in five.

#2 New Jersey Devils vs. #7 Boston Bruins

Here it is, the series that gets me in trouble. My beloved Devils have put together another impressive season, largely on the back of goaltender Martin Brodeur, who has shown that he is truly among the top netminders in the league. The Devs failed to pick up anyone significant up front at the deadline, and lack of consistent scorers up front could plague them.

The Bruins were consistently terrible down the stretch and Mike O'Connell taking over behind the bench is simply a joke. However, the B's are incredibly talented up front, and I can tell you that the last time Robbie Fiorek was fired late in the season, his team won the Stanley Cup. Too bad O'Connell isn't Larry Robinson.

Prediction: Devils in six.

#3 Tampa Bay Lightning vs. #6 Washington Capitals

Zzzzzz. Wake me when it's over. Two teams from the Southeast Division squaring off in the first round? But wait, these aren't the typical teams from the "Least of the East" here. The Lightning have come so far this season and the two Vinnys – Lecavalier and Prospal – are one of the most underrated duos in the league. Nikolai Khabibulin didn't have to stand on his head every game this year and benefited significantly.

The Capitals still have Jaromir Jagr and Sergei Gonchar, who

Continued on page 9

UM downs Fordham

By Anna Edwards
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team defeated Fordham, 5-1, for its second Atlantic 10 victory in a week. Freshman Dorothy Iwanowicz also earned the A-10 women's Tennis Rookie of the week award for the week ending April 6.

If the Maroon and White is able to continue its successful streak in the coming week, then more A-10 victories could not be far from its grasp.

"In order for us to achieve our goals we had to beat Fordham," said UMass coach Judy Dixon.

The Minutewomen's present goals now are to win against both Temple and George Washington this week and get seeded for the A-10 tournament. Now that it has achieved its main goal in defeating the Rams, Umass has proven that this is a realistic target.

Although the scheduled match against the Rams was forced inside when ice storms prevented play, the Minutewomen were not distracted, and dropped only one match, at the No. 1 singles position. Sophomore Stephanie Price fell to junior Xer-Li Woo 4-6, 6-4, 6-3, despite a first set that looked to be in her favor.

Junior Jafra Deportes defeated freshman Christina Papa 6-3, 2-6, 6-3 in the No. 2 singles position while sophomore Sasha Edelstein reigned in No. 3 singles over senior Morgan Brinley 6-2, 6-1.

Iwanowicz displayed her strength in the No. 5 singles in a confident 6-3, 6-3 win over sophomore Christina Leavenworth.

UMass took the 5-1 victory after both teams agreed to not play the three scheduled doubles matches. The teams had an unusually late start due to the move inside, so the squads agreed to call it a day.

Now the key for Minutewomen is seeding for the A-10, which kicks off on April 17. At present, Richmond will be seeded at No. 1, and Xavier is at No. 2 after an unexpected defeat over a hobbled Temple squad on March 29.

If UMass beats Temple on Friday and George Washington on Saturday, it will grab the third seed for the A-10 tournament.

Up next for the Minutewomen is a clash against Boston College today. The Eagles, who are ranked 75th in the country, should provide a new challenge for the Maroon and White.

"We need practice at that caliber to be sharp for Temple," Dixon said.

Although beating the Eagles will be difficult, the experience gained will be invaluable heading into the final leg of the spring schedule.

There will be an additional challenge for the Minutewomen today, as they will be playing the matches on a fast indoor gym surface, one they are not entirely accustomed to. However, the Minutewomen will get outdoor experience against George Washington on Saturday before heading into the A-10 Championships.

In other news, Deportes has been moved back up to No. 1 singles position after being forced down the lineup due to a shoulder injury. This move comes at the most crucial point of the season, allowing Deportes to practice before the A-10 in two weeks.

The Minutewomen take on BC at Chestnut Hill today, with matches scheduled to start at 3 p.m.

Lasme's transfer still a shocker

Jim Pignatiello

A player's decision to transfer doesn't usually shock anyone — let alone a sports writer who has covered the team all season.

But less than two weeks ago, I heard the rumor that UMass freshman guard Mike Lasme was leaving. And I was certainly shocked.

After an 11-18 season, the Steve Lappas apologists, yours truly included, looked at Lasme as one reason to be optimistic about the program's turnaround. A tremendous athlete, Lasme showed a ton of heart this season, fighting through very painful injuries — a broken wrist severely sprained ankle and elbow ligament strain — to become one of the best players on the team.

Lasme averaged 28 minutes per game, good for second on the team. He placed fourth among Minutemen — second among those returning for next season — with 7.5 points per game. Lasme showed flashes of brilliance, like his 24-point outburst at George Washington to lead the Minutemen to victory in January, but had consistency issues — something that would surely be fixed once his injuries healed and he matured.

According to Lappas and Athletic Director Ian McGaw, Lasme — along with freshmen Jeff Viggiano and Gabe Lee — proved that the former Villanova coach was turning the UMass program into the power it once was. Add sophomore point guard Anthony Anderson and incoming freshmen Stephen Briggs, Rashaun Freeman and Art Bowers to the mix and the Minutemen might be dancing in a year or two.

And then Lasme bailed.

There have been five UMass players to transfer since Lappas came to UMass two years ago. None of them shocked me until Lasme. Jamed Pugh and Willie Jenkins were awful. Bruiser Flint leftovers, Kyle Wilson was forced out of playing time by Anderson. Lasme and UConn transfer Marcus Cox, Raheim Lamb wasn't cut out to play the three spot in Lappas system and didn't want to be a backup four.

But it seemed that Lasme and Lappas had an amazing relationship. Lasme referred to Lappas as a father figure. Sometimes, it looked more important to Lasme to make Lappas happy with his play as it was for his team to win.

So, when I received the call two Fridays ago that Lasme was telling people he was gonzo, I almost didn't believe it. Another silly rumor among the many that float around the Campus Center Basement and never happen.

But the story broke early the next week and Lasme claimed he needed to play point guard full-time in order to make the NBA. Because Anderson, who Lasme has a great deal of respect for, is slotted at the point guard position for the next two years and it's clearly the best player on the team, Lasme decided to find somewhere else to play.

Lasme has come under a great deal of scrutiny since making the decision. I've heard him called a traitor. I've heard him called a turncoat. I've heard people make fun of his dream to play in the NBA. I've heard people, including Lappas, question why he is thinking about the NBA in the first place.

The fact is, Mike Lasme is one of the most tremendous individuals I've met in the three years (10 teams) that I've covered UMass athletics. While other players would bustle out of the press conference after the media finished volleying questions, Lasme would look for familiar faces to say hello to. He'd ask how they've been or if they planned to go on the next road trip. Everyone who got to know Mike, even if they shouldn't professionally admit it, rooted for him on press row.

As far as the NBA talk, it's clear that Lasme's dream is to play in the NBA. It

Continued on page 9

Mike Lasme decided to transfer out of UMass, in search of greener pastures where he would have a better chance at the NBA.

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 2003 — NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 — VOLUME CIX ISSUE 114

Bulger granted immunity

Testimony to be used to 'clean up' FBI

By Lolita C. Baldor
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – Lawmakers tried to give a boost yesterday to their two-year investigation into the FBI's ties to mob informants by granting immunity to University of Massachusetts President William Bulger and a former New England crime boss in exchange for their congressional testimony.

Members of the House Government Reform Committee said they hope to use the testimony from Bulger, brother of a fugitive mobster, and Francis "Cadillac Frank" Salemme to improve whistle-blower protections and address how FBI agents use their confidential informants.

William Bulger was granted immunity yesterday in exchange for his congressional testimony.

"Our number one objective is to clean up the FBI," said Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., a former committee chairman who led the investigation over the past two years.

The current chairman, Rep. Tom Davis, R-Va., said the committee could hear from Bulger and Salemme as early as month's end.

"We want to get this over as fast as we can," Davis said. "This information will help the committee gain a complete understanding of the scope of the FBI's misuse of informants in Boston. ...What happened there should never happen again."

Bulger has maintained an eight-year silence on what he knows about the whereabouts and FBI ties of his brother, James "Whitey" Bulger, who is linked to 21 murders and fled in 1995 to avoid prosecution.

In December, William Bulger appeared before the House committee but invoked his Fifth Amendment right and refused to answer questions.

The immunity vote for William Bulger was 30-1, with Rep. Steven LaTourette, R-Ohio, the lone dissenter.

LaTourette said William Bulger, a Democrat who led the Massachusetts Senate for 17 years, has been withholding information about his brother and there are questions about "whether or not, when he was president of the state Senate that he engaged in retaliatory activities with respect to his brother. I'm saddened the Justice Department does not want to look at this individual any further."

William Bulger, who has a law degree, said he has no idea what the committee will ask, but that the immunity vote was expected.

"It's another step along the way," Bulger said in Boston. "Things have been going along in a pretty cooperative fashion and so we'll do whatever is expected of us next."

The immunity will not shield William Bulger if he contradicts any of his earlier grand jury testimony when he said that he had no idea where his brother was and that he had spoken to him only once since he fled. He later told reporters: "I don't feel an obligation to help everyone to catch him."

Committee Democrats urged caution, noting that William Bulger has never been convicted of a crime.

"I'm unclear what forcing William Bulger to testify will contribute to this investigation," said the committee's top Democrat, Rep. Henry Waxman of California. "We need to take great care before doing this."

Rep. John Tierney, D-Mass., said the committee should focus on FBI corruption and not taint William Bulger's "exemplary public career."

Lawmakers are hoping William Bulger, 68, will provide information about whether FBI agents obstructed homicide cases to protect his older brother, and if they stalled efforts to find him.

"We have FBI employees who were working for organized crime," said Rep. Christopher Shays, R-Conn. "We want the truth. If you have people in your law enforcement that are corrupt, you need to root it out."

Executive Cabinet positions approved

Senate Speaker Dan Saunders prepares to make the opening address at last night's SGA meeting.

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Several Student Government Association Executive Cabinet positions were approved at last night's SGA meeting.

Brian Long, who currently holds the Executive Cabinet position as Secretary of University Policy, was approved for a second term. Members of the SGA questioned Long and his expectations for the coming year, and also looked at what his goals to improve the campus community were.

Long said that he hopes to actively involve the Faculty Senate more within the SGA, as he has been working more closely with them to provide SGA representation in their meetings. He said that he is looking to work on getting the Mullins Center to accept U-Cards, and will continue to actively work with Parking Services.

The Senate approved Mark Morrison, former Governor of the Orchard Hill Residential Area, as Attorney General. Morrison said he plans to continue improving the Judiciary Advising Program under the Student Legal Services Office that he currently sits on. Morrison was also critical of SGA by-laws.

"I do know the by-laws very, very well. I do know them, I do follow them, I do have strong interpretations on them," Morrison said. "I enjoy coming to Senate. I enjoy knowing what you guys are working on, knowing where it came from and what you thought before it came here and it's very interesting to see what happens when it leaves here, and I love that process and I respect it."

President Dave Carr's third appointment was Mina Safain as Secretary of Public Policy and Relations. The appointment stirred debate within the Senate. Members of the SGA questioned Safain's experience within the SGA, as well as what he could offer since he has not sat on the Public Policy and Relations committee or in a meeting.

Safain, who is currently the Southwest Area Government Treasurer, responded by saying that he feels he was qualified for the position and was looking for ways to reach out to incoming freshman. He expressed interest in increasing campus communication between the SGA, its constituency and the town of Amherst as well.

"We really want to reach out to freshman and make sure they know who the SGA is; I know a bunch of people who don't know who the SGA is, and that's horrible because you guys work for them," Safain said. "Our relationship with the town of Amherst and the surrounding communities is kind of crappy and I'd really like to work on that."

Aside from Executive Cabinet appointments, senators also dealt with more financial allocations. An allocation of $1,900 was given to Brothers and Sisters in Christ (BASIC), as well as a $4,150 allocation to the Southwest Area Government and a third allocation of $992 to the Pride Alliance for Queer Fest.

A fourth financial allocation of $2,000 was granted by the Ways and Means committee to the Northeast Area Government to help support their spring events.

A motion requesting for a change in the SGA by-laws also sparked debate last night. The motion requested that the by-laws be changed to read that any motion that failed in the Administrative Affairs Committee could still be presented to the Senate. Currently, if a motion is not passed in the AA committee, it cannot be brought before the Senate. The motion was debated by members of the Senate and failed with a lack of a two-thirds majority vote.

– Another motion to rename French fries at UMass "freedom" fries failed to get on the agenda for the evening. Presented by Senator Olaf Aprans and Bryan Thompson, chair of Ways and Means, the motion requested that "linear-cut, fried potatoes" at UMass be renamed, with several reasons listed.

Senator Olaf Aprans presented a motion regarding French fries to the SGA last night.

Fac Senate to vote on grading

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

The Academic Matters Council and the Graduate Council will present to the Faculty Senate today their motion to change grading from the current A/AB system to an A/A-system.

Respective council chairs John Jenkins and Anthony Butterfield will present the councils' special report to the Senate.

The Student Government Association approved the motion to change the University of Massachusetts' grading system on April 2. If approved by the Senate, changes to the grading system will go into place for the upcoming fall semester. The change will be incorporated for all undergraduate and graduate students, not just incoming freshman. Current GPAs will be left as is with new grades being factored in with the new calculations. The grading scale will continue to be a 4.0 scale. An A will be a 4.0, an A- will be a 3.7; a B+ will be a 3.3, down to a failing grade which will be worth a zero.

The Umass-Amherst campus is the only institution within the University system that has an A/AB grading system. The other four UMass campuses use the proposed A/A- system, as do the four other colleges within the Five-College Consortium where UMass students commonly take courses.

Additionally, results from a random Internet survey done by the two councils showed that UMass is one of fewer than 10 institutions within the 125 Research I and Research II universities (schools comparable to UMass), that uses the A/AB system. The councils say this creates difficulty for current UMass students taking courses at other colleges within the consortium and for students who transfer both from and to UMass-Amherst.

SGA members and members of both councils agreed that on top of creating confusion for new students and creating difficulty for students transferring credits from or to other institutions, one more reason to change the current system is that it puts UMass students at a disadvantage when transferring out or applying for graduate schools and jobs, because of the misinterpretation of the current system.

"Say you're applying to graduate school; when people at other schools or employers look at a BC they don't know how to interpret it, so they round down to a C when converting a UMass student's GPA," said SGA Secretary of University Policy, Brian Long.

The councils' report explains that graduating seniors and alumni applying to graduate schools are often handicapped by a "system that gives them ABs and BCs for work that could have earned A-'s or B-'s at other institutions." According to the report, the difference "may seem subtle," but for employers and admission officers unfamiliar with the University's grading system, "the impact of that difference can create a disadvantage for our graduates."

Professor Mokhtar Atallah explained that the new system would not be difficult for the University to put in, because it will not affect SPIRE, only the calculation involved in grading.

"It is not that difficult to work out," said Atallah. "We talked with the registrar and the computer people and they said it would not be difficult."

Members of the SGA expressed concern that the new system would alter professors' grading practices, making it more difficult to receive high marks. The report proposes that the new A/A- system will actually assist professors by providing faculty with more uniform guidelines for recording the grades of each course.

Atallah agreed with the report, but said that the new system could possibly create greater difficulties for professors when deciding a student's grade, especially in larger classes where professors and students have less contact with one another.

Ernest May, secretary of the Faculty Senate, supports the changes outlined by the report.

"I agree with all the points made in the report," May said. "From the students' point of view, however, the major advantage to the proposed system is that it will facilitate transfers (in and out) and applications to graduate schools. The current system puts UMass-Amherst students at a slight (but unnecessary) disadvantage."

The Faculty Senate will hear from Catherine Boudreau, president of the Massachusetts Teacher's Association, concerning the MTA's response to Governor Mitt Romney's reorganization plans before it votes on the motion to change the grading system.The Faculty Senate meets today at 3:30 p.m. in Herter 227.

Welfare Poets tell students America oppresses

Welfare Poets Ray Ramirez, left, Djibril Toure and Hector Luis Rivera discuss American actions with students in the Campus Center last night.

By Ikaika C. Arnado
Collegian Staff

The New York-based group Welfare Poets discussed America's oppressive nature at the Campus Center last night, criticizing America's harsh treatment toward Puerto Ricans and African Americans.

"I think the United States is the biggest terrorist in the world," Djibril Toure, one of the poets, said. "What country has dropped the atomic bomb? What country has the most weapons of mass destruction," Toure said.

The speech started with an introduction and the poem "Media," performed by Ray Ramirez, about the corporate influence over the media, people and world politics.

"It's the media causing mass hysteria in all areas there all carriers of forces the nation all barriers to true emancipation it's scary when your aware that there connected to corporation," Ramirez rapped.

The group began when Ramirez and Hector Luis Rivera met at Cornell University. While there, they became involved with different programs to educate themselves and others about Puerto Rican culture. They also helped different minorities to spread awareness about their culture. Later, Toure joined the group.

The Welfare Poets had an open discussion with the audience. As a group, the audience defined the difference between political prisoner, POW, and self-determination.

Then the Welfare Poets went over what they call unfair acts enacted by the United States government. Among these acts were the Smith Act, Patriot Acts I & II, and RICCO. They also spoke about the Geneva Convention and the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights.

Then Rivera spoke in depth about what he perceived as Puerto Rico's forced assimilation into U.S. Culture.

"The US invaded and it's not game over," he said. "We have generations of political prisoners."

Rivera used the Puerto Rican leader Albizu Campos as an example of how brutal he thinks the United States can be.

"He was one of the first political prisoners we had," Rivera said.

Rivera told the crowd that Campos

Continued on page 2

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9
WAR FAR FROM OVER
FALL OF BAGHDAD DOES NOT EQUAL VICTORY
PAGE 4
WRESTLING
EVERYTHING YOU HAVE EVER WANTED TO KNOW AND MORE
PAGE 5
HOCKEY HONORS
CAHOON, PUCK TAKE HOME AWARDS
PAGE 10

Interview with a lawyer

The Roe v. Wade defender catches up with The Collegian

By Jesse Hirsch
Collegian Correspondent

This year marks the 30th anniversary of the groundbreaking reproductive rights case, Roe v. Wade. Sarah Weddington, the lawyer who successfully defended a woman's right to choose, will speak tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Johnson Chapel at Amherst College. Collegian correspondent Jesse Hirsch caught up with Weddington for an interview from her office in Austin, Texas.

Collegian: First of all, in light of the fact that this year marks the 30th anniversary of Roe v. Wade, how far do you think women have come in the past three decades?

Weddington: In the past thirty years, women have come a long way in general. In 1973, women couldn't play anything beyond half-court basketball; now they're on championship teams. Thirty years ago, if you showed up to teach at a school one day and were pregnant, there was a high chance you'd be fired. Now, any employer who tried to do that would face some serious legal problems. When I was an undergraduate and formed an interest in law, the dean of my college told me that it was just too tough for a woman and that I wouldn't be able to hack it. My graduating class had five women out of 250 graduates, and even once we graduated, none of the women could find jobs in law offices. Now, about 50 percent of all law school graduates are women. So we've come quite far.

Collegian: I sense you still see work that needs to be done.

Weddington: Oh yes. I just read an article trumpeting how there are an unprecedented number of women today in powerful positions, such as governors and CEO's of major corporations. Well, as it turns out, there are six women governors and six women running major companies in the U.S. So even as we celebrate our advances, we need to recognize we are still not where we need to be.

Collegian: What about progress specifically in terms of reproductive rights?

Weddington: In 1969, when I worked at the University of Texas public health center, a woman couldn't get birth control without the permission of her husband or father. Things have obviously changed since then. But I still feel that, for instance, emergency contraception should be sold over the counter. Or, I wonder why most health insurance companies cover Viagra but not birth control pills. Do you see the problem?

Collegian: I do. Now, even more specifically, what kind of historical trends do you see shaping the pro-life/pro-choice debate as it stands today?

Weddington: Have you seen the new Lord of the Rings movie?

Collegian: No.

Weddington: Well, there's a part of the movie in which the good guys retreat to a 'keep' to avoid the enemy. The bad guys have superior weapons and higher numbers, and they keep managing to penetrate one line of defense after another. But, after the fifth day of the siege, reinforcements for the good guys arrive and save the day. In the past, this pattern has happened again and again with the battle to maintain free choice, with each step backward being counterbalanced by pro-choice legislators. Today, however, it's hard to see where the reinforcements are. We have a president, attorney general, health and human services secretary and a House and Senate all who are adamantly opposed to abortion.

Collegian: So you don't see enough checks and balances?

Weddington: Not at all. I see a move by the anti-choice people to ultimately overturn Roe v. Wade on a state level.

Collegian: Do you think the current administration reflects the attitudes of the American people?

Weddington: No. I mean, polls even show that the majority of Republicans support a woman's right to choose. What we have now is a core of ultra-conservative men who are powerful enough to push their agenda through.

Collegian: What recourse would you suggest for someone who is disturbed by the direction the current administration is moving in?

Weddington: First, I would suggest you hook up with people who are on the same team. Check out the websites www.saveroe.com or www.benchmarkcampaign.org to start looking in the right direction. And second, I would say that you should educate yourself on who the pro-choice candidates are in any upcoming election. The most important thing you can do to keep a woman's right to choose is to vote.

Collegian: What will you be speaking about at Amherst College?

Weddington: What students seem to be most interested in are questions about Roe v. Wade, such as how it felt to be 27-years-old arguing one of the most important Supreme Court cases ever, or why the case remains so relevant today. So, I will be addressing that. But I also will be talking about 'course corrections.'

Collegian: What do you mean?

Weddington: Well, when I was an undergraduate, I thought my life was going to be teaching Beowulf to eighth graders. And in law school, I thought I would end up with a small private practice in Texas. But my life has been full of these 'course corrections' leading me down paths I never would have imagined. I think the important thing for young people is to gain the leadership skills and knowledge of themselves to take them in the direction they were meant to go. This is how we all can leave a thumbprint on the world we live in.

Collegian: One final human interest question. Is there anything you're looking forward to seeing on your visit to the Pioneer Valley?

Weddington: Snow. I can't believe it was 81 degrees in Texas today and I'm going to a place where it's snowing in April.

SARAH LEO/THE COLLEGIAN

From the heart

An observer looks at some of the art in the exhibit "Healing the Wounded Heart: Survivor Art Exhibit" in the Student Union Art Gallery. The hearts on the wall were decorated by survivors of sexual assault and those close to them. The show runs through Friday, with hours from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. today and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. tomorrow.

Poets tell students America oppresses

Continued from page 1

was tortured when he was imprisoned.

"When Albizu talked about being tortured by radiation they told him he was crazy," Rivera said.

The political organizations affiliated with the groups were the Armed Forces of National Liberation (FALN) and Macheteros, both groups the United States has accused of terrorist actions.

The Welfare Poets said that 15 members between the two groups were made political prisoners.

"They were charged with judicious conspiracy. There were never any proof of violent acts," Rivera said. "The average sentence for each prisoner was 65 years. That's a lot more than murderers and child molesters and greedy corporations and presidents," Rivera said.

After Rivera's speech, Toure spoke about how he feels America has oppressed African Americans.

"Ever since slavery began there has been acts of resistance, some of which you have become familiar with through history like the Amistrad uprising," Toure said. "But the Amistrad is not the only one, it the most famous one."

Toure said that Nat Turner revolted on a plantation and said he used the bible as a tool to "throw off the shackles of oppression."

Turner freed slaves on more than 100 plantations, Tourne said.

Toure told the crowd that when Marcus Garvey taught black people to be economically independent, the U.S. was threatened because he had assistance from the communist party.

Toure said the government attacked the Black Panthers.

"We had a chemical warfare attack in the form of cocaine," he said.

Lambda Upsilon Lambda Fraternity sponsored the event in collaboration with the Anti-War Coalition, the cultural Enrichment Fund, and the Latin American Cultural Center.

E.I.C. VOTING ENDS FRIDAY AT 3 P.M.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Engineering and Science Majors
Expand Your Potential – Fast Track Your Career

Master of Science
program in the Management of Technology
at the
University of New Hampshire
Whittemore School of Business and Economics

The MBA alternative for technology entrepreneurs and those seeking leadership positions in technology intensive firms

- Focused on the development and commercialization of emerging technologies and managing technological change
- Emphasis on team projects and problem solving
- Industry sponsored projects and internships
- Small class size with high level of student/faculty interaction
- 18 month trimester format
- Next class starting September 2003
- Financial Aid available

For more details call 603-862-3370
or email warren.lackstrom@unh.edu at the
Hamel Center for the Management of Technology and Innovation
Preparing Technology Professionals for Technology Leadership

www.unh.edu/wsbe/grad

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force,
there's no telling what you'll work on.
(Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

America at War

Iraqis celebrate fall of Hussein regime

By Ravi Nessman
and David Espo
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) – Their hour of freedom at hand, jubilant Iraqis celebrated the collapse of Saddam Hussein's murderous regime on Wednesday, beheading a toppled statue of their longtime ruler in downtown Baghdad and embracing American troops as liberators.

"He killed millions of us," said a young Iraqi, spitting on one of countless portraits of Saddam scattered throughout the capital. Men hugged Americans in full combat gear and women held up babies so soldiers riding on tanks could kiss them.

Iraqis released decades of pent-up fury as U.S. forces solidified their grip on the capital. Marine tanks rolled to the eastern bank of the Tigris River; the Army was on the western side of the waterway that curls through the ancient city.

Looting broke out in the capital as Iraqis shedding their fear of the regime, entered government facilities and made off with furniture, computers, air conditioners and even military jeeps.

"We are not seeing any organized resistance," said Navy Capt. Frank Tharp at the U.S. Central Command. "The Iraqi military is unable to fight as an organized fighting force."

There was continued combat in cities to the north, though, where government troops were under attack from U.S. and British warplanes.

The scenes of liberation in Baghdad and celebrations in scattered other cities unfolded as the Pentagon announced that 101 American troops had died in the first three weeks of Operation Iraqi Freedom. Another 11 are missing and seven listed as captured. The British said 30 of their troops were dead. There are no reliable estimates for Iraqi casualties, although an Army spokesman said 7,300 prisoners had been taken.

The medical system was overrun with civilian casualties in Basra and Baghdad, cities where some of the fiercest fighting has occurred. Doctors said 35 bodies and as many as 300 wounded Iraqis were brought to the al-Kindi hospital in the capital Tuesday.

Saddam's whereabouts remained a mystery, especially so since a bombing Monday night on a building where U.S. intelligence officials believed he and at least one of his sons were meeting. Russia's Foreign Ministry denied that the Iraqi leader had taken refuge in Moscow's embassy in Baghdad.

There was scattered fighting in the capital, including at Baghdad University, where Iraqis were cornered, the river at their backs.

Fires burned in the city after dark – the Ministry of Transport and Communication was ablaze – and gunfire persisted. But Pentagon officials characterized it as sporadic attacks from pockets of resistance, and said U.S. troops had been through most areas of the capital.

Increasingly, American and British forces were turning their effort to humanitarian assistance in the southern part of the country, and their firepower on northern regions not yet under their control.

Warplanes bombed Tikrit, Saddam's birthplace about 100 miles north of the capital, in advance of ground forces moving in. American commandos and Kurdish peshmerga fighters seized a key mountaintop in northern Iraq, eliminating an Iraqi air defense installation near the government-held city of Mosul.

To the south, officials said the 1st Battalion Royal Irish Regiment had reached Qurnah, said to be the site of the biblical Garden of Eden and the birthplace of mankind. The troops were welcomed by cheering crowds of Ma'dan, marsh Arabs who have suffered genocide at the hands of Saddam. There was celebrating, too, in Basra, according to a British journalist who reported that rejoicing broke out after news of developments in Baghdad reached the city.

Administration officials cautioned that difficult and dangerous days may yet lie ahead for American and British forces. "This is not over, despite all the celebrating on the streets," said Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld. And Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said Iraqi death squads still exist in the western part of the country.

Like other officials, Rumsfeld said he did not know Saddam's whereabouts. But he said some unidentified members of Saddam's regime were moving out of Iraq into Syria. Citing intelligence information, he added that some were staying in Syria, while others were going on to other locations.

While Rumsfeld and other American officials cautioned that combat may lie ahead, Iraq's U.N. ambassador told reporters that "the game is over and I hope peace will prevail." Mohammed Al-Douri's comments to reporters in New York were the first admission by an Iraqi official that Saddam's forces had been overwhelmed.

Whether Saddam was living or dead, wounded or hoping to escape, the signs of his regime's collapse were everywhere.

For the first time since Operation Iraqi Freedom was launched three weeks ago, Information Minister Mohammed Saeed al-Sahhaf failed to appear before reporters with claims of glorious battlefield victories by Iraqi troops. And for the first time in decades, Iraqis were defacing images of the man who ruled brutally for nearly a quarter century.

One wall painting was spraypainted with black devil's horns, eyeglasses and a black chin beard. Others were set ablaze.

"We are relieved because for years we lived in anxiety and fear," said Shamoun George, a resident of Baghdad's Karrada district, as American troops entered the area.

"Bush, Bush, thank you," chanted small bands of youth in Saddam City, a predominantly Shiite area of eastern Baghdad.

A U.S. marine covers the face of a Saddam Hussein statue with an American flag before toppling the statue downtown in Baghdad yesterday.

LAURA RAUCH/ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Marines race toward a vehicle that came under fire as it entered a military compound U.S. Marines had recently taken in southeast Baghdad on Tuesday.

Four Seasons
Wine & Liquor

Busch Light
24 Bottles
$9.99 + dep.

Heineken
12 Pack
$9.99 + dep.

Monday Saturday
9am 11pm
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
584 8174

Interested in Business?

The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the 2003/2004 school year. Great resume builder! Sophomores/Juniors call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center.
Needs to possess strong business and communication skills

GET HOT.

Capris from Urban Outfitters, Seven and Mavi.

ZANNA
downtown
Amherst

No one wants to have an abortion, much less a second one.
But if you have had an abortion, you are at an even higher risk of experiencing the tragedy of abortion again.
While others are satisfied with the status quo,
Feminists for Life concentrates our efforts on prevention and less painful alternatives.
If you prefer action to rhetoric, please contact us.

Refuse to Choose.™ Women Deserve Better.™

FEMINISTS FOR LIFE OF AMERICA

feministsforlife.org

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The fall of Baghdad doesn't signal the end of the war

The many joys of coffee

Scott Eldridge II

"You can pour half a cup of diner coffee down your throat and it will always be at that perfect temperature to help move the meal along without searring the throat."

Leaving Billy alone

Peter Trovato

William Bulger's childhood nickname was "The Beam." While other South Boston youth flooded out into the street corners at night, Billy Bulger sat in his bedroom, late into the evening, studying by a lamp that beamed onto the dark streets of Southie. Surely, that lamp burned out. For Bulger studied his way through Boston College High School in Dorchester, went to Boston College for his undergrad work and onto Boston College Law School, where he received his doctorate. All this prepared him for over 35 years of political service to the Bay State – and his most recent venture as the President of the University of Massachusetts system.

But Billy Bulger's job is in jeopardy. Recently elected governor Mitt Romney has plans to reform the state education system. The new plan would include the removal of Bulger as president and allow Romney to set up a separate governing body. What a mistake this would be.

Bulger has not been the ideal president for everybody at UMass. There has been a long struggle for professors to get their contracts funded. There have been tuition increases, some coming mid-semester and unannounced. And most recently, Bulger's character has come under fire, when he decided to assert his Fifth Amendment privilege when questioned about the whereabouts of his convict brother Whitey. But 'the devil you know is better than the devil you don't know.'

And we don't know Mitt Romney like we know Billy Bulger. He isn't from Massachusetts. In fact, he isn't even from New England. Romney grew up in Michigan, where his father was the governor and a presidential candidate in '68. He went to college in Utah. Romney did well enough as an undergrad to make the trek across country for business school at Harvard. He must have enjoyed the weather, because since then he has lived and worked in Boston.

Romney is a businessman – known for getting corporations out of the red and back into profitable margins. A relief pitcher, called in to pick up the mess of the starting hurler. And now he is trying to save Massachusetts by taking a business-like approach to the state; a business approach that he has implemented in his own corporation, Bain Capital, Inc. It's the $13 billion company that is credited with starting corporations such as Domino's Pizza and Staples.

Romney has a bottom line, and that is profits for the state.

Unfortunately, Romney's first step at pulling Massachusetts from the murky waters of bankruptcy is upending the higher education system – a complete overhaul that will undermine everything that Billy Bulger has set into action within the system. He wants to take control of UMass and make it run like a corporation – just like Domino's Pizza. But a school cannot be run like a corporation, just as a college sports program cannot be run as a professional sports organization. The two are different. The business world is full of professionals. The education world is full of scholars preparing students to become professionals. These two worlds have their own intricacies that call for a separate form of organization. Romney doesn't see this.

Instead, he sees an opportunity to take away funding for UMass in an effort to bolster the economy of the state. Because the 'Big Dig' went over budget, let the students suffer. An easy way out for Mitt Romney, and an easy way to get rid of William Bulger.

Romney can kill two birds with one stone with the removal of Bulger – getting rid of someone whose reputation is tarnished because of his brother's illegal activity. But more importantly, with Romney being a Republican, removing Bulger would be getting rid of a powerful Democrat in charge of the state universities. A well thought out plan by Romney, and, if he gets his way, he'll gain control of the UMass system and its future.

The main person standing in his way is Bulger. However, "The Beam" should not lose his job. He should stay right where he is, in charge of our school. Bulger has changed the perception of UMass – the Zoomass days are finished. He has implemented a solid honors program and more high school valedictorians are choosing to come to UMass than ever before. This is because Bulger stuck to his guns and saw that UMass could become more than simply a last resort for students choosing their college.

He has a solid track record, and that is why Bulger should be left alone to complete the job he set out to do when he was hired; make UMass one of the best state universities in the country. Romney's plan cuts Bulger's vision out at the knees. We cannot trust Mitt Romney and his proposed corporate overhaul of our campus.

We know Bill Bulger. He is a leader who has experienced both success and struggle. Working his way out of the South Boston projects into college and eventually into the State House, he is a true New Englander that understands the workings of Massachusetts politics. But most of all, Bulger understands us.

Bulger knows the type of student who attends UMass. He knows the financial status of families who send their kids to go to school here. Whether you want to admit it or not, Bulger is our ally. He is the guy for the job. Bulger knows Massachusetts and education like Mitt Romney knows how to build a corporation. He is a strong proponent of higher education and a person dedicated to making UMass a better school.

The same statement cannot be said about Mitt Romney, a man desperately trying to use his success in business to become a success in politics. A CEO, who is using Massachusetts as a stepping stone to bigger and better things for himself. A person, who many say, has an ultimate goal to end up in Washington. A feat his father failed to accomplish.

We should stick with Bulger and go forward with his vision. We can trust that Bulger is not out to better his portfolio or gain a better political career. This is the end of the line for the politician who has served the Bay State for almost 40 years.

Mitt Romney wants to halt Bulger's process and vision. He wants to take away the leader that has brought UMass into a better light. He has a political agenda and a business agenda. Cut spending to the campus and get rid of Bulger. All while trying to make himself into something he is not, a politician friendly to education.

Romney should keep his business interests with Domino's Pizza and Staples. Keep the corporate way of thinking out of UMass, and, most of all, leave "The Beam" alone. He is on our side.

Peter Trovato is a Collegian Columnist

Learning from Wyclef

Dan Martin

"Sakpase" is now a new phrase in my everday vocabulary. It's just one of the things I learned this weekend at the Haitian Student Conference. I learned the power in numbers and what it means to form an alliance. I was also incredibly moved by the Jonathan Demme documentary on Haitian activist Jean Dominique.

Before this weekend, I knew next to nothing about Haiti or Haitian Culture. Today I can honestly say I am a lot more educated than when I first entered the conference on Saturday. Everyone who attended the conference profoundly influenced my weekend and appreciation for Haiti. One of the most influential people there was Wyclef Jean.

Wyclef taught me a little phrase in Creole, "sakpase" (what's up) at the "How to break into the Music Industry" workshop on Saturday afternoon. I told him that I am starting to write songs, have been singing since I could talk and have been playing guitar for years. He told me to bring my guitar and that he would listen to me play later that night. I wasn't sure if he was being sincere or just pulling my leg. Throughout the weekend, I learned that he is indeed a very sincere and 'real' person. Later that night I was sitting on a couch in front of the Student Union Ballroom, where Clef was to warm up the crowd later that night. Conveniently, I had my guitar tuned up because he told me I could play for him. As I was sitting playing some chords, I noticed Wyclef passing by on his way to the Student Union Ballroom.

"Sakpase!" I yelled. I called him over and when he noticed that I had my guitar, he said, "Hey, baby, lets do a song." So I started playing the chords to "No woman, no cry" and I started to sing. He joined in with me to harmonize. "Is this really happening," I asked myself over and over again. We stayed outside of the Student Union and he free styled over the guitar, and many gathered to watch. "I must be dreaming. What an incredible opportunity," I thought.

Next thing I knew I was in the Student Union Ballroom, eating while watching some traditional Haitian dancing called "Kompa," as well as listening to some Haitian folkloric music. I also heard a few inspirational speakers. I was really impressed by all of this because I honestly did not know anything about Haitian culture before attending this event.

So, the night went on and there was plenty of dancing and performing by Wyclef. I noticed that he identified himself as one with the whole Haitian community throughout the event, not just as an individual music star. What really impressed me is how he put himself on the same level as the public, both Haitian and non-Haitian, to show that he was a part of the alliance.

As the celebration of Haitian Cultural Night (thrown by the Haitian American Student Association at UMass) came to a close, Clef saw me standing in front of the door with my guitar in case, and said, "Hold up, hold up.... My man over here... what's your name?"

"Dan," I replied.

"My man Dan, he's gonna play us a song, everyone show him some respect."

So this was it, my big moment to show Wyclef, his brother, producer and manager what I was made of.

Totally shocked, and almost frozen, I couldn't think of anything to play. Then my friend Marjorie said, "Play the song you played at your audition last week." It was so clear that I was going to play Peter Gabriel's "In your eyes." I start playing and my leg was shaking. This was my moment to shine. Before he left, Wyclef's producer put his business card in my hand. I was speechless. My life will never be the same.

Waking up the next day, after not being able to fall asleep, I entered the next and final part of the conference. This absolutely blew me away. It was a powerful, moving documentary on Haitian activist Jean Dominique. He was and continues to be a very influential figure in Haitian society. He was a radio personality who told the truth about the Haitian government since the late 1950s until his death in 2000. Every time his station got shut down by the government he built it right back up. Dominique is the perfect example of "the power of one person's voice."

Not only did I get a chance to jam with Wyclef this weekend, but I was also well educated about Haitian culture. I only wish that some of my classes in college could have been this much fun. I want to thank everyone who organized and attended the event this past weekend. It was a weekend I will never forget.

Dan Martin is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor:

Submit a letter or opinion

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1993

NOW LEASING FOR SUMMER & FALL!

SUGARLOAF ESTATES

28 RIVER ROAD, SUNDERLAND, MA 01375

PH: 413-665-3856/FAX: 413-665-3599

E-MAIL: SUGARLOAF_ESTATES@ASPENSQUARE.COM

VISIT US AT: WWW.SUGARLOAFESTATES.COM

- DELUXE 2 BEDROOM APARTMENT HOMES
- FREE HEAT & HOT WATER
- WASHERS/DRYERS IN SELECTED STYLES
- HIGH SPEED INTERNET ACCESS AVAILABLE
- PLENTY OF FREE ON-SITE PARKING
- POOL, VOLLEYBALL, BASKETBALL PICNIC AREAS
- ON-SITE STORAGE FACILITIES
- MINUTES FROM UMASS-ON FREE BUSLINE

REDUCED SAVINGS

Going on NOW!!!

VALUABLE COUPON!

Aspen Chase & Alpine Commons

APARTMENT HOMES

133 Belchertown Road, Rte 9, Amherst, MA 01002

Ph: 413-256-0741/Fax: 413-256-3065

E-mail: alpine_commons@aspentsquare.com/aspen_chase@aspensquare.com

Visit us at: www.alpinecommons.com/aspenchaseapartments.com

Aspen Chase

- Featuring 1 & 2 bedroom apartment homes
- Spacious floorplans
- Wall to wall carpeting
- Redesigned kitchens & bathrooms
- All utilities included (heat, hot water & electric)
- All extras included (High Speed Internet Access & Cable)

ONE EASY PAYMENT PER MONTH

Alpine Commons

- Spacious 4 bedroom apartment homes
- Two full baths
- New fully appliances kitchens
- Wall to Wall Carpeting
- All utilities included (heat, hot water, electric & central AC)
- All extras included (High Speed Internet Access, Basic Phone & Cable)

VALUABLE COUPON!

VALUABLE COUPON!

MOVE INTO SUGARLOAF ESTATES AND RECEIVE A FREE DELL DESKTOP COMPUTER OR UP TO $1000 OFF MOVE-IN COSTS!

LIMITED TIME OFFER

CLIP 'N SAVE!

VALUABLE COUPON!

Move into Aspen Chase or Alpine Commons and receive $100 off move-in costs!

Limited Time offer

CLIP 'N SAVE!

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S

Now...The lifestyle you've been waiting for...
Luxury two and three bedroom apartments in Amherst

Amenities Include:
- Minutes to Campus
- On PVTA Bus Route
- On Site day care center
- Victory Gardens
- TennisCourts
- Basketball Courts
- Laundry Room
- Heat & Hot Water Included
- Wall to Wall Carpet

We Offer:
- Washer/Dryer Hookups
- Air Conditioning
- Fully Applianced Kitchens, dishwashers, disposals
- Intercom (Entry) System
- Professional On Site Management
- 24 Hour Maintenance
- Security

Reduced Move in Costs, Call Now 253-7377
Now Leasing for Summer

See us at Apartments.com
MillValley@attglobal.net

420 Riverglade Drive, Amherst
Just off Rt. 9, Take West St. (Rt. 116s) to East Hadley Rd.
Take First Left onto Riverglade Drive.

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.

Results you can feel.

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
- American Chiropractic Association
- Massachusetts Chiropractic Society

Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

The Scene is coming...

-with a circulation of at least 5,000 copies
-with distribution at this year's Spring Concert at the Mullins Center on May 4 and throughout the Pioneer Valley
-with a shelf life of 3-4 weeks, including UMass finals week
-with articles on the area's hottest entertainment spots and interviews with headlining bands like Sonic Youth

The Scene
- The Collegian's hot new Arts and Living Magazine
- is coming soon, and your business could be advertised within its pages.

Contact The Collegian business department at 413-545-3500 for more information today.

Great Value. Great Plan.

Unlimited Night & Weekend
Plus
1000 Anytime Minutes
Mobile To Mobile
Plus 100 Bonus Anytime Minutes

Catch Our Major Savings!

Buy a NOKIA 3285 for only $29.99 and receive a FREE Earbud Headset & Car Adapter

AMERICA'S CHOICE
FOR 300 anytime minutes $39.99 monthly access (with 1 or 2 year agreement)

Unlimited nationwide long distance.
No roaming charges coast-to-coast.

@Wireless www.shopatwireless.com

HADLEY
322 Russell St • 413.587.3248
HOLYOKE
50 Holyoke Mall • 413.533.2500

Bring in this ad and receive 25% OFF any wireless phone accessory.

verizon wireless

Important Consumer Information: Night & weekend hours: Mon-Fri, 9:01pm-5:59am Sat: 12am-Sun. 11:59pm. Subject to Customer Agreement and Calling Plan. $35 activation fee applies. $175 early termination fee applies. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other service promotions. Usage rounded to next full minute. Unused allowances lost. Mobile to mobile calls departed by caller made during night and weekend hours. Subject to taxes & other charges. Not available in all markets. Geographic and other restrictions apply. See store for rate plans representative for details. ©2002 Verizon Wireless.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & WRESTLING

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 2003 — ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

One wrestler revealed

Emilie Duggan-Hicks

"I eat and sleep wrestling. That's what you have to do if you want to be a star."

Vik Dalishus doesn't smile when he says those words. He's more serious about professional wrestling than he is about anything, and that gravity is clear the moment he steps foot into the ring. He is there to work, not play, and every one of his opponents knows it.

There is nothing spectacular about him – he is not a giant of a man and he doesn't stand out from the crowd with a painted face or colored hair. He is an average-sized man who has plans that are considerably larger than he is, and he is working hard to grasp a goal that few ever succeed in reaching.

Already he has made it farther than many ever will who ride out the independent circuit. His work with independent promotions – including the World Wrestling Alliance (WWA) in Massachusetts – got him noticed by World Wrestling Entertainment (WWE), and in January, he was called up to work two non-televised matches for them. A huge step if you're an up-and-coming wrestler, it means that someone is watching you and thinks that you might have what it takes to go all the way. The night after the WWE's "Royal Rumble" pay-per-view in January, Dalishus wrestled WWE superstar Sean O'Haire and was defeated. The next night, he wrestled another independent wrestler, Dave Danger, and was victorious.

"It was an incredible, indescribable experience," Dalishus said.

Excitement lights his eyes when you mention the WWE, and it's clear what Dalishus' goal is and where he hopes to be heading someday.

"I want to walk down that aisle again and perform in front of that kind passionate crowd again," he said. So, if the WWE called him up right now, would he go?

"I think that if you break into this business and don't want to be on the biggest stage of them all – the WWE – then you can't really be that dedicated."

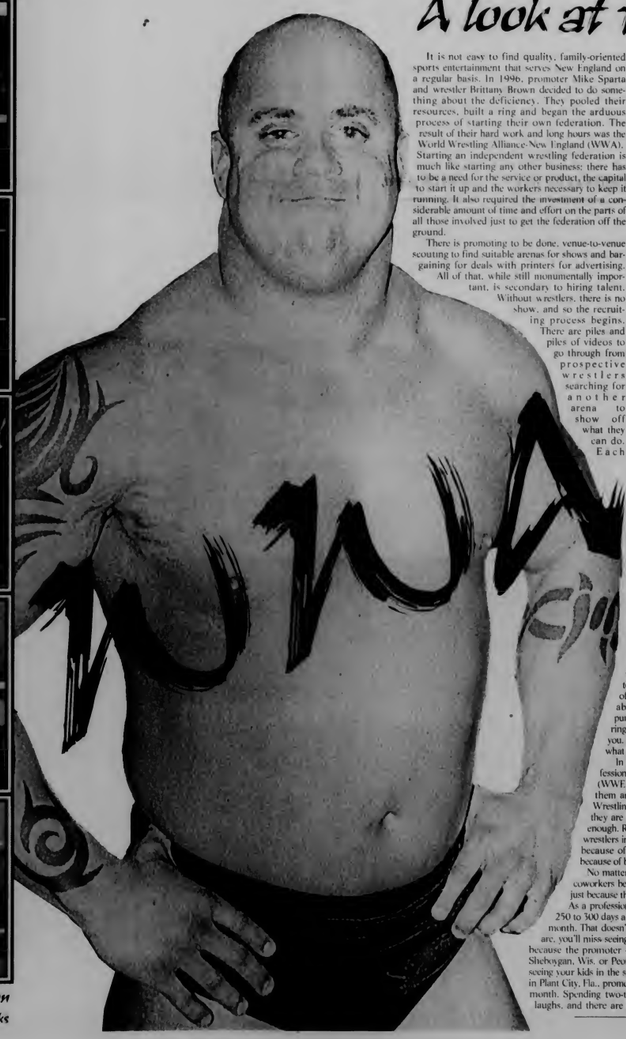
The words are said carefully – for he knows there are plenty of independent wrestlers who haven't gotten the call or who have been to the WWE and not lasted – and there is no lack of dedication on their part.

"But I would be there in a heartbeat," Dalishus said. "I would take the chance right now and never look back. Opportunities are very few in wrestling and I have been very fortunate to get a few of them."

He has been lucky, but he has also worked hard to get where he is. However, professional wrestling wasn't always his career goal. He wrestled in high school – ending his teenage years with a division win and a ranking of fourth in the state – but in college, it was football that had all his attention. Then he saw a newspaper article about a wrestling school in Schenectady, N.Y. It didn't take long for Dalishus to make up his mind to go see what the school was about.

"It wasn't ridiculously far from me, so I went to check it out," Dalishus said.

As soon as he saw the ring he was hooked. "I paid my money and I began training with J.P. Black. An hour and a half each way, twice a week for training, but I wanted this so badly, nothing was going to stop me." This determination by itself is inspiring enough, but add to that the fact that Dalishus is still a full-time college student, and it becomes even more impressive.



"That was the deal. My parents are supportive of this as long as I still attend college full time. I can wrestle wherever I want, as long as I get my degree," he said with a smile. But the smile fades when asked one more time what he will do if the WWE calls.

"If the WWE comes knocking, I have to answer." Just one mention of the WWE and his whole demeanor is serious.

Wrestling independently hasn't been all fun and games, though. For every opportunity he has had with the WWE, there have been fifty independent shows that he has worked. In professional wrestling, you take every opportunity you can to show off your skills. That means making 16-hour drives to small towns in Georgia just

Continued on page 7

A look at the NWA

It is not easy to find quality, family-oriented sports entertainment that serves New England on a regular basis. In 1996, promoter Mike Sparta and wrestler Brittany Brown decided to do something about the deficiency. They pooled their resources, built a ring and began the arduous process of starting their own federation. The result of their hard work and long hours was the World Wrestling Alliance New England (WWA). Starting an independent wrestling federation is much like starting any other business: there has to be a need for the service or product, the capital to start it up and the workers necessary to keep it running. It also required the investment of a considerable amount of time and effort on the parts of all those involved just to get the federation off the ground.

There is promoting to be done, venue-to-venue scouting to find suitable arenas for shows and bargaining for deals with printers for advertising. All of that, while still monumentally important, is secondary to hiring talent. Without wrestlers, there is no show, and so the recruiting process begins. There are piles and piles of videos to go through from prospective wrestlers searching for another arena to show off what they can do. Each wrestler is studied carefully for consistency in performance, attitude and character. Finally, the promoters need to decide whether or not a wrestler will bring something to the ring that will make the show that much more spectacular.

However, even after a venue is secured and posters are made and a roster is selected, there is no guarantee that the federation will be a success. Something has to make your promotion stand out from all the others out there.

There are promoters whose only goal is to put on the bloodiest show they can, as often as they can. In these organizations, there is less regard for the welfare of their talent – because wrestlers are a dime a dozen and it's not hard to find someone to replace the injured – and more interest in the almighty dollar. These are still entertaining shows, and there are federations like this that are successful. However, while these extreme federations put on a good, high-impact show, at the same time they sacrifice the quality entertainment that keeps people returning month after month, year after year. A wrestler can only put his body through so much before it rebels and says no more. And while there will always be someone younger and equally talented to step in and take a place on the roster, it is only a matter of time before wrestlers realize they're not going to survive long in that kind of environment.

So, one thing was clear to these two entrepreneurs right from the start: in order for the WWA to be a success, they would have to consistently put on top-quality shows and have a roster of the best up-and-coming talent in the Northeast. Not only do they have some of the best independent wrestlers in the country (several members of their roster have been called up more than once as enhancement wrestlers for World Wrestling Entertainment), but they also have on their roster Danny Davis, a wrestler with the (former) World

Continued on page 6

Lifestyle

From the cheap seats, being a professional wrestler probably looks like a pretty good job. Just about every night wrestlers get to step in the ring and do something they love to do, all while crowds of thousands are cheering or jeering for them. They get to travel the world and they get paid for it. What more could anyone ask for?

Well, that's a rather simplified version of what life is like for a professional wrestler, and it takes a lot to get to the point where you're performing in front of crowds of thousands. If you think professional wrestling is all about jumping inside the ropes, throwing a few fake punches and tossing your opponent from one side of the ring to the other, then you have another thing coming to you. Sit back, relax and read on as we explore a little bit of what life is like as a professional wrestler.

In the United States alone, there are upwards of 5,000 professional wrestlers. Of those, World Wrestling Entertainment (WWE) employs roughly 150. Out of these 150, around 50 of them are stuck in developmental programs like Ohio Valley Wrestling (OVW), which they will probably never leave because they are not big enough or charismatic enough or good-looking enough. Rarely is it a question of talent. Some of the most talented wrestlers in the world have been stuck in developmental territories because of the above reasons, and more than one have retired because of being placed there.

No matter where you go, though, you can count on some of your coworkers beating the living hell out of you for the first few months, just because they can.

As a professional wrestler at the WWE level, you are on the road for 250 to 300 days a year. You have, if you're lucky, eight days at home every month. That doesn't leave a lot of time to spend with your family. Chances are, you'll miss seeing your kid take their first steps or speak their first word because the promoter – your boss – wants you to perform somewhere like Sheboygan, Wis. or Peoria, Ill. You'll probably miss out on a family reunion or seeing your kids in the school play because that same promoter wants you to be in Plant City, Fla., promoting the house show that will roll through the town next month. Spending two-thirds of the year on the road isn't exactly a barrel of laughs, and there are several talented wrestlers who have quit the business

Continued on page 7

Design by Helen Eggleston
Photos by Emilie Duggan-Hicks

A look inside the WWA

Continued from page

Wrestling Federation in the eighties, as well as members of the MTV show "Tough Enough." Danny from "Tough Enough 2" and Jonah from "Tough Enough 3." With such talent, it's hard to imagine that they would put on anything but a good show, and the WWA doesn't disappoint.

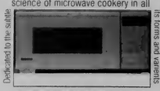
The show is high-energy, hard-hitting excitement. There are feuds and there are storylines, and they make sense, which is perhaps the most important aspect. These storylines can carry over from show to show, and a newcomer to the WWA audience can listen to what's being said by each wrestler and immediately understand why there is tension between them. A feud between Danny from "Tough Enough 2" and Jonah from "Tough Enough 3" makes sense because Danny was cut before the final episode, where it was decided who would receive WWE contracts, whereas Jonah made it all the way. There's organic resentment and plain hatred from Danny, and it's easy for anyone to see that as soon as the two of them enter the ring.

Every show also promises the appearance of at least one current or former WWE talent. In fact, several of the wrestlers on the existing WWE roster got their start with the WWA, and it is common to see one of them return for a guest appearance with the alliance. Wrestlers like the Hardy Boyz, Kurt Angle, Edge, Steven Richards and A-Train have all made return stops to the WWA ring – both to entertain the fans and to thank the WWA for giving them one of their breaks.

But perhaps the wrestlers who benefit the most, though, when these superstars return to the WWA ring, for these WWE hopefuls recognize that having a superstar in the ring is an opportunity for them to learn what it takes to make it to the big league. It doesn't matter who the guest is or how old they are or how long they have been wrestling. What matters is that they made it to the WWE, and any advice they can give, any tips that they have, are invaluable to independent wrestlers. Whoever the superstar is – whether they are a current or former WWE champion – they have made it all the way, so they have done something right. Learning from their stories and watching them work is a sure way to pick up good habits and seeking it in a business that has no problem discarding you like yesterday's trash.

There is always something that can be learned, even by those who have been around professional wrestling longer than some WWE superstars have been alive. The talent and Brittany Brown accomplish what they set out to do – create quality, family-oriented sports entertainment? Ask any of the fans who return each month to see their shows. It is obvious to anyone in the audience that much work goes into each and every moment that is presented for viewing. Is the WWA a financial success? As with any business, some days are better than others. Overall, the WWA has found many different types of success. It employs a full-time staff of five, and they contract with hundreds of wrestlers each year. Most importantly, they have learned that changes in the entertainment industry require an adjustment on their part to keep things running smoothly and to keep the fans happy.

Is the World Wrestling Alliance successful? It is in the eyes of this fan. But don't take my word for it. The WWA puts on shows every month and April is no exception. Friday, April 11 finds the WWA in Randolph, Mass., and on Saturday, April 12 it will be in Pepperell, Mass.



On the Net:
http://www.wwaofnewengland.com.

Emilie Duggan-Hicks is a Collegian columnist.

Celebrity fast food fixations

Life's funny in many ways. This spring, for instance, the Dixie Chicks (more precisely, Natalie) made no bones about her lack of support for our president and was chastised to a proverbial crisp by critics. Stars, folks claimed, have no right using celebrity power to serve political purposes.

Food, on the other hand, is another story entirely. We focus on what they eat, whom they're eating it with and how much weight they gain or lose as if our mental well being rested on Renee Zellweger's latest size. So join me now in an exploration of celebrities and how their attitudes and opinions toward the foodservice industry shape our actions as an American society.

Dysfunctional by the clutter

We begin with the queen of daytime talk shows – Oprah. In April 1996, an Oprah special aired which caused beef stocks to plunge and made the USDA boil in rage. I'm sure we all remember when mad cow disease was destroying thousands of animals across England, and the big question was whether or not the sickness would come across the pond and kill us all. Howard Lyman, an ex-rancher and anti-meat activist, was asked to guest-speak on the subject along with USDA representative, Dr. Gary Weber.

The problem with the interviews was a basic lack of scientific fact and emotional bias. At one point during the interview, Oprah asked Lyman if he thought the bovine illness "could make AIDS look like the common cold?" The ex-rancher responded with a definite "absolutely," and Dr. Gary Weber was left stumbling for a response. This interview fed a fear fire many were still trying to deal with, and did nothing to explain what was being done about the problem. While it is true that the standards for the humane treatment of livestock are violated daily, the format in which the show was conducted left many people with unanswered questions as well as unquestionable apprehension.

The result of the interview caused a drop in beef prices, which harmed the careers of cattle ranchers across the country. Furthermore, there have not been any reported cases of mad cow disease in the United States, but a single program which relies on the testimony of individuals and is not run by a scientific organization or fueled by the researching of a specific problem, succeeded in turning many Americans away from a source of food that was not posing an immediate threat to their existence.

Rosie O'Donnell has been the champion of Krispy Kreme doughnuts for about as long as her show has been on the air. The beloved sugary confections were carted out in certain episodes and frosted, sugared, glazed and sprinkled before audience members. But dear Rosie isn't the only celeb to hawk the delightful doughnuts. Nicole Kidman, Michael Jordan and Bill Clinton all swear by the pastries.

But when you're talking about foodservice, the bottom line is always the quality of your product and the ability to please your clientele. Here's where Krispy's reigns supreme. A French chef in New Orleans developed the recipe. Half the beauty of the product is the ability to watch the doughnuts on an assembly line before you get to purchase them fresh off the conveyer belt. A neon light is illuminated when a fresh batch is produced, and "Hot Doughnuts Now" is like the call of a siren for anyone within seeing distance.

What's more, since the company's nationwide expansion in April 2000, the stock shares have increased over 625 percent. With profit margins such as these, Krispy Kreme is wandering into the same territory as the well-established giants of corporate America.

BAM!! Apparently, screaming on plates of food has become all the rage in America these days, courtesy of the Fall River native Emeril Lagasse. For those fellow persons who are as addicted to Food Network, as myself, have you ever noticed the faces of people in his audience? The admiration and vacancy in their eyes parallels the visions of angels experienced by prophets.

Armed with a degree in Culinary Arts from Johnson and Wales University, the chef did extensive work in cities such as Boston, Philadelphia and New York before heading south for New Orleans and a career that Martha Stewart should envy with undying passion. He is now the owner of six restaurants nationwide, a line of cooking utensils, a line of spices and marinades, has two televisions shows and is part of a segment on "Good Morning America."

Todd English is one of America's finest chefs in the culinary world; however, few have heard his name in passing conversation. It's Emeril's marketability that creates his appeal. He is the everyman, a teddy bear who wants us to know that we too can be chefs in our own right. No one knows where Mr. Lagasse is headed next, but let's all hope he steers clear of the tragic downfall that often accompanies the rich and famous.

Jessica Pelletier is a Collegian Columnist.

The ups and downs of professional wrestling

Continued from page

because they just couldn't handle it. The WWF is, however, sometimes willing to work with their talent on making it easier for them – especially if that talent brings in money from ticket and merchandise sales. WWF superstar, Jeff Hardy, is a prime example. He has been very vocal about the fact that eight days at home is not enough, and the WWF responded by allowing him to have every other weekend free. Generous, aren't they?

When you spend as much time on the road as professional wrestlers, you are bound to be exposed to the not-so-straitlaced side of life. From the sidelines it's easy to say that you would be strong and never give in to the vices that so many other wrestlers have given into. Then, one morning, you wake up in a tremendous amount of pain from a hump (a fall) you took too hard the night before. Someone in the dressing room always has painkillers and you can't afford to take the night off to let your back settle down, so you give in and take a pill. Only, the next morning, your back still hurts and you still can't afford to take time off, so you take another pill. It becomes a vicious cycle and before you know it, you're addicted to painkillers.

Alcohol is every bit as detrimental to the life of a professional wrestler as it is to a regular Joe – though there tends to be the thought among the wrestlers that they are untouchable. Most wrestlers drink; that's a plain and simple fact. When you're 3,000 miles from familiarity, the hotel bar starts to look more inviting than another night sitting in your hotel room wishing you were home instead. So, you drink and you drink and then you drink more, and you don't even realize that you might have a problem with alcohol until you get home and decide it might not be a good idea to drink while you're there. But, that's when reality starts to bite because your spouse is having a hard time dealing with you being away as much as you are.

Pretty soon you're drinking at home, too, because everything on the road looks better through a booze haze, so maybe that will work at home. Only it doesn't, and it doesn't take long for your marriage to end because not only can't your spouse deal with you being away so much, but they also can't deal with your drinking anymore. Scott Hall, a former WWE and WCW standout, is the poster boy for this example. Ten years ago he was one of the best wrestlers in the world. He was at the top of his game and had the world at his feet. Since then, he has been fired from two promotions, been in court a number of times, lost, regained, then lost again the custody of his children and been divorced twice all because of his alcohol abuse.

It might be worth all the risk, though because think of all the money that professional wrestlers make.

I hate to burst anyone's little bubble of delusion, but professional wrestlers are not rock stars. The majority of pro-

Continued from page

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 5
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
PHONE BOOTH
A MAN APART
WHAT A GIRL WANTS
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE
SPIRITED AWAY
OLD SCHOOL
DREAMCATCHER
THE CORE
BASIC
HEAD OF STATE
CHICAGO
VIEW FROM THE TOP
BOAT TRIP
PIGLET'S BIG MOVIE
THE HUNTED
AGENT CODY BANKS
Sunday Show 4/10/03
SPIRITED AWAY
passes/supersavers
• NO PASSES • NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

STUDENT TRAVEL
web fares
and NOT just online
London.....$299
Paris.....$350
Rome.....$471
Amsterdam...$207
Fares is roundtrip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
www.statravel.com STA TRAVEL
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

GUINNESS
BEER TASTING
Thurs., April 10, 2003 / 7 to 10 pm
Elijah Boltwood's Tavern
at The Lord Jeffery Inn
$2.00 pints
through April 16th, 2003
Appetizer Specials / Prizes / Giveaways
Bring in this ad and receive half price appetizers!!!
The Lord Jeffery Inn, 30 Boltwood Ave., Amherst
253-2576 www.lordjefferyinn.com

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Carlo Rossi 4 Liter $7.99
Rolling Rock 12 Pack $7.99 + dep.
Monday Saturday 9am 11pm
333 Russell St., Rt. 9 584-8174

Interested in Business?
The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the 2003/2004 school year. Great resume builder! Sophomores/Juniors call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center.
Needs to possess strong business and communication skills

Sometimes Accidents Happen.
"FAST TRACK" EMERGENCY SERVICES
For minor emergencies.
Walk-ins welcome. No appointment needed.
Open 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. seven days a week.
COOLEY DICKINSON HOSPITAL
DARTMOUTH-HITCHCOCK ALLIANCE
www.cooley-dickinson.org

2003

- Apartments in All Sizes -
We even have 4 & 5 Bedroom Apartments
Squire Village apartments
✓ Spacious Bedrooms
✓ High-speed Internet service available
✓ In-ground swimming pool
✓ On free PVTA bus service to UMass and the Five College Area
✓ Located near a shopping center with a 24 hour convenience store and a coffee shop
✓ Air conditioning
✓ Large walk-in closets
✓ Wall-to-wall carpeting
✓ Fully applianced, including dishwasher
✓ Ceramic tiled bathrooms
✓ Hot water included in all 1 & 2 Bedroom
✓ Large windows, including a sliding glass door in the Dining Room
✓ Ample, well-lit parking on-site
✓ Smart card laundry facility on-site
✓ On-site management and maintenance
Spacious Apartments in a Scenic Location
279 Amherst Road • Sunderland, MA 01375 • (413) 665-2203

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES • FUTONS • BEDS • ETC.
MISMATCH MATTRESS
TWIN SET $199
MATT ONLY $119
FULL SET $249
MATT ONLY $149
QUEEN SET $299
MATT ONLY $189
FUTONS
Full* Queen
6" All Cotton $110 $135
6" Cotton + Foam $135 $160
8" Cotton + Foam $155 $180
Cushy Coil $195 $230
*twin size also available
NEWYORKER
Full $99
ROMA PLATFORM
Full $149
Queen $179
ALBANY
Oak or Natural
Full $199
Queen $229
Walmart
Rt. 116 N
Stop & Shop
Rt. 116 S
Amherst College
Amherst Common
Rt. 9
Sleepy Hollow Bed
Spirit Haus
328 College St. • Rt. 9 • Amherst • 253-2337
M-TH 10-6 • FRI 10-7 • SAT 10-6 • SUN 12-4

THE BOULDERS

LOW MOVE-IN COSTS!
TAKING RESERVATIONS FOR SUMMER AND FALL!
The Boulder Apartment Homes
156-A Brittany Manor Drive
Amherst, MA 01002
(413)253-8534
A great place to call home!
Office Hours
Mon. - Fri. 8:30-5:30
Sat. - 10:00 - 5:10
2 Beds, 1 Bath, 950 sq. Ft.
Floor Plan: Garden Style
Huge Bedrooms
Heat and Hot Water Included
Free Parking
Great Fitness Center On Site

ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED
Heat, Hot Water & Electricity

CLIFF SIDE APARTMENTS
1, 2, and 3 Bedroom Garden Style Units and 2 Bedroom Townhouses
Convenient To Amherst, UMASS & Interstate 91
Scenic Hiking Trails On 28 Wooded Acres
Olympic Size Pool
Tennis, Volleyball, and Basketball
Free Public Transportation
24 Hour Maintenance
(413) 665-3958
Email: cliffsideapts@northland.com
Mon-Fri 8:30 - 5:30
Sat 10:00 - 5:00 Sun 12:00 - 5:00

You Have Your Reasons For Living Off-Campus...

So Do We.

- Spacious 1 & 2 Bedroom Units
- Beautiful Grounds
- On the Bus Line
- Swimming Pool
- Private Balconies
- On-Site Laundry Facilities
- Close to UMass
- Heat, Hot Water, and Gas Included
- Air Conditioning

Brandywine Apartments

549-0600

www.Brandywine-Apts.com

16G Brandywine Drive - Amherst, MA 01002

BRANDYWINE AT AMHERST

One wrestler's ambition for fame

Continued from page 5

to wrestle a four-minute match. If you ask Dalishus if it's worth it to drive that long for such a short event, you'll receive the only answer someone with his passion can give.

"The exposure was huge," he said. "I do whatever I can to get better every time I get out into the ring."

This isn't playtime for Dalishus; this is work. And his background in athletics has given him a solid work ethic, and because of his amateur wrestling background, he has the basic fundamentals of technical wrestling. This helps when it comes to professional wrestling, but it takes a lot more than basic skills and a good work ethic to be a success. A wrestler has to be in prime physical shape and has to maintain his condition through consistent workouts and a steady diet.

"I eat a lot of protein. I do some intense cardiovascular exercise for 30 minutes and I do a solid weight training regime," he said when asked about his routine. "My body has undergone a lot of changes lately because I have become so serious about being a WWE star."

The road to WWE stardom is not an easy one. You have to have confidence in both yourself and your ability in the ring. If there's one thing Vik Dalishus lacks, it isn't confidence.

"I'm the prettiest of all my brothers," he says on his website, vikdalishus.com. "As for my opponents, I don't pretend to like them, because I don't. They're all just pretty boy wanna-be's standing in the way of my greatness. They all know I'm the shiniest penny in the pile."

No, confidence isn't something Dalishus needs to work on. He knows just what he wants and he's going after it.

"I will achieve my goal. I will not be denied," he said.

Everything is going well for Dalishus right now. Not only has he been called up to work for the WWE on more than one occasion, but he was also selected to attend a WWE developmental tryout camp in February. Hundreds applied for 52 spots in the camp, and Dalishus was one of the lucky ones to spend a week being evaluated by trainers from the WWE. The best of the best travel to the Ohio Valley Wrestling training center with the hope of being offered employment there, knowing that it puts them one step closer to making it all the way. But the offers are few and far between and to receive one means that you have something special.

In February, Dalishus was offered one of the coveted full-time positions.

This up-and-coming superstar is poised to take on the wrestling world. He has the confidence, he has the skills and he has the personality; all he needs now is the contract. He's not afraid to work hard, and that will serve him well, as the road ahead will be paved with long trips and short matches. Contrary to popular belief, the life of a professional wrestler is not a glamorous one. In order to tolerate the long drives to small towns and the standing around at airports waiting for flights, you have to really love what you do. You find patience in your desire to be better than you are, and you recognize that the only way to improve is to take every opportunity you can.

Dalishus works hard to stay in shape, but works harder to bring his body to the next level of fitness. He drives hours to participate in matches that last only a few minutes, and he does it on the slight chance that someone might see him and offer him his big break.

Vik Dalishus can be seen at the World Wrestling Alliance shows this weekend: Friday, April 11 and Saturday, April 12. For more information about Dalishus or his scheduled matches, check out his website, vikdalishus.com.

Emilie Duggan-Hicks is a Collegian Columnist.

The lives of real-life wrestlers fessional wrestlers will be stuck in the independent circuit for the entirety of their careers. Do you know what independent promotions pay? Somewhere around $40 a night is about the average. Forty dollars a night isn't actually that bad for a couple hours of work, until you realize that the $40 has to cover your travel costs, your hotel bills, your food and your ring attire. Not to mention that you have to somehow maintain a normal life on top of that – paying your rent, your bills, clothing and feeding your children and yourself. The way most promotions work is to pay wrestlers on commission – meaning, wrestlers make a percentage of what the promotion makes at the event. Usually, it's not much, and you can only hope that the promoter is honest with you when he hands you your share and tells you that business was slow. Oh, and if you get injured, there won't be any money at all.

Continued from page 6

Most professional wrestlers spend the majority of their careers waiting for injuries to heal. There is always the risk that you will take a bump the wrong way and permanently injure yourself, but that's the risk you take when you step between the ropes. You'll wake up every day stiff with muscle aches and tendon pulls, and you'll wonder how it is your body has lasted as long as it has. Then you'll take another pain pill and you'll head off to the venue, hoping that tonight isn't the night that your body decides to quit. WWE superstar Shawn Michaels was arguably the best wrestler in the world when he was forced to quit at age 36 because a routine bump left him with his spine fused into one solid lump. A steel bar was placed in his back and a steel plate was welded over the top of it to prevent re-injury, but even those precautions weren't enough to get any promoter in the world to give him a chance. It was only recently that the WWE decided its revenues were suffering enough to take a chance on rehiring him.

What if, because of you, someone else's career ends? When you step into the ring, you take your opponent's life into your hands. For the most part, wrestlers treat each opponent's body as they would want theirs to be treated – meaning they're very careful with every move they make. Still, accidents happen, and irreparable injuries do occur. A few years ago, a wrestler named Droz was paralyzed from the neck down. He was on the receiving end of a move called a running powerbomb, performed by D'Lo Brown, who had performed the move a thousand times. This was one of a hundred times Droz had taken the move, but this time he didn't get up. This time he left the ring on a stretcher, unable to walk, and likely unable to for the rest of his life.

Permanent paralysis doesn't happen often in professional wrestling, but what if it happened to you? You could be like D'Lo Brown, and, in the blink of an eye, have your confidence shattered and your career in ruins. Watching an opponent you considered a good friend taken out of the arena on a stretcher to begin life in a wheelchair, all because you miscalculated by a fraction of an inch a move you had done a thousand times. Could you handle that kind of guilt?

Still think professional wrestling is a piece-of-cake career? It's not, and it would behoove you to have something to fall back on when it doesn't work out. For those would-be wrestlers out there, let me paraphrase a little advice a wise former WWE superstar, Mick Foley, gives in his book, "I have a Nice Day:" stay in school. There is nothing more important than your education and a number of WWE superstars have their degrees. In fact, many have degrees that have absolutely nothing to do with wrestling: D'Lo Brown is a certified public accountant and Chris Jericho has his degree in journalism, just to name a couple. If, when you graduate, you still have your heart set on being a professional wrestler, get yourself into a good wrestling school. Unless you've been through a good school, the WWE probably won't touch you.

Perhaps one percent of wrestlers actually make it to the level of a Stone Cold Steve Austin or the Rock.

Emilie Duggan-Hicks is a Collegian Columnist.

UConn defends its title

By CHUCK SCHOFFNER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA (AP) – This was supposed to be a difficult season at Connecticut.

UConn was expected to retool its lineup after losing four starters from last year's national championship team. The belief was that if ever there was a year the Huskies could be had, this was it.

Wrong.

Just as Carmelo Anthony and Gerry McNamara helped bring Syracuse men's coach Jim Boeheim his first NCAA title, UConn's freshmen came through for their team – in a big way.

Ann Strother, Barbara Turner and Willnett Crockett helped the Huskies (37-1) win their third national title in four years and fourth overall.

And even more important, every UConn player is back next season. All of them – Strother, Turner, Crockett, Diana Taurasi, Jessica Moore, the whole bunch.

It almost seems unfair.

"I don't know what the limit is anymore," coach Geno Auriemma said. "I watched my good friend Jim Boeheim win a national championship and he's been coaching 100 years, and he finally got what every coach in America dreams of.

"Here I am sitting here, for us to have four of them, and thinking you know, now I've got to do more than that."

There are no guarantees, of course. Injuries or complacency could spoil everything.

But after beating Tennessee 73-68 in Tuesday night's championship game, the Huskies will begin the 2003-04 season as the overwhelming favorites to make it three straight and win a fifth title overall.

"It feels good that we'll begin the year with the same nucleus," Taurasi said. "We can build on what we did this year. Hopefully, we will continue to get better."

UConn has the talent to make it happen, starting with Taurasi, voted the Most Outstanding Player in the Final Four.

She scored 28 points against Tennessee, matching the second-highest total in a championship game, and averaged 26.2 for the NCAA tournament.

The freshmen played key roles all season, and Strother scored 17 in the title game. A fourth freshman, Nicole Wolff, will be back after missing all but 10 games because of a foot injury. And Auriemma's recruiting class will bring two key elements – size and quickness.

Heading that class is 6-foot-5 Liz Sherwood, who was a high school teammate of Strother's in Castle Rock, Colo. Guards Kiana Robinson and Kia Wright also will come on board.

"In Connecticut, they're going to expect us to be good," Auriemma said.

This season's team was better than anyone had a right to expect. The Huskies started 31-0 to run their winning streak to 70 games, an NCAA women's record. Then, they lost to Villanova in the finals of the Big East tournament.

The loss devastated the players, but Auriemma thought it was just what his team needed.

"Maybe what it did was give us a sense of look, we are starting to let things slip a little bit," he said. "We needed to be really slapped in the face with reality in a huge game by a team we have beat for 10 straight years, every single year.

"It kind of refocused us when we got back home."

Tennessee, still the leader with six national titles, might have a harder time getting back to the Final Four.

The Lady Vols' two best players, Kara Lawson and Gwen Jackson, were seniors. Coach Pat Summitt still has plenty of talent, but someone has to fill the Taurasi role and lead.

"I think (losing) will definitely motivate us for next year," sophomore Shyra Ely said. "I'm positive we'll be back."

This was the third time a season ended with Connecticut and Tennessee meeting in the title game, and UConn has won all three. Between them, the Huskies and Lady Vols have claimed seven of the last nine NCAA titles. There may be more parity in women's basketball, but all of the teams that are so even still haven't caught the two at the top.

AP PHOTO/JUSTIN BAZDARICH

Connecticut forward Ashley Battle (left) beats Tennessee guard Kara Lawson to the basket in the NCAA Women's Final Four championship game. UConn defended its title by beating the Vols 73-68.

Familiarity breeds content.

AMHERST downtown we have it all!

Regional Symposium on
Contemplative Practice in Higher Education

Amherst College May 9-11, 2003
With Lectures and Workshops by:
Daniel Goleman, Carolyn Jacobs, Jon Kabat-Zinn, Hal Roth, Brian Stock, Evan Thompson, Diana Chapman Walsh, Arthur Zajonc

Purpose: To bring together those working to advance the use of contemplative practice in colleges and university in the New England area (and those interested in doing so) for a weekend of exchanging ideas an experiences.

For a registration form and more information
See the symposium website at www.contemplativemind.org/programs/highered/symposium.html
or contact Sunanda Markus at s.markus@netaxis.qc.ca

Sponsored by
The Amherst College Trans disciplinary Fund
The Center for Contemplative Mind in Society
CILA The Center for Integrative Learning and Action
The Five College Faculty Seminar on Contemplation and New Epistemologies

April 25 & 26
At Symphony Hall

Tickets: (413) 788-7033
Ticketmaster: (413) 733-2500
www.citystage.symphonyhall.com

SYMPHONY HALL

FREE Parking

Sponsored by Baystate Health System, Health New England

Frozen Four set to begin

NCAA Hockey powers will converge on Buffalo

Andy Vogt

Four days after basketball season has ended, sports fans now have one last outlet to fill their collegiate addiction for the next few months: the NCAA hockey championship. This year's Frozen Four in Buffalo, NY, has an especially eclectic feel, as it marks the first season since 1989 that representatives from four different conferences will compete for the national title. Here is the breakdown for today's semifinal matchups.

Cornell vs. New Hampshire

Today's afternoon matchup pits arguably this season's top two college hockey teams east of the Mississippi. Cornell won the ECAC tournament and regular season championship, proved its worth in the first two games of the tournament by easily dispatching Dartmouth and Holy Cross in the opening round before knocking off Harvard 4-1 in the East Regional final. Cynics remain skeptical of the Big Red before the tournament began due to their dominant 26-4-1 record, due in part to the fact they play in the relatively weak "ECAC 8" and also had a mediocre non-conference schedule.

The Big Red from Ithaca, N.Y. have worked to silence critics' opinions, as they have won their last 11 games and have not dropped only one game since Jan. 4, a streak of 22 games. The backbone of this team is unquestionably goaltender Dave LeNeveu, who has posted some of the best numbers in college hockey history. He is 31-1-0 GAA is the lowest ever and his 28-2-1 record would make even Dominik Hasek green with envy. But Cornell coach Mike Schafer is doing his best to diminish his team's stigma as a defensive team. The Big Red boast two 40-point scorers in Ryan Vesce and freshman Rob Bordson and defenseman Doug Murray was named to the First Team All-American yesterday.

But despite being the No. 1 team in the nation, it would be considered an underdog by many fans because the Wildcats present more than a formidable challenge to the Big Red's national title hopes. Like Cornell, UNH is on both the Hockey East regular season and tourney titles, and comes into Buffalo riding a 12-game unbeaten streak.

While the ECAC champs might have a Hobey Baker candidate in the crease, the Wildcats' Mike Ayers is no scratch, as he has posted a microscopic 1.14 GAA, second in the nation behind LeNeveu. UNH's offense, one of the most offensively deep squads in the nation, at 16 'Cats have at least 10 points on the season. Tanny Gare, the team's leading scorer (24 points), will not be in uniform for today's matchup due to a fractured collarbone suffered in the second field against Boston University, but the rest of the Wildcats have proven they can step up when needed.

Time should expect a low-scoring affair, as Cornell prefers to play a low tempo game and tries to capitalize on defensive aggressiveness when it can. And UNH, despite its offensive talent, has to deal with a goaltender having one of the greatest seasons ever. But Ayers will continue to have the hot hand, and this year's Wildcat squad will erase the memories of last year's trip to the Frozen Four in which it lost to Maine by five goals.

Prediction: New Hampshire 2, Cornell 1

Michigan vs. Minnesota

The Golden Gophers proved they could continue their strong play from last season's national title campaign by finishing second this season in the always-tough WCHA, behind Colorado College, the nation's No. 1 team for a large percentage of the year. Thomas Vanek, one of the country's premier freshmen, led the Gophers in scoring with 58 points, second nationally among rookies. Vanek picked up the slack after the departure of scoring machine John Pohl and Hobey Baker winner Jordan Leopold from the Twin Cities. With its top five scorers each having at least 38 points, the Gophers can blow any team out of the water at any point. Minnesota had a relatively pain-free road to the Frozen Four, demolishing MAAC cupcake Mercyhurst in the first round and eliminating Ferris State in front of its home fans to advance to Buffalo.

Like Minnesota, the Wolverines had the benefit of hosting their regional in Ann Arbor at Yost Ice Arena, a barn in which they are nearly unbeatable come postseason time. Despite being outplayed by both Maine and Colorado College at points, Michigan survived its first two games due to the heroics of baby-faced netminder Al Montoya. Montoya, who just turned 18 less than two months ago, allowed one goal in the first round to the Black Bears and shut down CC's top-ranked offense down the stretch to send the Wolverines to Buffalo. Michigan has a freshman of its own, Jeff Tambellini (46 points), that gives it the most scoring punch, but its supporting cast of players such as Jed Ortmeyer and Eric Nystrom make the Wolverines a dangerous squad.

Expect open ice and a more up-and-down style in this matchup than in the previous game. Minnesota and Michigan met once before this year, with the Wolverines emerging on top, but the Gophers have the psychological edge, as they defeated Michigan in last year's national semifinal.

They also have the talent.

Prediction: Minnesota 5, Michigan 3

National Championship: New Hampshire vs. Minnesota (Saturday)

Prior to the 2001-02 season, the Wildcats had never even won a Hockey East championship, let alone a national title. Fans (mostly from Maine and BC) dubbed UNH the "University of No Hardware," and for good reason. But after the Wildcats captured their second straight conference championship, they are poised to eliminate all postseason demons.

After five unfruitful attempts at the national crown, coach Dick Umile and his bunch finally get their title.

Prediction: New Hampshire 4, Minnesota 3

Andy Vogt is a Collegian Columnist.

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Garrett Stafford and the New Hampshire Wildcats will face the Cornell Big Red while a Minnesota-Michigan matchup will fill out the NCAA's Frozen Four.

UMass Daily Collegian
Now Hiring Advertisi
Account Executives for
Fall 2003

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, for more information.

All Majors & Classes Welcome to Apply

Current Freshmen Strongly Encouraged to Apply

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Bedside Manor
Green Crossing
Funk and Munk
UPSTAIRS
LATE NIGHT MENU TIL MIDNIGHT
24 36 N. Pleasant St. • Amherst MA
413-[illegible] 4480
www.amherstbrewing.com

Rent One of Ours
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Cargo Vans
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS
APPD 8 TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
3 Sunderland Road North Amherst MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass Amherst

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256-0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586-0155

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST online at www.fineartscenter.com
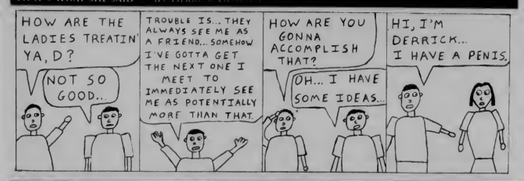
545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS FOR TICKETS
Catch the beat
Share the Joy

SATURDAY, APRIL 12 MINGUS BIG BAND
FAC Concert Hall at 8pm | Mass Campus
The Mingus Big Band celebrates the music of the late, great composer and bandleader Charles Mingus on a tour by reporters and the bracing, muscular band swinging. Hurry now, for women will be admitted free to the concert. Get there early to accept your jackets now.
"MBB's relaxing 44 and-two is an awesome show, capture the lively jazz of the Mingus legacy, the music, the attitude, the fashion, the sullenness to the cheers, the guts, and well-dressed."
The New York Times

THURSDAY, MAY 1 A Celebration of Traditional American Arts
RHYTHM IN SHOES WITH THE RED CLAY RAMBLERS IN RAMBLESHOE
FAC Concert Hall at 7:30pm | Mass Campus
Rhythm in shoes presents innovative work that is at once original and recognizable. Dressing on trains and toasted American music, these use of tap, clogging, and percussive rhythm is not just lively and accomplished—it's thrilling, witty, rooted, and percussive. Add the fun of traditional music band the Red Clay Ramblers, whose music, making is profession, and we're in for a Ramble.
Good Times!
A feast of inspiring, hand clapping, stomping of America's cultural heritage. Percussive tension, emotional power and theatrical depth...the total effect is mesmerizing."
Pittsburgh Tribune Review

TAKE 3 and SAVE 15%
545-2511 OR
1-800-999-UMAS



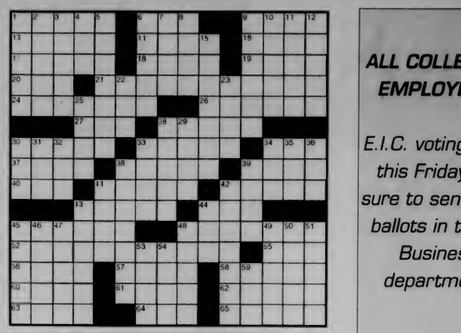
TICKETS ONLY $7, $10, $15
FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Heloise G. Gabriel

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • By Derrick Gonzales

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Vicard



GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • By Comrad X

ACROSS
1 Locked toward
6 007
9 Gather leaves
13 Snapshot
14 Eeyore's pal
16 Mount — of Sicily
17 Bells
18 Natural impulse
19 Border on
20 Attila the —
21 Document
24 Light-emitting projectiles
26 Get ragged
27 Vane dir.
28 Broad smiles
30 Gregorian —
33 Sticky fruits
34 Remind too often
37 Female relative
38 Harvest machine
39 Garden green
40 Corrie — Lillie
41 Skirt panels
42 Slogan
43 Alda and Lerner
44 Cheer
46 City near Pompeii
48 Sow's young
52 Familiarization
55 Edge
56 Wedding-cake section
57 Jacket style
58 Sidestep
60 Cult
61 Castle, in chess
62 Gigantic one
63 Fiesta shouts
64 High pts.
65 Great Lakes fish

DOWN
1 Struggle
2 Secret romance
3 Large blossom
4 Breakfast item
5 Lineage
6 San Antonio team
7 Coastal city
8 Berra of baseball
9 Shows surprise
10 Up, in baseball (2 wds.)
11 Rookne of Notre Dame
12 Cafe customer
15 Beeller
22 Sooner than anon
23 McKellen and Holm
25 Bronze coin
28 High winds
29 Turnpikes (abbr.)
30 Urban transport
31 Shade
32 Nurses org.
33 Mend
34 "Mona Lisa" singer
35 Eley
36 Earth, in combos
38 Braggart
39 Eye makeup
41 Secluded valley
42 Iron attractors
43 Puts on guard
44 Grande or Bravo
45 Untrue (2 wds.)
46 Disney's Little Mermaid
47 Slice
48 Cuts a notched edge
49 Make joyful
50 Kind of wave
51 Pad out
53 Cyclotron target
54 Honk
59 Enthusiasm

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-12-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your friends find it alarming how much time you spend on the toilet.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Go back to bed. Your life has no meaning today.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Today someone will offer you money....for sex.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
A cute girl will give you her number today. Too bad she has herpes.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Please cease existing. You aggrevate everyone in the world.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Wow, even Miss Cleo couldn't help you. That blows.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
If you skip class today, you will not graduate. Ever.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
No, that's not just smelly mud on the bottom of your shoe.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
The sound of your voice is too grating. Don't talk at all today.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Watch out for oncoming traffic today.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Carry Immodium today. You will develop explosive diarrhea

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your lack of showering is starting to get disgusting.

ALL COLLEGIAN EMPLOYEES:

E.I.C. voting ends this Friday. Be sure to send your ballots in to the Business department.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

THURSDAY
• High: 54
• Low:30

FRIDAY
• High: 48
• Low: 32

SATURDAY
• High: 50
• Low: 27

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Vegetable Tortellini Soup
• Oriental Beet & Vegetables
• Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
• Spicy Black Bean Burger (vegan)

DINNER
• Vegetable Tortellini Soup
• Roast Turkey
• Stuffed Shells
• (vegetarian)
• Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Despres
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schaffer
COPY EDITOR
Jesse Greenspan
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Dan Simmons/Scott Ciruso

QUOTE OF THE DAY

Girls who glide need guys who make them thump.

- Jimmy "The Saint" Tosnia, "Things To Do in Denver When You're Dead"

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Congratulations to the new sisters of Sigma Delta Tau: Jen Koltow, Ashleigh Lindholy, Erica Martin, Tricia McCabe, Shawna McCarthy, Stephanie McLean, Lauren Milaho, Molly Mookerjee, Liz Rothaiser

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups: Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at 888-923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Term Paper Editing! Editing performed by professors and graduate students. Visit us at www.guru-book.com or call us toll free 866-693-EDIT

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condominium for rent excellent condition 1/2 mile away from campus 4 bedroom apt for female roommates $550 full room, $350 to share plus utilities. 413-992-0540

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Apt located in Pemdwine Furnished Apts Seeking Female Roommate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sarah @ 413-546-0489

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? COME TO THE COMPLEX FAIR, WED APRIL 9, 10 TO 3 ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE SPONSORED BY COMMUTER SERVICES, 4-28 STUDENT UNION WWW.CSHC.ORG

Pemdwine Apts Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts Lease begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept First come first serve Get them while they last www.pemdwineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0900

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts, hardwood floors NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER MOVES www.amherstmanorrealty.com 253-7879

Hobart Garden Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement Cable, telephone (internet access in all bedrooms and study) NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER MOVES www.amherstmanorrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

95 Geo Prism Purple 95K 5 Speed good condition $4000 (NK) 413-665-3022

Saab 900s 95-190K, Good Condition or BO 413-549-8288 $7500

BMW 528 E 1987 Good Shape $1250.00 413-531-7580

89 Volkswagen jetta standard good condition driven everyday $900 or best offer 413-549-3345

Honda Accord LX 1992 Great Shape $1500 obo 413-253-1496

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS: Pennsylvania children's sleep-away camp. If you love children we have positions for Directors, Asst Dirs, and Counselors for Tennis, Golf, Drama, Camping/Nature, High & Low Ropes, Gymnastics, Sports, Sailing, Water-skiing, Ceramics, Jewelry, Guitar, Aerobics, Self-Defense, Video, Piano, and Nurse (RN) Dates 6/19-8/16/03 On Campus Interviews arranged. Call 1-800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors – Town of Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. old. 5 range for both positions: $8.19-9.88 hr. 35-40 hrs per week, June 30-Aug. 15 Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept. 4 Bolkwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392

Technical Writer for Policy Analysis Consulting?s private firm. Resume to Fred Treyz, REMI 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fred@REMI.com

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS! Help new students get off to a good start. Peer Advisors needed for Summer Orientation. ~Competitive Salary ~20hrs/week~Mid-May to Mid July Applications @ 015 Goodell Deadline: April 11

New Store to open in Hampshire Mall! looking for energetic and responsible individuals w/ retail experience. Please call Barbara (413) 531-1020 or email bblake1ark@msn.com.

WSI/Lifeguards-The Town of Amherst, Department of Leisure Services and Supplemental Education (LSSE) Aquatics Program is now accepting WSI applications for summer 2003 season. All Applicants must possess current WSI and Lifeguard certifications. Previous experience preferred, $8.19-9.88 hr. Application deadline: 4/21 Applications are available from the Town Hall Human Resources Dept., 4 Bolkwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Opportunity Employer

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

EMPLOYMENT

Economic / Business Development Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002, fax 413-549-3058, job@remi.com.

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002, fax 413-549-3058, job@remi.com

Fall internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands on experience in the legal field; work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary; training provided. Deadline to begin application process is 4/22/03. Contact the Legal Services Office: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Bartender Trainees Needed $250 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Need Free Photos? Professional Photography students seek models of all races ages for portfolio assignments No experience required. Email for details @ mgrisolia@yahoo.com

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day. No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-920-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

For Sale: 1 full couch, 1 love seat and 1 twin mattress and box. Great condition. Call: 549-4972

FM Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT1620 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX90 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

HOUSE FOR RENT

4 Bedroom house available this summer/next year. Beautiful location, 10 minutes from Amherst Center. Call 256-0613

Large 4 bedroom house in Hadley, 1 mile and 3/4 to UMass. Available June 1 $2,650/C Call Lincoln Real Estate 253-7879

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom plus Newer house minutes from UMass $2700/month 548-8800

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS

Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1628

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-0992

SUBLET

Pattee Sublet from June 1st - August 31st 3beds 2baths $1400 per month Call Mark 253-1479

TRAVEL

STS America's number one student tour operator is now hiring on-campus reps 2003-04 1800464-8469 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break with STS America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WANTED

Egg Donors Needed, non-smokers. Donors Ages 21-32. Generous compensation paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781) 769-6900.

Subletting your apartment for the summer? Advertise in the Collegian Classifieds! Come down to the Campus Center Basement between 9:00am - 4:00pm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cahoon, Pöck recieve awards

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

After polishing off its best campaign in school history, the Massachusetts hockey team saw two of its members recognized this week for their successes.

Coach Don Cahoon and junior defenseman Thomas Pock each earned individual honors Tuesday from the New England Hockey Writers Association for their accomplishments this year. Cahoon was honored as the organization's Coach of the Year, while Pock won the Paul Hines Award, given to New England's most improved player.

Cahoon led the Minutemen to their most successful season since joining Hockey East in the 1984-85 season. UMass finished in sixth place in the conference (18-17-1) and knocked off third-seeded Maine in the Hockey East quarterfinals at Alfond Arena. The Minutemen fell to eventual Hockey East champion and Frozen Four participant New Hampshire in the semifinals the Maroon and White's first appearance at the FleetCenter.

"From my perspective, it's very similar to the Hockey East Coach of the Year award, in that it represents a total team effort," Cahoon said. "It's a nice acknowledgement, and a great recognition of a lot of kids buying in to what we're trying to do here."

Pock garnered "most improved" honors after his first season with the Minutemen on the blue line. The Klagenfurt Austria native enjoyed his most offensively productive year since arriving at UMass, netting 37 points (17 goals, 20 assists) in 2002-03 after scoring 12 points in each of his previous two years in Amherst. His point total made him Hockey East's top-scoring blueliner and ranked him fourth nationally in that department.

"He's a mature player, and I think it became an adjustment he was very comfortable with," Cahoon said. "There were some aspects that were very difficult, but he was able to overcome them with his extreme athletic ability.

"From an offensive standpoint, the opportunity he had to handle the puck and to see the ice allowed him to feel more comfortable," he added.

Pock is currently in his home nation training with the Austrian national team for the upcoming World Championships. The tournament begins at the end of this month, according to Cahoon.

Other recipients of awards given by the NEWHA include Boston College's Ben Eaves (Most Valuable Player); Yale's Chris Higgins (Outstanding Forward); Maine's Cliff Loya (Outstanding Defenseman); Boston University's Mark Mullen (Outstanding Defensive Forward) and Dartmouth's Hugh Jessiman (Rookie of the Year). The awards will be presented at the NEHWA's annual awards banquet on April 16.

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

UMass' Don "Toot" Cahoon was honored as the New England Hockey Writers Association's Coach of the Year, for guiding the Mass Attack to its first-ever appearance in the Hockey East semifinals at the FleetCenter.

Softball prepares to meet Harvard

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

After two games played in the freezing cold and multiple games postponed due to snow and other inclement weather, it doesn't feel like softball season.

Its last game was over a week ago, but through all of Mother Nature's torture, the Massachusetts softball team is still enjoying early season success and sporting a 10-game winning streak.

UMass hosts Harvard in a doubleheader slated to begin at 3 p.m. at the UMass softball complex. The first game will be immediately followed by the second game; UMass has swept its first three doubleheaders of the season.

Due to the recent conditions, the Minutewomen (19-10, 4-0 Atlantic 10) haven't been able to practice outdoors and have been stuck in Boyden Gym to work on the basics. Fortunately, with a forecast showing a high of 52 degrees and only partly cloudy skies, this game doesn't look likely to be postponed. But one thing you learn in New England is never trust the weather report.

"We haven't been too happy about being stuck in the gym," outfielder Denise Denis said. "We're just working on small things now that we can work inside instead of outside...such as bunting."

The Crimson (5-15, 0-0 Ivy) hasn't enjoyed the same success as the Minutewomen, especially on the road, as they have a 2-7 record away from Cambridge. With the momentum of 10 straight wins and home field advantage, the Maroon and White is the heavy favorite in the doubleheader.

"We're just ready to go outside and play," Denis said. "The weather is not going to stop. Even though we have been stuck inside, we are still going out and playing as well as we did in our home opener."

Last season's Ivy League Player-of-the-Year, Tiffany Whitton, has had a stellar senior season so far in carrying Harvard. Whitton has posted an impressive .356 batting average with three home runs and 13 runs batted in.

Supporting Whitton has been sophomore catcher Laura Miller, who has enjoyed a breakout season. Miller's consistent batting average of .341 has supplied Whitton with the chances to knock in runs with her power.

With the excitement of the first game in a week around the corner, there is another reason to celebrate for the UMass softball players. Coach Elaine Sortino was selected to receive one of the most prestigious awards at the University.

Yesterday, Sortino received a Honorary Alumna Award from the University of Massachusetts Amherst Alumni Association in the Great Hall of the Massachusetts State House. The seven-time A-10 coach of the year has served 23-plus years as head coach, while compiling a record of 785-340-3 (.697 winning percentage). She has established herself as one of the most well-respected and successful coaches in the NCAA, and her players are the first to sing her praises.

"She knows so much about softball and everything in general," Denis said. "I have learned a lot from her and she puts her entire life into it. She thinks about softball all the time and it really pays off for both her and her players. She's very dedicated to us as individuals and as a team and I enjoy playing for her."

A matter of revenge

UM to face Yale

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Motivation is a strange intangible in sports. Some teams can draw from their opponents, some use the glory they crave and still others use internal motivation to get up for a game. But sometimes, they draw from something that speaks of far more passion – revenge.

Though Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella quickly downplays the revenge factor, many times it has proven to be a successful upper for a key game. And of any game on UMass' schedule, this weekend's opponent – Yale – screams revenge for the Minutemen.

"It was a thorough ass kicking last year and we hope we can play better this year," Cannella said. "I don't like to look at it [as revenge]." "Some people certainly will, and probably some of the players will."

It's just another opportunity to play against a ranked opponent and play the best we can. Revenge lasts about a minute and then you play the game. We certainly have reminded our guys of what happened last year, and our goal in doing that is to play better."

The Bulldogs (6-2, 1-2 Ivy League) downed the Maroon and White last year in New Haven by an 11-9 margin, with current Yalies Edward Britt and Mike Scaglione each scoring three goals. Yale opened the game on a 4-0 run and outscored the Minutemen (8-1, 2-1 Eastern College Athletic Conference) 3-1 in the third quarter to take the lead and hold on to win.

Britt and Scaglione are first and second, respectively, on their team in scoring, combining for 43 of Yale's 106 goals on the season.

"We're concentrating on Yale and what they do and concentrating on us and what we do," Cannella said. "We're are similar. It's a really solid matchup."

The Minutemen will be without the services of senior defenseman Tom Fallon yet again, who has not practiced since a 10-9 win over Navy a month ago.

"I think more than anything what we miss from Tommy is his intensity, his leadership out on the field," Cannella said. "The guys have played well without him, but no one can sit here and tell me that we wouldn't be better with him."

One major absence from the Bulldogs this season has been goaltender Eric Wenzel, who played an excellent game against the Minutemen last year. Wenzel was severely injured in a car accident on Jan. 17 that claimed the lives of four Bulldog athletes. Filling in between the pipes this season has been Roy Skeen, who is 4-2.

"Anytime you play a team, regardless of who the goalie is, you prepare yourself against their defense and hope you take quality shots," Cannella said. "Skeen has done good job this year, he's the best guy they have. For Eric, they miss his leadership. He's a really good leader for them, so I think they miss that most from Eric."

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Kevin Glenz and the Minutemen will look to make it two wins in a row, as they will host the Yale Bulldogs Saturday at Garber Field.

Minutemen will battle Fairfield

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

It has been over a week since the Massachusetts baseball team found itself on Earl Lorden Field – or any field for that matter.

The unpredictable New England weather has cancelled the last four contests, three at home and one in Worcester, and has forced the Minutemen (7-9 3-3 Atlantic 10) inside for practice since they shut out Sacred Heart 7-0 behind a brilliant effort on the mound from sophomore Mike Crane.

However, there is hope that the early-spring snow will melt and the precipitation will hold off so that the Maroon and White can make its long-awaited return to the diamond tomorrow, as it plans to host Fairfield University for a non-league contest.

"We like to stay in a good rhythm both offensively and defensively," coach Mike Stone said. "We were out there [against Sacred Heart] moving runners over, knocking them in and fielding the ball well behind [Crane], and we just want to keep that rhythm going."

The Stags (5-14-1 3-5 Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference) will serve as a brief precursor before the Minutemen travel to Bronx, N.Y. this weekend to resume their A-10 slate with a three-game set at Fordham. UMass has yet to host an A-10 series, as its scheduled contests with Xavier over the weekend were cancelled due to snow. No make-up dates have been announced.

Fairfield, loser of three of its last four amidst a myriad of postponements, is led by the junior duo of pitcher Tom Masiano and infielder Nick Hudyma.

Masiano struck out 11 batters in the Stags 8-5 victory over Canisius in the first game of a doubleheader on Sunday, and currently leads the Stags in strikeouts with 28. Meanwhile, Hudyma went 5-for-7 on the afternoon, and is hitting .328 with one home run and six runs batted in on the season.

For Stone, however, the emphasis will still be on getting a look at as many players as possible in the relatively young season to determine what he still may or may not need to fill out his relatively young team.

"We are still in the process of assessing what we have and finding the right guys for different places," Stone said. "So with that in mind, we still just want to keep sending guys out there and letting them get work to see where we're at."

Stone will likely look to one of his young starters - Crane, sophomores Anthony Gallo and Keith Doherty and freshman Matt Torra, to take the hill against the Stags. None of the group has worked since Crane's stellar outing.

This afternoon's first pitch is at 3 p.m. at Lorden Field.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 2003 | NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 | VOLUME CIX ISSUE 115

Romney's plan discussed in FAC

Catherine Boudreau, head of the Massachusetts Teachers' Association, speaks at the Faculty Senate meeting yesterday. Boudreau discussed Romney's plans for higher education.

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

Catherine Boudreau, president of the Massachusetts Teacher's Association (MTA) told the Faculty Senate yesterday that the MTA does not support Governor Mitt Romney's re-organization plans for public higher education.

"We [the MTA] did not support Governor Romney."

Boudreau explained to the Senate that the MTA could not comment on Romney's newest plan for the reorganization of public higher education in Massachusetts. The plan was released yesterday by Romney's office because they had not completed reading and discussing the 101-page report.

"We only got four pages of the original report. No one saw this proposal in entirety; we just got snippets," said Boudreau. "There should be a discussion with everyone involved."

Boudreau expressed disapproval of Romney's push for change without consultation from anyone in the higher education system.

"What we do know is the Governor and nobody near the Governor is talking to anybody in higher education," she said. "He has not met with one person who lives and breathes education. You cannot change the system without us – we are the system."

Boudreau questioned how Romney had created his plan when neither he nor anyone in his office knows "a whit about public higher education."

The MTA, according to Boudreau is "philosophically opposed to privatization," which appears to be a part of Romney's plan for several state educational institutions and a part of the University of Massachusetts system.

"We struggle with the privates in Mass. like in no other state. Public education a very important piece."

MTA survey results show that the general public of the Commonwealth is not in favor of the Governor's plans for higher education.

Boudreau laid out the plans for higher education that have come from Romney's office since January. The first, she said, was a massive plan to reorganize public higher education, including steps to privatize parts of the system, leave the UMass Amherst campus alone as the University with the Worcester Medical School and dismantle UMass President William Bulger's office.

"The idea that a governor would come in and focus his attention on attacking the president of UMass' office and try to take him down without talking to anyone makes no sense," she said.

Next, according to Boudreau, Romney's plan works to strip higher education employees of their collective bargaining rights and decertify their unions. Finally, employees' pension plans and health insurance rights are challenged under the governor's plans. According to Boudreau, pension plans would be contributions based without any promise from the state as to whether it would regularly assist in the growth of the pension as it does now. Currently, employees pay 15 percent of their health insurance and it covers their family. Under Romney's plan health insurance would not include family coverage.

"The attack is on the worker, and it just keeps on rolling out," Boudreau said.

Senators questioned Boudreau's disagreement with Romney's attempt to disband the president's office.

"Why shouldn't we get rid of the president's office and save ourselves 15 million?" asked one senator.

"Why not come up with an alternative proposal to save money as a compromise to the governor's plan?" Senator Rutherford Platt asked. "The president's office has often seemed antagonistic towards the University's public image, and that is certainly not something I support."

Boudreau responded by saying she feels the governor's plan was a "very smart one." She said part of it was to suggest something that would be so quickly opposed that when people in higher education responded negatively, it would appear to outsiders that they were simply opposed to any change at all.

Boudreau asked that faculty stay involved in the politics of their jobs and the campus. She expressed support of their attendance at the upcoming rally to save public higher education on April 29 at the State House in Boston.

Following Boudreau's address, the Faculty Senate voted unanimously to approve the motion by the Academic Matters Council and Graduate Council to change the grading system. The grading system will be changed from the currently used A/AB system to an A/A- system for the Fall 2004 semester. The change could not be made for the Fall 2003 semester because the catalog for incoming students, which uses the A/AB system, is already completed.

SOM students team up with Habitat for Humanity in Miami

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

This spring break, 17 students from the Isenberg School of Management at the University of Massachusetts picked up hammers and power tools in an effort to help construct houses for Habitat for Humanity's annual Collegiate Challenge Program.

The students, accompanied by two staff members from SOM and two staff members from the sponsor of the trip, spent their spring break in Miami. They slept on the floor of a church and worked under record-breaking heat.

"The idea came about last year," said Kim Jones, the student development coordinator for SOM. "There was an alternative spring break trip last year, not with Habitat for Humanity, and students were really interested in having one this year."

The students arrived to a site in a poor Haitian community where nine houses were being built. They were split into two teams. Each team cooperated with Habitat for Humanity workers on various stages of construction, from pouring cement to building front porches.

"It was hot, and it was hard work," Jones said. "But the students really rose to the occasion. They met some challenging demands."

Habitat for Humanity coordinated living arrangements with local church and service organizations. The students spent the week sleeping on the floor of the Fulford United Methodist church, cooking their own meals and sharing only one shower.

"The only problem with the whole trip was sharing one shower," said Laura Munro, the main organizer of the trip, who is an SOM and Commonwealth College student. Although Munro and her colleagues did not have the opportunity to enjoy plush accommodations, the group got to enjoy their close proximity to South Beach. The students spent time at the beach and enjoyed the heat.

The students and staff found the experience rewarding and were impressed with the results.

"The students were just great," said Jones. "I am always amazed at what students are capable of."

Habitat for Humanity encourages students during their spring break to participate in the Collegiate Challenge. The UMass group was one of several college contingencies participating in the program. Students from Trinity College in Hartford, the University of Minnesota and Perdue joined them.

Both the staff members and students are eager to participate in an alternative spring break program next year.

"I was really impressed with how things went," Munro said. "A lot of people said they want to do it next year even though they've already done it."

Most of the costs for the alternative spring break trip were covered by one of the nation's largest accounting firms, KPMG. The remaining funds were raised through student-organized raffles and candy sales. Munro organized the fundraising activities, established a budget and kept communication with organizers from Habitat for Humanity.

As SOM staff members, Jones and Melvin Rodriguez assisted the group in gaining corporate sponsorship and budget planning. Jones said that KPMG will likely sponsor the trip next year.

Habitat for Humanity International is a nonprofit, Christian housing organization. The organization builds decent and affordable housing for those in need of adequate shelter. Since 1976, Habitat has built over 125,000 houses in more than 80 countries. For more information on Habitat for Humanity, visit www.habitat.org.

Marines battle holdout in Baghdad

By Chris Tomlinson
and David Cra
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) – U.S. forces battled holdout fighters Thursday at a palace and a mosque in Baghdad, with one Marine killed and up to 20 wounded. After dark in the capital, an apparent suicide attacker blew himself up at a U.S. checkpoint, injuring four Marines.

In northern Iraq, America's Kurdish allies triumphantly entered the city of Kirkuk near some of the country's most productive oil fields.

President Bush, in a remarks televised throughout Iraq, told its citizens, "The long era of fear and cruelty is ending. ... The future of your country will soon belong to you."

In the city of Najaf, a crowd hacked to death two Shiite Muslim clerics –one a Saddam Hussein loyalist, the other a returning exile who had urged support for U.S. troops - at a meeting meant to forge reconciliation in one of Shiite Islam's holiest shrines, witnesses said.

The suicide attack occurred about 7:30 p.m. (11:30 a.m. EDT) near the Palestine Hotel, where most foreign journalists are staying. It also is near Firdos Square, where a large statue of Saddam Hussein was pulled down a day earlier.

Marine Capt. Joe Plenzler said that according to initial reports, "a man strapped with explosives approached a Marine checkpoint and detonated himself." He had no further details on the condition of the wounded.

Skirmishes and widespread looting continued in Baghdad, a day after U.S. officials declared that Saddam's regime was no longer in control. U.S. Central Command said Marines engaged in "intense fighting" with pro – Saddam forces at the Imam Mosque, the Al-Azimyah Palace and the house of a Baath party leader.

Maj. Gen. Gene Renuart, director of operations at Central Command, said U.S. troops acted on information that regime leaders were trying to meet in the area. During the operations, he said, Marines were fired on from the mosque compound.

Renuart said those resisting the U.S troops were captured or killed, but he provided no details. Baghdad is now completely encircled by U.S. forces, he said, but "is still an ugly place," with pockets of resistance.

At least two explosions rocked the southern end of the Old Palace presidential compound Thursday evening, starting several small fires. U.S. Army troops occupying the compound appeared to return fire with tank cannons. There was no report of casualties.

Aside from those incidents, the largely one-sided battle for Baghdad seemed nearly over, and U.S. commanders were focusing on plans to oust pro-Saddam forces from their handful of remaining strongholds in the north – including Saddam's heavily defended hometown of Tikrit and the cities of Mosul and Kirkuk near the northern oil fields.

A convoy of Kurdish fighters in about 100 vehicles drove into Kirkuk on Thursday, triggering celebrations by Kurdish residents, looting of government buildings and the toppling of a statue of Saddam in a central square.

Turkey said it would send military observers to Kirkuk to make sure the Kurds do not remain there. Turkish officials fear that if the Kurds control Kirkuk and Mosul, they may seek complete independence from Iraq and fuel the aspirations of Turkey's own minority Kurds.

Renuart said U.S. forces have covered "about half or 60 percent" of Iraq, mostly in the south.

"There's a long way to go still," he said. "We're not sure when a military victory will be complete."

In Najaf, a meeting meant to foster reconciliation turned tragic when a melee broke out at the shrine of Imam Ali, one of the holiest sites of Shiite Islam, according to witnesses.

Killed were Abdul Majid al-Khoei, a high-ranking Shiite cleric who had returned a week ago from exile in

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 8
COMICS PAGE 7
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7
BLUE WALL PUB NEW BAR NETOS NEW CHANGES PAGE 4
JIM BREUER COMEDIAN PLEASES COLLEGE CROWD PAGE 5
TWIN KILLING MINUTEWOMEN SWEEP DOUBLEHEADER PAGE 8

NISEN'A AL-KHAYAT/AFP/GETTY IMAGES

Local children watch a British Royal Marine on patrol Thursday in Basra, southern Iraq. Basra has seen several days of civil disorder following two weeks of fierce fighting, which ended with British coalition forces taking control of the city.

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

"What do you think of the Blue Wall Pub?"

By Emilie Duggan-Hicks

Amanda Braese
Junior
Sociology

"I think it's weird that you can drink in a cafeteria."

Sean Figge
Junior
Psychology

"It's good because you can walk from it, but I really don't care."

Don Labonte
Junior
Math

"I think it's a cool idea but I don't think it's going to work out too well."

Krupa Thakrar
Junior
History & Political Science

"It's ridiculous."

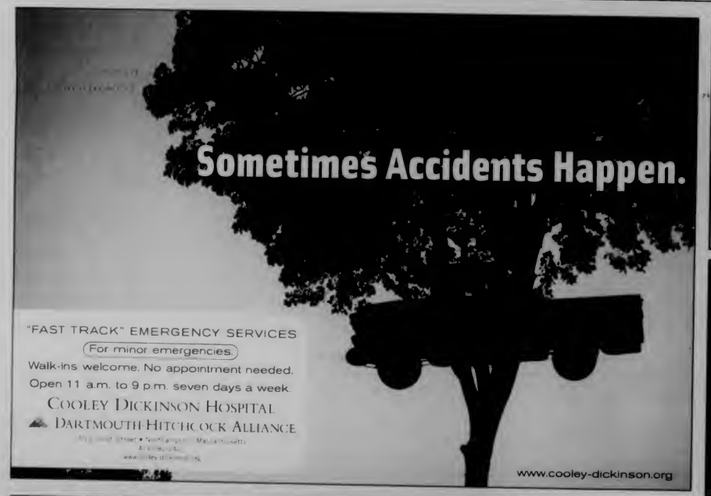
Casey Martin
Freshman
Undeclared

"As long as they have cheap draft beer it's cool."

Rene Cuadra
Senior
Microbiology

"I've never been there myself, but I would go sometime to throw one back."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a Broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Lee Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
Results you can feel.
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

Interested in Business?

The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the 2003/2004 school year. Great resume builder! Sophomores/Juniors call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center
Needs to possess strong business and communication skills

UMass Summer Session 2003

Over 200 credit courses in more than 40 academic departments–evenings, daytime, weekends, and online.

Summer Session I: June 2–July 10

Summer Session II: July 14–August 20

And one-, two-, and three-week courses.

For a free catalog: call 545-2414 or e-mail contined@contined.umass.edu.

www.umass.edu/contined

Division of Continuing Education
UMassAmherst

Regional Symposium on
Contemplative Practice in Higher Education

Amherst College May 9-11, 2003
With Lectures and Workshops by:
Daniel Goleman, Carolyn Jacobs, Jon Kabat-Zinn, Hal Roth, Brian Stock, Evan Thompson, Diana Chapman Walsh, Arthur Zajonc

Purpose: To bring together those working to advance the use of contemplative practice in colleges and university in the New England area (and those interested in doing so) for a weekend of exchanging ideas an experiences.

For a registration form and more information
See the symposium website at www.contemplativemind.org/programs/highered/symposium.html
or contact Sunanda Markus at s.markus@netaxis.qc.ca

Sponsored by
The Amherst College Trans disciplinary Fund
The Center for Contemplative Mind in Society
CILA The Center for Integrative Learning and Action
The Five College Faculty Seminar on Contemplation and New Epistemologies

Holdout continues in Baghdad

Continued from page1

London, and Haider al-Kadar, an official of Saddam's Ministry of Religion.

"People attacked and killed both of them inside the mosque," said Ali Assayid Haider, a mullah from the southern city of Basra. The accounts could not be independently confirmed.

After Wednesday's momentous celebrations in Baghdad, and after perhaps the quietest night since the war began, residents of the capital were back out on the streets Thursday.

Motorists flew white flags on their vehicles. Many people embarked on a new wave of looting, setting fires to some Interior Ministry buildings and making off with carpets, furniture, TVs and air conditioners from government-owned apartments, abandoned government offices and the police academy.

Also looted was the German Embassy - representing a government that had emphatically opposed the U.S. decision to go to war.

In Saddam City, a densely population Shiite Muslim district in Baghdad, some residents set up roadblocks, confiscated loot being brought back from the city in wheelbarrows and pushcarts, and sent the booty to a nearby mosque.

Some U.S. units received word Thursday that they should try to stop the looting, but strategies for doing so remained incomplete.

"There's civilian looting like crazy, all over the place," said Lance Cpl. Darren Pickard of Merced, Calif. "There just aren't enough of us to clear it out."

One man, Adel Naji al-Tamimi, 49, said had spent 17 years in prison for writing anti-Saddam articles.

"He made himself a legend and a myth," al-Tamimi said. "His atrocities and oppression controlled our feelings and we're still afraid."

In many parts of the country, civilians struggled with serious shortages of food, medicine and clean water. Several major international aid groups are demanding swift access to Iraqi civilians, without interference from U.S. or British troops.

"We need the independence to move around and do our assessments and we need security," said Kathleen Hunt of Care International. "The images we see on television (of widespread looting) are not very encouraging in terms of lawlessness in certain parts of the country."

Hoping to restore some degree of order to the southern city of Basra, British troops Thursday asked residents to turn in their guns - no questions asked. Renuart said coalition commanders had been heartened by cooperation from Muslim clerics in Basra, who were seeking to curtail looting and assist in reducing the number of guns in the community.

Humanitarian assistance is expected to be high on the agenda of the U.S.-led interim administration that is expected to begin operating in Baghdad within the next week or two. Headed by retired U.S. Gen. Jay Garner, the team will coordinate relief programs, rebuild shattered infrastructure and start setting up a democratic government.

Vestiges of the old government were vanishing rapidly. Statues and portraits of Saddam were toppled and defaced in Baghdad and other cities, while Iraqi diplomats at some embassies abroad shredded or burned documents. Iraq's U.N. ambassador, Mohammed Al-Douri, told reporters "the game is over, and I hope peace will prevail."

Saddam's fate remained unknown. Hoping to resolve the mystery, U.S. special operations forces examined a site in a Baghdad neighborhood that was bombed Monday based on intelligence that Saddam and at least one of his sons were there.

Though elated by the U.S.-led coalition's success, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said several missions remain to be accomplished before any victory declaration. Among them: securing the northern oil fields, determining the fate of Saddam and his sons, uncovering details of Saddam's weapons programs, and capturing or killing any terrorists still at large in Iraq.

Across the Arab world, the fall of Baghdad - and the televised scenes of jubilation and looting - provoked shock, disbelief and bitterness. Some Arabs expressed hope that other oppressive regimes in the region would crumble; others were disappointed that Saddam's forces offered such weak resistance to America.

According to the Pentagon, 101 American troops died in the first three weeks of the war, 11 were missing and seven were listed as captured. The British said 30 of their troops were dead. There are no reliable estimates for Iraqi casualties; an Army spokesman said 7,300 prisoners had been taken.

EMILIE DUGGAN-HICKS/COLLEGIAN

Springtime Cat Nap

A UMass student takes advantage of yesterday's nice weather to catch a nap. Forecasts call for an end to the sunny respite, heralding rain for today and Saturday.

'Sound in Silence' concert to be held today

By Tom Brennan
Collegian Staff

"Sound in Silence," a concert for world peace, will be held today at noon in Room 911-915 in the Campus Center. The Art of Living Club, a graduate student organization at the University of Massachusetts, is putting on the event.

The concert, subtitled "Jam with Jeremy," is a performance put on by Jeremy O., 26, who is on the college circuit right now. His music is described as "ancient Vedic chanting in a modern rock style."

Ari Weinberg, a member of the Art of Living Club, says that Jeremy's concerts are "very spiritual."

"He creates such an energy because he gets you involved in the singing," Weinberg said. "You just kind of want to sing [with him]."

Jeremy O. has been touring the country's colleges, making stops recently at UCLA, Columbia and Harvard.

"I hear it's very high energy," Katherine Kiger, a pre-med post-graduate student said. "He's gotten a really good response [so far]."

Originally from Atlanta, Jeremy O. followed an interest in Indian music and traveled the world learning different styles of guitar playing and making them his own. During last summer he spent time touring villages in Mexico and gained enough popularity to get airplay on Mexico City radio.

Although the concert itself is for world peace, it is not a statement about the war, Weinberg says. It's more about peace in the individual. "We're not saying 'stop terrorism, come to the concert,' " he said.

"Through music and singing," Kiger said, "hopefully you can create a peace in the individual, and that's what is needed for world peace."

The Art of Living Club provides a course in stress reduction through yoga and meditation on campus. Its intention, Weinberg says, "is to bring greater clarity of mind and overall peace and harmony in daily life."

The course is being offered this week, April 10-15, and costs $75. The Art of Living Club can be reached at (413) 367-9682.

The group also does community service in the Amherst area, such as cleaning local riverbanks and visiting senior citizen homes.

Collegian Staff: VOTE FOR EIC!

CINEMARK
the Best ... of Movies
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-247-4...
Schedule for Friday 4/11/03 - Thursday 4/17/03 ONLY.
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
ANGER MANAGEMENT (PG13) 1:10 1:35 4:00 4:35 7:25 7:50 10:00 10:30*
PHONE BOOTH (R) 1:55 4:50 7:45 9:50*
A MAN APART (R) 1:25 4:25 7:15 9:40*
WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 1:50 4:30 7:25 10:15*
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:10 9:35
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:15 4:10
OLD SCHOOL (R) 10:30
DREAMCATCHER (R) 7:00 10:05
THE GANG (PG13) 1:00 4:05 7:05 10:10
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:15 7:40 10:25
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:20
PHILLY'S BIG MOVIE (R) 1:05 3:00 4:55
THE HUNTED (R) 7:30 9:45
Coming 4/16/03
BULLETPROOF MONK
Coming 4/18/03
MOLES
MALIBU'S MOST WANTED
Senior Shows 4/17/03
• PHONE BOOTH
*Late passes/supersavers
• NO PASSES, NO SUPERPASSES
Tickets & Showtimes available at cinemark.com

Attention Women
Become an EGG DONOR with us and...
Earn $5,000
Each time you donate eggs with X and Y Consulting, Inc...
· You'll get a faster match with us
(we service fertility specialists throughout New England)
· You'll get the personalized one-on-one assistance you need
· Your classes, exams and work will be considered at all times
· You'll have all costs paid on your behalf
Free Information/Registration:
1-800-291-0195
(24-hr toll free)

WANT TO LIVE OFF-CAMPUS?

Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

THINK SUMMER NOW!
SUMMER SESSION
BINGHAMTON UNIVERSITY
State University of New York
• over 250 of the best and most innovative classes at BU
• courses in arts and sciences, business, education, engineering and nursing available
• newly developed "Distance Learning" courses
• nationally-recognized quality at affordable prices
• beautiful campus, friendly people, comfortable atmosphere
Term I: May 27 – June 27
Term II: July 7 – August 8
Term III: variable
Registration begins March 17
For more information, please visit our website at:
summer.binghamton.edu
or call:
1-800-523-2105

Boston University
SUMMER TERM 2003
Experience a Boston Summer!
Call us at 617-353-5124 or visit the Summer Term website at:
www.bu.edu/summer
Boston University is an equal opportunity/ affirmative action institution and employer

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Blue Wall makes too many sacrifices in effort to improve

It is undoubtedly a good idea to bring student life to the center of campus. The Blue Wall Pub has made a valiant effort to do this.

Valiant but flawed.

In its opening night gala the lines were out the door and save some criticism, the long-anticipated Blue Wall bar served. Since then, however, the dissenting opinions have rolled in and the pub has raised some concerns.

What about the underage students here?

Obviously the bar has a responsibility to make sure that patrons are of age – beyond legal statutes, the school setting adds that air of importance to following the rules.

Well with good cause – a short-lived bar shut down for serving to minors would seal the future of bars on campus – but something has been left out.

The Blue Wall has long been a coffee and cookie outpost for those arriving and fleeing the Campus Center – but after 5 p.m. these options are drowned in the newfound beer.

There is still spigot-coffee in the eatery section, but the fresh-cookie smells have dissipated and the 18 to 20 crowd that makes up at least a portion of the students here are left dry.

The food improves when the bar opens its doors. If you're willing to wait till 6 p.m., you can get the amazing fries and mozzarella sticks introduced to cousin the pub atmosphere.

And the atmosphere in the new primary-color drizzle Blue Wall does not do justice to a pub – which evokes dark and dreary settings, not the fluorescent, chipper, happy-go-lucky blues and reds.

In its effort to create that shadowy relaxed atmosphere, the lights are turned low – all over the place.

Whether inside the roped off section or not, you get to eat your food, hold your discussions and read your course packets under less than brilliant lights.

And without the fresh baked smell of cookies that used to permeate the entire concourse. The drawing factor used to be the smell of chocolate chip, peanut butter, sugar and other cookies – now there is no smell, nothing that typifies the new identity.

With its faults many, the Blue Wall pub is essentially a good thing. It will likely draw students in to the axis of campus for at least a little while.

The novelty of drinking on campus may wear off, especially in a town that caters to the college crowd and has provided establishments from the seedy to the swanky for drinking and socializing.

When tied to athletic endeavors, the Blue Wall may see a spike in attendance and patronage. If those plasma screens can find local – as in Mullins Center – games then it will surely be a lasting establishment.

If there are some measures made to keep the underage crowd happy, then the balanced eatery will retain all the freshmen, sophomore, young juniors and non-drinkers.

The future of the Blue Wall may depend on whether or not the middle ground is found.

Unsigned editorials are the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Spring break's cruel joke

Jen Hodson

With the bad weather we've seen these last few weeks and the amount of school-work that I have had to come back to since spring break, I almost feel as though it's time for me to drift back to vacation hoping to get sun on my tan.

Things have been pretty hectic since my return from the Bahamas. It was warm there, with sunny, beautiful beaches and hot men in bathing suits. It's not fair to have spring break and then to come home to the cold, boring Massachusetts. I know what you're thinking: poor baby had to come back from the Bahamas. But put yourself in a dream vacation and it will take an iron tree will to come back.

It's April now, and last week I thought it was amusing how on April Fools' Day it began to snow. It's like someone up there thinks it's funny to play a joke on us. Haha, no one is really laughing. Well, at least I'm not.

I was done with the winter months the day I left for spring break. Coming back in shorts and sandals with the expectation that everything would just work itself out perfectly wasn't the best idea. I noticed others made the same mistake I did. One day I glanced over and saw a girl trudging through the snow in her sandals. You could tell she had just bought them for the spring weather.

I have never had a problem with actually doing my schoolwork until now. It's scary. I almost feel like I have senioritis a year early and it's all due to that damn spring break, which let me just say was unbelievably awesome. The Bahamas, and where I specifically went, Grand Bahama Island in Freeport, was such a great place to go and relax.

Although spring breakers did invade the island and spent their time being drunk and harassing the natives, it was definitely a great place to explore and learn new things. A unique experience was swimming with the dolphins, which was a huge plus. If anyone has a chance to do so I would highly recommend this activity. The water in the Bahamas, or anywhere in the Caribbean for that matter, is like water now here else in the world. It's like taking a swim in a giant bathtub, only with tropical fish and water that is about 80 degrees every day.

> "I almost feel like I have senioritis a year too early and it's all due to that damn spring break..."

Shopping around on the island is fun because people like to bargain with you for almost anything you buy, so it's fun to see how much stuff you can get away with without actually paying face value for it.

Partying and drinking at night was a blast. They have some of the best drinks to offer down there. They include, for those of you out there who are curious, a pina colada served in a coconut and a Bahama-Mama that goes down nicely after a good dinner. Rum Runners was the place to be, where kids liked to drink and show their stuff. Elders watched in awe, which I definitely found amusing. What were you thinking going on vacation during spring break? This is our island, not yours!

The natives there are really friendly and always like to talk, get to know you, find out where you're from and see what you want to do during your stay. I can't say they were all angels though. There was one time when a friend and I were harassed on the beach to do a wet t-shirt display for the locals. Afterwards, they annoyed everyone else using a large megaphone to blurt out anything that that came to mind.

That was an amusing day on the beach, but it's okay with me because good times are what spring break is all about. It's all about fun and enjoying yourself, and in that department I know I got an A plus.

Now that the fun is all over and I'm back here, what am I supposed to make of it all? Where do I go from here? I'm daydreaming too much to be able to remember what buildings my classes are in or that my legal studies test was actually yesterday and isn't next week. All this snowy weather bogs down my mind. It's almost like an evil trick is being played on us.

Spring break will relax you to the point where you don't have a care in the world. Then once you return here, it's welcome back to school...you've been sucked into the twilight zone.

Jen Hodson is a Collegian Columnist.

Unclear "EndGame" strategy

Yousef Munayyer

Recent images of a toppled megalomaniac's statue remind me of seeing Lenin's statue on the ground after the fall of the Soviet Union, and also raised many questions for me.

Though the war has yet to end, the objective, a regime change, is nearly secured. This "regime change" cannot be considered complete yet, though. Removing one regime and not replacing it with another is not a regime change, it's regime destruction. So far that's complete. But now it is time to focus on the next step, the new regime.

With all the focus on the actual war, not enough attention has been paid to reconstructing the Iraqi infrastructure and government.

Considering American military superiority, it wasn't a matter of whether or not Saddam's regime would last, but of how much longer it would take to get end it. Now that Baghdad has been overrun, and fortunately without the horrific urban warfare we saw in Mogadishu that some analysts projected, a new government needs to take control.

I was against this war from the start and I am standing by that. I still firmly believe that the pre-emptive attack policy that led us into this war is extremely dangerous and shouldn't be used. I still believe that the war is being carried out without legitimacy and will lead to enraging already anti-American Arab populations. History books will forever note the unfavorable global public opinion towards this war and the nearly unilateral actions of the Bush administration. However, the deed is done and the time to protest is over. Our focus now has to turn to the future of a nation that has been through war for too long.

The role of the United Nations in the reconstruction of Iraq is yet to be determined. Humanitarian aid will surely come from the United Nations as well as non-governmental organizations. But the most important issue to be resolved is not the humanitarian status of Iraqis because the aid from global benefactors is near certain. The most important issue to resolve is the political structure of the new Iraq.

The new leadership in Iraq, whoever it may be and whenever it is established, will be vital to the security of the region and especially American interests. An American general will most likely control the country for the first few months. And that will most likely be former General Jay Garner. Garner retired from the military in 1997 to become the president of SY Technologies (an organization that makes missile guidance systems) and is currently in Kuwait. Garner helped work on Defense Department projects such as the "Star Wars" project of the 1980s, a neo-conservative's dream.

> "He is not the frontrunner because of his qualifications, but because he would be the perfect puppet."

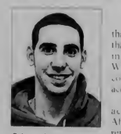
Some have also included the Arabic-speaking West Point graduate General John Abizaid as a possible post-war leader. He is currently at Central Command in Qatar. However Garner may have the edge because of his civilian status combined with his military expertise, especially if Washington doesn't want this to seem like a modern-day Macarthur in Baghdad.

Garner has said that if he is to take control, he thinks it shouldn't be longer than "only 90 days" before the country can be turned over to Iraqi leadership. It is certain that the American military will be in Iraq for a while after the regime is gone. And American military presence will be felt in Iraq for years to come. Since the operation was named "Iraqi Freedom," it would be wrong to replace one repressive regime with a non-Iraqi one. So control will have to be transferred again to Iraqi leadership.

This would be similar to what happened in Afghanistan after the Taliban regime was removed. Hamid Karzai was chosen and is now attempting to run Afghanistan with the "Loya Jigra," a traditional Afghani version of a diverse congress.

The frontrunner for this job in Iraq is Ahmad Chalabi, Shiite president of the "Iraqi National Congress." He is not the frontrunner because of his qualifications, but because he would be the perfect puppet. Unlike Karzai, whose father was killed by the Taliban, Chalabi wasn't involved in a fight for his country. In fact, Chalabi left Iraq in 1958 before Saddam was in power. His family was well off and left after the first socialist coup. He went on to get a western education and a Ph.D. in mathematics from MIT. He was involved in a major embezzlement scheme in Jordan in which a bank he ran crumbled the Jordanian economy. There was a small sum of 60 to 150 million Dinar missing. He then fled the country in the trunk of a car.

He now has a Lebanese accent and was elected President of the Iraqi National Congress in Vienna (yes that's Vienna, Austria ... there is no Vienna, Iraq) in the early 90s. Since he left Iraq in 1958, he has only returned to the Kurdish controlled area to coordinate coups against Saddam with the Central Intelligence Agency. His wealth was a perfect cover for the CIA bankrolling him. The Iraqi National Congress is very diverse, consisting of Sunni, former Ba'ath party members, members from Kurdish Factions and Shiites as well. However, they united under their shared hatred for Saddam. It is unclear how long they will remain peaceful once they realize the differences between them.



A lot of thought should be put into the future leadership. Chalabi's pro-western stance makes him a frontrunner for this job since it will be the U.S. that hands the job over. However I do not see how a crooked exile who will not address the needs of the Iraqi people can be good for a "democratic" Iraq. What's bugging me the most about Chalabi though is how much he reminds me of Rezza Pahlevi, the former Shah of Iran. And we all remember how that turned out.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian Columnist.

In our April 9 issue, there was an error in Jesse Greenspan's column, "Neither right nor wrong." The statement "over $100 billion per day," should have stated $1 billion. The Collegian regrets the error.

Artificial action: Students should demand more

Eduardo Bustamante

This debate makes blood boil.

The Supreme Court deemed that quotas are unconstitutional and that race cannot be a major factor in higher education admissions. What is being debated now is the constitutionality of taking race into account at all.

The supporters of affirmative action argue three points. Affirmative action is a means of reparation for historically oppressed groups. Affirmative action creates a diverse student body, which makes for a superior learning environment by exposing students to various points of view and better preparing students for the diverse world we live in. And finally, affirmative action helps create a level playing field for oppressed groups.

The University of Massachusetts is one of the affirmative action schools that has recently come under attack.

This is what the controversial UMass 10-point admission scale looks like: Applicants receive 7.5 points for their Grade Point Averages and SAT scores. One point is awarded to applicants who show a pattern of leadership and academic achievement. Half a point is awarded to applicants who reside in Massachusetts. Another half a point is awarded to applicants who have overcome significant adversity relevant to higher education. Finally comes the big bad affirmative action half-point. This half-point is awarded to any applicants who are any of the following: international students, first-generation college students, veterans, graduates of low-income high schools, or members of racial or ethnic minorities.

That's right. Minority students didn't receive any admittance points that veterans, international, first generation, and low-income high school students didn't receive. What does affirmative action amount to at UMass? One-fifth of one half point.

Those of you who justify affirmative action as reparation for past injustices should ask yourselves this: Is one-fifth of one half point sufficient reparation for centuries of slavery, decades of segregation, and unending oppression through poverty and incarceration?

Reparations? Demand more.

Does affirmative action create a diverse student body? (Let's define a diverse student body as one that contains students varied by culture, race, ethnicity, gender, age, class, religion and geography.) Common sense indicates a no answer since only one half point is allotted for diversity and 7.5 points are given for GPAs and SAT scores, both of which are biased toward upper class, young, white students.

SAT scores are based on the quality of one's secondary education, which is based on funding, which is based on property tax. GPAs are often weighted by course level (honors, standard or basic). Whether or not a school offers honors classes depend on the school's capability to do so, which depends on funding, which depends on property tax. According to the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES), the average white student scored 191 points better than their black counterparts on the 2001 SAT.

Ultimately, it's impossible to see the effect of affirmative action on UMass diversity just by looking at statistics. Statistics about UMass are based on subjective information. For example, the University counts black students as those who fill in the oval marked as "Black/African-American" on their applications. And here's a secret: anyone can fill in that oval regardless of his or her race because there is no way to double-check it.

More importantly, diversity takes place on many different levels and published statistics about UMass are one-dimensional. There are statistics by class, race, gender, age and so on, but they never overlap. For example, UMass claims in a 2002 fact sheet that 3.9 percent of its undergraduates are Latino. In the 2000 Diverse Democracy Survey, UMass claimed that 23 percent of its incoming freshman had household incomes under $40,000. However, the University has not published any statistics showing that there are any Latino students that have household incomes under $40,000. Poor urban Latinos have far different views from rich suburban Latinos and are thus a completely different demographic. The absence of published multi-dimensional statistics makes it impossible to judge whether affirmative action is providing the diverse learning environment its proponents seek.

Diversity in higher education? Demand more.

Does affirmative action at UMass level the playing field for oppressed groups? The University does not publish statistics on student household income because it claims the information is too unreliable due to its subjective nature. However, common sense again says the half-point put toward diversity should not balance underfunded public education, standardized testing and impoverished living conditions. In my two years at the University I have yet to meet a single student that is a poor black kid from Springfield or a poor Latino from Holyoke – two of the state's most oppressed groups.

In the same 2002 fact sheet, the University claims that 4.5 percent of its students are black or African-American. However, this percentage does not count the 1,592 students that did not report their race when they applied. If we infer that the majority of students who do not fill in their race are those who won't benefit by doing so, then the black student population drops to 4.1 percent. This percentage still doesn't count the 304 international students, though they take up spots and none of them are African-American. Add international students the black student population at UMass drops to four percent.

Of the incoming freshmen who filled in the "Black/African-American" oval in the 2000 Diverse Democracy Survey, only 55 percent of them said that at least one of their parents was born in the U.S. If this trend holds true throughout the University, and 45 percent of the black students on campus are first-generation Americans, then only 2.2 percent of students on campus are even possibly members of that most oppressed group – the descendents of slaves.

And what percentage of high school students are members of this most oppressed group? According to NCES, 17 percent of U.S. public school students in 1999 were black. To judge the level playing field justification for affirmative action, simply compare these percentages with those of white students. The UMass Fact Book claims that 83 percent of UMass students are white, not including international students and those who didn't report. But according to NCES, only 70.4 percent of U.S. public high school students are white.

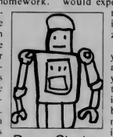
A level playing field? Demand more.

The current affirmative actions debate is pure fakery between conservatives and more conservative conservatives to give the impression that significant progress is occurring when in fact, it is not. More importantly, it leads people to demand less.

See this debate for what it is and demand more!

If you want diversity and equality, demand the end of the property tax method of public school funding. Demand equal funding for all public education nationwide. Demand the removal of the SAT, ACT, and MCAS. Demand the removal of tracking. Demand free higher education. Demand honesty. Demand integrity. Demand a level playing field. Demand diversity in higher education. If you want, demand your one-fifth of a half-point, but don't think that it's anything more than that.

Eduardo Bustamante is a Collegian Columnist.



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Despite bugs, 'Jurassic Park' is a fun game

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

While I consider myself a connoisseur of console gaming, every now and then a PC game comes along that pulls me away from the format – and causes further procrastination of my homework. However, my PC gaming vice comes in the form of simulation games. Games like "Sim City 3000" or "The Sims" are seemingly pointless games that provide a creative way to control semi-realistic environments. The latest simulation game, one that blows all of the other theme park simulation games away, is "Jurassic Park: Operation Genesis."

This game is one of the must-have simulation games for your PC. There are a lot of stresses to get through, such as the controls and upgrading, but there are ways to learn the controls and get around the problems that will make you wish you never tried the game. Another added aspect of the game is that you can play missions instead of building your own "Jurassic Park." Missions range from taking out raging dinosaurs in the parks to taking pictures of dinosaurs fighting. Some missions are frustrating, but fun nonetheless.

The detail of the dinosaurs is very good. Like most kids, I grew up reading about dinosaurs and buying dinosaur toys. Who hasn't seen "Jurassic Park" and wished there was such a resort? The characteristics for each dinosaur are perfect down to the last flesh-ripping tooth on a Tyrannosaurus. The dinosaurs also exhibit traits they probably had during their time. The Ankylosaurus wields its massive clubbed tail and when put in the same area as an Allosaurus, can create some very serious battles.

'Jurassic Park: Operation Genesis'
PC
Publisher: Vivendi Universal / Universal Interactive
Developer: Blue Tongue
Rated T for Teen

There are a few setbacks to a game that has such a large amount of detail. One thing most people will find irritating is the fact you never seem to be able to make enough money to keep your park growing. This problem can be easily avoided by downloading a program called a "trainer" that sets things like unlimited money or all upgrades so that you can make the biggest park imaginable.

Another problem is that when you use the scroll button on a scroll mouse, the game crashes. I know I have done this at least 10 times out of habit, because I would expect a new game like this to use the scroll in some form of zoom.

Another aspect you will be easily annoyed with, even if you have a trainer, is the visitor and park investor frustration based on your performance. The problem is most visitors to your park will complain about the park being filthy, but you are limited to the number of cleaning facilities you can have. This seems to be the other big setback to this game: having a limit on the number of buildings you can use. You will find when you think you have the perfect park going on, you run out of buildings to use. It becomes very annoying, unless you just ignore all of the messages from the administrators.

Along with the annoying tourists, the game has natural disasters that damage your park and give you a massive headache. Things like tidal waves and tornados damage buildings and can kill your dinosaurs. There's no real way to avoid it, just get ready to have to deal with massive amounts of mail requiring you to fix the broken buildings and telling you which dinosaurs have died.

If you can get past the crashes and get yourself a trainer for the simulation portion of the game, you can pretty much have hours of fun making dinosaurs. There are a few dozen types of dinosaurs you can research the DNA of so you can hatch them into designated areas. Keep them all healthy, fed and under control or else you may have a Tyrannosaurus running around, eating your paying customers.

Overall, "Jurassic Park: Operation Genesis" is a very good simulator for dinosaur fans or fans of this game genre. While it does have its bugs, there are not many PC games that are without them.

The game runs for $29.99.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian Columnist.

COURTESY KING.COM

The dinosaurs look very lifelike in 'Jurassic Park: Operation Genesis,' an overall good simulator game with a few annoyances.

Jim Breuer delights college crowd at Fine Arts Center

By Reid Davenport
Collegian Staff

On April 9, comedian Jim Breuer and opener and friend Paul Bond, shook the Fine Arts Center with laughter.

The show, the last stop on Breuer's "Lighten Up" comedy tour, started off with comedian Paul Bond working up the crowd. He tossed out a few jokes about how airports possess death words such as "terminal" and "prepare for our final decent." Then he went into some of his own comedic versions of songs such as "American Pie," "Green Acres," and System of a Down's "Aerials."

As Bond finished up he introduced Breuer, who came out to a screaming audience. He joked about how he was very heavy growing up and he hated skinny kids because he could never catch them.

From there he talked about his Saturday Night Live days and how his favorite cast member was Norm MacDonald. They had a big press conference before the season started and Breuer made the mistake of saying, "I never really watched Saturday Night Live," MacDonald thought he was fired until he was asked what the first prank was that they were going to pull for this season. MacDonald said he was going to show his private area. Thus, the heat was off of Breuer for the moment.

Breuer continued by telling how his dreams of being a star were fading because he couldn't get in a sketch to save his life. He eventually came up with the Joe Pesci Show while he was talking to an intern on the set. So he went through with it. Pesci called and asked for a tape. Then he called back three years later to say Robert DeNiro and himself would like to come onto the show and beat up Breuer in a sketch. To make a long story short, Pesci scared Breuer into thinking he was going to have him hurt for saying Italian slurs on the show when Breuer was not Italian, but it ended up being a joke on poor Breuer.

After that, he told a quick story of how "Goat Boy" came to be. It started off when he was getting high at a zoo and making goat noises at the goats. Then it turned into the idea where he had Tourette's Syndrome and made goat noises as he spoke. Then finally, "Goat Boy" was born.

The rest of the show consisted of finger reenactments, which people who went to the show are probably showing their friends ever since they saw them, and a few impressions of Ozzy Osbourne and AC/DC. The closing act was Breuer's sketch, "Party in the Stomach," which was followed by a story of how he finally saw his friend, Dave Chappelle, get vocally angry over his car being stolen.

Then, as the rest of the crowd headed to the exits, I was fortunate enough to speak to Jim Breuer himself. From the one meeting with Jim, I got the impression that he pretty much acts like any partying college student and that he enjoys joking even after his shows have ended.

"What's up Hammer? Want some cookies Hammer?" Breuer joked as I entered his dressing room.

"This was a lot better than I thought it was going to be," Breuer commented about the show. "Usually the first time I ever see where I'm playing is when I walk out and I was like, 'Dude there's a lot of people out there!'"

On his preference as to where he likes to perform, Breuer said, "Colleges are much better than the clubs. They listen a lot more and they have a more open view."

When asked what his plans are for the future, he said, "We are done. I'm getting so bored with stand-up. I'm working on a TV show for the fall with Comedy Central and then going on tour in the winter. It's going to have all new stuff and I want to make it like a big rock concert."

Basically, Breuer is calling an end to the tour for now so he can be with his wife and two kids back in Long Island, NY.

For now you can see Breuer on Comedy Central and you can look for his new show in the fall.

Benefit concert held for residential program

A benefit concert will be held for Grace House after severe budget cuts threatened to permanently close the residential program.

Grace House is a housing program in Amherst for homeless women and their children. On Dec. 17, 2002, Grace House was notified that its funding would be terminated as of Jan. 31, 2003.

Grace House is the only center of its kind in Western Massachusetts. If it is closed, several families will be homeless and their kids will most likely be sent to the Department of Social Services. The concert is part of a grassroots fundraising effort to keep Grace House open until the new state budget is released in July.

Brooks Williams, Trailer Park, MarKamusic, and NBFB will be performing at the concert on April 13 from 1 to 4 p.m. at the Amherst High School auditorium.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for kids 12 and under. They are available at For The Record in Amherst, World Eye Bookstore in Greenfield, Beyond Words in Northampton and at the door.

- Nikolas P. Markantonatos

Entertainment Briefs

Film festival organizers cancel invitations to Asian guests over SARS fears

UDINE, Italy (AP) — Organizers of Italy's Far East Film Festival have canceled invitations to nearly two dozen Asian directors, actors and producers, fearing the spread of severe acute respiratory syndrome.

Pressure from health authorities in the northeastern city of Udine led organizers to cancel 22 invitations to film personalities from Hong Kong and Taiwan, two countries hit by the SARS contagion, festival spokeswoman Sabrina Baracetti said Wednesday.

"We'll send them a written apology and will certainly invite them all next year, even if they don't have any new films," Baracetti said.

Hong Kong director Riley Ip ("Just One Look") and young Taiwanese director Su Chao-pin ("Better Than Sex") are among those being asked to stay home. Their movies will still be shown, Baracetti said.

The festival runs April 24-May 1 in Udine, 60 miles northeast of Venice.

Musicians get behind the camera for Playboy shoot

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Someone has finally heeded Nelly's advice.

The Grammy-winning rapper, whose hit song "Hot in Herre" urges the overheated to cool off by completely disrobing, is one of several musicians who picked up cameras to photograph a bevy of Playboy models posing in the buff.

His efforts are chronicled in the home video and DVD "Playboy's Hip Hop & Rock," released in stores Tuesday.

Playboy founder Hugh Hefner said the guest photographers "took the work very seriously." Some photos were featured in the magazine's April issue.

Other musicians who participated include Ja Rule, Xzibit, DMX, Bret Michaels, Tommy Lee, Korn's Jonathan Davis and Disturbed's David Draiman. Draiman, who photographed model Gina Patrone, said the shoot was easy for both of them, even though he had little experience as a shutterbug.

"They gave me an idiot-proof camera that was basically point-and-shoot," he said.

Steve Harvey to host 2003 Essence Awards

NEW YORK (AP) — Steve Harvey will host the 2003 Essence Awards show June 6 at the Kodak Theatre in Hollywood, Calif.

The awards, which honor music, film, theater, television, radio, humor and activism, will air June 27 on the Fox cable network. It will be Harvey's third consecutive year as host, Essence Communications Partners said Tuesday.

The 46-year-old actor-comedian appeared in 2000's "The Original Kings of Comedy." He also starred in the WB comedy "The Steve Harvey Show" for six seasons. His upcoming films include "The Fighting Temptations" and "If You Were My Girl."

- Associated Press

Game two; round six

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon

Jake D. Lewis

A popular Hollywood myth states that Kevin Bacon is somehow connected to every other actor in show business by no more than six "degrees," where a degree is a single link between the given movie star and someone else who has appeared on-screen with him or her. Rumor states that every puzzle has at least one route!

Send your answers to collegianbacon@hotmail.com by no later than noon on Sunday. With your solutions, please include:

- Your Name
- Your University/College
- Your Class Year
- Your Major

This game will end on April 25.

Points are awarded as follows:

GOLD (15 points) – Shortest route in the fastest time.

SILVER (10 points) – Fastest time only.

BRONZE (5 points) – Most creative or thematic route.

HONORABLE MENTION (1 point) – All other players with valid solutions.

Please note: Only feature-film credits will be counted.

This week's puzzle:
KEVIN BACON & ROBERT BLAKE

Damon powers Sox

TORONTO (AP) – Johnny Damon homered twice and Trot Nixon drove in four runs as the Boston Red Sox held off Toronto 8-7 Thursday night to snap the Blue Jays five-game winning streak.

Nixon's tiebreaking two-run shot in the eighth inning off Cliff Politte (0-1) gave Boston a 6-4 lead. Nixon went 3-for-3 with a walk for the Red Sox, who avoided a three-game sweep.

Damon had three hits, three RBIs and three runs scored. He homered off Roy Halladay in the third and gave Boston an 8-4 lead in the ninth with a two-run shot off Trevor Miller. It was Damon's fifth career two-homer game.

Red Sox	8
Blue Jays	7

Carlos Delgado hit a two-run homer off Mike Timlin in the ninth to cut it to 8-7. Delgado has three homers and 15 RBIs in the last four games.

With most other relievers in the Boston bullpen struggling, Timlin (1-0) went the final 2 2-3 innings for the win.

Manny Ramirez was 0-for-5, ending his career-high hitting streak at 22 games.

Halladay struck out 10 in seven innings, becoming the first Toronto pitcher to strike out 10 or more since he fanned 11 on Sept. 19, 2001, against the Baltimore Orioles. The right-hander gave up four runs – three earned – and seven hits, walking one.

Boston starter John Burkett allowed four runs, three earned – and five hits in 6 1-3 innings. He walked five.

After Shea Hillenbrand doubled with two outs in the eighth, Nixon homered off Politte.

Chris Woodward had two RBIs for the Blue Jays.

Damon singled, advanced to third on a grounder and scored on Nomar Garciaparra's sacrifice fly in the first. Nixon hit an RBI double in the second.

Woodward had an RBI infield single in the bottom half. Damon led off the third with his first homer, giving Boston a 3-1 lead.

Associated Press

Waiting game

right down the plate," Altieri said, "and I just got a hold of it. At least this one went out. The first one the kid caught it and robbed me. I deserved it I guess."

Altieri's dinger capped off a three-run seventh for the Minutemen. They scored three runs in three separate innings, and needed every one.

If there is an excuse for the nine names in the pitching entry on the scorecard – not to mention the sloppy defense – it's that Stone's crew hasn't been able to play on a natural surface since last Friday's ice storm set in. Given the postponement of four games, three against Xavier and one against Holy Cross.

"Let me tell you, staying in that gym is just depressing," Altieri said. "But we went in and got the work done. By the way, we hit the ball, [it didn't set us back, and] hopefully it will carry over into the weekend."

Next up for the Minutemen is Fordham. The teams will square off for three games in the Bronx, and the weather has already made its presence known, with forecasted rain pushing Saturday's doubleheader to Sunday starting at noon, and the rubber game to Monday, also at 12 p.m.

UM sweeps doubleheader

Continued from page 8

Holtz out of the game after the third inning. Freshman Jenna Busa pitched the final two innings of the game for UMass, giving up one hit and one walk while striking out four.

In the day's second game, neither team could muster any early offense. On the mound for UMass was sophomore Kelli Arnold. Arnold, who ended up pitching a complete game, four-hit shutout, got into some trouble in the third inning.

With two outs and runners at the corners, Arnold walked the bases loaded. Just when it seemed that UMass' dominance over Harvard was fading, Cahalan gunned down the runner at third from behind home plate. The play not only got UMass out of the inning unscathed, but will also be remembered as one of the highlights of this season.

"I thought that was the play of the day because that was a critical situation," Sortino said. "Their best hitter was up with a .336 average and can hit to all fields. I thought that was a huge play. I thought it was the play of the game."

The third inning would prove to be the game-breaker for UMass, as the Minutewomen were able to score five runs in the inning. Perey was able to reach base on a bunt for the second time yesterday, and she quickly stole second during the next at-bat. Perey would advance to third base on a Robustelli single and eventually score on an error.

Later in the third, Holtz was again able to break the game wide open. With one out and the bases loaded, Holtz crushed a grand slam over the left field wall that, had there not been netting in front of the scoreboard, would have likely landed somewhere on Route 116. Holtz's homer, her third of the season, put UMass in the driver's seat with a 5-0 lead.

UMass punched in another run in the fourth when Robustelli drove in junior K.C. Budrewicz on the team's first triple of the season. UMass added two more runs in the fifth on a single by Franke with the bases juiced.

Crunch time for Tennis

Continued from page 8

Minutewomen 9-7 after a closely contested match.

Although this was a good experience for the Maroon and White to practice at such a high level of competition, a defeat so close to the A-10 could upset morale. However, the Minutewomen are clear on their goals for the weekend and that is their main focus now.

"We are hoping to win both [matches] – that's our goal," UMass Head Coach Judy Dixon said.

Temple has strength at the top of their lineup in the first and second singles positions, but the Minutewomen are the fittest and healthiest they have been for the entire season.

The match on Saturday in Washington, D.C. against the Colonials is the one the Minutewomen are more focused on.

"George Washington and UMass have good rivalries," said Dixon. "We beat George Washington in the finals of the Atlantic-10 a couple of years ago so they are out to get us. A match [against the Colonials] is one that could go either way and their strength lies in the top of their lineup."

The Maroon and White has the strongest players of the season in their lineup, with Edelstein being a consistent power base. And now that Depontes is at her highest level of tennis playing this season, victory seems much more realistic.

If UMass manages just one victory this weekend, it will be seeded fourth for the A-10. No wins will leave them fifth. Everything is on these matches, which promises drama as well as high-quality tennis.

The Minutewomen take on Temple in Philadelphia today, scheduled to start at 2:30 p.m. On Saturday, they will take on the Colonials at 11 a.m.

Men's Lacrosse, Division I

Division I

No.	Name	Record	Points	Previous
1	Johns Hopkins	7-0, 1-0	199	1
2	Princeton	4-0	184	3
3	Georgetown	11-3, 1-0	174	2
4	Syracuse	8-2, 1-0	168	4T
5	Maryland	7-2	146	4T
6	Virginia	8-2	139	5
7	Massachusetts	8-1	127	9
8	North Carolina	6-4	112	6
9	Towson	8-3	105	14T
10	Rutgers	8-2	104	8
11	Cornell	6-2	93	12
12	Duke	5-4	79	10
13	Loyola	9-3	69	11
14	Ohio State	5-2	64	19
15	Navy	4-5	46	16
16	Hofstra	5-4	42	13T
17T	Bucknell	7-2	38	17
17T	UMBC	5-3	38	17
19	Yale	6-2	28	20
20	Villanova	7-2	20	18

Others receiving votes (in order): Notre Dame, Army, Dartmouth, Penn State

ECAC Lacrosse (M)

2003 Standings

Team	Conference W	L	Pct.	Overall W	L	Pct.
Georgetown	3	0	1.000	6	0	1.000
Rutgers	2	0	1.000	8	1	.888
Massachusetts	1	1	.500	7	1	.875
UMBC	1	2	.333	4	2	.667
Penn State	1	2	.333	2	5	.290
Navy	0	3	.000	4	4	.500

Team	Conference GF	GA	Overall GF	GA
Georgetown	27	19	59	35
Rutgers	25	19	98	63
Massachusetts	20	20	111	55
UMBC	30	34	72	94
Navy	30	33	80	75
Penn State	20	27	70	60

Atlantic 10 Softball

2003 STANDINGS
(thru games of April 9)

	Conference W	L	T	Pct.	Overall W	L	T	Pct.
Massachusetts	4	0	0	1.000	19	10	0	.655
St. Bonaventure	2	0	0	1.000	12	8	0	.600
Temple	5	1	0	.833	15	15	0	.500
Saint Joseph's	4	2	0	.667	12	7	0	.632
Fordham	3	3	0	.500	22	12	0	.647
La Salle	3	3	0	.500	9	15	0	.375
Rhode Island	2	4	0	.333	10	11	0	.476
Dayton	1	3	0	.250	14	13	0	.519
George Washington	0	8	0	.000	2	21	0	.087

Atlantic 10 Baseball

2003 STANDINGS
(4/10)

	Conference W	L	T	Pct.	Overall W	L	T	Pct.
East
Rhode Island	6	3	0	.667	12	15	0	.444
St. Bonaventure	3	2	0	.600	11	7	0	.611
Massachusetts	3	3	0	.500	7	9	0	.438
Temple	3	3	0	.500	8	13	0	.400
Saint Joseph's	4	5	0	.444	8	16	0	.333
Fordham	3	8	0	.378	7	14	0	.333
West
Richmond	8	2	0	.750	24	8	0	.900
Duquesne	8	3	0	.667	14	15	0	.483
La Salle	6	3	0	.625	7	13	0	.350
Xavier	7	4	0	.533	11	19	2	.409
George Washington	1	2	0	.333	18	7	0	.731
Dayton	1	6	0	.111	6	21	0	.276

Atlantic 10 Lacrosse (W)

2003 STANDINGS
(through games of April 9)

	Conference W	L	Pct.	Overall W	L	Pct.
St. Bonaventure	3	0	1.000	7	0	1.000
Temple	2	0	1.000	6	5	.545
Massachusetts	2	1	.667	6	5	.545
Richmond	2	1	.667	7	5	.583
George Washington	1	2	.333	6	4	.600
Duquesne	1	2	.333	7	4	.636
La Salle	1	2	.333	1	9	.100
Saint Joseph's	0	4	.000	2	8	.200

New face at Fenway

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – Crews were working around the clock on Thursday to get Fenway Park ready for the Boston Red Sox home opener even as the team scrambled for contingency plans in case the game against the Baltimore Orioles is rained out.

Forecasts called for rain in the afternoon, but the team was hoping it would hold off until after the 2:05 p.m. game could be completed. Pedro Martinez is scheduled to start against Jason Johnson.

"It is opening day, but you don't want guys to get hurt either," Red Sox pitcher Derek Lowe said in Toronto on Thursday before the team wrapped up its season-opening 10-game road trip. "You've got Pedro pitching. You don't want to go out there when its 30 degrees and raining and put your outfielders in jeopardy."

Several special events were scheduled in conjunction with Fenway's opener, including Lou Rawls singing the national anthem and a first-pitch ceremony with a guest the team would not identify. The team will also reprise the giant American flag covering the Green Monster that was used last year, in remembrance of the Sept. 11 attacks.

"There will be a patriotic element to the pre-game ceremony" because of the war in Iraq, team spokesman Kevin Shea said.

But most attention will be focused above the flag, where a new seating section has been built over the winter. Although the seats won't be open yet, they are part of a new look for the majors' oldest and smallest ballpark as the team tries to make it a more hospitable place for fans who pay the league's highest ticket prices.

"Opening day at Fenway is always something special. Now this year it's even more because all the new seats and the buzz around the ball park," said Lowe, who has a 7.94 ERA over his first two starts and is among the Red Sox pitchers who have struggled early.

"I don't know how happy they'll be to see us," he said. "It's been a disappointing road trip for the team and myself."

Among other improvements are new bathrooms and a picnic area under the rightfield stands. The team took out a wall and brought a parking area into the ballpark to double the concourse area and double the number of bathrooms there.

Other walls were taken out behind the centerfield bleachers, opening a view of the city skyline, and some walls received a fresh coat of "Fenway Green" paint.

The Green Monster also has a new look, with a logo celebrating the 50th anniversary of the team's affiliation with the Jimmy Fund, a charity that raises money for kids with cancer. Ads have also been posted at either end of an enlarged manual scoreboard, which now lists National League scores as well as the AL.

"They're small improvements that we can make to the ballpark to improve the fan experience," Shea said. "We still have the first tenet in mind: Do no harm."

Many of the improvements are not yet finished. Work on the Green Monster seating has been going on 24 hours a day to get it ready a planned April 29 debut; if they finish early, the team would put them on sale during the first home stand.

"It could happen," Shea said.

The work near the picnic area is not expected to be finished until June. Project leader Janet Marie Smith said the team was willing to pay the money to accelerate construction on the Monster seats because they hang over a public street and sidewalk.

"It would be irresponsible to have Landsdowne Street as a construction zone during the season," she said.

Of the concourse improvements, she said: "That's our property and we're only inconveniencing ourselves."

Daily Collegian
Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives for Fall 2003

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, for more information.

All Majors & Classes Welcome to Apply
Current Freshmen Strongly Encouraged to Apply

PETER PAN BUS TICKETS
COPIES & FAXES
UPS PACKAGE SHIPPING
$2.00 OFF ANY ROUND TRIP BUS TICKET PURCHASED IN APRIL WITH THIS AD
COPY CENTER
on campus in 101 Herter Hall

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS $10. always!
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256.0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586.0155

McMurphy's
welcomes
Live Music every sunday
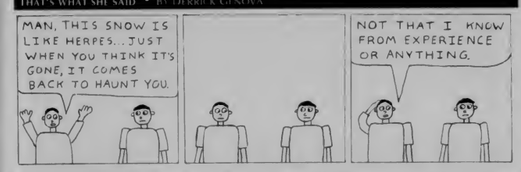
Joe C.
NO COVER
positive ID required

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

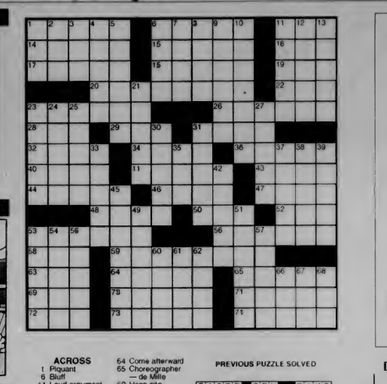
Emil Hooper

Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley



JayHoo and JawHoo • By Mark Weber

The Pepper Paddidle Explosion • By Anonymous



That's what she said • By Derrick Genova

Valley of the Squirrels • By Cessario X

ACROSS
1 Piquant
6 Bluff
11 Loud argument
14 Eagle's nest
15 Individualist
16 Lilly or Wallach
17 First-class
18 Dynamic
19 Holed up
20 Flows out
22 Eden dweller
23 Unprincipled
26 Rapper, usually
28 Nose
29 "Morning Edition" network
31 Skye or Wight
32 Appliance
34 Medicinal plant
36 Expresses ennui
40 — Ness monster
41 Faulty
43 What fans do
44 Footstep
46 Concept
47 Part of a foot
48 Nomad's shelter
50 Get
52 SFO info
53 Bahamas' capital
56 Crown
58 Mich. neighbor
59 Clanking
63 Telephone ABC
64 Come afterward
65 Choreographer — de Mille
69 Hoop site
70 Injury mementos
71 Uprisings
72 Like a desert
73 Seabirds
74 Gulf nation

DOWN
1 Jolt of electricity
2 Ever, to Byron
3 — Lanka
4 Cook's aid
5 Petty officer
6 Family group
7 Allright or Montez
8 No future — —
9 High temperatures
10 Impudently
11 Alter a skirt
12 Uniform color
13 More spacious
21 First Greek letter
23 Former teen
24 Nonadult
25 As good as won't wds.)
27 Months and months
30 Send, as a payment

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-13-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

31 Dramatist Henrik —
33 "— what friends are for"
35 Clear
37 Courted
38 Nick — of films
39 Water vapor
42 Yemen's neighbor
45 Most cherished
49 Slight variation
51 Double star
53 Observed
54 Nobelist — Sadat
55 Fib
57 Playing marble
60 Bygone despot
61 Pivot
62 Subtraction word
66 — de guerre
67 Mademoiselle's summer
68 Nine-digit ID

HOROSCOPES

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Try something daring today. Go skydiving or get a tattoo.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't even think of going to the library today. Play hockey instead.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Did you forget to change your socks again? If not, take a shower.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Some of your best ideas are accidents.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Be more like Jim Breuer today - Maaaaaa! - Goat-Boy is cool.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Be like someone else today ... see Sagittarius.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
I am too lazy to write your horoscope, see Sagittarius.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You are better than everyone else, so don't bother talking to them.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Be unique, do something to stand out from the crowd.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't step on a mousetrap, even if you are looking for cheese.

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Try a semester abroad, because it'd be better if you weren't here.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Go swimming today, but watch out for lightning ... and ducks.

Quote of the Day

To say that this goofy child president is looking more and more like Richard Nixon in the summer of 1974 would be a flagrant insult to Nixon.

- Hunter S. Thompson on George W. Bush

COLLEGIAN STAFF: TODAY IS THE LAST DAY TO VOTE FOR EDITOR -IN- CHIEF, SO VOTE!

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

FRIDAY
• High: 49
• Low: 33

SATURDAY
• High: 56
• Low: 25

SUNDAY
• High: 54
• Low: 22

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Spring Vegetable Soup
• Corned Beef & Cabbage
• Fish & Chips
• Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegetarian)
• Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

DINNER
• Spring Vegetable Soup
• Veal Parmesan
• Boston Scrod
• Tofu Fajita (vegan)

Production Crew
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan-Hicks
COPY EDITOR
Barbara Lotto
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION STAFF
Adam Shane / Jolene Rousseau

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Congratulations to the new sisters of Sigma Delta Tau: Jen Kolow, Ashleigh Loudhoit, Erica Martin, Tricia McCabe, Shawna McCarthy, Stephanie McLean, Lauren Mihlaba, Molly Mookerjee, Liz Rothauser

Term Paper Editing! Editing performed by professors and graduate students
Visit us at www.paperchex.com or call us toll free 866-693-EDIT

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

Apartment for Rent

Hobart Condo 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Apt. located in Brandywine Furnished Apt. Seeking Female Roomate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sandy @ 413-546-0489

Apartment for Rent

Condominium for rent excellent condition 1/2 mile away from campus 4 bedroom apt for female roommates $550 full room, $350 to share plus utilities. 413-592-0540

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

95 Geo Prism Purple 95K 5 Speed good condition $3000 OBO 413-665-3022

Saab 9000 95 180K Good Condition or BO 413-549-8088 $750.00

BMW 528 E 1987 Good Shape $1250.00 413-531-7580

Employment

Need Person to hand out materials at Study Abroad Fair 8-5 on 4-15-03 $70 JJ 323-5488

100 Workers Needed Assemble Products Free Information 1-801-269-2372

Summer Office Help Amherst Leisure Services is looking for a summer registration clerk. Duties include service, accepting registrations, data entry, answering phones, filing, and other clerical duties. Hours are M-F 9 a.m.-4 p.m. Pay range is $7.44-8.61/hr. depending upon experience. Apply at Human Resources, Town Hall, 4 Boltwood Ave., Amherst, MA 01002. AA/EOE

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038 info@remi.com

Employment

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS- Pennsylvania children's sleep-away camp. If you love children we have positions for Directors, Asst. Dir's, and Counselors for Tennis, Golf, Drama, Camping/Nature, High & Low Ropes, Gymnastics, Sports, Sailing, Water-skiing, Ceramics, Jewelry, Guitar, Aerobics, Self-Defense, Video, Piano, and Nurse (RN). Dates 6/19-8/16/03. On Campus Interviews arranged. Call 1-800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

New Store to open in Hampshire Mall looking for energetic and responsible individuals w/ retail experience Please call Barbara (413) 531-1020 or email bblake@mwc.com.

Technical Writer for Policy Analysis Consulting/Software firm. Resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or Fred@REMI.com

Part-time job up to 16 hours- flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

Employment

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors – Town or Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE) Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, esp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. old. $ range for both positions: $8.19-9.48 hr. 35-40 hrs per week. June 30- Aug. 15 Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept. 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

Economic/ Business Development Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038 info@remi.com

Employment

Need Free Photos!
Professional Photography students seek models of all races, ages for portfolio assignments. No experience required. Email for details @ msgrs-wsl@yahoo.com

WSL/Lifeguards The Town of Amherst, Department of Leisure Services and Supplemental Education (LSSE) Aquatics Program is now accepting WSI applications for summer 2003 season. All Applicants must possess current WSI and Lifeguard certifications. Previous experience preferred, $8.19-9.48 hr. Application deadline: 4/21. Applications are available from the Town Hall Human Resources Dept. 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Opportunity Employer

Fall internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field; work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary; training provided. Deadline to begin application process is 4/22/03. Contact the Legal Services Office: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Employment

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Business 800-293-3985 ext 516

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150/450/Day. No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

For Sale

For Sale 1 full couch, 1 love seat and 1 twin mattress and box. Great condition Call 549-4972

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX90 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

House for Rent

3 Bedroom house available this summer/ next year. Beautiful location, 10 minutes from Amherst Center. Call 256-0613

5 Bedroom plus Newer house minutes from UMass $2700/month 549-8800

Lost

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1628

Services

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Pittsburgh of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING. Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-0992

Sublet

Large Furnished one bedroom Apartment on bus line $660/month 781-910-7064

Patton Sublet from June 1st – August 31st! Beds, Partly, 1146 per month Call Mark 253-1479

Travel

Mexico/Caribbean only $250 round trip! Europe $189 one way! Other world wide destinations cheap! Book on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

STS America's number one student tour operator is now hiring on-campus reps 2003-04 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Wanted

Egg Donors Needed, non-smokers, Donors Ages 21-32. Generous compensation paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781) 769-6900.

Your classifieds lovingly brought to you by: Anne-Marie Flam

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tennis faces crucial pair

By Anna Edwards
Collegian Staff

The season heats up this weekend when the Massachusetts tennis team determines its status for the Atlantic-10 Championship.

The Minutewomen meet Temple today and rival George Washington on Saturday. The result of these crucial matches will determine their seeding for the A-10 Championship, which begins on Thursday April 16, in Baltimore.

After a loss on Wednesday at Boston College, the Maroon and White needs to win both of the weekend's matches to grab the third seed for the A-10.

The Eagles are ranked 75th in the country and were tough competition for the Minutewomen. The Maroon and White entered the game focused on gaining experience for the A-10 against this high caliber team.

The UMass team was unable to make any headway in the singles matches of the day with all top three singles players falling to their Chestnut Hill counterparts.

Junior Idita Deportes represented the Minutewomen in the number one singles position after moving to the top spot following her recovery from a shoulder injury. Deportes was not powerful enough to make any impact against freshman Szilvia Szegedi, losing 6-2, 6-1.

A similar scenario came in the second singles, as sophomore Stephanie Price fell to Nida Waseem 6-2, 6-3, while sophomore Sasha Edelstein fell 6-4, 6-3 to junior Ali Ashley in the third spot.

The Maroon and White's main strength is its doubles corps, which may prove vital in the A-10 Championships and could cause some upsets next week.

The doubles came up just short against B.C., as Price and Deportes were toppled by Waseem and Ashley 8-5, and the partnership of freshmen Dorothy Ivanovicz and Edelstein fell 8-3 to Szegedi and senior Anisha Fernando.

Although defeated, the UMass number one and two doubles partnerships made a significant impact on B.C. in taking such a high ranked team to a close result. This should position them in a favorable light for the A-10.

The doubles partnership of junior Captain Susan Hsams and freshman Camilla Knight is always a skillful one to watch. Their doubles history highlights this posting a majority of wins during the spring schedule.

Eagles Jessica Engel and Emily Yeomans defeated the

Continued on page 6

At long last, a twin killing

Softball blanks Harvard twice

Junior Aisha Franke hit a two-RBI single in the first game of the Minutewomen's doubleheader sweep of Harvard yesterday at the UMass softball complex.

By Jeff Boyd
Collegian Staff

Play ball.

The Massachusetts Softball Team has been waiting to hear those words for over a week. The wintry weather that has kept UMass off the field since last Wednesday finally subsided yesterday, and the Minutewomen swept their doubleheader against Harvard at the UMass softball complex.

Even though the Minutewomen (21-10) had been cooped up in Boyden Gym for the past week, they didn't miss a beat against Harvard (5-17) as they shut out the Crimson on both ends, 13-0 and 8-0.

UMass	13
Harvard	0
UMass	8
Harvard	0

"It just goes to show that we've been doing the things that need to get done in the gym," Co-Captain Jaimie Cahalan said. "It doesn't matter if we are inside or outside, we still take care of business."

Senior pitcher Kaila Holtz stole the show for the Minutewomen in the first game, both on the mound and at the plate. In her three innings of work on the mound, Holtz allowed no runs and no hits while striking out four. At the plate, Holtz went 3-for-3 with four RBIs.

"I thought that we did well to come out hard against them in the first game. It's like we didn't even miss a step," Holtz said.

The UMass offense had come alive over the course of the ten-game winning streak that they brought into the game against Harvard. Yesterday was no exception as the Minutewomen were able to put up runs early and often against an overmatched Crimson squad.

After scoring two runs in the first inning on a Holtz double, UMass pounded Harvard pitcher Kara Brotemarkle with ten runs in the second inning.

Cahalan got things started for the Minutewomen in the second inning with a leadoff single. Speedy senior Anna Perey kept things rolling as she was able to reach base on a bunt. Senior Emily Robustelli then doubled to right field, scoring Cahalan to give UMass a 3-0 lead. Next came a single by junior Aisha Franke, which scored both Perey and Robustelli to put UMass up 5-0.

After a pair of walks given up by Harvard, Holtz drove in two more runs for UMass on a double to centerfield that gave the Minutewomen a 7-0 advantage. The next batter, sophomore Hilary Puglia, crushed a three-run homerun over the left field wall to extend UMass' lead to 10-0. Robustelli would drive in another run later in the inning, and Perey would score again from third base on a wild pitch.

With a 12-0 lead heading into the third inning, Holtz could breathe easier when she took to the mound.

"Its good to be up a few runs because if you make a mistake it doesn't hurt you because you have room to maneuver," Holtz said. "It's treemendous as a pitcher to know that you have that room."

Sophomore Denise Denis added the final run for UMass in the third on an RBI single that scored Holtz, who had doubled earlier in the inning.

With a seemingly insurmountable lead, UMass coach Elaine Sortino took

Continued on page 6

UM, Spiders square off

By Ari Jankelowitz
Collegian Staff

After losing another close game to Temple, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (6-5 overall, 2-1 Atlantic-10) took out their frustration on George Washington, drubbing the Colonials 17-6 last Sunday.

But this Sunday is a new day in the season. With the University of Richmond coming into town after losing to Temple 18-10, the Spiders are looking for redemption in the A-10.

The remaining four games, all against A-10 opponents, are the most important games of the year for the Minutewomen, because in order to gain an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament, they would have to qualify for, and then win the A-10 Championship.

The Maroon and White has proven its capability for explosive offense, but against whom? UMass has scored 12 goals in a number of games, but only against such lightweights as the University of Albany, Harvard and La Salle.

Harvard has won only one game this season and is 1-7. The Crimson's lone victory came against Boston College.

The University of Albany sits at 2-8 with its two victories coming against Vermont and Siena. The Great Danes have allowed 20 goals twice this season.

La Salle lost nine in a row before defeating Saint Joe's on Wednesday. They are now 1-9.

George Washington is the only team UMass has scored a dozen against that has a winning record, at 6-4.

That brings the record of teams that UMass scored more than 12 goals against to 10-28. Meanwhile the Minutewomen have yet to win a game against a tough opponent, suffering loses to Dartmouth, Syracuse, Hofstra and Temple.

Yet UMass coach Carrie Bolduc is not alarmed.

"Physically we can win the big game," Bolduc said. "Have we done it yet? No, but we have pretty high goals and standards this year. Things are getting tight."

The Richmond Spiders were slated to finish 19th in the Intercollegiate Women's Lacrosse Coaches Association's preseason poll, but fell off the charts after losing three straight games. Currently the Spiders are not another receiving votes from the IWLCA for the top 20.

Continued on page 3

Richmond has rebounded from the rough beginning, winning four out of the last five, and six out of nine since that three-game slide.

"They are athletic, scrappy and competitive work horses," Bolduc said of the Spiders.

Bolduc identified attack-woman Polly Purcell as a key player for the Spiders. Bolduc also identified Katie Dolan as a possible threat to the Minutewomen on Sunday. Last year, Dolan scored a backbreaking four goals against the Minutewomen in the A-10 semifinals, helping Richmond eliminate UMass from the playoffs. Both Dolan and Purcell have scored over 20 goals this season. Bolduc plans to stick senior Kelli Kurtz on one of the two scorers.

Richmond's goaltender, Kelly Johnson, is in her fourth year as a starter. Johnson's goals against average stands at 11.1 goals per game.

"After losing two games to Richmond last year we are looking forward to this game," said Bolduc. "I think we will be ready."

The game will take place at Garber Field on April 13 at noon.

UMass Weekend Schedule

Friday, Apr 11

Sport	Opp./Event	Location	Time
Women's Tennis	at Temple	Philadelphia, Pa.	2:30 p.m.

Saturday, Apr 12

Sport	Opp./Event	Location	Time
Baseball	at Fordham	Bronx, N.Y.	12:00 p.m.
Baseball	at Fordham	Bronx, N.Y.	2:30 p.m.
Women's Crew	at Knecht Cup	Camden, N.J.	7:00 a.m.
Men's Outdoor Track	at Brown Invite	Providence, R.I.	10:00 a.m.
Women's Outdoor Track	at Brown Invite	Providence, R.I.	10:00 a.m.
Women's Tennis	at George Washington	Philadelphia, Pa.	11:00 a.m.
Men's Lacrosse	vs Yale	Amherst, Mass.	1:00 p.m.

Sunday, Apr 13

Sport	Opp./Event	Location	Time
Softball	vs Rhode Island	Amherst, Mass.	12:00 p.m.
Softball	vs Rhode Island	Amherst, Mass.	2:00 p.m.
Women's Lacrosse	vs Richmond	Amherst, Mass.	12:00 p.m.
Women's Crew	at Knecht Cup	Camden, N.J.	7:00 a.m.
Baseball	at Fordham	Bronx, N.Y.	12:00 p.m.

Matt Boulanger attempts to reach second base during yesterday's game. Boulanger had a double, a home run, and two runs batted in to help the Minutemen to a 15-9 win over Fairfield.

Waiting game pays

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It took over a week, but the Massachusetts baseball team pushed its winning streak to four games, coasting past Fairfield 15-9 yesterday.

Senior Chris Morgan went 4-for-5 with three doubles, tying the UMass single-game record. The mark has been reached a number of times in the program's history, most recently by Jeff Altieri against Connecticut on April 17, 2002.

UMass	15
Fairfield	9

After an inauspicious start in which the teams were even through the first two innings, the Minutemen (8-9) opened up for three runs in the third inning, and plated at least two runners in each of the next four frames.

The Stags (3-15-1) managed to keep things relatively close down the stretch, pulling to within six on a three-run eighth inning, but it was for naught.

In a move designed to shake off the rust from the eight days since the last game – a 7-0 UMass win over Sacred Heart – coach Mike Stone used no less than nine pitchers, most of whom went just one inning.

"We haven't played in over a week," Stone said, "so we have to get people on the mound so they can feel comfortable for the weekend – that's where we do all the work for the postseason."

The starter-by-committee corps was less than stellar, giving up a combined four earned runs on 12 hits. The only hurler to last through more than a handful of batters was redshirt freshman John Toffey, who faced 12 Fairfield hitters, walking two, striking out one, and surrendering two runs on two hits.

And if the Maroon and White pitchers were rusty, the defense was significantly corroded, with UMass fielders committing five errors, leading to five unearned runs. The Minutemen had two defensive gaffes in the fifth inning alone.

"You could tell we were rusty, defensively and on the mound, but fortunately we swung the bats well," Stone said.

The offense more than made up for the defensive flaws, as Altieri and senior Matt Boulanger each hit home-runs, and the Minutemen had at least one hit in each of the first seven innings – the side was retired for the last UMass at-bat in the eighth.

Altieri's shot was the highlight of the day, a long smash that was a sure thing before it even reached its apex. The round-tripper was welcomed vindication for the senior, who was robbed of a homer early on a leaping catch by Fairfield centerfielder Greg Batista.

"Basically it was just a fastball

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, APRIL 14, 2003 — NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 — VOLUME CIX ISSUE 116

SoccerFest to feature games, entertainment

By David Grant
Collegian Staff

The Sport Management Department's inaugural New Balance SoccerFest will debut Sunday, April 27, 2003, bringing with it a new tradition to the University of Massachusetts campus.

The new event comes after 12 years of the highly successful Haigis Hoopla basketball tournament, and according to Dr. Carol Barr, a sport management professor and CEO of the class, the support and excitement level remains the same.

"We have received tremendous support from community people and sponsors relative to the event," said Barr.

Barr said one of the many challenges associated with putting on a new event is raising awareness and spreading the word.

"People don't know about [the event] so the struggle is in educating people, providing information to them and then getting them to realize this going to be great," he said.

The New Balance SoccerFest will be an all-day affair, highlighted by a spring soccer game at noon between the UMass Minutemen and the 2001 national champion University of North Carolina Tar Heels. The last time the two teams met, North Carolina won 2-0.

The soccer match is part of an all-day event, complete with entertainment, activities and teams from different divisions competing from dawn to dusk for their respective division's championships.

The various categories for the tournament consist of six male and female divisions. The 10 and under, 11-12 and 13-14 age group will form three-on-three teams, while high school, college/adult and over-30 categories consist of six-on-six teams.

The teams are guaranteed to play a minimum of three 25-minute games on a field approximately 40 by 60 yards. All participants will receive a New Balance SoccerFest T-shirt and free admittance to the game.

The winning teams in each division will also receive New Balance sneakers. Registration fees are $60 for the three-on-three category and $120 for six-on-six teams. The deadline for registration is Friday, April 18, and teams will be taken on a first-come, first-serve basis.

With many different divisions, the opportunities for the class to reach a diverse group and broader market has proved beneficial. Mike Demars, a junior sport management major and one of the many people in the class responsible for all aspects of the event, said there has been excitement from the community surrounding the event.

"Soccer groups are very interested in the area and are pretty excited about the new event," Demars said.

The event is also not limited to the Amherst community.

"Within the Amherst community and beyond, there are numerous soccer programs, clubs and leagues that have expressed an interest in the New Balance SoccerFest," said Barr.

Students walking through Campus Center will see a large blow-up New Balance sneaker at an information table where they can register their team for the event, ask questions or find out additional details about the event. The table will be set up all week from 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.

The competition itself will take place the morning of the event at the fields located across from Boyden Gymnasium. There will be a break in the tournament at noon, when participants will head over to Rudd Field to attend the soccer showdown. Directly after the match, the soccer tournament will continue throughout the day.

Meanwhile, the New Balance FanZone will take place just outside Rudd Field, offering a variety of interactive skills competitions, such as the Fenway wiffle-ball challenge, promotions and contests. With a disc jockey playing music and food vendors adding to the attractions, Demars said, "It will feel like a festival."

Other activities and entertainment surrounding the spring soccer showdown include a coach's clinic, an autograph session by the UMass men's soccer team and a half-time mascot game featuring celebrity mascots from area organizations and sport franchises.

The coaches clinic, taught by UMass head coach Sam Koch and UNC head coach Elmar Bolowich, will feature game and opponent strategy 30 minutes prior to game time, a post-game dialogue and analysis, and a sport psychologist addressing questions to clinic participants.

Sponsors of the event to-date include New Balance, Coca Cola, Spalding and Kaplan, with more likely to come.

All proceeds made by the event will go to the Erik Kjeldsen Scholarship fund. Dr. Eric Kjeldsen is a former professor in the Sport Management department.

More information about the New Balance SoccerFest is available by going to their website at http://courses.umass.edu/nbsoccer or by calling the office at 545-5689.

Iraqis turn over POW's

Seven recovered in Tikrit after 22 days in captivity

U.S. Army Apache helicopter pilots Chief Warrant Officer David S. Williams and Chief Warrant Officer Ronald D. Young Jr. are escorted on to a waiting C-130 transport plane, yesterday 60 miles south of Baghdad. The two were among seven POW's released by the Iraqi government after 22 days of captivity.

By Patrick McDowell
Associated Press

KUWAIT CITY (AP) – Iraqi troops south of Tikrit handed U.S. Marines a stunning surprise Sunday: seven American POWs released in relatively good condition after 22 days of captivity.

Freedom brought hugs, applause and slaps on the back from smiling Marines before the seven were flown to Kuwait for a medical checkup and debriefing. Back home, their families and friends burst out in jubilation.

Five of those returned Sunday were members of the 507th Ordnance Maintenance Company that made a wrong turn near the southern Iraqi city Nasiriyah and was ambushed March 23 – the same incident in which rescued POW Pfc. Jessica Lynch was captured.

The other released prisoners were crewmen of an Apache helicopter downed that day.

"It's just a good way to start off the morning, to have been notified that seven of our fellow Americans are going to be home pretty soon in the arms of their loved ones," President Bush said in Washington.

Among the former POWs was Shoshana Johnson, 30, of Fort Bliss, Texas, a single mother of a 2-year-old. Johnson, the only woman among them, had been shot in the ankle, and Spc. Edgar Hernandez, 21, of Mission, Texas, had been shot in the elbow, according to Marines who flew them to safety.

The others appeared to be unharmed.

Shortly after their capture, the seven had been shown on Iraq's state-run television, giving a human face to the peril confronting American troops.

Nine others of the 507th convoy were killed.

The seven Americans freed Sunday were picked up wearing bedraggled clothing – blue-and-white pajamas, khakis or shorts.

Besides Johnson and Hernandez, the others from the 507th were Sgt. James Riley, 31, Pennsauken, N.J.; Army Spc. Joseph Hudson, 23, Alamogordo, N.M.; and Army Pfc. Patrick Miller, 23, Park City, Kan.

The other POWs were Chief Warrant Officer Ronald D. Young Jr., 26, and Chief Warrant Officer David S. Williams, 30, of Orlando, Fla.

Back home, in Lithia Springs, Ga., Young's father watched shaky video footage of the soldiers on CNN. "It's him, and I'm just so happy that I could kiss the world!" said Ronald Young Sr. "It's him! It's definitely him."

There were conflicting reports on how the Americans were recovered.

Capt. David Romley said Marines marching north toward Tikrit were met by Iraqi soldiers north of Samarra. He said the Iraqis approached the 3rd Light Armored Reconnaissance Company and had the seven POWs with them.

Another spokesman for the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force, Capt. Neil Murphy, said the Iraqis who brought the Americans had been abandoned by their officers and, "realizing that it was the right thing to do, they brought these guys back."

Gen. Tommy Franks, commander of U.S. forces in Iraq, also said he believed "our guys picked them up on the road."

But Maj. Chris Charleville, who commanded the operation that transported the POWs from outside Samarra to an airfield south of Baghdad, said he was told that Marines had been searching buildings in Samarra when they stormed a building and found the POWs inside.

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld said Iraqis told U.S. troops they would find the seven missing soldiers at a location about four or five miles south of Tikrit. "They said, 'You should go get them,' and they did," Rumsfeld said.

During the flight to the airbase near Kut, about 60 miles south of Baghdad, Miller came up to where the pilots were sitting.

"He was just grabbing us, telling us that he loved us and hugging the crew chief," Charleville said.

Once at the airbase, the seven clambered off the helicopters under their own power, and walked or limped to a C-130 transport plane that took them to Kuwait.

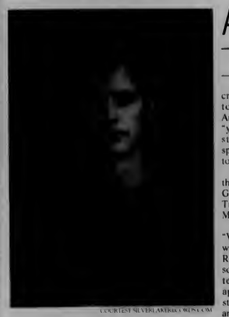
Marines at the base patted them on the back. When Marine combat headquarters got news that the POWs had been found, the troops applauded – rare in combat operations, Murphy said.

"You could feel the happiness and excitement in the combat operations center," he said.

All seven were released after a medical assessment in Kuwait, said Lt. Col. Ruth Lee, chief nurse at the facility where they were examined. "Their condition is good. I saw nothing that looked abnormal," Lee said.

Lt. Col. Larry Cox, a military spokesman, said the seven would be debriefed in Kuwait, then decisions would be made on a "case-by-case basis" on sending them elsewhere.

Suspected Iraqi looters lie on the ground as U.S. Marines search the city to arrest looters and try to bring order to Baghdad yesterday.



Franks underscored his commitment to rescuing coalition captives — but cautioned he didn't think that all POWs and MIAs could be recovered. Five Americans are still listed as missing in action.

"I don't think we could predict that at all," he told Fox TV. "I think it would be a true blessing if we were able to do that, and I don't think we ... can count on it.

"But I can tell you this," Franks added. "Even though we can't count on it, we can work at them hard. And we have been, and we will."

Matthew Shepard's mother speaks out

Activist tells crowd how to stop hate crime

Matthew Shepard

By Jesse Hirsch
Collegian Staff

Judy Shepard, mother of hate crime victim Matthew Shepard, told a near-capacity crowd at Amherst College Friday night that "you need to be the change" in stopping hate-based crime and speech and creating a society of tolerance.

Shepard's appearance came as the keynote speaker for Amherst's Gay Lesbian Bisexual Transgendered Alumni/Student Mentoring Weekend.

She began by reading the "Victim Impact Statement" which was prepared for the trial of Russell Henderson, one of her son's killers. The statement, written to help the jury decide on appropriate sentencing, told the story of a young man full of hope and promise, tragically lost long before his time. Some audience members became tearful during its reading.

Shepard explained the inception of the Matthew Shepard Foundation, a group she founded using the huge outpouring of money her family received from the public to help pay for Matthew's medical bills. It lobbies in Washington for hate crime legislation, as well as for public education on tolerance and inclusion.

"The reason I do this is I don't want to see one more Matthew Shepard," she told the audience. She stressed that her work becomes all the more necessary as the rate of hate-based crimes increases across the United States.

"America is moving in the right direction," she said. "But change is a long and difficult process, and we are still a long ways from reaching our goal."

Shepard then went on to instruct the audience in various ways they can help create a society of tolerance.

"If you hear someone telling a homophobic joke, you can't just let it slide," she said. "Step up to the plate, say something, tell people 'this is not okay.'"

Shepard said that the social climate would improve if more people were aware how prevalent homosexuality is.

"People need to realize that this is not some secret, abnormal sub-section of society," she said. "We all have neighbors, friends, and relatives who are gay. The problem is that gays and lesbians are seen as such second-class citizens in our society. If we ever want that to change, [members of the gay community] need to come out and be out, all day, every day."

In a Collegian interview following the lecture, Shepard clarified that the primary concerns in doing this are safety and comfort level.

"If more people would transcend these fears, I think everyone would begin to understand there is nothing wrong or abnormal about this lifestyle," she said. "The gay community] just need to start being visible."

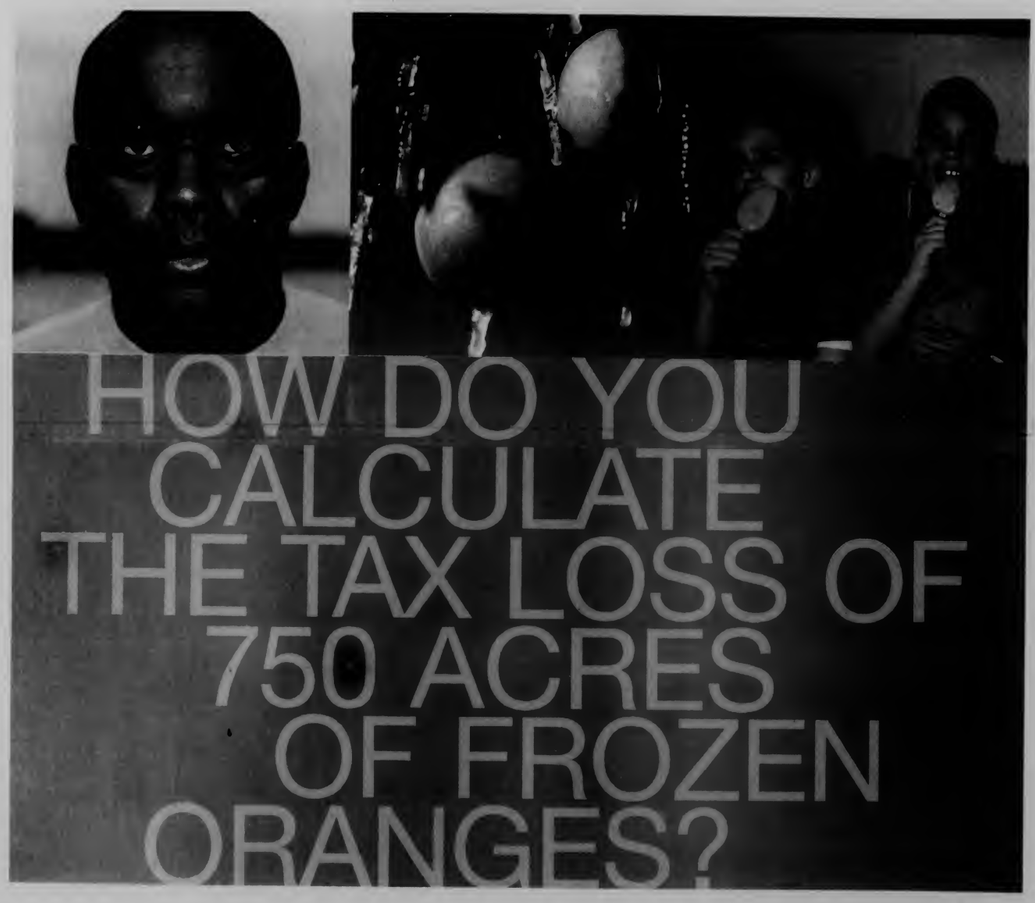
Shepard discussed her drive to eliminate all forms of hate, the importance of being involved in your community, and "The Laramie Project," the groundbreaking play hascd on interviews with community members from Matthew Shepard's hometown.

And she repeated nearly 10 times the importance of voting. "You have to vote. It is the only way to change things. If you aren't a registered voter, you lose your right to complain."

When asked about the importance of voting when it comes to hate crime legislation, Shepard said, "there is no chance of passing any hate-crime bill with the current Republican majority in the

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9



HIDDEN THREAT
PRESIDENT BUSH MAY BE CRAFTIER THAN WE THINK
PAGE 4

GRUESOME TOONS
HAPPY TREE FRIENDS CREATORS REVEALED
PAGE 5

UMASS SURVIVES
MEN'S LACROSSE HOLDS OFF YALE
PAGE 10

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

VOTED #1 IDEAL EMPLOYER BY BUSINESS STUDENTS, UNIVERSUM UNDERGRADUATE STUDY, 2002

Become part of a multi-disciplinary tax planning and compliance team to help us help companies determine the tax basis of damaged assets, and we'll help you build a career.

For opportunities and information go to:
www.pwcglobal.com/lookhere

Look beyond the numbers.

Families of victims say Bulger should testify in public

BOSTON (AP) – The testimony of University of Massachusetts President William M. Bulger before a Congressional committee should be public, say families of the alleged murder victims of his fugitive mobster brother, James J. "Whitey" Bulger.

After the House Government Reform Committee granted William Bulger immunity in return for his testimony on Wednesday, its chairman, Rep. Thomas M. Davis III, R-Va., said that members had not yet decided whether that testimony would be made in public.

That surprised the families of Whitey Bulger's alleged victims. The fugitive gangster disappeared in 1995 after learning he was about to be indicted.

"What is it they can know, that they don't feel we can be trusted to know about Billy Bulger's relationship with his brother?" Jeffery A. Denner, who represents alleged victim John McIntyre, told The Boston Globe. Whitey Bulger and Stephen "The Rifleman" Flemmi, both FBI informants, allegedly killed McIntyre in 1984.

Any testimony by William Bulger, the former State Senate president, "should be under oath and should be subject to public scrutiny," Denner said. "Anything else is self-defeating, unless their intention is to continue the cover-up, which I'm sure it is not."

A lawyer for the family of Debra Davis, who was allegedly murdered by Whitey Bulger and Flemmi in 1981, also called for a public hearing.

"Secrecy is the very worst thing that should be occurring now after all these years," attorney Robert S. Sinsheimer said. "What my client needs more than anything is answers."

Committee members are hoping that granting him immunity will prompt William Bulger to give them information about whether FBI agents obstructed homicide cases to protect his brother, who has been linked to 21 murders.

On Friday, Keith Ausbrook, chief counsel for the Government Reform Committee, said "However we go about this will ultimately be subject to public scrutiny," referring to the committee's practice of releasing reports including summaries or transcripts of testimony by witnesses interviewed privately.

William Bulger unsuccessfully sought to have the December hearing closed to the public. His attorney, Thomas Kiley, said he has made no such request for the coming hearing, expected to be held later this month.

The two Massachusetts members of the committee, Reps. Stephen F. Lynch and John Tierney, both Democrats, said they support holding the hearings in public.

In testimony before a grand jury, William Bulger said he talked with his brother by phone shortly after Whitey Bulger fled in 1995, but said he has not spoken to him since.

- Associated Press

Shepard mother speaks out on hate

Continued from page 1

House and Senate. If you want to help, you need to vote for candidates who are supportive to this cause."

After the lecture she fielded questions from the audience, most asking about all her experiences following her son's murder. When she finally left the stage, the clearly moved audience gave a standing ovation that lasted for several minutes.

Matthew Shepard gained worldwide media attention in 1998 when, at the age of 21, he was killed by two men he met in a Wyoming bar. The senseless murder gained such notoriety because there was little motivation beyond the victim's homosexuality. The case brought out worldwide support for the Shepard family and became a symbol of the prejudice and gross misconceptions held by many regarding the gay community.

His mother, described herself as a self-proclaimed "reluctant activist," a woman who describes herself as shy and "not much of a public speaker." Since the murder of her son, however, she has been one of the most outspoken and effective advocates for hate-crime legislation and increased tolerance for the gay community.

She was preceded on the stage by the Blue Stockings, an all-female a cappella group from Amherst College. They sang thought-provoking songs about tolerance and overcoming tragedy. A short film was also shown before Shepard's speech addressing the heartbreak of hate crimes.

Elaine Brigham, coordinator of Amherst College campus GLBT group, was delighted with the event.

"This is the fifth year we have had a gay alumni mentoring weekend," she said. "It has grown from five to ten students and alumni talking about their experiences in some obscure classroom on campus to what we have this weekend: over 50 alumni and hundreds of supporters, crowned by our first amazing keynote speaker. I couldn't be more thrilled."

Mrs. Shepard spent over an hour after the lecture giving autographs and hugs to a steady stream of well-wishers and supporters.

When asked if this was an unusually positive audience response, Mrs. Shepard said, "Everywhere I go, all the people I talk to are amazingly supportive. That's what keeps me going."

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Sunshine and lacrosse

Students stand outside of Tobin Hall and overlook Garber Field, where the men's lacrosse team took on Yale University Saturday.

Course offering available on Web

A printable copy of the University of Massachusetts' course offering is available on the Registrar's Web site as of today.

The file is in PDF format and available on the Registrar's website at www.umass.edu/registrar.

Students may print the whole thing or just the pages concerning their major.

Undergraduate Registrar Elizabeth Pyle's office created the PDF files after faculty and students complained that a tangible copy of the courses was not available. Students and faculty said that they would find it helpful to have a printed copy to consult while online listings were down or running slow. For others who live off-campus or do not have access to the Internet as often as those in dormitories, the printed copy will allow, as in years past, students to list possible courses before logging on to see what is available.

Pyle warns, however, that the printed copy will be static, and will not show whether the courses still have open seats and availability, which is what she believes is of ultimate importance to registering students.

Course listings were only available online through the SPIRE network for spring 2003 registration. Following the University's first registration with the SPIRE network, the Faculty Senate moved to request from the Registrar the availability of a printed copy.

- S.J. Port

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Sean Costello Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Brandon McNutt Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Is Looking For a
Bright,Talented, Multitasking Wizard!

Now Accepting Applications For:
'HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGER'

Freshmen and Sophomores preferred
Great Resume Builder
10 hours per week

Applications Available in Room 113 Campus Center Basement. Attn: Mia Ferolito
-Please Bring Resume-

UMass Daily Collegian
Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives for Fall 2003

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, for more information.

All Majors & Classes Welcome to Apply
Current Graduate Students Welcome to Apply

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 14, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Haigis Hoopla: a tradition that should be kept

Haigis Hoopla, the annual basketball tournament, won't be taking place this year.

The popular event has been replaced by the NewBalance SoccerFest, which will take place April 27. Similar to Haigis Hoopla, it will be an all-day event featuring a soccer tournament, disc jockey, food vendors and interactive skills competitions.

Soccer clinics will also be held and members of the UMass men's soccer team will be there to sign autographs. At noon there will be a game between the Minutemen and the 2001 National Champion University of North Carolina Tar Heels. When the teams last played, the Minutemen lost 2-0.

The original Haigis Hoopla was created by a sports management class assigned to market the idea and event to a new audience. This project turned into a 12-year tradition at UMass; however, it ceased to be a learning experience for the students.

The sports management program cannot be blamed for this and are perfectly justified in stopping the event as a class assignment. It is, after all, the job of the department to educate students.

However, if the sports management department could no longer sustain this program it should have been picked up by another department or by the University. The Hoopla may have become more than a class project to the students working on it, but it had evolved into an annual tradition for UMass students.

While administration and the athletic department have been struggling to create more school spirit, one of the few events that students on campus participated in was dismantled. An event of this magnitude should not have been tossed aside so easily. University Administration or the SGA should have stepped in to save one of the few events on campus that truly promotes student life, one of the few things that students could look forward to each spring, along with planned activities in each living area and the Spring Concert.

It's impossible to predict or speculate on the future of SoccerFest. It could be a huge success; however, on its surface, it's too early to tell. Perhaps if SoccerFest had been added as an additional event in conjuction with Haigis Hoopla, or had the student community been surveyed and made an active part of the process, the situation would have resolved itself differently.

Haigis Hoopla should make its comeback as soon as possible, as a means of sustaining a past success and building on future possibilities.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

America's shock and awe

Robert Carey

The "shock and awe" tactics of the United States army certainly don't spare any expense. But then again, when a fighting force is working with a budget that is in the area of 79 billion dollars, a cheap and efficient victory simply will not do. When I heard the tactics of "shock and awe" described on television, it seemed a bit extreme.

In a nutshell, "Shock and Awe" is designed to shellshock the enemy troops by blowing up everything around them. In this way, they'll become demoralized and unwilling to assault our ground troops. With a horribly prolific arsenal, including practically every explosive known to man, the American artillery has certainly shocked and awed the Iraqi troops, with what Oliver North has called "The largest fireworks display in human history."

Does this sound like an army with a sincere intent to minimize civilian casualties? Are they aware of the cost of these bombs? I do know that the army is aware of what bad press can do to a war. In the last Persian Gulf War, the media coverage of 25,000 dead Iraqis was solely responsible for ending the war after four days. Rather than have the media be a wet blanket to the party again, the U.S Army has made large investments in "smart bombs." The intention of these little babies is to avoid stray explosions and minimize the loss of civilian lives. Not a bad idea. However, my question becomes this – is the U.S. army aware of how expensive it is for the American taxpayer to insert "brains" into a bomb in order to make it smart?

Iraq isn't some great eastern empire; its army doesn't have the rock-hard discipline of the Terro Cotta Warriors of Xian, and for the most part their weapons consist of Cold War relics that have become obsolete in most other countries. Therefore it hardly seems necessary to go at a third-rate enemy fullbore with an array of expensive bombs, when a few well-placed tank strikes and air-raids would crumble this tiny, backwards country in about the same time.

There are some benefits to "Shock and Awe." I enjoy watching footage of these bombs being dropped and blowing stuff up. I'll admit I'm a little ashamed at myself for this, but then again, I did, in part, pay for those bombs; I should at least have the right to watch them go off.

And while I, and the rest of my fellow citizens, spend all of our time watching the fireworks display on TV, Congress quietly passes all sorts of horrible laws in order to pay for it. Most of the laws being passed will take away health insurance from children, freeze state-workers' pay, strip public school teachers of badly needed raises, and suspend popular initiatives to mandate lower class sizes.

The money being saved by stripping America's children of health and better education is being redirected into the production of smarter bombs and munitions. Is the prerogative of the Bush administration to make smarter bombs and dumber people? Intelligence, whether it's in an inanimate explosive or the mind of child, requires money for it to be implemented. Right now, over 40 percent of all of our country's revenue is spent on the military. Education makes up about five-to-eight percent of the central government's expenses.

I think it is time for the American public to get its eyes off the beautiful pyrotechnics of our "shock and awe" military, and turn them inward to more domestic affairs. Across this nation there are scores of under-funded schools and universities. I got a letter from my little cousin yesterday. Apparently, during school hours, he's forced to write letters to friends and family soliciting magazine subscriptions in order to help their financially troubled school. To me, this is unacceptable. Why blow up potential funds for America's public education system in the dusty (though oil-rich) sands of Iraq, when victory could be won through a much cheaper means?

Isn't anyone else sick of worrying whether or not they'll have health insurance in the future, and sending their children to grossly under-funded schools? Where are the adamant anti-war protestors? Can't they actively preach against a notion that is more complex than peace over war? Why not stand up now America, and fight for better education, and health care for all those who need it? Ahh, but alas the bright red-orange flames on TV are too pretty and mysterious to avoid. The central government isn't going to support education and health care without a severe outcry from the American public. The anti-war protesters, who put forth such a valiant effort, should redirect their energies towards making a brighter domestic future.

Robert Carey is a Collegian Columnist.

George W. an underestimated threat

Dan Barrett

George Walker Bush is not the fool you think he is. He has been accused of being politically inept and ignoring domestic issues. Nothing could be further from the truth. The reality is that Bush has expertly manipulated popular support in the wake of 9/11 to launch a conservative assault on the Constitution, expanding presidential powers, curtailing civil rights and packing courts with right-wing judges. We have all underestimated George Bush, and if we don't wake up soon we're going to regret it.

Bush is one of the most powerful presidents in American history. His expansion of executive power has been nothing short of terrifying. A major part of that consolidation was the USA Patriot Act, which Bush signed into law on October 26, 2001. This sweeping reform gave unprecedented power to law enforcement. Together with the "Total Information Awareness" system, it allows the government to use roving wiretaps on U.S. citizens, read our emails, monitor what search words we use on the internet and access our credit reports.

It lets them know what books we get out of the library. It allows them to perform "sneak and peek" searches, in which agents can enter a suspect's property and search through or remove private possessions without a warrant. It increases information sharing between domestic law enforcement and intelligence groups, a restriction originally put in place when it was discovered that the FBI and CIA had conducted investigations on over half a million Americans during and after the McCarthy era, including Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

The Patriot Act was, in short, a heavy blow to civil rights. Despite the panic that swept the government post 9/11, the bill would never have passed without the inclusion of a "Sunset Clause," stating that certain key provisions of the document would be phased out of existence in 2005. But Bush wants more. Orrin Hatch, working closely with the administration, will propose a measure to eliminate the Sunset clause as soon as this week, essentially making the Patriot Act permanent and many of our civil freedoms nonexistent.

The Patriot Act will go down in history as one of the modern age's greatest assaults on our Constitutional freedoms. Making the act's purposefully temporary powers permanent will result in a huge imbalance of power in the government. The Executive branch will answer to no one.

This is a deliberate aspect of Bush's agenda.

The second aspect of Bush's attack affects the judicial system. Bush, supported by a Republican majority, plans to politicize the courts by installing right wing judges. Take as an example James Leon Holmes, an Arkansas lawyer nominated to federal court. That Bush supports Holmes will come as no surprise to anyone familiar with Holmes' work. When writing for a Catholic newspaper in 1997, Holmes wrote that "the wife is to subordinate herself to her husband," and that "the woman is to place herself under the authority of the man." He later wrote: "It is not a coincidence that the feminist movement brought with it artificial contraception and abortion on demand, with recognition of homosexual liaisons soon to follow." Earlier, he had observed that, "Concern for rape victims is a red herring because conceptions from rape occur with approximately the same frequency as snowfall in Miami." Holmes is so controversial that the Senate Judiciary Committee, dominated by Republicans, delayed voting on his nomination last week.

> "The reality is that Bush has expertly manipulated popular support in the wake of 9/11 to launch a conservative assault on the Constitution, expanding presidential powers, curtailing civil rights and packing courts with right wing judges."

Holmes is not an isolated case. Last week Bush nominated Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit. Pryor has a long history of attempting to break down the barriers between church and state: he worked with Pat Robertson to defend student-led public prayer in schools, vocally defended the act of displaying the Ten Commandments in state court facilities and once referred to Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court case which legalized abortion, as "the worst abomination of constitutional law in our history." Pryor and Holmes are just two examples of a larger strategy: domination of the judicial system through the appointment of ultra conservative judges. Bush is clearly seeking a "pre-emptive strike" against any opposition he may face in his attack on the system of checks and balances.

Americans are defined by our freedoms, and we are guaranteed those freedoms by a government where no one branch is ever allowed to grow too powerful. Bush has made it clear that he is not willing to accept these limitations. He is far from incompetent and far from stupid: he is dangerous, more than many of us suspected. Don't be caught unaware.

Dan Barrett is a Collegian Columnist.

Housing process too slow

It is my understanding that students with documented learning disorders and psychological or physical disorders may request and petition for what the University refers to as a "medical single." Students are theoretically guaranteed the right to a fair chance at receiving housing that is conducive to their academic and emotional success with consideration to their handicaps. However, as with any housing assignment situation, there are large snags.

Beginning early, I asked my case manager where petition forms for a medical single could be found and approximately what time I could expect to find out whether my request would be granted. She told me to go to housing's main office and pick up the forms. I would have to fill out the petition and write a short essay about why I required a medical single. She would then send the documentation to housing and a board of administrators would decide my fate. She did not know when I would find out.

S.J Port

At the same time, while I was working on my request, my roommate and dear friend asked if I would live off campus with her and another friend. I said I would think about it, ask my parents and weigh the options. It sounded like a good backup plan in case I was denied a medical single. Unfortunately, we are struggling to find housing that suits each of us, so that the medical single has become a more pressing issue.

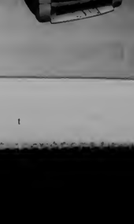
During all of this I decided to reserve my current room on SPIRE as an additional backup. However, while I had hoped to reserve the room as a single, paying the extra five hundred dollars a year, I was informed that it was not guaranteed that the University wouldn't stick a random roommate in my reserved room if they had no other room. A random roommate for many requesting a medical single means a potential problem. That random roommate could be someone who does not appreciate the person's needs as a student with physiological, physical or learning disabilities.

So, one day this past week I dropped in on housing in Whitmore and asked for the appropriate paperwork to begin petitioning for a medical single. Housing told me that it is in fact my case manager that has any paperwork and that my case manager must send that paperwork over with my documentation. Then they informed me that I may request to be in a certain housing area but that nothing is guaranteed. I ask what the chances are of staying in Van Meter, my home for the past two years, and they reply that it is unlikely I will be placed there since it is a popular building where people retain or fight for singles. At this point an image of a stale smelling, unfriendly single in Sylvan developed on my mental screen. They asked if I have enough seniority points to pick a single in Van Meter, but I do not. As a student resident for two full years in Van Meter, I only have twelve seniority points. (However, my neighbor, a transfer who has been in the building three semesters, has eighteen points; transfer students are for some ridiculously unfair reason given a large number of housing seniority points.)

Then they drop another bomb: I will not be told what my housing assignment is until August.

August? By August, if I do not receive a medical single, I will have lost my chance to reserve my room or pick a new one within my building. And if I do not like my housing assignment and decide to live off campus, assuming my friends are kind enough (and stupid enough) to save me a room in their off-campus house just in case, then I lose a couple hundred dollars by dropping my bid for University housing and canceling my room "late."

I understand that nothing in life is guaranteed, but a glimmer of hope remained in my soul that some things in life could be done fairly. If one begins a special petition process early to prepare for the upcoming year, to try and do things before the point at which housing begins to charge students for canceling their housing, isn't it only fair for housing to set up an earlier deadline for special housing petitions, so that they may earlier inform students what their options are? Housing should reform its process, allowing time to first deal with special requests and petitions.



S.J. Port is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include author's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be approximately 300 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be approximately 700 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for length and clarity. Letters may be condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 14, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Herpes outbreaks affect 17 percent of U.S. population

Question: I really don't know anything about STDs [sexually transmitted diseases], but I've seen those commercials for Herpes outbreaks, and I'm curious how to tell if you have it and how to get rid of it?

Response: Good question. Herpes is a virus that has two different forms: Herpes Simplex Virus-1 and Herpes Simplex Virus-2. Both types of Herpes are sexually transmissible, however Herpes Simplex Virus-1 is usually associated more with symptoms above the waist, such as fever blisters and cold sores around the mouth. However, both types can be contracted orally and genitally.

Sex-iversity

Sara Brumfield & Winnie Chen

It is estimated that one in six adults in the United States has at least one form of Herpes. That amounts to approximately 80 million Americans. People try to brush the idea of STIs (sexually transmitted infections) under the rug because it's unpleasant to think about, but Herpes alone affects 17 percent of our adult population.

***

If you suspect you might have contracted the Herpes virus, here are some symptoms to watch out for:

- Recurring rashes with itchy and/or painful sores in the genital region (Note: it is very possible to contract Herpes anywhere on the body.)
- Painful ulcerations when the blister opens
- Burning sensations during urination
- Swollen glands in the groin area
- Fever, headache or a general run-down feeling

***

If you think you might have been exposed to the Herpes virus, allow two to 20 days for symptoms to surface. However, keep in mind that it could take years for an outbreak to occur. Ladies, this is why it's very important to make those annual check-ups.

Since Herpes is a virus you will carry it for life once you have contracted it. The average number of recurrences per year is typically four. Genital Herpes is much more likely to recur than Herpes contracted orally. And recurrences are usually at the site of initial infection.

***

Both forms of Herpes are contracted the same way:

- Direct contact with an infected area (even if no sores or blisters are present it is still possible to contract the virus)
- Sexual intimacy (and yes, this includes kissing)
- Oral, anal or vaginal intercourse (Herpes can be passed from the mouth to the genitals and from the genitals to the mouth.)

If you do have either form of Herpes, here are some tips for minimizing and maintaining outbreaks:

- Maintain your general health
- Keep stress to a minimum.
- Keep the infected area dry and clean during outbreaks.
- Avoid physical contact with the infected area from the very first symptoms (itching, burning, etc.) until the entire area is completely healed, not just scabbed over.
- If you do touch a sore, wash your hands with soap and water every time.
- If you are pregnant, tell your doctor. Herpes may cause miscarriages or stillbirths. Childbirth during an active Herpes outbreak may result in developmental disabilities, serious health damage and death.
- Since Herpes is a virus there is no cure. However, there are oral medicines available for suppressive therapy, such as Zovirax, Famvir and Valtrex. There are some over-the-counter treatments available. However, FDA approval is pending. Herpasil uses the Prunella vulgaris plant as the main active ingredient and claims to prevent the virus from spreading from cell to cell. ViraDerm is a topical solution still undergoing Phase II of the FDA trials, but claims that can sometimes prevent future outbreaks from occurring. Choraphor is a topical herbal treatment containing St. John's Wort, which is known to have anti-viral properties. This medicine should be applied to open lesions to encourage the healing process.

***

The idea of STIs can be quite daunting and frightening, but your best defense is to educate yourself. Know the ways of contracting STIs and what preventative measures you can take. And if you think you have any of the symptoms, do not hesitate to visit your doctor. Herpes is for life – be smart.

Sara Brumfield and Winnie Chen are Collegian Columnists.

HAPPY TREE FRIENDS VOLUME #1: FIRST BLOOD

By MIKE KULAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's a sunny day in the neighborhood, and all is well...until a playground mishap sends Toothy the beaver, Giggles the chipmunk and Cuddles the rabbit to painful and bloody deaths. That's Happy Tree Friends, a host of cute, cuddly and pastel cartoon animals – innocently unaware of the gore that awaits them in each episode.

There are 19 lovable characters featured in this cartoon, from Splendid the flying squirrel, to Pop and Cub, father and son bears, to Flippy, an army veteran bear.

With so many to choose from, it's hard for the cartoons' creators to pick a favorite.

"I'm a little partial to the rabbit, Cuddles, 'cause I do his voice," says Ken Navarro, the animation director, "but I also like Lifty and Shifty, the raccoons, and Lumpy is always fun to throw in there – a good source of comedy."

"I really don't have one; it just depends on the day," adds co-creator Rhode Montijo.

Continued on page 6

COURTESY SIDNEY BALDWIN

'Anger Management' provides audiences therapeutic humor

By LAUREN FREEMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

According to the smiles plastered to virtually all faces that attended the debut of "Anger Management" this weekend, this movie might've been titled "Therapy for Young America." During a time of war and unceasing winter weather, this film provides consistent comic relief. For the majority of local college kids, you couldn't ask for more from this movie. If you've never been a fat cat in a jogging suit, here is your chance. However, those of you who seek mature humor and enlightening plot structure will be disappointed by this formulaic comedy.

Sandler's character Dave Buznik is falsely accused of reacting violently to various ridiculous situations. Forced to undergo an Intensive 30-day anger management program run by sadistic and psychopathic Dr. Rydell (Nicholson) Buznik's life is turned upside down. The final faceoff between patient and therapist is staged at Yankee stadium and makes for a grand final, an over the top resolution that is satisfying in its unashamed idiocy.

It's classic Jack Nicholson. "Anger Management" invites the king of snide remarks and smug grins to co-star along side Adam Sandler.

The chemistry between Adam Sandler and Jack Nicholson is fabulous. For such an unlikely screen pair to work together in a way that neither acts the other under the table is amazing. Although the film allows both actors to shine, the goofball humor and unlikely plot certainly favors the type of comedy that is familiar ground for Sandler. It is not surprising that this film is produced by Happy Madison Productions. On the other hand, this role makes it apparent that Nicholson is one of the most versatile actors of our times as he successfully adapts to the Sandler mold.

The secondary characters are by no means second rate

Continued on page 7

Relaxation technique uses music

Eclectic sounds fill Campus Center concert

By TOM BRENNAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jeremy Occhipinti, an acoustic performer from the Art of Living Foundation, gave a free concert in the Campus Center Friday afternoon. The show was put on by the Art of Living club, which is a graduate student organization at the University of Massachusetts.

Occhipinti, although 26, looked like a typical college kid, dressed in warm-up pants and a fleece pullover upon arrival, carrying an acoustic guitar with a Grateful Dead sticker on it. He played just outside the University Store.

Both light-hearted and funny, Occhipinti started with what he called the performance aspect of his set – running through classics like "Soul Shake Down Party" by Bob Marley and "Love The One You're With" by Stephen Stills – and then moved on to a few call-and-response songs that allowed the crowd to get more involved with the show.

"This is how a performance space turns into a sharing space," Occhipinti said.

Many of the songs, learned during his travels to India in the fall of 2001, were in Sanskrit. According to Occhipinti, the 50,000 year-old language gives off certain vibrations in the body when spoken.

"When singing it call-and-response style, it gives off good vibrations in the environment," Occhipinti said.

After handing out lyric sheets, Occhipinti guided the audience through his own acoustic version of "Ganesha Sharanam" and "Govinda Jaya Jaya," which are classic Indian chanting/folk songs.

Jeremy Occhipinti
Center Center
April 11

The singing from both the performer and the audience gave the Campus Center concourse a church-like atmosphere. People passing by glanced inquisitively, cracking half smiles – not sure exactly what was going on.

"I can see people walking by with jealous looks on their faces," Occhipinti joked, acknowledging the onlookers. "They want to sing."

While spending time in Belize and other parts of Central America – "making tortillas and stone-washing my clothes in the river" – Occhipinti popularized another Indian song called "Jaya Jaya Shiva Shambhu," which spent last summer on Mexico City radio. The song was a softer, more ballad-like number despite having the same call-and-response enthusiasm from the audience.

Occhipinti also performed Bob Dylan's "Quinn the Eskimo." During a meeting between the two, Occhipinti told Dylan he had been using the song to teach music to elementary school kids – Occhipinti's other profession – and Dylan challenged him to teach it to college kids.

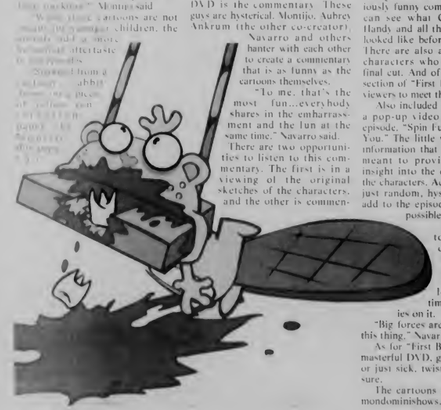
"It's my mission from Bob Dylan," Occhipinti said.

By the end of the concert, the energy had changed from quiet and reserved to upbeat and lively. Occhipinti bobbed

Continued on page 7

HAPPY TREE FRIENDS HITS SHELVES WITH A SPLATTER

Internet cartoon has propelled itself into the world of DVD. When asked if they had any idea the cartoon would become so popular, Montijo quipped, "We knew it all along; we're right on target."



"Speaking for myself, not for Rhode, I'm constantly surprised at how popular it's become," responded Navarro. "We thought after like, the three people that really watch the show bought the DVD, that that would be it."

"Happy Tree Friends: First Blood" has hit the shelves. It's 140 minutes of HTF, and a true fan couldn't be happier. The DVD has plenty of gruesome goodies. Not only can viewers watch 14 episodes and four smoochies (small, interactive, cute and bloody cartoons), but there is also a never-before-seen episode starring Russell the otter. This episode alone is worth buying the DVD. There is also the pilot episode, which is worth a viewing as well.

One of the best things about the DVD is the commentary. These guys are hysterical. Montijo, Aubrey Ankrum (the other co-creator), Navarro and others hanter with each other to create a commentary that is as funny as the cartoons themselves.

"To me, that's the most fun...everybody shares in the embarrassment and the fun at the same time," Navarro said.

There are two opportunities to listen to this commentary. The first is in a viewing of the original sketches of the characters, and the other is commentary on all 14 episodes, with storyboards. Watching a slideshow of the original sketches is a must-see for any HTF fan. Not only do fans get to listen to the uproariously funny commentary, but they can see what Cuddles, Flakey, Handy and all the other characters looked like before they were stars. There are also a few sketches of characters who didn't make the final cut. And of course, there is a section of "First Blood" that allows viewers to meet the characters.

Also included in the DVD is a pop-up video of the first episode, "Spin Fun Knowing You." The little windows of information that pop-up are meant to provide a deep insight into the episode, and the characters. Actually, they are just random, hysterical facts that add to the episode and make it, if possible, even funnier.

And there is more to come. The second DVD looks to be more jam-packed than the first, with a longer running time and more goodies on it.

"Big forces are at work creating this thing," Navarro said.

As for "First Blood," it's a hit, a masterful DVD, great for any party, or just sick, twisted personal pleasure.

The cartoons can be viewed at mondominishows.com.

Coppola to air latest UPN series

By JUSTIN CHELLMAN
Collegian Staff

UPN will kick off its new one-hour drama, directed by Francis Ford Coppola ("The Godfather," "Apocalypse Now") tonight with a special first episode at 9 p.m. and the second episode at 9 p.m. tomorrow (it's regular time). 'Platinum' stars rapper Sticky Fingaz (from hardcore rap group Onyx) as Grady Rhames, co-founder of Sweetback Entertainment, along with his brother Jackson Rhames (played by Jason George). The two brothers have built a record company by themselves, independent from major label backing. The show follows their lives in the midst of trying to save the label in the dog-eat-dog world of the record industry.

The two brothers are close, but have different approaches toward the business. Jackson is the business-minded half, who deals with finance, lawyers and investors. Grady is the street smart half, who knows the artists and makes moves, hustling and keeping the talent happy. Their marquee artist is a hardcore white rapper named Versis, who can't stay out of trouble and never feels like he is getting enough attention from Sweetback.

The brothers are also trying to sign another hot artist who is just ending a contract with another rival hip-hop label. The other label, Conflict Entertainment, is run by Max, played by N'Bushe Wright ("Zebrahead," "Blade," "Dead Presidents"). This cutthroat businesswoman will stop at nothing to end out on top.

'Platinum' is one of the first shows to look at hip-hop from a behind the scenes perspective. Many television shows try to appeal to audiences with a hip-hop feel, but this is a new area for UPN. Past shows directed by established directors have not lived up to their expectations. In many cases, this is due to the director's inability to make the crossover from big screen to small screen. Dealing with the TV stations can also be very different from working with a movie studio. UPN is a motion picture company that, along with other big fish Warner Brothers, recently started running television stations.

Based on the first episode as the only indicator of how 'Platinum' will fare, Coppola has made a fine transition. No signature styles of Coppola's are dramatically apparent, but the show had a very cohesive feel and did a good job at developing most of its characters personalities in just one episode. The Rhames brothers have a very interesting relationship; you can see how the clashing of business and family affects them, and it was surprising to see how at ease Sticky can make the transition from touring with Onyx to acting for Coppola (though the character isn't a very hard stretch for him to play). It was also nice to see N'Bushe Wright again, since she was a great supporting actress on the big screen. Also, the Rhames' younger sister is absolutely gorgeous.

Luckily, those who feel on the seat's edge at the end of the first episode only have to wait 24 hours to find out what happens next.

Continued on page 7

Game two; round six

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon
Jake D. Lewis

Last week's puzzle
KEVIN BACON & ROBERT BLAKE
(No TV credits were allowed)

GOLD SOLUTION: SHORTEST ROUTE, FASTEST TIME - 15 POINTS
Bacon was in "She's Having A Baby" (1988) with Woody Harrelson; Woody Harrelson was in "Money Train" (1995) with Robert Blake; Robert Blake was in Cattle Torpedo Undefeated
Total Accumulated Points: 24

SILVER SOLUTION: FASTEST TIME ONLY - 10 POINTS
Bacon played Apollo 13 (1995) with Tom Hanks; Tom Hanks was in "A League of Their Own" (1992) with Bill Pullman; Bill Pullman was in "Lost Highway" (1997) with Robert Blake; Robert Blake was in Mike Ouellette
Total Accumulated Points: 19

BRONZE WINNER, MOST CREATIVE ROUTE - 5 POINTS
Kevin Bacon was in "Flatliners" with Julia Roberts; Julia Roberts was in "Mary Reilly" with John Malkovich; John Malkovich was in "The Little Shop of Horrors" with Rick Moranis; Rick Moranis was in "Spaceballs" with Bill Pullman (Long Shot); Bill Pullman was in "Lost Highway" with Robert Blake.
Submitted by Jesse Nickerson
UMass Sophomore, English
Total Accumulated Points: 5

HONORABLE MENTION: ALL OTHER PLAYERS WITH VALID SOLUTIONS - 1 POINT
Daniel Reiche (29), Jennifer Eastman-Lawrence (24), Marcos Bachman (20), Marty Norden (20), Adam Shapiro (20), Deb Eskie (14), Mike Dunn (6), Julie Chan (4), John Davenport (4), Matthew Helman (4), Melanie Chase (4), Steve Tricomb (3), Joe Charter (2), Chris Johnson (2), Beth Stone (2), Michael Hale (1), Rob Kavanaugh (1), Lindsay Rosa (1), Jess Wozniak (1).

This game ends on April 25.

The ladies of fashion sense and good manners ready for the dating scene

They say there are no rules to dating. The ladies of "Running with Scissors" disagree. So we are here to provide you with a guide to surviving a first date and hopefully subsequent ones after that.

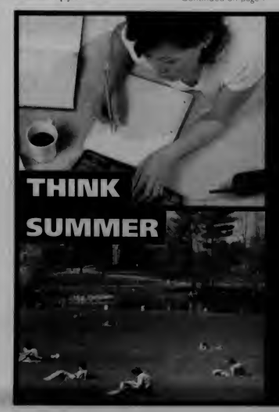
Running with Scissors
Melissa Hammel & Lizzy Nielsen

REMEMBER YOUR MANNERS

The biggest key to dating, at least the very beginning of a dating relationship, is having good manners. Guys, open the doors for your date, pull out chairs and show some basic chivalry. Ladies, offer to pay your own way (even if you don't want to) and try to dress appropriately for the occasion. The ladies of "Running with scissors" find that elegant and classy is better than overly dressed up. Simply put, leave your heels and beaded purses at home in exchange for a comfortable pair of khakis or a nice skirt if the weather permits. On the flip side, however, don't be so casual that you need to wear running pants or a pair of ripped jeans; unless the date involves a jog around the neighborhood, it will never turn out well.

If you are going out to dinner, manners are extremely important. Try to remember all of the things your mother taught you when you were a kid. Keep your elbows off the table, put your napkin in your lap and try not to chew like a cow. Nothing drives someone away quicker than looking at undigested food in your mouth.

HOLD A CONVERSATION



Another important and scary part of dating is trying to hold a conversation. This is why many people (the ladies of "Running with Scissors" included) dread having to hold a conversation with a complete stranger in a social setting. This is why it is important that either you know or are friends with the person you are dating or that you are willing to do your part to be sure that the conversation flows smoothly. For example, if your date asks you what kind of music you like, don't answer, "oh everything." At least give the other person something to build on.

DITCH THE FRIENDS

We know it is hard to quench the urge to introduce your date to all of your closest friends on your first outing. But try to refrain. We know your friends likely want to meet him or her, or you are so excited at the prospect of having this person out with you that you want the person to meet everyone you know. Trust us, though, it is a big mistake. Not only will the other person feel like a show pony who is there for the amusement of you and your closest friends and family, but it will also be impossible to get to know each other one on one. The bottom line is, dating is nerve wracking as it is without adding the

Continued on page 7

Rental Office
1040 N.Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413.549.0145
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving All Of Your Rental Needs

UMass Summer Session 2003
Over 200 credit courses in more than 40 academic departments, evenings, daytime, weekends, and online
Summer Session I: June 2 - July 10
Summer Session II: July 14 - August 20
And one , two , and three week courses
For a free catalog: call 545-2414 or e-mail contined@contined.umass.edu
www.umass.edu/contined
Division of Continuing Education
UMassAmherst

COMPILED BY CAMERON EWALT

AMHERST – Wednesday, April 16 begins the monthly Amherst Cinema Center "Coffee Break." There will be coffee, muffins and regular updates on the campaign for cinema and performing arts in downtown Amherst. An animated virtual tour of the building will be on display to walk you through the current conceptual designs. Meet members of the Board and staff who will be available to discuss the project and its progress in further detail. Activities begin at 8:30-9:30 a.m. at 30 Amity Street.

AMHERST – Sam Hamill, founder of Poets Against the War, will speak at Hampshire College on April 16. Three other poets – Martin Espada, Marilyn Nelson and Doug Anderson – who appear in the Nation Books' forthcoming Poets Against War anthology, will join Hamill.

All four will read their own poems about peace and war, and Hamill will speak about how his response to an innovation to take part in a Whit House symposium called Poetry and the American Voice, led to the formation of an international movement of "word warriors" for peace.

The readings will start at 7:30 p.m. in the Robert Crown Center on the Hampshire College campus and is free to the public.

SALEM, Mass. – Lovewhip will pump out several evenings of energetic dance music, featuring their brand of high-life, juicy juju world pop. It begins April 18 at The Baybridge on Bridge St. Cover is $5. For club info, call 978-745-8881. Their next show will be April 24 at the Land Ho on Orleans, Mass. For door price and times, call (508) 255-5165.

Steve Morse of The Boston Globe summed up the band in his Jan. 31 article: "Lovewhip at Harpers Ferry: Worldbeat rock has a proud legacy in Boston, and Lovewhip fits in nicely. Lovewhip can whip up some of the most feverish dance rhythms in the city. In fact, the dance floor was packed as the band moved stirringly from African soukous to British ska-rock (a great cover of the Selecter's 'Too Much Pressure'), all the way to an original song about Lovewhip's home base of Jamaica Plain. A sizzling set!"

On the Net: http://www.lovewhip.net.

AMHERST – Singer's Project, directed by Elizabeth Hart, will perform Music of the Passion, a program of works by Schutz and Buxtehude, on April 18, at 5:30 p.m. at the Grace Episcopal Church. The program is presented as part of a grant from the Grace Church's new Center for Sacred Music and is designed to offer opportunity for an in-depth musical meditation of texts appropriate for Good Friday.

Singer's Project is a highly regarded professional vocal ensemble of sixteen voices, comprised of some of the area's best-known soloists and professional choristers. It has as its goal to present vocal chamber music of the highest quality, exploring as "projects" the music of a particular composer of style. Admission is free to the general public. The Grace Church is located on the Town Common in Amherst.

CHICOPEE, Mass. – Rickey Smiley, the former host of BET's "Comic View," will headline at The Comedy Connection Hukelau, on Saturday, April 19 starting at 8 p.m.

Despite Smiley's busy television and radio schedule, he still makes time to tour with D.L. Hughley, Sommore, Bruce Bruce and Earthquake on the multi-city Latham Entertainment Presents Tour.

The Hukelau is located at 705 Memorial Drive. Tickets are on sale for $20, to purchase, call (413) 593-5222.

NORTHAMPTON – The Hooked on Swing Society will be having its monthly swing dance on Saturday, April 19, from 8:30-11:30 p.m., at the Northampton Center for the Arts, third floor, 17 New South Street, Northampton. Tricia Lea will play a mix of East Coast swing, West Coast swing and Lindy. There will be basic swing dance lesson starting at 7:30 p.m. Dancers of all ability levels are welcome. Cover is $8 at the door.

On the Net: http://www.hookedonswing.org.

BOSTON – The Museum of Fine Arts Film Program and the Cultural Services of the French Embassy in Boston are proud to present five films by Nicolas Philibert on April 30.

One of today's most sensitive and expressive documentary filmmakers, Philibert crafts works that have the elegance and emotional breadth of great fiction. This five-film retrospective includes Philibert's latest work, the surprise box office smash "To Be and to Have," which presents a year in the life of a one-room schoolhouse in rural France.

Through his sense of narrative and his keen eye, Philibert offers us an unusual and slightly off-kilter viewpoint about prestigious places, such as the Louvre Museum (Louvre City) and the Great Gallery of Evolution (Animals), while putting at the heart of his films the various "secondary characters" who, in the wings, prepare the way the public is received.

The presentation is free and will focus on Nicolas Philibert's work, including clips from his films. A reception will follow. All films were produced in France and are in French with English subtitles.

EASTHAMPTON, Mass. – R&L Productions of Easthampton will present Rodgers and Hammerstein's "The King and I" on May 16 and 17 at 8 p.m. in the Easthampton Town Hall. Tickets: $12 general; $10 students/seniors. Call (413) 527-6190 for reservations and information.

Sandler's wit at its best

Continued from page 5

actors, and thus the film treats viewers to a game of "name that star" similar to "Austin Powers." John Turturro (the war-obsessed Grenada veteran), Woody Harrelson (the drag-queen prostitute) and Heather Graham (the voluptuous Boston Red Sox fan/psycho) create a stupidly outrageous, laugh-until-you-cry atmosphere. Cameos from Bobby Knight, Roger Clemens, Rudy Giuliani and Derek Jeter target the sports fans in the audience. Throughout the film, a Yankees vs. Red Sox theme is appropriate and all too familiar to the East Coast audience.

The humor in "Anger Management" exists in a world where it has become increasingly difficult to speak without being accused of politically incorrectness and where war anxieties are tightening security measures to radical extremes. These are times of restriction, hesitation and meditation and a good portion of the humor is pointed at these uncomfortable times.

Making light of serious issues can result in distasteful insensitivity, but within the confines of this film the jokes are received gratefully. The audience laughs, as Sandler is wrongfully accused of terrorizing an airline attendant and making a racist statement. The audience laughs not because these issues are funny (as they are relevant) but because Sandler's character is innocent and his being subjected to this kind of awkward accusation is all too familiar to Americans today.

We laugh out of relief upon realizing we are all equally affected by these issues. No one can laugh away the seriousness of the state the world is in, but to laugh every now and then is perhaps the therapy we all should seek.

COURTESY SIDNEY BALLWIN

Adam Sandler's "Anger Management" brings humor to all too familiar subjects of importance in daily life.

The ladies ready for the first date

Continued from page 6

additional bonus of dragging extra people along.

The "Ex" factor

The biggest faux pas that any individual can exhibit on a date is any discussion of ex-boyfriends or girlfriends. Nothing ruins a mood faster than bring up "Suzie, my ex-girlfriend with the nice rack who slept with every guy in my fraternity." It expresses bitterness and would give the idea to your date that you might not in fact be over Suzie the Tramp. Ladies, this goes same with you. If your date orders duck off the menu and that coincidentally happens to be your ex-boyfriends favorite dish, refrain from saying so. Once there is any mention of exes, the likeliness of a second date plummets faster than the pants off a drunken frat boy.

NO ELABORATE GIFTS

Girls love presents. That's a given. However, if a man shows up on a first date with an elaborate bouquet of flowers or a dozen roses, that sets off a bizarre alarm in a girl's mind. A man who is purchasing expensive gifts on the first date screams, "I'm a desperate loser," and "I'm clingier than flies on manure." One flower is sweet, but definitely consult friends first. The last thing most girls want is an overly clingly man, as men don't want clingy women. Save the fancy stuff for birthdays and Valentine's Day.

***

There are plenty of common sense rules that we reiterate time and again that apply to first dates, such as hygiene. However, we felt that our quest to make this campus a better smelling and more attractive place has been successful thus far, so continue to refer back to past columns for plenty of worthwhile advice. As usual, call us shallow, but we're also right.

Melissa Hammel and Lizzy Nielsen are Collegian Columnists.

Art of Living Foundation concert

Continued from page 5

and gyrated with the music while the crowd clapped and sang, and more and more people stopped to see what was going on.

"On TV they're celebrating in Baghdad," Occhipinti said. "So, I figured I have to turn up the juice on the college tour, because this is the home of celebration. And bringing everybody together in the form of celebration is a great thing."

Occhipinti called what he was doing "true education," because it gave people "a chance to experience something they've never experienced before."

Taking small breaks throughout the show to sip his drink to soothe his throat from singing, Occhipinti used the time to explain the purpose of the Art of Living Foundation.

The Art of Living ideal is stress reduction through yoga and meditation. There is an Art of Living course designed to bring greater clarity of mind and overall peace and harmony in daily life, which the club offers on campus each semester.

The importance of the course, Occhipinti said, was to give people a presence of mind that allowed them to be in the moment. Through relaxation techniques, people can put down their worries and be present in life.

Occhipinti said his call-and-response shows were one way for people to do just that. He was grateful for the opportunity to play.

"If I didn't share this with you guys," he said, "I think that would be the greatest crime in the world."

Minutemen survive

Leveille, Zywicki pace offense in win over Bulldogs top corner, sending the Minutemen on a four-goal streak that took them into the locker room.

Continued from page 10

"We got real sloppy," Cannella said. "We were up 7-3, and then we come out in the beginning of the third quarter, up by four, and they tie it, and it's not because of our defense, it's because of our offense."

After UMass came out to a quick three-goal lead to open the game, on goals from Leveille and Neil Lundberg just 38 seconds apart, the Bulldogs answered with three of their own, including tallies by Daniel Brillman and Seth Goldberg that came within the final 15 seconds of the first quarter.

Scaglione opened the second quarter by taking a feed from Goldberg up close and burying it to tie the score at three.

The game was particularly physical, and despite a lack of any "big" hits, there was a lot of choppy play, resulting in coinciding Unnecessary Roughness penalties for Fiore and Yale's Gregory Naso at the outset of the second half, as well as two slashing penalties on the Bulldogs.

It also provided offensive fireworks, as freshman Steven Byrnes scored the Minutemen's sixth goal in mid-flight, being thrown to the ground by a check.

"Coming in last year, we knew it was going to be really physical," Cannella said, "and we knew our guys were going to be up for the game. They're very similar to us, a lot of transition goals. I was hoping 14-10, and it was pretty close."

The result was what the Minutemen were looking for.

"We're pretty satisfied," said Zywicki, who quietly notched a hat trick – the game-high goal total for the Minutemen. "There were a few letdowns, and of course there are some parts of the game we're not too happy about, but we won, so we're happy."

Despite the win, though, there were some concerns on Cannella's mind, specifically the Maroon and White's recurring inability to maintain an attack throughout the game.

"If you can't possess the ball and make plays, the other team is going to take advantage of it, and Yale is too good a team not to take advantage of it," he said. "Scaglione, Britt, and Kenworthy, those guys can play."

Added incentive for the Minutemen was the result of the last meeting between the two teams – an 11-9 win for the Bulldogs that ended a nine-game win streak for UMass.

"There was definitely revenge in the back of our minds," Zywicki said. "The fact that they beat us last year gave us an extra push, and we definitely had a little bit of revenge for that game."

COURTESY SARAH KLEIFGEN

Jeff Zywicki continued his stellar season by recording a hat trick in UMass' triumph over Yale Saturday afternoon.

Collins a big factor in win

Continued from page 10

"[The coaching staff] said going into it that he was a smaller kid and he was fast, so they didn't want me getting into that kind of game with him," Collins said. "They wanted me to be him up, use my weight and strength and bully him around, so that's what I did.

"It's easier when you're just getting the ball out to one of your wingmen and taking off, but when it's like that it's just hard work every faceoff," he continued.

And the Maroon and White witnessed firsthand the importance of winning faceoffs at the end of the first quarter, when Kallaugher won consecutive draws and the Bulldogs tallied two goals in the final 20 seconds.

"Anytime you can get one right at the end or right at the beginning, there's momentum," Cannella said. "I thought we played a great first quarter. And then, boom, it's 3-2. But that's lacrosse. We tell our guys all the time, you can't relax for a second in any of these games."

But on top of Collins being happy about his performance, the entire Minuteman lacrosse family had nothing but praises to sing of the freshman following Saturday's victory.

"Dane wants to do well," Cannella said. "There's not a guy on this team that doesn't want to do well, and there's not a guy on this team that doesn't want Dane Collins to do well. He's a really likeable kid and a great team guy. He's probably a little pissed off that he hasn't done well the last couple of games. Hopefully it's a good lesson for him and something he can carry over."

COURTESY SARAH KLEIFGEN

Dane Collins was a vital cog in UMass' machine saturday as the freshman won 14 of 21 faceoffs to help propel the Maroon and White past Yale.

Removing the magic from Opening Day

I eat them, breathe them and sleep them. I cry when they win, I cry when they lose, and I throw things when they lose to the Yankees. They have a hold on me.

They captivate me in April, infuriate me in October and in between they are the lifeline for which I reach to alleviate even the worst of my ills. For those who love them as I do they are more than a team; they are a lifestyle.

They are a constant reminder of all that is good in the world, and because of that they plan for fans whose passion for them is exceeded only by their knowledge and love for the game. They haven't won a World Series in 85 years, yet diehards like myself continue to devote our lives to rooting because without them we wouldn't be complete.

Mike Marzelli

On Saturday, however, the Boston Red Sox made a terrible mistake.

The toughest ticket in town," the home opener at Fenway Park, is a New England holiday. Kids playing hooky and adults calling in sick converge on the little ballpark on the corner of Brookline Ave and Yawkey Way every year to celebrate the return of the Boys of Summer – their heroes Rain, Hope sometimes even snow. Opening Day occupies its magic.

That is, until Saturday.

Following the postponement of the scheduled opener on Friday afternoon due to rain, those in possession of the sacred tickets that would allow them to be the first to cheer on the 2003 version of the Olde Towne Team were instructed to return to the ballyard the very next afternoon, as the game would be played as part of a day-night doubleheader.

However when Mother Nature struck again, the Red Sox decided to eliminate the first game of the double dip and open the season that night, in effect turning Opening Day into Opening Night.

The lone decision to be made by Messrs. Henry, Werner and Lucchino involved the postponement of the game. With the Baltimore Orioles scheduled to leave town Sunday evening and not return until late summer, August 8th was set as the make-up date.

With over six hours remaining until local god Pedro Martinez would hurl the year's first home pitch plateward, the Sox brass had ample time to inform ticket holders for Saturday's game that their game was postponed in order to let those who went through hell and high water to snag "the toughest ticket in town" see what they paid for: Opening Day.

You don't go out of your way to see the second game of the year, but you do for the first. A game had to be postponed, fans had to be disappointed and their plans ruined, but it didn't have to be the blessed few. It didn't have to be the Opening Day crowd.

But it was.

Boys, girls, moms, dads, grandmothers and grandfathers who waited more than six months for one special day were simply told "tough break," with only a ticket to a late-summer game with the bottom dwelling O's to console them. Fans who paid face value to see Tim Wakefield pitch the second home game of the season would now get Martinez and the lure and luster of the first game.

To a Nation that is the fuel behind each of the 82 home games, to the best fans in baseball, the Sox committed a terrible injustice. To tell 35,393 fans that marked this date on their calendars months ago that they would not get what they paid for is ludicrous. It almost broke my heart to watch a little boy walking though Kenmore Square in the rain carrying a sign reading "Rain, Rain go away, it's my first Opening Day," crying because dad couldn't sugar coat waiting until August.

I personally paid 50 dollars for seats three rows from the back of the stadium. I drove two hours home to make the game. I woke up at 8 a.m. for a 2 p.m. game. I sat there for two hours in a driving rainstorm getting dripped on by the scoreboard and whipped around by the wind. My best friend bought a six-dollar bag of peanuts to pass the time. I waited an hour as the rain got worse before they finally called the game, and then I came back the next day to do it all again. But in the end, all I had was a ticket for August 8.

Unwilling to go to such lengths without meeting my objective, I attended Opening Night. I waited an hour in line to haggle my way into getting a ticket – another 27 dollars. I watched Pedro throw the worst game of his career and I watched the Sox lose miserably. But I saw Opening Night.

To those who weren't as lucky, I feel for you. You were screwed by the Boston Red Sox: the team you love to love. You didn't get to see Opening Night, or Pedro, or the new Monster seats. You weren't the first to cheer the local nine. You waited in the rain for nothing, while others were handed the tickets you cherished.

I'm sure you'll all show up on August 8, because you're not the best fans in baseball for nothing. Maybe it'll be great. Maybe Pedro will pitch. Maybe it'll be a beautiful summer evening and the Sox will be in the thick of the pennant race. Heck, maybe you'll even see a no-hitter.

But it won't be the same, because it won't be Opening Day.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian Columnist.

Weir wins Masters title

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) – A Maple Leaf grows among the towering pines of Augusta National.

Mike Weir became the first Canadian to win the Masters, making two clutch pars to force a playoff with Len Mattiace, and winning on the first extra hole with a simple tap-in for bogey.

The green jacket that Tiger Woods had hoped to slip on for a record third straight year is going north of the border.

Weir, who only five years ago had to toil through PGA Tour qualifying school, closed with a bogey-free 68 on a dramatic Sunday at Augusta National, then let Mattiace make all the mistakes in the first Masters playoff in 13 years.

Weir had to sweat over a 5-foot par putt on the 17th and a 6-footer on the 18th, as Mattiace waited on the practice green among chairs that already were set up for the fabled green jacket ceremony.

Minutes later, Weir leaned over to tap in for his only bogey of the day, then raised his arms and embraced his longtime friend and caddie, Brennan Little.

What a breakthrough – not only was he the first Canadian to win a major championship, he became the first left-hander to win a major since Bob Charles in the 1963 British Open.

Mattiace watched a brilliant day at Augusta National crumble quickly.

He chipped in for birdie, holed a 60-foot putt on No. 10, and charged through the back nine on a mission to build a two-stroke lead. But Mattiace bogeyed the 18th for a 65, and he never had a chance in the playoff.

From the middle of the 10th fairway, he hooked his approach wildly to the left and then chipped some 30 feet by the hole. His par putt nearly went off the green, and Mattiace wound up with a double bogey.

Both finished at 7-under 281, the highest winning score at the Masters since 1989.

Weir won for the first time this year, and all six of his PGA Tour victories have been comebacks – none more special than this.

ELSE AMENDOLA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tiger Woods was unable to win his third consecutive Masters, as this year's Green Jacket went to Canadian Mike Weir.

Unable to solve Brodeur, Bruins fall again

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – Martin Brodeur and the New Jersey Devils are a win away from improving on last year's first-round flop.

Brodeur posted his 14th shutout in 70 playoff victories as the Devils beat the Boston Bruins 3-0 Sunday for a 3-0 lead in the best-of-seven series.

New Jersey	3
Boston	0

New Jersey can sweep Tuesday night in Boston and send the Bruins to another early exit. Seeded first in the Eastern Conference last year, they lost in six games to Montreal in the opening round.

Now they face a daunting task. In the 13 series in which they trailed 3-0, the Bruins never made it to a sixth game. They lost seven of those series 4-0 and six 4-1.

The Devils got goals from Scott Stevens in the second period, Jay Pandolfo in the third and John Madden into an empty net with 1:06 left.

Last season, the Devils lost in the first round in six games to Carolina, which went on to the Stanley Cup finals. It was a big disappointment to a team that won the championship in 2000 and lost in the finals in 2001. But this season New Jersey tied Philadelphia for the fewest goals allowed in the regular season, and Brodeur led the NHL with 41 wins and nine shutouts. His 2.02 goals-against average was fourth in the league. On Sunday, he stopped 29 shots.

Boston goalie Jeff Hackett, who missed the previous 12 games since breaking his right index finger March 15, played well and saved 19 of 21 shots. He started in place of Steve Shields, who played in the 2-1 and 4-2 losses in the first two games.

But Brodeur remained unbeaten with his third straight win. All he needed was Stevens' 24th career playoff goal and first this year at 1:11 of the second period.

Stevens shot from the left point into a crowd in front of Hackett. Boston defenseman Ian Moran inadvertently pushed Hackett toward the left side of the net, and the puck sailed by the goalie's right side.

Pandolfo made it 2-0 at 12:00 of the third when he flipped the puck over a diving Hackett. Madden assisted on both goals.

The Bruins couldn't beat Brodeur, who made several excellent saves.

At 7:04 of the second period, defenseman Dan McGillis blocked a puck at his own blue line and broke in alone. He shot from 10 feet, but Brodeur blocked the puck with his left shoulder and caught it in his left hand before tumbling backward in his crease.

Brodeur frustrated the Bruins again early in the third period. He stopped P.J. Axelsson's shot from the right circle with his right pad and the rebound went to his left. Axelsson took another shot, but Brodeur slid across the crease top catch it with his left glove at 1:50.

The Devils made a solid bid for a 2-0 lead on a short-handed breakaway by Madden. But his shot at 16:00 of the second period clanged off the post.

The Bruins started aggressively in a well-played first period. But they were called for the first four penalties of the game, including two against Michal Grosek for interfering with Brodeur.

UMass Summer Session 2003

Check our catalog or website for an up-to-date list of online courses

Summer Session I: June 2-July 10

Summer Session II: July 14-August 20

And one-, two-, and three-week courses.

For a free catalog: call 545-2414 or e-mail contined@contined.umass.edu.

www.umass.edu/contined

Division of Continuing Education

UMassAmherst

CINEMARK
The Best Seats in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/11/03 - Thursday 4/17/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
ANGER MANAGEMENT (PG13) 1:10 1:35 4:00 4:35 7:25 7:50 10:00 10:30*
PHONE BOOTH (R) 1:55 4:50 7:45 9:50*
A MAN APART (R) 1:25 4:25 7:15 9:40*
WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 1:50 4:30 7:25 10:15*
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:10 9:35
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:15 4:10
OLD SCHOOL (R) 10:30
DREAMCATCHER (R) 7:00 10:05
THE CORE (PG13) 1:00 4:05 7:05 10:10
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:15 7:40 10:25
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:20
PIGLET'S BIG MOVIE (G) 1:05 3:00 4:55
THE HUNTED (R) 7:30 9:45
Coming 4/16/03
BULLETPROOF MONK
Coming 4/18/03
HOLES
MALIBU'S MOST WANTED
Senior Show 4/17/03 - PHONE BOOTH
*-no passes/supersavers
•NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & Showtimes available at cinemark.com

Interested in Business?

The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the 2003/2004 school year. Great resume builder! Sophomores/Juniors call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center.
Needs to possess strong business and communication skills

PETER PAN BUS TICKETS
COPIES & FAXES
UPS PACKAGE SHIPPING
$2.00 OFF ANY ROUND TRIP BUS TICKET PURCHASED IN APRIL WITH THIS AD
COPY CENTER
on campus in 101 Herter Hall

Munchie Madness 3-6PM
TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Bacon 'n Cheese Skins 4.48
Fried Shrimp Tempura 3.63
Sweet Potato Fries 3.38
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
ICMP Welcome Here
Closed on Mondays
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
www.judiesrestaurant.com

Jack Daniels presents...
Blackjack Night at McMurphy's Uptown Tavern
Tuesday, April 15th
"Beat the Dealer"
♦♣♥♠
37 North Pleasant St.

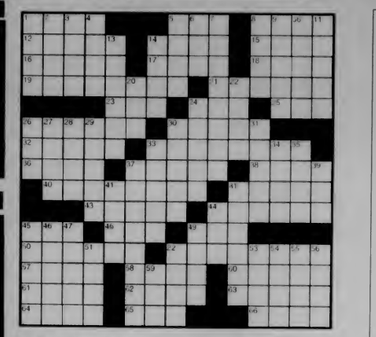
STUDENT TRAVEL
start packing!
LONDON For $258
EURAIL PASSES From $249
HIP HOTELS From $18
(domestic and international)
explore north america
USA ■ CANADA ■ HAWAII
backpacking, cruises, tours and more
Fare is round trip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply
don't miss your big BREAK
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
pick up your complimentary, premiere issue of BREAK magazine at your local sta travel branch.
www.statravel.com STA TRAVEL
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

CONVERSATIONS IN THE DARK • BY T.F.S.

CONVERSATIONS IN THE DARK • BY T.F.S.

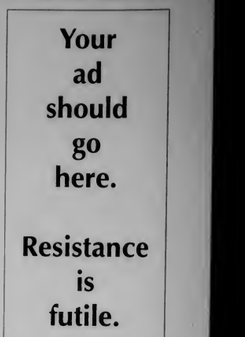
TISIE HOOPER • By Robert D. Kryzkowski

JAWHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Vezzoso



THE TORQUES • By Ken Fredette

THE TORQUES • By Ken Fredette



ACROSS
1 Smart remark
5 Lacking color
8 Jar tops
12 Not rural
14 Chan rejoinder (2 wds.)
15 Sleep — —
16 Like gymnasts
17 Favoritism
18 From a distance
19 Renegade
21 Exempt
23 Old soldier
24 Picnic intruder
25 State-of-the-art
26 Corned beef sandwich
30 Actor — Ford
32 Carries off
33 Intersection
36 Fifty-fifty
37 Climbs a pole
38 Fritz's possessive
40 In flight
42 Ta-da!
43 Sledding places
44 Ambush
45 Position
48 Buy
49 Defense-system initials
50 Exit
52 Chewy candies
57 Wooden strip
58 Hen's dwelling
60 Forbidden
61 Rusted together
62 — out (makes do with)
63 Arm joint
64 Ms. Ferber
65 Male parent
66 Reproving clucks

DOWN
1 Campus square
2 Sudden impulse
3 Heroin kin
4 Ashen
5 Hum
6 Clear — — bell
7 Curiosity
8 Garden soil
9 Teasingly (2 wds.)
10 Actress — Cilento
11 Scatter
13 Brain messengers
14 Help in a crime
20 Sawbuck
22 Attas abhr
24 Taj — (accompany)
26 Mag. abbr.
27 Chalet feature
28 Small guitars
29 Reserve players
30 Toothy smiles
31 "Mr. Spock"
33 Chief Joks —
34 Simon or Diamond
35 Large lizard
37 Maids nipples
39 Vote against
41 Feels ill
42 Movie out
44 Armed conflict
45 Retires or Owens
46 Stared rudely
47 Muscle
49 Lip: slangily
51 Mount of Sicily
52 I-o-l-a lane
53 Texas fountain order
54 Pleiades
55 Gawk
56 Sly dwellers
59 Flap-sheet letters

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

HOROSCOPES

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Today is a good day. Skip if you want, no one will notice.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
If you apply yourself, you will get that job today.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Keep your head up, things will improve.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
If your headache doens't get better, take two extra-strength Tylenol.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Run really fast today, because it's nice out.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Until the sun goes down, stay out of the water.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
When playing pool, keep in mind not to hit the 8 ball too soon.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
if you go to the Blue Wall Pub tonight, get a beer.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Stay away from the library today, it's not worth it.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
If you go out in public, more people will see you.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Put yourself into the running for something spectacular today.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
There are things that make you tired, so get away from them.

Your ad should go here.

Resistance is futile.

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

MONDAY
• High: 63
• Low: 40

TUESDAY
• High: 80
• Low: 51

WEDNESDAY
• High: 78
• Low: 37

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Garden Vegetable Soup
• Cavatelli Supreme
• N.E. Lite Scrod with Herb Topping
• California Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER
• Garden Vegetable Soup
• Chicken Mamou
• Southern Fried Steak
• Thai Seitan (vegan)
• Vegan Cutlets

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald Ling
COPY EDITOR
Matt Despres
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION STAFF
Scott Ciruso

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Relax, alright! Don't try to strike everyone out. Strikeouts are boring. Besides that, they're fascist. Throw some ground balls, it's more democratic."
- Crash Davis

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups: Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condominium for rent excellent condition 1/2 mile away from campus 4 bedroom apt for female roommates $550 full room, $350 to share plus utilities. 413-592-0540

Apt. located in Brandywine Furnished Apt. Seeking Female Roomate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sandy @ 413-546-0489

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing! 1 &2 Bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlycolonialty.com 253-7879

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlycolonialty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

95 Geo Prism Purple 95K 5 Speed good condition $3000 OBO 413-665-3022

COMPUTERS

Virtually new, 40G, 128 Ram, CD-R/W, Windows XP, more! $700 ABS. Adjustable table $200 256-1525

EMPLOYMENT

The Daily Collegian is hiring outgoing students to fill advertising positions for Fall 2003. No Experience Necessary. Call 545-3500 or come to 113 Campus Center Basement

WSI/Lifeguards The Town of Amherst, Department of Leisure Services and Supplemental Education (LSSE) Aquatics Program is now accepting WSI applications for summer 2003 season. All Applicants must possess current WSI and Lifeguard certifications. Previous experience preferred. $8.19-9.48 hr Application deadline: 4/21 Applications are available from the Town Hall Human Resources Dept., 4 Bolmwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Opportunity Employer

EMPLOYMENT

Activist Best Summer Job in Town Sleep late, work outdoors, cool people, cool boss. Great hours! *protect our air and water *fight corporate polluters *defend public health *promote renewable energy Earn $4,000-5,000 this summer Call today, Start tomorrow 413-584-9830

Summer Office Help Amherst Leisure Services is looking for a summer registration clerk. Duties include service, accepting registrations, data entry, answering phones, filing, and other clerical duties. Hours are M-F 9 a.m.-4 p.m. Pay range is $7.44-8.61/hr. depending upon experience. Apply at Human Resources, Town Hall, 4 Bolmwood Ave., Amherst, MA 01002. AA/EOE

Technical Writer for Policy Analysis Consulting/Software firm. Resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or FredH@REMI.com

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors – Town of Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. old. $ range for both positions: $8.19-9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week, June 30- Aug. 15 Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept. 4 Bolmwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

EMPLOYMENT

Economic / Business Development Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com.

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-9889 ext 516

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

EMPLOYMENT

Fall internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands on experience in the legal field- work directly with attorneys and clients- Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary; training provided. Deadline to begin application process is 4/22/03. Contact the Legal Services Office- 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

FOR SALE

For Sale 1 full couch, 1 love seat and 1 twin mattress and box. Great condition Call 549-4972

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TTUO Turntables 1 Gemini FMX50 Mixer Records Extra $550 Call Call 413-546-0701

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedroom house available this summer/ next year. Beautiful location, 10 minutes from Amherst Center. Call 256-0613

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1678

ROOMMATE WANTED

For Fall Semester on Main St. $340 plus utilities per month 256-4257

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-0992

SUBLET

Large Furnished one bedroom Apartment on bus line $660/month. 781-910-7964

Puffton Sublet from June 1st- August 31st 3beds 2baths 1140 per month Call Mark 253-1479

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean only $250 round trip! Europe $189 one way! Other world wide destinations cheap. Book on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WANTED TO RENT

Furnished Summer Rental or House share Male, non-smoker, no pets Will pay up to $500.00 508-240-3069

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 14, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen survive scare

UM slips past Yale

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With under two-and-a-half minutes to go in the third quarter, and the score tied 8-8, Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella took a timeout and found himself in an unfamiliar position.

"We're dealing with a little adversity," Cannella said, "and it was the first time I yelled at the team in the huddle all year."

UMass	12
Yale	10

Whatever he yelled worked, as UMass held off a determined Yale comeback to defeat the Bulldogs 12-10 at Garber Field Saturday.

UMass improved to 9-1 on the season, while Yale dropped to 7-3.

Chris Fiore was one of four Minutemen to score two goals in the game, and notched the game winner with less than 12 minutes to go.

Fiore streaked down the right side, and Kevin Leveille (two goals, one assist) popped a short pass over to him. Fiore immediately took the feed and fired a 30-foot laser that beat Bulldog goaltender Roy Skeen for the Maroon and White's 11th goal of the day with 11:47 to go.

The goal gave the Minutemen a final push after the Bulldogs came back from three and four-goal deficits to make what appeared to be a possible runaway UMass victory a tense affair.

At the start of the third quarter, the Minutemen held an 8-4 edge. Ned Britt did a few quick spins to get to the front of the UMass goal, and bounced a shot past Minuteman keeper Bill Schell to start a four-goal run.

Michael Scaglione followed with a man-up goal after UMass sophomore Greg Scott was sent off for one minute. Scott Kenworthy then scored two goals in less than a minute to tie the score at eight, prompting the tongue lashing from Cannella.

After jumping out to an early 3-0 lead, the Minutemen allowed three unanswered Yale tallies before junior Jeff Zywicki put on a couple of jukes and fired a shot to the far

Continued on page 7

GERALT TINDOG/COLLEGIAN

Sean Morris tallied a goal and an assist as UMass was able to hold off Yale and win its second in a row Saturday afternoon at Garber Field.

Faceoff specialist up to challenge

By MATT BRADY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The challenge was there, from his coaches, from his teammates and most of all, from his adversary. He had moments of inconsistency earlier in the season, and the athlete he was up against was one of the best in the country.

But Dane Collins was ready. And his coaching staff knew it.

"If you noticed, Jeff Zywicki took the first faceoff each of the first nine games," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "Dane Collins took the first faceoff today. We trust him. We have faith in him.

"We challenged Dane all week and it was great to see a young guy like that stand up to a challenge – [Yale's Dan Kallaugher] was winning 64, 65 percent of the faceoffs coming in," he continued. "That was probably the key to the game, our ability to win faceoffs when they scored, rather than just when we scored."

And from the first faceoff, Collins established himself. He won that head-to-head matchup. UMass scored. He won the next faceoff. Again, the Minutemen posted a tally. He won the third. And the Maroon and White was controlling the game.

"You can come back when you lose early in the game but it helps your confidence so much when you win early in the game, because you know you've got the kid," Collins said. "So you know deep down in the fourth quarter you're going to be there with the guy."

Kallaugher entered the contest having won nearly 65 percent of his draws, and was one of the top freshmen in the country in that respect. And from beginning to end, he was dominated by a fellow rookie who had struggled at points this season.

"We worked a lot all week because the kid is probably top five in the country," Collins said, "so we knew if we were going to win the game, me and [fellow faceoff man] Jake [Deane] had to have a big day so we worked on his move a lot and tried to get after him as much as we could."

But it wasn't just Collins' performance (14-of-21 on faceoffs) that was a keystone to UMass' 12-10 victory. His wingmen also had one of their best games as a unit, helping the Minutemen outdraw the Bulldogs 17-8.

"We worked on it all week and it came together today finally," freshman Steven Byrnes said. "We were struggling a couple of the last games and we figured we had to get it up and we did today."

"This week in practice, Dane definitely used us more and started talking to us more so now we're all on the same page. I feel like," senior Chris Fiore said. "He stepped it up unbelievably compared to the past couple games. If he did lose [the faceoff], he stopped the break, and when he won it, we had a break."

Collins and Kallaugher had many faceoffs where they were tied up right off the whistle for extended periods of time. While that would appear to indicate an even matchup, in reality, it was to the benefit of the Minutemen.

Continued on page 7

Revenge served

UMass avenges pair of losses to Spiders

By ARI JANKELOWITZ
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last year the Richmond Spiders defeated the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team twice. One of those games led to an early exit for the Minutewomen in the Atlantic 10 playoffs.

This year, the Minutewomen drew first blood in a hotly anticipated rematch, and soundly defeated the Spiders 11-6.

UMass midfielder Kelli Kurtz had herself quite a day, scoring two goals in addition to covering the Spiders' best offensive player, Polly Purcell.

UMass	11
Richmond	6

The Minutewomen were held scoreless for the first 20 minutes of the second half, but after a goal by UMass midfielder Maura McGarrity and a timeout, the Minutewomen went on a 3-1 run to bring the final score to 11-6.

Kurtz added her second goal of the game during the last offensive spurt, while Lydia Robinson contributed two goals to give her a hat trick, giving her eight goals in the last three games.

In the beginning of the second half, the Spiders looked to close the gap. Down by four, Richmond got two goals in the first 15 minutes of the half, but the Spiders would only score once more and could never pull closer than two for the rest of the game.

Robinson's last goal of the game came with :02 seconds remaining on the clock after Purcell netted the final Richmond goal with one minute and 43 seconds to go.

"It feels good," said Kurtz. "Nice to stick it to them at the end, they did it to us before. It was really good to come out on top this time."

The Spiders got on the board first just 48 seconds into the game as leading scorer Katie Dolan slipped one past keeper Cyndi Doyle for an early 1-0 advantage.

In keeping with the season-long pattern of shaky first-half play, the next six minutes of the first period were sloppy for the Minutewomen, with several players dropping easy passes and misplaying balls.

However Hope Zellinger's tally at the 23:04 mark set off a celebration as the team erupted, with the players on the field running over in a line to the sidelines to slap sticks with the players on the bench.

Lydia Robinson fed off the newfound energy and scored on a free position shot with 21:54 left to play. The goal would be followed just a minute later as Iada Emery scored and the Minutewomen went up by two, forcing the Spiders to call a timeout and regroup.

Even after the timeout, Richmond could not get anything going and went into halftime down 7-3. UMass capitalized by continuing to play well in the second half.

"We broke it down to thirds," commented UMass head coach Carrie Bolduc. "[We] turned the first half into the game. Instead of both halves counting we only thought about the first thirty minutes."

"We set goals for each ten minute period," said Bolduc. "To win we needed to come out in the first half and we did."

Emery led the first half charge with three goals and one assist.

Tempers flared with just over a minute to go in the game, as Polly Purcell took out her frustration on UMass goalie Cyndi Doyle and received a yellow card for the hit.

"She's [Purcell] decent," said Kurtz. "She scored a couple goals today, but I've definitely played against more competitive players. She is a hot head."

Kurtz scored twice for the first time since her hat trick against George Washington last Sunday and has six goals for the year.

The Minutewomen hit the road this weekend as they will travel to Pittsburgh to face Duquesne. They will follow that up by heading to Olean, N.Y. for another league contest with St. Bonaventure.

DEMAUTLOW/COLLEGIAN

Andrea Valachovic and the Minutewomen avenged a pair of losses last season by downing the Richmond Spiders 11-6 at Garber Field Saturday.

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 117

Loyalists overrun in Tikrit

PHOTO BY KEVIN P. CASEY/AP

U.S. marines look for resistance, as they secure an area in Tikrit, Iraq yesterday. John Kelly of the 1st Marine Division, commander of the Tikrit operation, said Tikrit was "the heartland of the beast," the beast being Saddam.

By BORZOU DARAGAHI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TIKRIT, Iraq (AP) – U.S. Marines overran loyalists staging a last stand Monday at Saddam Hussein's hometown of Tikrit, ending the major combat phase of the Iraq war.

Saddam's presidential palace was seized without a fight, the military said, and large numbers of U.S. troops were in central Tikrit by Monday afternoon.

"There was less resistance than we anticipated," said Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks, U.S. Central Command spokesman, noting that Tikrit defenders had been subjected to airstrikes for several days. He said Marines attacked Tikrit from the south, west and north, capturing a key Tigris River bridge in the center of town.

Massive explosions, billowing smoke and flashes of light could be seen and heard from Tikrit late Monday. "I think that's a city going down," said Capt. Christopher Aaby, 33, of Menominee, Mich.

U.S. forces had suspected about 2,500 holdouts from the Republican Guard and the paramilitary Saddam's Fedayeen - and possibly officials from the Iraqi president's regime - were holed up in the city, 90 miles north of Baghdad.

By late afternoon, however, people began to venture from homes and walk in the streets, with families and children enjoying a beautiful spring afternoon. Shops remained closed. There were no reports of looting.

North of the city, Brig. Gen. John Kelly of the 1st Marine Division, commander of the Tikrit operation, said Tikrit was "the heartland of the beast," the beast being Saddam.

"If you were a committed regime ... guy, I guess you'd come here," he said.

Describing a pattern in cities taken over by coalition troops, Kelly said Tikrit was no different.

"It was a ghost town when we first arrived," he said. "Then they (residents) start sticking their noses out and approaching us and start pointing out where Baathists are, and the Fedayeen and the caches of weapons."

Baathists are members of Saddam's Baath Party. Some Marines in the streets on Monday were wearing pink flowers on their uniforms, peace offerings from neighborhood residents.

Unlike other major cities, however, many portraits, banners and statues of Saddam remained undamaged.

Abdul al-Jabouri, part of a large group of men gathered at a gas station, said: "We like Saddam Hussein and he has educated our people and we will support him to the end."

But another man approached and said, "Long live the United States."

Some Republican Guard and Special Republican Guard forces abandoned their equipment in recent days, said Capt. Frank Thorp, a Central Command spokesman.

He said U.S. forces to the south and west of the city had created checkpoints to prevent regime leaders from escaping. He said initial fighting had been fierce, but there was no information on casualties. At a checkpoint in the north of the city, U.S. troops stopped and searched vehicles, looking for weapons. One Arab resident said he was carrying three Kalashnikov rifles in his pickup truck because he was afraid of looting. A Marine shook his head in disbelief.

Asked where all the Baathists were, taxi driver Jamal Ahmad said, "they disappeared, they evaporated."

Marine First Lt. Greg Starace of Paramus N.J., said his unit entered the city just after dawn Sunday and estimated at least 3,000 American troops were now in Tikrit. Tanks and Humvees rumbled through, and a line of armored vehicles was parked in front of a bazaar.

"As soon as we got here we had some engagements against some small pockets of resistance," he said.

The morning combat came after a night of heavy bombing and after Marines made several forays in and out of the city Sunday, drawing occasional small-arms fire and rocket-propelled grenades.

But, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said there was "no organized resistance" in Tikrit.

"A lot of people have disappeared, including the leadership of the Baath party," Rumsfeld told MSNBC on Sunday. "There are people (in Tikrit) who do not have a lot of admiration for the Baathist regime ... who are helping" the Americans."

The Arab TV network Al-Jazeera reported that tribal groups in Tikrit offered to negotiate peace with U.S. forces and hand over some Baath party leaders in town.

Library celebrates W.E.B. DuBois's 100- year-old book now until May 9

By IKAIKA C. ARNADO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts will host the 100th year anniversary of "The Souls of Black Folk" by W.E.B DuBois, with an exhibit and a series of events.

The exhibit is located on the 25th floor of the W.E.B Du Bois Library, and will be on display until May 9. It includes history, photographs, original handwritten pages of "The Souls of Black Folk" and letters to DuBois by readers of his work.

"People wrote to him about all kinds of issues: busing, education for young children, all kinds of issues," Bill Thompson, head of the Special Collections and Archives at UMass, said.

On Wednesday, April 30, Professor Robert Paynter of the department of anthropology will conduct a tour of the DuBois home in Great Barrington.

"Bob Paynter, who's in the Anthropology Department here, led a dig there a number of years ago. He's going to be leading a tour of the home site. There's no building there, but they're going to tour the site," Thompson said.

The foundation of DuBois' home is a landmark because of DuBois's importance in Civil Rights.

"Now where the home site was, which is now only a foundation, has been declared a national landmark," Thompson said.

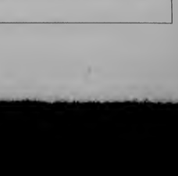
A presentation will be held on May 1 from 10 a.m. to noon at the Campus Center, room 163C. The exhibition will include speeches from Professor Esther Terry of the W.E.B. Du Bois Department of Afro-American Studies, Professor Phil Zuckerman of Pitzer College, Professor David Blight of the Department of History at Amherst College, Professor Ernest Allen of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies and Professor Gerald Friedman of the Department of Economics.

"We're going to have talks on education, on reconstruction, on religion and economics by professors from here at the University and one at Amherst College," Thompson said.

Horace Clarence Boyer and the Jubilee Four will be performing the Sorrow Songs. These songs are written in the beginning of each chapter in "The Souls of Black Folk."

"They are going to be singing some of the sorrow songs," Thompson said. "[Boyer] ... has taken the music at the beginning of each chapter and has been able to determine what the song is that goes with it."

Professor John Edgar Wideman, Department of English, was chosen to be the keynote speaker.



"John Edgar Wideman is going to be the keynote speaker; he's an English professor here, a novelist, an essayist, and he's also written an introduction to an edition of 'The Souls of Black Folk'," Thompson said.

After the formal presentation, there will be a belated birthday celebration for DuBois.

"I hope the students come," Thompson said. "I think there is a lot for everyone to get out of it. It's going to be a lot of fun as well as informative."

"The Souls of Black Folk" is seen by some to have inspired the confidence for African American's to pursue civil rights.

"People see this as a document that sort of changed history; it changed the course of African American Civil Rights," Melissa Watterworth, Technical Archivist at the Special Collection and Archives, said. "It made people sit up and have pride in their history. It made people think that the history of African Americans is different than other Americans."

W.E.B. DuBois

Avid readers of the book felt that it is more than a civil rights debate between Booker T. Washington and DuBois.

"There is a chapter in 'The Souls of Blacks Folk' that talks about his opinions that differ from Booker T. Washington," Watterworth said. "A lot of times when people read 'The Souls of Black Folk' that's what they think is the primary focus of the book. It's actually a variety of topics talked about in the book: autobiographical things as well as civil

Continued on page 3

Police find drugs at Baker Hall

By DAN LAMOTHE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts Police searched a Baker Hall dorm room early Thursday morning, seizing multiple drugs, drug paraphernalia, cash, weapons and written records.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

FANNING FLAMES
WAR COULD SPURN MORE ANTI-AMERICANISM
PAGE 4

'ROSENCRANTZ' DELIVERS
PLAY IS AN EXHILARATING RIDE
PAGE 5

DOUBLE-SHUTOUT
HOLTZ, ARNOLD HOLD DOWN URI
PAGE 10

UMPD forces arrested Andrew D. Crossman, 20, of 2 Rice St. in Hudson, Mass., and charged him with possession of class B, C and D substances. Crossman was also charged with carrying a dangerous weapon, a knife with brass knuckles attached, possession of a hypodermic needle and possession of a class B substance with intent to distribute.

UMass police spokesman Jim Lyons said the search, carried out at 6:17 a.m., was conducted with a warrant based on the investigation of UMPD detectives.

"There were a bunch of different pills that would normally be prescription pills," Lyons said.

Several other things were seized, including about $200 in cash and scales. Lyons said the police officers searching the room also found white powder residue that could potentially be cocaine, a straw and a mirror. It has not yet been determined if the residue is cocaine though, according to Lyons.

"All this stuff has been sent off to labs to confirm what it is," Lyons said.

Several other drug busts have been made on campus this semester.

On March 3, police officers made a search of a room in Coolidge Tower. They seized several bags of marijuana, a digital scale and $378 in cash. Two arrests were made in the incident. Jacob Lasecki, 19, of Leominster, Mass., was arrested and charged with possession of a class D substance and possession of a class D substance with intent to distrib-

Continued on page 3

ANDREW TAMEL/FINANCIAL EDITOR

Demonstration turns ugly

An anti-abortion demonstration took a turn for the worst on the student union lawn yesterday afternoon. The demonstration, sponsored by the Republican Club, included a display of over 100 white crosses to represent aborted children. UMass Police were called to settle an altercation between some students who were upset by the display, and the pro-life demonstrators.

police log

Police find multiple drugs during room search in Baker Hall

compiled by Dan Lamothe

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 2003

12:31 a.m.: A suspicious person was reported on Career Center Way. Jesse I. Luberoff, 19, of 120 Pulpit Hill Rd. in Amherst was arrested and charged with trespassing.

10:32 a.m.: A caller reported her hubcaps might have been taken from her vehicle the Friday before while it was parked in lot 68 on Governors Drive.

10:36 a.m.: A generator was reported stolen from a truck in lot 65.

1:20 p.m.: A palm pilot was reported stolen from the Computer Science Annex on N. Service Drive.

8:01 p.m.: A medical emergency was reported in the Totman Physical Education Building on Eastman Lane.

TUESDAY, APRIL 8

2:10 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in the North Village Apartments on N. Pleasant Street.

6:45 a.m.: A third-party rape that happened in September 2002 was reported in the Southwest Residential Area.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9

8:40 a.m.: Parking services sent someone to the station to report a broken window on a vehicle in the lot by the handicapped parking spaces in lot 12 on Forestry Way.

10:21 a.m.: A traffic stop was made on Massachusetts Avenue when an officer saw a vehicle towing another vehicle with a rope.

5:36 p.m.: A fire alarm was pulled in Knowlton Hall on N. Pleasant St. A caller reported that it was a cooking fire and that she put it out. She pulled the alarm. No damage was sustained to the stove or building.

THURSDAY, APRIL 10

6:17 a.m.: Police searched a room in Baker Hall on Clark Hill Road, seizing multiple drugs, cash, weapons and paraphernalia. Andrew D. Crossman, 20, of 2 Rice St. in Hudson, Mass., was arrested and charged with possession of class B, C and D substances with intent to distribute, carrying a dangerous weapon (a knife with brass knuckles attached) and possession of a hypodermic needle. White residue, a straw and a mirror were also seized from the room. It has not yet been determined if the residue is cocaine.

7:01 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Pierpont Hall on Fearing Street. A 19-year-old male reportedly collapsed. The Amherst Fire Department (AFD) was dispatched. An ambulance responded and transported the person to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

12:58 p.m.: Larceny was reported in Boyden Gym on Commonwealth Avenue. $1,600 was reported stolen sometime between 8 p.m. the day before and 6 a.m. that morning.

FRIDAY, APRIL 11

1:29 a.m.: A witness to a motor vehicle accident reported seeing a vehicle driving fast and hitting a pole. Rit Da Son, 19, of 61 Johnson St. in Springfield, Mass., was arrested and charged with operating under the influence of alcohol, leaving the scene of property damage, possession of a false or stolen Registry of Motor Vehicles document and possession of a false liquor ID card.

1:42 a.m.: A lounge window was reported smashed on the top floor of MacKimmie Hall on Sunset Avenue. Smashed windows were also found in the stairwell between the second and third floor and the first and second floor.

2:41 a.m.: A traffic stop on Stadium Access Road resulted in the arrest of Gaudner Baum Matellus, 22, of 22 Norway Ave. in Trenton N.J., was charged with unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle, operating a vehicle with no inspection sticker and a number plate violation.

3:42 a.m.: A report of brush on fire outside of Brett Hall was made.

4:52 a.m.: An officer reported that he observed a vehicle in an accident on Sylvan Drive in lot 44. The subject in the vehicle attempted to flee the scene. Kenneth. E. Bowen, 19, of 33 Harris Rd. in Salem, Conn., was arrested and charged with operating under the influence of alcohol and leaving the scene of property damage.

11:36 p.m.: A male refusing to show a proper ID at the door of Chadbourne Hall was reported. The subject also reported had an open container of beer.

Justice Dept. says Moussaoui can be tried in civilan court in Virginia

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) – The Justice Department said Monday that accused terrorism suspect Zacarias Moussaoui's rights can be protected in a civilian court, signaling the government is not prepared to move the case to a military tribunal.

The department was responding to a stark warning nearly two weeks ago from U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema, who said she was disturbed by the government's "shroud of secrecy" toward Moussaoui and questioned whether his case could proceed in a civilian court.

"The government is fully confident that the court will be able to try this case consistent with the demands of the law," the prosecutors' written brief said.

The judge ordered the government to respond to Moussaoui, who is representing himself and complained he was not receiving enough information to craft a defense.

Moussaoui is not entitled to classified documents, and has made his defense more complicated by not cooperating with court-appointed lawyers who can see the secret material.

Nonetheless, the case has come down to a clash between a defendant's right to information that could help his defense and the need to safeguard national security.

Prosecutors said both could be protected, and argued they have turned over all the unclassified material that Moussaoui is entitled to have. Only unclassified documents would be used in a trial, they pointed out.

"He is not entitled to a preview of the government's theory in this case, or as the defendant put it, to the government's 'opening statement' to the jury," the brief said.

Brinkema, in addition to questioning the government's secrecy toward the defendant, has also ruled that Moussaoui can have access to at least one al-Qaida prisoner, suspected Sept. 11 coordinator Ramzi Binalshibh. Moussaoui has asked Brinkema for access to other prisoners, including the alleged mastermind of the attack, Khalid Shaikh Mohammed.

Prosecutors have appealed that order, reportedly arguing such access could harm a sensitive interrogation.

The government has the option of moving the case to a military tribunal if prosecutors can't win in the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond.

A tribunal could allow greater secrecy and fewer rights for a defendant. However, while intelligence agencies and some Pentagon officials might consider the tribunal a better option, Attorney General John Ashcroft has publicly fought for a civilian trial.

Moussaoui is the lone defendant in the United States charged as a conspirator with the Sept. 11 hijackers and could face the death penalty if convicted. He has admitted belonging to al-Qaida but denied he was part of the Sept. 11 plot.

Moussaoui complained the government has changed the theory of its case, and asserted he was wrongly kept in the dark because the theory is classified.

Moussaoui said the government switched from calling him the 20th hijacker to describing him as the "fifth pilot," suggesting an additional attack by another hijacked aircraft.

The government said Moussaoui's comments about a change in theory "are as irrelevant as they are inaccurate."

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Is Looking For a
Bright, Talented, Multitasking Wizard!

Now Accepting Applications For:
'HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGER'

*Freshmen and Sophomores preferred
*Great Resume Builder
*10 hours per week

Applications Available in Room 113 Campus Center Basement. Attn: Mia Ferolito
-Please Bring Resume-

Daily Collegian
Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives for Fall 2003

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, for more information.

All Majors & Classes Welcome to Apply

Drug bust at Baker

Continued from page 1

ute. Stephanie Lamrose, also of Leominster, was arrested and charged with possession of a class D substance.

On Jan. 31, UMPD officers responded after a call was made reporting a large party in Washington Tower. The responding officers obtained a search warrant for a room. They arrested Kevin M. Doherty, 19, of Revere, Mass., and charged him with possession of a Class D substance (marijuana) with intent to distribute, possession of a Class C substance (mushrooms) and possession of alcohol while under the age of 21.

The UMPD made the biggest drug bust in 30 years at the University on Nov. 12. Over $24,000 in cash, a large amount of marijuana and drug paraphernalia were seized when officers entered a room in Kennedy Tower while executing an unrelated search warrant for a stolen laptop computer traced by OIT to the room. The laptop was also recovered.

The two roommates were immediately arrested and charged. Steven Y. Nguyen, 20, of Southborough, Mass., was charged with receiving stolen property valued at more than $250 (the laptop), possession with intent to distribute a Class D substance (marijuana) and possession of a Class D substance. His roommate, Yuta Nakamura, 22, of Singapore was charged with possession of a Class D substance.

Another large drug bust involving UMass students was also made on Feb. 20 off-campus, with two related searches in Amherst apartments resulting in the seizure of four pounds of high-grade Canadian marijuana, $12,000 in cash, three safes and a BB gun from 394 Puffton Village and several different kinds of drugs from an apartment at 44 Mill Hollow Apartments on Summer Street. The seizure included hundreds of Adderal pills, a prescription amphetamine and medicine similar to Ritalin.

UMass student Jesse S. Schauffer, 22, was arrested in connection with the Puffton raid in his apartment and was charged with possession of a class D substance, marijuana, with intent to sell.

UMass student Leah B. Kimmel, 22, of Swampscott, Mass. was one of three people arrested in the Mill Hollow raid. Kimmel was charged with possession of a class B substance (oxycodone) and possession of a class D substance.

JAMIE LOO/COLLEGIAN

Celebrating Asian culture

Students performed "Singkil," a Filipino Muslim dance based on the legend of Princess Gandingan, at Asian night on Friday. The 20th annual event featured keynote speaker Angela Oh and various performances.

DuBois's book 100 years old

Continued from page 1

rights and the poverty condition."

DuBois was the first black man to receive a degree from Harvard. Between 1888 and 1892, he received a baccalaureate degree in philosophy and a masters degree in History.

"He's best known for getting a degree from Harvard," Thompson said.

DuBois is seen by some to be one of the founding fathers of the civil rights movement.

"Civil Rights, that was his primary focus most of his life," Watterworth said. "He started the Niagara Movement – which eventually became the NAACP."

ANDREW TAMULTS/COLLEGIAN

Bill Thompson tends to the "Souls of Black Folk" exhibit in the W.E.B. Du Bois library. The exhibit celebrates the 100 year anniversary of the book "The Souls of Black Folks" by W.E.B. Du Bois.

Bush considers steps against Syria

By SCOTT LINDLAW
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – The Bush administration said Monday it will consider diplomatic, economic and other steps against Syria, saying it was concerned that Damascus is harboring fleeing Iraqi leaders and developing its chemical weapons capabilities.

"We believe in light of this new environment, they should review their actions and their behavior," said Secretary of State Colin Powell. He said other nations in the Middle East might want to review past behavior as well now that Saddam Hussein's government has collapsed.

"With respect to Syria, of course we will examine possible measures of a diplomatic, economic or other nature as we move forward," Powell said.

The secretary said he had no specifics on who the Iraqi leaders are who have allegedly fled to Syria. "I can't quantify how many might be slipping across the border," Powell said.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Ari Fleischer had a similar message. Fleischer rejected Syria's fresh denials of having a chemical weapons program. "It is well corroborated" that Syria has such a program, Fleischer said.

"Syria needs to cooperate," Fleischer said.

Earlier, President Bush was careful to stop short of threatening war against Syria, though he warned the country not to take in Iraqi leaders. He also charged that Syria has chemical weapons.

"They just need to cooperate," Bush said Sunday. Syria flatly denied the accusations.

"Of course Syria has no chemical weapons," Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Bouthayna Shaaban told Lebanon's Al-Hayat-LBC satellite channel late Sunday.

Syria has also denied that any members of the Iraqi leadership had fled to Damascus and says it has closed its border with Iraq.

America's principal ally in the Iraq war downplayed the prospect of bringing the war to Syria.

"We have made it clear that there are no plans for Syria to be next on the list," Foreign Secretary Jack Straw told reporters in Manama, Bahrain, the first leg of a Mideast tour to discuss rebuilding Iraq. "But there are questions that the Syrians need to answer."

Straw was also less certain than his U.S. counterparts of accusations that Syria has weapons of mass destruction.

"I'm not sure, and that's why we need to talk to them about it," Straw said.

Fleischer sidestepped commenting on Straw's remarks on Monday.

Powell, talking to reporters at the State Department, suggested it was not known how many Iraqi leaders may have crossed the border into Syria.

He said, "these are the kinds of individuals who should not be allowed to find safe haven in Syria. And this is a point we have made to the Syrians directly."

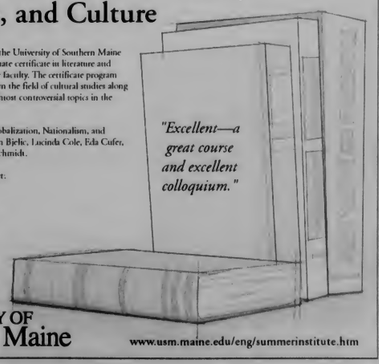
"We're told the border is closed but as you know its a rather porous border," Powell said.

"We have a new situation in the region, and we hope that all nations in the region review their past practices and behavior," Powell added.

Other top U.S. officials, in remarks Sunday, reflected the administration's growing frustration with Syria.

Familiarity breeds content.

AMHERST downtown
we have it all!



Graduate Certificate in Theory, Literature, and Culture

The Department of English at the University of Southern Maine offers an interdisciplinary graduate certificate in literature and culture designed for students or faculty. The certificate program features prominent scholars from the field of cultural studies along with classes on the newest and most controversial topics in the humanities and social sciences.

Topic and faculty for 2003: Globalization, Nationalism, and Nostalgia with Professors Dusan Bjelic, Lucinda Cole, Eda Cufer, Fredric Jameson, and Ronald Schmidt.

For further information, contact:
Prof. Shelton Waldrep
Department of English
University of Southern Maine
P.O. Box 9300
Portland, Maine 04104-9300
Tel.: (207) 780-4086
Fax: (207) 780-5457
E-mail: waldrep@maine.edu

"Excellent—a great course and excellent colloquium."

USM UNIVERSITY OF Southern Maine
www.usm.maine.edu/eng/summerinstitute.htm

Wearing what your parents wore in 1967?
Scary.

Paying less than your parents paid for a student loan in 1967?
Groovy.

Leaving college with heavy student loan debt can be a drag. So why not take advantage of the lowest interest rates in the history of the student loan program by consolidating your loans.

The Connecticut Student Loan Foundation offers First Rate Consolidation Loans with some far-out benefits.

* Lower your interest rate by up to 1.25%*
* Reduce your monthly payment by up to 50%
* Lock in a low-fixed interest rate for the life of your loan
* Simplify your repayment to a single source

For more information, contact the Connecticut Student Loan Foundation at 1-800-901-1480 or visit www.cslf.com to download an application today.

Act Now!
Love beads and headbands are already out of style, and soon these rates could be too.

* A 1% interest rate reduction is valid through December 31, 2003. An additional 0.25% interest rate reduction is available to borrowers who have payments automatically deducted from a checking or savings account as long as the automatic debit payment option remains active.

CSLF Connecticut Student Loan Foundation
525 Brook Street, P.O. Box 1009
Rocky Hill, CT 06067
1-800-901-1480 www.cslf.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Carelessness with fire can have heavy costs on everyday lives

We are never too old for a reminder of something we were all taught when just knee high: be careful when playing with fire.

Two weekends ago, a blaze on Sand Hill Road claimed the life of 21-year-old UMass student Katya Yerozolimsky. Yerozolimsky was pronounced dead at Cooley Dickinson hospital following the early morning fire at her home. Though not official, investigators are leaning toward discarded smoking materials being the culprit, as numerous such paraphernalia was found at the scene.

This past winter, Wendy Carman, a student at Tufts University in Medford, Mass., was killed when her apartment burned up. A cigarette was the likely cause of the fire in the undocumented apartment that appeared to be in violation of local fire codes.

Now this.

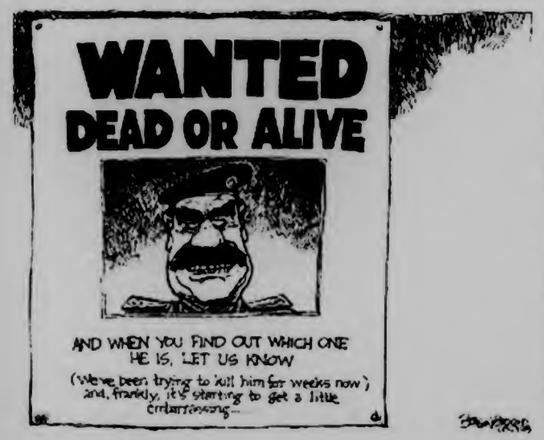
Five college students in Ohio were killed early on Sunday following a large house party. Three women, who were students of Ohio University, along with two men, students at Ohio State University, lost their lives in the blaze. The fire occurred sometime around 4 a.m. following a party that had at one point had 80 people in the home. Ten to a possible 20 people were believed to still be inside when the fire started, many of them still asleep. The two Ohio State students who died were among the 12 Buckeyes who called the Columbus house home.

Officials are ruling the fire suspicious. A verbal fight was reported to have broken out earlier in the evening, though according to eyewitnesses, no physical altercation ever took place.

While officials try to sort out the cause of the blaze, the fact remains that five more college students perished because of a fire, an often very preventable disaster.

A large portion of college social life is built around partying. Most of us have been to a dorm room that has 16 students crammed inside, drinking the night away. Some have probably also been to apartment or house parties, where more people are jam packed into a tight space with the alcohol flowing and numerous things being smoked. All these factors combined create the potential for disaster to strike.

Smoking materials not properly discarded are very capable of igniting a fire. When intoxicated, you have slower response times to deal with a situation, such as a fire where seconds are crucial and minutes mean the difference between life and death.



Even if all involved are completely alert and of sound mind and body, the simple size of the crowds often packed into our residences makes a tragedy more likely. The fire two months ago at The Station in Rhode Island showed the country what can happen when a mass of people react in panic to a disaster. Whether it was a party at a friend's apartment or a concert at some small hole-in-the-wall facility, many of us have been in situations where if a fire were to start, there would likely be loss of life simply because of the crowding of people.

In most instances, tragedies caused by fire can be avoided. We're currently having a great time in the prime of our life. Let's not allow carelessness to cut it short.

Information from CBS News and The Boston Globe was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Fanning the flames of anti-Americanism

Michael McMahon

Osama Bin Laden couldn't be happier with U.S. Marines marching through the streets of Baghdad. He is no doubt elated at the fall of his hated "infidel," Saddam Hussein, and the erosion of support for the dictator among the people of Iraq. In a mere few weeks, President Bush and the might of the American military have accomplished what Bin Laden could not have accomplished in a lifetime: the complete mistrust of the world's sole superpower along with the removal from power of a leader whose very presence perverted the cause of Islamic fundamentalism.

Think about it. Less than two dozen of the world's most fanatical terrorists managed to upset the world order. They frighten the United States to its core to the point of restricting civil liberties and condemning dissent, provoke the U.S. military into removing Hussein from power (an avowed enemy of Bin Laden) and turned the vast majority of the Arab world against the United States. They did this armed with box cutters and a misguided belief toward martyrdom and glory in the afterlife. Absolutely amazing. The footage of Iraqi civilians fleeing in terror from missiles gone astray and the American flag waving in the desert of the cradle of civilization will do more to recruit Arabs into supporting Bin Laden's cause than he could have ever imagined.

The CIA has reported a marked increase in Arabs expressing explicit anti-Western and anti-American attitudes, and even indicated that the ranks of Al Qaida were actually increasing, the U.S. military buildup and drumbeat toward war notwithstanding. Wasn't the point of the war against terrorism to reduce the chances of the United States being struck again by terrorists – either from within or outside our borders? Isn't it counterproductive to encourage millions of Arabs to view the American flag not as liberators, as the media would like us to believe, but rather as an offense to Islam and a constant threat to the natural resources of the Middle East?

The United States has issued a warning against Syria, Iran and North Korea, the latter two essentially armed with nuclear weapons capabilities. As outlined in the Project for a New American Century, endorsed by many in President Bush's administration and published well before September 11, the aim of United States foreign policy will be to wage pre-emptive wars against nations hostile to American interests in the hope of discouraging our allies from attempting to threaten our economic and military superiority. Apparently, the United States is confident in its ability to bomb and destroy everything in its path. It is willing to forgo a half-century of international diplomacy and stability in the hopes of furthering its expansion into an empire. It is the dream of the United States to expand its reach into every profitable corner of the world. It is the goal of the Bin Ladens of the world to thwart such delusions of grandeur by any means available and against any targets deemed vulnerable.

> "Osama Bin Laden couldn't be happier with the U. S. Marines marching through the streets of Baghdad."

They aim to strike at an America weakened by a failing economy and reduced security domestically. Thanks to budget cuts caused by Bush Administration tax cuts, states have been forced to cut back on local law enforcement and reduce spending in areas such as education and public services. Any reduction in the overall health and well being of a state comes at the expense of national security and plays into the hands of terrorists. These groups are not going to strike at the United States with conventional weapons, which is where the military spends the bulk of its funds: deploying defenses adopted during the Cold War against another superpower, the Soviet Union. Today, no such nation exists, but what does exist directly threatens the everyday lives of United States citizens. We are faced with a threat to our security that is not deterred by mutually assured destruction, as it is destruction they ultimately wish to see occur.

The difficulties inherent in defending against an enemy that does not have a flag or can be easily targeted by a laser-guided missile are the same difficulties the Bush Administration has worked to avoid admitting even exist. This is done in a variety of creative ways, through "color coded" alert systems that provide no security at all to the targeting of United States immigrants to even waging an illegal and pre-emptive war on a weak enemy. Make no mistake; it is not simply American soldiers riding those tanks and jeeps through the streets of Baghdad. There are also the hopes and ambitions of the Bush Administration as well. They hope to ride the coattails of victory in Iraq to a smooth re-election in 2004. And it is the military that wants to capitalize on the 'feel good' war they have provided the American public with so as to wage unending war on nations who abhor our values and reject our economic advancements.

But who really cares? Let's wave the flags and wear the ribbons. Let the nitpickers, hippies and whiners worry about such petty trivialities as "inflaming Islamic fundamentalist hatred" and "destroying the legitimacy of international affairs." We're Americans. We like easy answers, and there's nothing better than watching glossed-over destruction of brown people in the Middle East live on CNN. Let the good times roll, I say.

Michael McMahon is a UMass student.

The death of real democracy

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz

The current political situation in the United States of America is following a trend toward anti-democracy. With the Cold War now safely in the past, once again, our wealth and power is being challenged, this time by a new force that has been largely dubbed "terrorists" or "Muslims" (the two are virtually indistinguishable in main-stream media). In response to these seemingly novel movements, the Bush administration has decided to declare ideological wars by taking many additional measures to ensure the continued growth of our wealth and the proliferation of our power. In doing so, not only has this government taken on imperialist foreign policy policies, but within our domestic politics, there have been many measures taken which blatantly contradict the original basis of our democracy.

For all practical purposes, there is no longer any system of "checks and balances" in our government. The executive branch has given itself the authority, through overt manipulation of the legislative branch (a la Cheney and Rumsfeld's public scolding of Congressional dissenters, etc.), to take policing actions both against individual citizens of this country, as well as those of other countries both inside and out of our nation's borders.

The Patriot Act of 2001 gave executive-branch agencies like the CIA untold power to investigate, without any necessary consent, suspicions of their choosing and detain persons suspected of a crime without needing the evidence to actually charge them with that crime. In direct conflict with the judicial code of the United States, "terrorist" suspects are actually presumed guilty until proven innocent and are tried by means outside of the judicial branch of government (military tribunals). The Proposed Domestic Security Enhancement Act seeks to increase these powers and even goes so far as to allow for an official branch of the domestic police that is directly controlled by the White House, thereby making it the first such written constitutional measure in a major "democratic" state since Robespierre's Reign of Terror. The No Child Left Behind Act requires high schools to submit students' personal, health and academic records to military recruiters, thereby allowing them to focus more on those students that might be especially susceptible to being recruited. These acts, along with many others introduced by the Bush administration, are in direct opposition to the true democratic values of equality in law and in control of power.

> "At the moment, these seemingly basic human rights that are supposed to be inherent of democracy are no longer existant under our system in the United States."

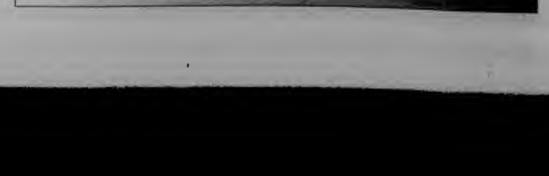
Many Americans have accepted these measures without protest (much as have our 'democratic' representatives in government), because they have been told that to dissent would be detrimental to our mission of spreading democracy. The national consensus this has created is in itself a threat to democracy, because it eliminates the need for compromise and debate in policymaking. The most democratic man of all, Thomas Jefferson, once commented that, "consensus is the greatest threat to democracy."

This insightful comment foreshadowed a trend in the capitalist democratic state, which we are now seeing, by which a consensus would allow disproportionately large accumulations of wealth and power by an oligarchic class and thereby convert the American democratic system into something that more closely resembles a fascist state. Our founding fathers would encourage us to always be skeptical of government and its intentions – especially a government that has accumulated as much power as ours has. They would push us to form our own opinions and ideas about the nature of political conduct as it occurs around us. Many have already taken this sound advice and are making their opinions clearly heard. George Bush has publicly declined to listen.



The job description of any democratic leader includes listening to one's constituents and acting upon what they say. When a "democratic" leader illegitimately seizes power and then rules on behalf of only part of the body he represents (and even goes so far as to mention on a couple of occasions, arrogantly, that this is what he is doing) then something is wrong with that democratic system. When a series of laws are passed that violate the basic 10 principles of a constitution, something is wrong with that democracy. When it is commonplace for politicians to lie about motives to the public solely for the purpose of tricking them into showing support for something, there is no democracy.

If our founding fathers were to see an abstract description of our political system in the United States today, they would most certainly not describe it as democracy, but rather fascism. As an American citizen, I feel entitled to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; I feel entitled to representation by my political representatives. Most of all, I feel entitled to live in a nation that practices what it preaches and does not intentionally try to fool its own citizenry every time it takes any action about anything. At the moment, these seemingly basic human rights that are supposed to be inherent of democracy are no longer existent under our system in the United States.

Though I was not 18 at the last presidential elections (or rather, "selection process"), I now am, and am thus entitled to at least have my voice heard and not blatantly ignored. The greatest threat to democracy is no longer "consensus," as was aptly put by Mr. Thomas Jefferson. No, the greatest single threat to any democracy on the planet is now George W. Bush and his administration of right-wing Christian fundamentalists. Impeach "President" Bush and allow the citizens of this country to place in power someone who will be capable of completing the leadership role asked of him. It takes a big man to be president of the United States, and George Bush simply is not that man. Get him out and end his siege on our great democracy. Support your Patriots for Peace and Justice, as we are fighting for democracy just as much as the G.I.'s shooting at impoverished Iraqis over in Baghdad.

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz is a UMass student.

Submit a letter or opinion

Divestment still an important issue

Stephen W. Smith

The war in Iraq is pushing another situation aside, as it demands the attention of the world. While soldiers and civilians are dying and our trust in leadership and humanity is suffering, we must not forget about the illegal Israeli Occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. This devastation has been a reality since 1967. The occupation of Palestine is something that infuriates me and should infuriate all those who believe in justice, equality and peace. As a staunch advocate for social justice, I feel it is my responsibility to act in a way to end such oppression.

In November, the Palestinian Action Coalition presented the UMass community with an opportunity to speak up against this occupation: divestment. The divestment campaign is about calling on UMass to pull its financial support of the Israeli government and companies that support the horror imposed on the Palestinian people on a daily basis.

Campaigning for UMass' divestment from Israel was offered as the one tool we have within our reach to strive toward a peaceful solution to the dilemma. Divestment is a means in which we can, as citizens, urge our community, our institution and the bureaucracy around us that we do not accept the horror imposed upon the Palestinian people as a result of the occupation. Divestment is our only opportunity to directly exercise democracy, create positive and lasting change, and fight for an oppressed people who need us more than ever.

UMass must withdraw its financial support of Israel until the State complies with United Nations Resolution 242, which calls for the "withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the recent [1967] conflict." UMass must not support Israel until it recognizes the Fourth Geneva Convention that states, "... the occupying power shall not deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into territories it occupies" (Article 49, paragraph 6).

Resolution is referring to the conflict of 1967. Frequently countries are condemned for violating International Law. However, 35 straight years of direct law breaking is something that must be stopped. Let us not let the current war in Iraq convince us that the international legal system has no bearing. For the sake of humanity, peace and justice, we must adhere to the system and remind its violators of its importance. A legal system exists in order to preserve justice and tranquility. The international legal system was created for this purpose, as well as for the preservation of peace.

What does UMass have to do with the Israeli-Palestinian conflict? Large Institutions such as our own are entities with multi-million dollar portfolios carry great power in encouraging larger changes in the international business community. Through organization, petitioning and campaigning, we must successfully convince the UMass administration that we as a community do not accept the conquering and illegal control of Palestinian lives. It is our responsibility is to make sure our institution joins this struggle for equality and peace by removing all ties it currently has to putting deadly arms into the hands of Israel for a purpose of offense. The confiscation of Palestinian land, the bulldozing of houses, olive orchards and the construction of an apartheid wall are far too drastic to be treated as mere defensive tactics.

UMass must not invest in governments and corporations, which perpetuate war, injustice, inequality and racist and unrighteous behavior. UMass must use its weight financially and politically to voice the unacceptable nature of Israeli violation of international law, imposed to protect the world from these very actions. It is our responsibility to make sure our public funding does not go toward unethical practices. UMass needs to act wisely in this crisis of conscience. It needs to stand symbolically and firmly for humane values.

Among the devastated Palestinian people are their defenders, medical volunteers and other international observers who are working to end occupation. On March 16, an American citizen 23 years old was killed by a bulldozer in the Palestinian city of Rafah in the Gaza Strip. Rachel Corrie was a human rights activist working with the International Solidarity Movement in the occupied territory. She fearlessly put herself between a bulldozer and a family's home as to prevent the Israeli forces from demolishing the structure. Despite clear signals of her presence in front of the armored bulldozer, Rachel was crushed to death. There are people selflessly defending what is right by putting their lives on the line, and in Rachel's case giving their life for the cause. Let us do our part from this end, with the one device which we have available to us.

The divestment campaign is growing in importance. The situation grows more desperate for Palestinian citizens as the international community looks the other way. We claim to wage war on the Hussein regime for having weapons of mass destruction. We fund Israel's weapons of mass destruction. While Saddam has violated human rights, Israel's brutal abuses of the rights and lives of Palestinians is what makes me know that putting pressure on Israel to find a peaceful solution to the conflict is our obligation. Divestment is the method we are armed with, and organization is the key to successfully utilizing this weapon.

Stephen W. Smith is a UMass student.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Rosencrantz' is an exhilarating ride

By Troy David Mercie
Collegian Correspondent

"Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead" is an exhilarating ride through the course of fate, where a philosophical Guildenstern (T. Adrian Villalobos) and a discordant Rosencrantz (Chamaio Cheyenne-Rindge) are inevitably whisked into a world of questions, confusion, murder, incest and treachery.

Questioning their situation from all directions, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern exploit all aspects of life, fate and death on their own journey into the unknown realm of the future. While north, south, east and west are never really established in the play, it parallels our own ever changing, turning and twisting directions.

The set design was an adding factor to Rosencrantz and Guildenstern's confusion, tripling from a road to a castle to a ship – all while symbolically leading them in a loop back to themselves. The set was inspired by the work of M.C. Escher, a Dutch graphic artist most recognized for spatial illusions and impossible buildings.

The sound effects were captivating; a rhythmic heartbeat set things in motion, building suspense and a sense of fear of the future right from the start. Soon enough, the heartbeat doubles as the drums of the advancing Tragedians.

The dimly lit stage at times captivated the dismal mood of the play, setting tone and shedding "light," or lack there of, on our heroes' unfortunate fate.

Costume design was brilliantly constructed mixing 20th century fashion with the dress of Shakespearean times, as seen in Gertrude's dress. The costume brought the characters to life, only to lead them to their deaths. Captivated by their situation, I was more concerned with their fate rather than their fashion.

T. Adrian Villalobos masterfully plays the part of Guildenstern. Eyes were glued to him from the first moments of his disbelief that 85 coins could all land on heads consecutively. Chamaio transformed the scholarly Rosencrantz into a character filled with intrigue, confusion, and questions only answered in death. Adrian believes the most challenging obstacle of playing the part of Guildenstern was the character's anger issues.

"Guildenstern thinks of himself as very intelligent and very philosophical, but he just gets too caught up in things," says Villalobos.

Guildenstern's outbursts and withheld anxiety were wonderfully balanced throughout the play, neither upstaging his counterpart nor fading into darkness.

Completing this duo is Chamaio Cheyenne-Rindge, who transforms his character into the strangely odd Rosencrantz. With the trademark head scratching and care free, flowing nature, he is one not easily unnoticed on the stage.

"I learned a lot about comedic timing, and also being very honest and very true on stage, even dealing with a very crazy character such as Rosencrantz," says Cheyenne-Rindge.

Another powerful presence on stage was The Player. Matt Dunphy filled this role quite naturally, because he had a firm grip on the character's purpose.

"He is the omnisicent force...the watcher...the informer of the audience and of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern," Dunphy said.

As seen from the eyes of Dunphy, "I generally play the clown character, bringing the comic relief. This transition is a big escape from that in that I am re-channeling that comic energy into a character that has more ambiguity and mystery. It is a good stepping stone into a

Ra rocks Pearl Street

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Weeks after opening for South African rocker Seether, hard rock foursome Ra returned to the Pearl Street Nightclub to play before another crowd of happy head bangers.

The quartet played a rousing and riveting show to an appreciative, nearly full capacity audience Saturday night, featuring songs from its major label debut "From One." First, though, audiences had to go through the usual pre-show ritual: the nitty-gritty opening acts.

Ra
Pearl St. Nightclub
April 12

Kicking off the festivities was local group Nitronine. Though there was nothing technically wrong with their performance, they still failed to impress, never rising above mediocre level. It hardly helps that they failed to win over fans with music that sounds as if it was built from the cast-off parts of Taproot, Creed and homegrown heroes Staind. Even when they threw out free CDs into the audience, the guys of Nitronine were only met with minimal, half-hearted enthusiasm.

Fairing slightly better were the longhaired ruffians of Man-Made God, who have been touring with Ra for about a month and announced it was the two groups' final show together. MMG's metal was more prog and '70s influenced than the sludge rock of Nitronine; MMG's more famous contemporaries are likely to be Audiovent and Mad At Gravity. The band won over a few more people in the audience, but there was still a stubborn lack of celebration amongst the crowd.

Like Nitronine, MMG failed to inspire any kind of rock and roll revelry, such as crowd-surfing or moshpits. Their introduction of Jared, the Rapping Roadie, who laid down a freestyle over the band's rock riffs pumped the crowd – especially when lead vocalist Pann berated a heckler in the audience and challenged the man to get onstage and do lared one better. The man never did.

It was telling about the audience's embrace of the opening acts when Pann announced Man-Made God's last song, the audience cheered the hardest – at least up until that point. When members of Ra were sighted crossing the stage, fans whooped and hollered and roared in excitement.

And Ra didn't disappoint their fans. The group played a blistering set that ran just over an hour. Ra finally came on at 10:50 p.m., opening with the abrasive hard rock jolt of "Sky" and kept the energy from flagging throughout their performance. In fact, they boosted the energy levels of the audience, which was worn down by the one-two punch of Nitronine and Man-Made God.

Charismatic frontman Sahaj Ticotin engaged the audience throughout the night, and the audience responded by giving cheers and devil-horns after each song. Audience members chanted and sang along with their favorite songs, with the choruses of "Violator" and the anti-chauvinist anthem "Fallen Rock Zone" getting the biggest accompaniments. Ticotin took a break during "Fallen Rock Zone" to tell the audience that if they see any man making unwanted advances toward a woman, they should call him a punk. It was a statement that drew hearty applause and encapsulated the message of the song. Another simple statement Ticotin made during the night created an enthusiastic stir. That was when the singer asked the audience to support our troops. the audience cheered his request.

The audience played their songs full out, never belying tiredness or flagging enthusiasm. Each song was played as well live as it was on "From One." In fact, their hit first single, "Do You Call My Name?" sounded even better live, in person and two feet from the stage.

The audience grew considerably excited when the band launched into the Arabian-tinged opening notes for "Do You..." and sang along at Ticotin's request. Toward the end of the set, band members through bottles of water into the audience. Drummer Scoota even gave up his drumsticks after Ra performed their encore finale, in which they played the only song not featured during the main performance, "Skorn."

After all was said and done, the audience began to file out of the Pearl Street ballroom to find the four members of Ra standing in the lobby, ready to sign autographs on whatever fans had ready. Not only did the guys of Ra prove their talent as rock musicians, but they also proved to be the nicest guys, signing anything for everyone that asked.

Ticotin even said after the show how killer it was playing in Northampton twice in such a short time.

'Danse Remixes' is too Faint

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

The award for the least thought put into an album title has to go to the aptly but awkwardly named "Danse Macabre Remixes." It's the latest release from Omaha's cyberpunks The Faint, whose last album was fittingly titled "Danse Macabre."

'Danse Macabre Remixes'
The Faint
Astralwerks

If nothing else, the album delivers on its title's promise. It remixes. That's for sure.

Remixes hold a tricky place in the spectrum of popular music culture. For some, the remix represents an opportunity for a formerly stale or uncommercial single to find a new life on the dancefloor. Indeed, interpretations by other artists are essential in the dance-oriented world of electronica's club life. In the early days, remixes were mostly extensions where you could hear a song that you didn't want to end go on even longer. (For example, the 12-inch mix of New Order's "Bizarre Love Triangle" or the 16-minute version of Donna Summer's "I Feel Love.") Subsequently, this gave the DJ more time to plan a smooth transition into the next track.

Since those days, the remix has taken two paths: the semi-futile club track and the nuance artform. The latter can result in astonishing new perspectives the likes of Warhol's soup labels that, as a result, put a whole new spin on the original. Coil's remixes of Nine Inch Nails' work spring to mind. Others, like Aphex Twin's new "26 Mixes for Cash," distort the original so far beyond recognition that one has to question the actual source of the remixer's samples. The former style, when effective, is best suited to singles for exclusive club play and home listening pleasure.

How are we supposed to take an album like "Danse Macabre Remixes," a convoluted selection of not necessarily bad remixes spewed onto one disc that could have been better suited spaced out across several 12 inch and CD singles? The whole compiling process seems rather futile, artlessly fumbled together in an attempt to satisfy salivating fans awaiting the next proper release by The Faint (and possibly conjure up money for another tour). This becomes even more certain when you realize the band's website contains a whole album's worth of remixes available as free mp3 downloads.

So why "Danse Macabre Remixes?" For one, the album boasts some fairly big names in techno, and this piece is really their game. It is also the first Faint album under a bigger indie label (Astralwerks, in conjunction with their native Saddle Creek, which is home of such esteemed talent as Fatboy Slim, Basement Jaxx and The Chemical Brothers). This move tries to expand the range of Faint followers not only cross-nationally, but to the electronic crowd at large.

The Faint's name carries several meanings: That of collapse, of frailty and anemia and that of distance of sound. Their albums carry this name a long way, com-

Continued on page 6

'Beckham' feel-good and funny

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"My Big Fat Greek Wedding" fooled an awful lot of people (myself included) over the course of its historic run. On the road to a record-breaking (and vastly undeserving) $200 million gross, the movie managed to somehow convince people that its string of sitcom-stale sketches stood for what constitutes a good movie. This is the ultimate grandma movie: it doesn't matter if the movie is good, as long as it is nice.

'Bend It Like Beckham'
Directed by Gurinder Chadha
Starring Parminder K. Nagra, Keira Knightley
Fox Searchlight
Rated PG-13
112 mins

"Bend It Like Beckham" is a crossed cultures comedy in the same vein as "Greek Wedding," yet it has an exuberant spirit the other movie couldn't hope to match. Both movies are about young women clashing with their tradition-bound parents over out-of-their-ethnic-class desires, yet "Beckham" has a jubilant and celebratory cheerfulness that the sticky clichés of "Greek Wedding" thoroughly stomped to the ground.

"Bend It Like Beckham" is like "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" spliced with the Hollywood dazzle of "Monsoon Wedding." "Beckham" retains the story structure of the former, ditches the obnoxious "aren't-ethnic-people-funny" jokes and replaces it with the exultant humanity of the latter. It's an understatement to say "Bend It Like Beckham" made me smile. It's the kind of movie that sets your spirit soaring and it gave me a fizzy, joyful high.

Jess Bhamra (lovely and gifted newcomer Parminder K. Nagra) is an Anglo-Indian teen who worships British soccer star David Beckham and secretly plays games in the park with a group of male friends. Her parents are bound to the old-world traditions of their Sikh heritage – her father lolls around the house in his pilot's uniform topped by a turban, while her mother dresses in saris and insists on teaching Indian cooking to her daughter. Meanwhile, Jess' older sister is planning her traditional-style wedding while sneaking off to have frowned upon pre-marriage trysts with her boyfriend.

One day, Jess is discovered playing by Jules (Keira Knightley), a blond tomboy athlete who recruits Jess to play for a suburban all-girls soccer team. Soon, Jess is sneaking out of the house and coming up with ever-more elaborate lies and schemes to continue playing the game she loves, a game that is considered unladylike in her culture.

Parminder K. Nagra stars as Jess Bhamra (left) and Keira Knightley as Jules (right) in the new, adorable comedy "Bend it Like Beckham."

"Bend It Like Beckham" is a movie in which the modern world collides with the old world. Jess wants to play soccer – it's her dream to play it professionally (as shown in an opening dream sequence) – and is torn in her allegiance to her family. Jess, as a character, is quiet and reticent, only allowing her brute force aggression to show in the way she kicks the ball into the goal (the soccer scenes are alluringly edited displays of athletic showmanship.) She can't bring herself to confront her family with her desires and the arc of the movie is less finding a way to reconcile her dreams with her parent's wish for her future.

As story arcs go, this is a pretty old one. But the gift of Gurinder Chadha, the director/co-writer and the movie, is how they make these old tropes seem new. Jess is given a love interest, the team's dreamy Irish captain (a twinkly Jonathan Rhys-Meyers), for her and Jules to fight and bond over. But this pre-fab conflict is deflated by a hilarious running joke in which Jules' horrified mother (Juliet Stevenson) begins to believe the girls are lesbians involved in a romantic breakdown.

Nothing in "Bend It Like Beckham" is new, yet the cheery spirit of the movie makes it feel as if it is. Nagra, as the conflicted heroine, is just the right actress to take on the role of Jess. Pretty, but in an everyday way, Nagra calls on deep wells on vulnerability, joy and conflict to outline her character. The best thing that you can say about Nagra is that she makes the torn Jess into a real human being.

"Bend It Like Beckham" is sly, touching and funny in a way the shrill "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" could only hope to be. "Beckham" is a rarity: a feel good movie that actually makes you feel good.

'Smoke' is very confusing, but 'Friends' is honest and candid

NO CODE

No code

Matthew Despres

There are movies made about rock and roll, and there are films born of the music itself, the latter a distinction seldom achieved by modern day entries to the field. No Code takes a look at two of the genre's most recent efforts – "Friends Forever" and "Benjamin Smoke."

"BENJAMIN SMOKE"
DIRECTED BY JEM COHEN AND PETER SILLEN
PLEXIFILM

As a filmmaker, Jem Cohen has long dirtied his hands in the creation of music, helming projects for punk purists Fugazi and Athens, Georgia natives R.E.M. The bright lights and bombast of the latter's "Monster" tour were caught by his meditative camera-eye for "Road Movie," as was the black-and-white collage that projected 1998's "I Bow the Letter" into the visible spectrum. In both instances, his subtle hand made clear the distinction in perspective – what was bigger than life and what was as big as life – without blurring his own position: the film, the music and the players involved became the stuff of which great stories are made.

Alongside Peter Sillen, Cohen returns to Georgia with a different angle in mind for "Benjamin Smoke," their 10-year portrait of Benjamin, a local nobody to most who carved an image from the fringe and warped the ordinary around him. He was a speed-freak. The frontman for the band Smoke. A flamboyant, lyrical wit who understood the importance and danger of living a life that was all or none.

From behind deeply recessed eyes, Benjamin delivers fractured monologues to the filmmaker's lens that document his tales of a wavering past and a present life spent battling AIDS. His thoughts come in brief vignettes, tied together by strikingly plain images of suburban life unfolding in real-time. As a backdrop, the Georgia that Cohen and Sillen find is alien in its redundancy – waves of nothing sweep through every shot and give the film an odd-tilt, a stutter to its step that gives us just enough time to linger for a moment and be alarmed by the ordinary. When Benjamin engages in conversation a shirtless young local riding his bike, the effect is no less than his direct-to-the-camera pleas about life while he slips into a dress. The images are given space to speak for themselves, raising an uneasy awareness of the curious habits that are routine yet remain ignored in our everyday lives.

The film also measures the significance of Benjamin's reach – commentary from Patti Smith and performances of his work by Cat Power and Vic Chesnutt convey sincerely that interpretation, not imitation, is truly flattery. His was a life so removed from common understanding that it drew others to speak – and sing – for themselves.

"Benjamin Smoke" is an uncomfortable gesture and difficult to interpret. It captures almost too firmly a life spent at loose ends, and that grip ultimately doubles as its strength. Cohen and Sillen have made tangible what is often unimaginable.

"FRIENDS FOREVER"
DIRECTED BY BEN WOLFINSOHN
PLEXIFILM

"We're here to save the world from rock 'n roll."

"Friends Forever" is the violent reaction between art and culture your parents always warned you about. The road, the band and the vomit. The girl, the dog and blood-red lust, shared in this instance between two musicians from Denver, the sun that doubles as their stage and the art of rock and roll. Naturally, the dreams are mile-high; let the revolution begin.

Our heroes Nick (drums), Josh (bass) and the poetic Jen (lights and emotional muse) wage the war against convention guerilla-style, pounding the pavement outside proper venues in an orange VW van that itself becomes a walking dream – the surreal projection of every kid who's woken up next to the strange guitar that seduced him the night before. The rolling venue breeds music that is and of the moment – a passionate study of the process without the worry of finding an answer.

Shot on a mini DV camera by director Ben Wolfinsohn, the film is pieced together as impulsively as Nick and Josh choose which loading dock to invade next. The active voice preserved in the direction reveals both Wolfinsohn's personal and professional hand at work – we're brought close without total immersion and prompted to think seriously with a grin. He's pushing the buttons that invite us to make our own sense of complete abstraction. Long shots disclose the dark van and the lights that begin to percolate inside, and then tighten to reveal the noise that rumbles outward through open windows and a useless muffler. Cuts jump to nervous audience eyes, angry club owners and the Everymen passing by on sidewalks, the schoine of their day radically disturbed by the avant-van freak-outs played curbside as gospels on wheels to the faithful who persevere.

Wolfinsohn realizes his film may reach the Everyman as well, and structures its rhythm around such a patience threshold. The calm eyes in his visual storm blink plaintively along highway rest stops and in vacant parking lots, where he pulls back and allows the trio to lyricize romantically about the "God of Rock and Roll" and the world as interpreted from the road. All this from the lip of their home/stage/van while brushing teeth over a jug of lukewarm tap water. They're moments of necessary and revealing retreat; without them, the film would be a hapless victim of its own adrenaline.

"Friends Forever" can be taken in parts or as one excited whole. Few films are as willing to air out their vulnerabilities in order to speak so honestly about music's dirty concessions and life's compromises, and while the "songs" themselves skip away as a side note, the process of watching the process itself unfold is a trip worth taking.

Matthew Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

'6Twenty' hard, but redundant

COURTESY OF KLONOSPHERE

New Zealand natives The D4 rock out with their latest release '6Twenty,' but unfortunately will remain in the background of the garage band landscape.

By JUSTIN MARQUES
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The garage rock revival has seen many bands come along with a stripped down minimalist approach to making rock and roll free of excess and overblown production. Bands like The Strokes, White Stripes and the Donnas have been major contributors to this trend, but they have also been able to create a certain amount of depth and feeling in their music.

The D4 '6Twenty' Hollywood

The D4, hailing from New Zealand, are another band that have come into the garage rock fold recently. Their debut album "6Twenty" features 13 high energy and simple songs that will, for the most part, get you out of your seat. Unlike their somewhat more mature brethren, they have not been able to achieve a certain amount of depth and creativity in their songs over the coarse of a whole album.

By the time you get to the second half of the album, interest does begin to wane a bit. With each proceeding song, you begin to ask, "Haven't I heard this already?" In fact, you may have not only heard it on the previous tracks, but you may also remember it in the form of the Stooges, New York Dolls and the MC5.

This is not to say The D4's "6Twenty" is not a decent album. It blows away anything from Blink 182 or Sum 41, which seem incredibly tame and juvenile in comparison.

The D4 do not lack youthful exuberance. Like any good young band, The D4 have their own ode to the weekend in the song simply called "Party." There is also rebellion against the mundane nine to five workday in "MisterX:" ("Nine to Fiver your just a social climber, MisterX you think you are, but you know you're not," front man Jimmy Christmas howls.) Escape is another theme in the song "Exit to the City." Special care is also given to the females on the tracks "Ladies Man" and "Heartbreaker."

Lyrically, lead singer Jimmy Christmas doesn't leave many surprises or much to the imagination – except for the track "Heartbreaker," where you can here the pain in Christmas's voice when he sings, "Said she's gone and left me crying, she's running all over town with her cheating and lying, now I'm sitting bear with nothing but pain." Then the band goes into a full rage and tantrum over the emotional breakup. This is a refreshing change to show some real emotion.

In the end, "6Twenty" represents a very stripped down, and in some ways, redundant album. With all the earlier mentioned great bands already out there and even some classics like The Stooges or AC/DC still around, one might not think The D4 would have a place to reside in an ever crowded rock landscape. However, if you're looking for some fresh faced, high-energy rock and roll, this album may fit your taste. It greatly outweighs the sunny pop punk that has been the rage in recent years. Hopefully as the band matures, so will their sound and writing. Until then, The D4 will be stuck in the vast garage band landscape.

'Danse' lacks any creativity

Continued from page 5

bining the sorcery of modern electronics with live rock band instrumentation that threatens to shatter into confusion at any moment – and often does. (See the brilliant collapse between "Cars Pass in Cold Blood" and "Casual Sex" on the "Blank Wave Arcade" album). This constant level of anxiety combined with a quirky pop sensibility has crafted some of the most determinably animated and vibrant underground music in the past few years.

This terse spirit of experimentation resulted in an electropunk hybrid many have lumped with the hedonistic novelty dump of electroclash. However, The Faint, like Devo before them, are too nervous to be any kind of sex music. They practically made a whole album about their anxieties surrounding it ("Blank Wave Arcade"). The Faint are instead music akin to tech junkies / junk techies Babyland, the early 90s post-industrial hardcore outfit whose sound was drowned out in its time but inspiration lives heavily in bands like The Faint. "Danse Macabre" was the threshold of their electrojunkpunk orchestrations, but its still much more 'Macabre' than 'Danse.'

The first and most obvious crime of the remixes here is to create a different kind of tension. This not the bloodcurdling tension, where every new interlude is expected to break into violent explosions of passionate aggression. What we're talking about here is the four-on-the-floor variety with the sole ambition of pushing you into a dance trance frenzy, erasing any memory of the theoretical intentions of the originals.

Surprisingly, the most effective pieces here are the ones that do add an element of sex to their dread. Photek's elegant boogie bounce of "Total Job" is a flange-addled excursion into trip hop yielding gratifying results. The hip-hop fueled mix of "Posed to Death" by The Calculators is a complete deconstruction interestingly adding a dueting female voice under singer Todd Baechle's half-whine / half-goth croon. Here funk reminiscent of "Beautiful People" brings the postmodern convocation back to mainstream square one and produces the track Larry Tee's cronies have been dreaming about in their Williamsburg lofts.

Ursula 1000 have similar aspirations with their postpunk rendering of "Your Retro Career Faded," but succeed less fruitfully. The ESG-minded track does, however, break up the monotony of the trance-fueled second half of the album. I admit though, the funky bassline and persistent wood blocking did begin to grow on me upon subsequent listens. We will see how it ages.

The remaining batch is an assorted lot whose fate is perhaps best determined in the clubs. Oakenfold's take of "Glass Danse" functions well as an Oakenfold track, but does not fool me one bit as a work of The Faint's. Overall, most of the artists assembled for The Faint's "Danse Macabre Remixes" put about as much thought into their mixes as the title of the album. Perhaps the material was just unfamiliar to them, which is a shame, for I would highly recommend it to them.

DAILY COLLEGIAN DOT COM

GRAPHICS

the Collegian is hiring for next semester come talk to Mike, Ruth, or Shannon

or call 545-1864
105 Campus Center Basement
Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply

WANT TO LIVE OFF-CAMPUS?

Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145

www.pufftonvillage.com

Styles by Deborah

Featuring
Foil Highlights
&
Designer
Haircuts
for Students
Complementary consultation with every visit

$10 off Foils with a Style Haircut
with student ID
EXPIRES 05/15/03

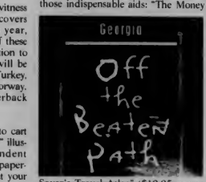
$5 off Clipper Cuts
with student ID
EXPIRES 05/15/03

65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

Collegian Book Review

On the itinerary: Books first, then the anticipated booking

– Ireland is a rich brew from many sources – the Celts and the Vikings of its early history, its mystic folklore, its spectacular yet soothing landscape. Much of this is captured in the "Illustrated Guide to Ireland" (Reader's Digest, $35 hardcover), a popular guide first published in 1992 and out this spring in an updated edition. Sections of the book focus on geographic regions, including Northern Ireland, which the editors say is mostly untouched by events in the news.



– DK is relaunching its entire Eyewitness Travel Guide series with fresh covers and updated information this year, observing the 10th anniversary of these glossy illustrated guides. In addition to the 70 extant titles, new ones will be added: Canary Islands, Holland, Turkey, Brittany, Croatia, Corsica and Norway. The price range for these paperback guides is $20-$30.

– Hand-sized and not too heavy to cart around, Somerset's "Visible Cities" illustrated guides (via Independent Publishers Group, each $14.95 paperback) are useful on the ground at your European destination. Current titles include Dubrovnik, Budapest, Krakow and Vienna (Barcelona is coming this fall), and each marks out suggested walking tours, with features outlining the history and background of important sites, along with practical information.

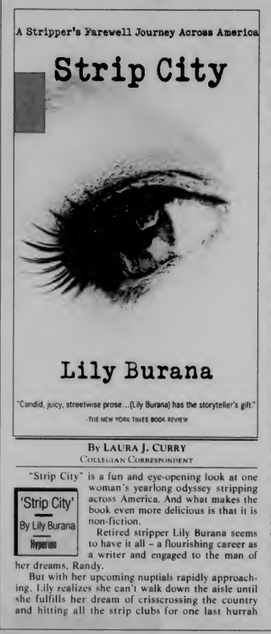
– The nature shows on public television may have you hungering for your own first-hand look at the world's dwindling wildlife population. "Africa's Top Wildlife Countries" (Global Travel Publishers, $19.95 paperback), by Mark W. Nolting, will help you plan your safari. Nolting, who with his wife Alison heads a travel company specializing in the African continent, offers information about the countries, parks and reserves where the wildlife can be observed as well as traveler's amenities along the way.

– There are plenty of new things to see by just wandering around in your own territory. Check out the entries in "Off the Beaten Path" (Reader's Digest, $30 hardcover) in a new edition covering attractions in the United States that aren't overwhelmed by tourists – such as Huguenot Street in New Paltz, N.Y., an early French settlement, the National Bison Range in Moiese, Mont., where the buffalo still roam, in protected numbers, or the Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Monument in Washington state, which shows how the 1980 eruption threw ash and rock over a 14-mile area.

– And if you're doing your wandering by automobile, Reader's Digest also has those indispensable aids: "The Money Saver's Travel Atlas" ($19.95 paperback), with U.S., Canadian and Mexican highway maps interpolated with information about national parks and other attractions, and "Complete Road Atlas of Canada" ($44.95 hardcover), packed with foldout highway maps and detailed city maps.

– "The 25 Best World War II Sites-Pacific Theater" (GreenLine Publications, $19.95 paperback), by Chuck Thompson, lists the locations to visit today that were in the headlines 60-plus years ago: Pearl Harbor, Guadalcanal, Corregidor, Bataan, Hiroshima and others. Thompson's guide includes capsule histories of the major events of the Pacific campaigns.

– Jerome Pohlen keeps finding amusing and offbeat spots all around the country, and the latest in his series is "Oddball Minnesota" (Chicago Review Press, $13.95 paperback). Where else can you find the world's largest talking Paul Bunyan statue, the Spam Museum (celebrating the meat, not the mail), or the birthplace of Tammy Faye?



– The hotel-averse prefer that overseas import, the bed-and-breakfast establishment. Pamela Lanier's "The Complete Guide to Bed & Breakfasts, Inns and Guesthouses International" (Lanier Publishing, $14.95 paperback) is comprehensive and updated every year.

– You don't have to leave Spot at home if you travel to the nation's capital and Maryland: "The Dog Lover's Companion to Washington D.C. & Baltimore" (Avalon Travel, $19.95 paperback), by Ann and Don Oldenburg, stakes out canine-friendly attractions, hotels and restaurants.

– Not to be outdone, cat lovers can find "Purr-fect Places to Stay" (Letters Etcetera, $19.95 paperback) via advice from Susan Bard Hall. She's got a list, illustrated with feline photos, of bed-and-breakfasts, country inns and hotels with resident cats to welcome visitors.

– Associated Press

'Strip City' chronicles a journey across America

By LAURA J. CURRY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

"Strip City" is a fun and eye-opening look at one woman's yearlong odyssey stripping across America. And what makes the book even more delicious is that it is non-fiction.

"Strip City" By Lily Burana Hyperion

Retired stripper Lily Burana seems to have it all – a flourishing career as a writer and engaged to the man of her dreams, Randy.

But with her upcoming nuptials rapidly approaching, Lily realizes she can't walk down the aisle until she fulfills her dream of crisscrossing the country and hitting all the strip clubs for one last hurrah before retiring from the pole dance for good.

With Randy's approval and support, Lily goes for it. With a quick brush up of her skills at a stripper school, some new g-strings and a tan, Lily is on her way.

And what a journey Lily, a.k.a. Barbie Faust, takes you on. You'll meet colorful ladies, like the 80-year-old topless burlesque dancers Daisy Delite, Dee Milo and Cynthia. You'll bump into an old stripper pal, Pillow, who when reunited with Lily, discloses that she is almost legally blind and literally has to work the stage from memory.

Writing with crisp detail, Burana doesn't let you miss a minute of the action. Lily is in some dive in Alaska, working hard for the money and competing in a Miss Topless Wyoming pageant or at a gentleman's club in Dallas where the smooth talking cowboys seem to blow their money away. Nothing is seemingly off limits.

In-between gigs, you learn about Lily's voyage into the sex business. Raised the youngest in a loving family, Lily was a geeky, punk rock kid who just barely made it through high school.

Not wanting to have her mother's existence of suburbia boredom, Lily headed to New York in search of freedom and adventure. What she found was reality; her lack of job skills and money led her to start working the peep shows of Times Square. Her talents for the profession brought her to California, where she ended up dancing at one of the state's top clubs and ultimately waging a legal battle for stripper's rights.

While on a journey to give closure to her own past, Burana finds that the whole history of exotic dance has been overlooked and under-recorded. In "Strip City," she manages to pack a pretty decent history of how the strip tease has evolved from the despicable professions it once was in the 50s to the glamorization and acceptance of today.

When her journey winds down, Lily faces unexpected questions about her life and future, seeking help in the most unlikely of people.

"Strip City" is for anyone who wants to live vicariously through a stripper's life, and not just the good, but the bad and the ugly as well. As Burana candidly puts it, "I was one of the success stories. I entered the sex industry at a young age and came out the other side with a decent career, home, a stable family life and no substance abuse problem. And this business still kicked my ass sideways."

In her book, Burana talks about the rare and exhilarating times of strip dancing and transcending your self. She has done that with "Strip City."

Jack Daniels presents...
Blackjack Night
at McMurphy's
Uptown Tavern
Tuesday, April 15th
"Beat the Dealer"
♦♣♥♠
37 North Pleasant St.

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS $10. always
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256-0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586-0155

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

A Course for Everyone
TUFTS SUMMER
Consider Summer Study at TUFTS University.
Three Sessions
May 21–June 27
July 1–August 8
May 21–August 8
http://ase.tufts.edu/summer

UMass Briefs

Jackie Rogers named MVP

Massachusetts senior forward and co-captain Jackie Rogers received the George "Trigger" Burke Most Valuable Player Award at the team's season-ending banquet Sunday at the Log Cabin in Holyoke, Mass.

Rogers, who led the 2002-03 Minutemen in scoring (12.9 ppg), rebounding (5.5 rpg) and field goal percentage (.599), also received the team's Lou Roe Rebounding Award and the Julius Erving Scoring Award. He was the ninth player in school history to lead the team in scoring, rebounding and field goal percentage in the same season, and his 59.9 percent effort from the field led the Atlantic 10 Conference.

UMass' other senior, center Micah Brand, received the John Murphy Inspirational Award. Brand, who averaged 7.6 ppg and 4.1 rpg, finished his career with 857 points (49th on the school's all-time list) and 90 blocked shots (10th).

Sophomore guard Anthony Anderson, the 2002 Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year, received the squad's Jim Laughnane Free Throw Shooting Award and the Rick Pitino Most Assists Award. He shot a team-high 75.7 percent from the free throw line and dished out a team-leading 107 assists.

Freshman forward Jeff Viggiano earned the team's Jim McCoy Most Improved Player Award and Mark Donoghue Most Productive Award. He started each of UMass' final 21 games, averaging 7.0 ppg and 2.9 rpg, while ranking second on the team in both steals (27) and blocked shots (21).

Another freshman, Gabe Lee, received the Jack Leaman Award as the team's top defensive player after recording a squad-best 46 blocked shots as a rookie.

In addition, former ticket manager Wally Novak received the Court Club's Milt Cole Award for contributions to the Minuteman basketball program.

UMass named National Collegiate Club Fencing champions

After months of competition against both varsity and club opposition, the Massachusetts fencing team capped a remarkable year with the men's and women's teams finishing respectively as co-champions and runners-up at the 2003 National Collegiate Club Fencing Championships on April 5-6 at the University of Florida in Gainesville.

"I'm really proud of the entire team," coach Brad Baker said. "This is something which they have been working toward the entire season and to see it all come together so spectacularly is almost beyond description."

The UMass men share the title of "National Champions" with Northwestern University. The Minutemen were led by a dominating performance from the first place men's foil squad consisting of Matt Franco (13-1), Leo Cook (13-1), and Pat Reardon (11-3). The men's epee and men's sabre squads each took silver.

The UMass women placed second overall, missing out on the top spot by two bouts to host and overall champions University of Florida. The Minutewomen were led by a strong performance in women's epee, featuring Jessica Yu, Karla Hubschwerlin and Cathie Arcisz. The squad took first place in the weapon.

UMass fencing was the top six-weapon team at the championships. A total of 18 schools took part in this year's inaugural competition. The National Collegiate Club Championships is the top intercollegiate competition for non-varsity (NCAA) teams.

Earlier this year, UMass fencing was named the top club team (men and women) at the 2003 New England Fencing Championships. It finished the regular season with dual meet records of 11-9 for the men and 16-9 for the women, posting victories over a number of varsity programs including Wellesley, Brown, Sacred Heart, Drew University, Farleigh Dickinson University and others.

UMass Fencing is a Registered Student Organization (i.e., club sport) on campus. The team competes at both club and varsity level against schools from all over New England.

Cheerleading and dance team fare well at national competition

The University of Massachusetts cheerleading and dance teams returned from Daytona Beach, Fla. after solid outings at the National Cheerleaders Association and National Dance Alliance competitions.

The dance team, which received its highest score in the programs history – 9.06 – placed sixth in the competition.

The all-girl cheerleaders had a good showing and with some very tough competition placed eighth.

The co-ed team also received its best scores in the programs history – 8.61 – to earn its best placing in program history, 4th in the country.

The competition will air on Fox Sports Net on April 30th and May 14th at 3 p.m. local time.

– Courtesy staff reports and Media Relations

Thornton must shake shadow

By HOWARD ULMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) – Joe Thornton must escape from New Jersey's defensive specialist, John Madden, if the Boston Bruins are going to keep their season alive.

Third in the NHL in scoring this season, Thornton has been shadowed throughout the first three games of the series by a player five inches shorter and 30 pounds lighter. He managed just two assists as the Devils took a 3-0 lead in the best-of-seven series.

His last chance to score could come in tonight's fourth game.

"You just rely on your linemates more," Thornton said Monday. Madden is "just a great defensive player. He knows where to go and he's played against a lot of the top centers. So he's very cagey."

Boston's first line, centered by Thornton, has scored just one of the team's three goals. Glen Murray, who had 44 regular-season goals, scored that in Game 2. But in Sunday's 3-0 loss, he didn't get a shot.

"Every time we get down there, they just seem to ice the puck," said Thornton, who had 36 goals and 65 assists. "We don't have too much time in the offensive zone."

Madden even produced offensively Sunday with a goal and two assists.

"Usually, when you play well defensively in our system, you will contribute offensively," Devils goalie Martin Brodeur said.

Thornton plans to continue getting in front of the net to screen Brodeur and hope some shots get through. He and Murray were among seven Bruins who rested instead of practicing on Monday, even though no injuries were reported.

Madden, the NHL's top defensive forward in 2001-2002, knows what he's up against.

"These three games, Joe's had plenty of chances and is dominating down low at times," he said. "We're running into him, but he still hangs onto the puck. You don't realize how strong he is, and trying to move him off the puck is a joke."

So Madden tries to keep Thornton from getting the puck in the first place and has been fairly successful.

Bruins coach Mike O'Connell knows the only way to avoid a Madden-Thornton matchup is unacceptable.

"You could sit your best players, but we're not going to do that," he said. "There's a couple of minor adjustments (Thornton) can probably make to help ease some of the coverage."

On rare occasions when the Devils' defense falters, Brodeur is ready. He posted his 14th career playoff shutout on Sunday in Game 3.

But the Bruins' plan to avoid their second straight first-round exit is the same – get players in front of Brodeur so his vision is restricted, take lots of shots and pounce on rare rebounds.

"I fully expect him to play at the level he's playing at," said Jeff Hackett, who will be back in goal for Boston on Tuesday. Hackett returned to the net Sunday after missing 12 games with a broken finger. "We have to play our best to beat them," he said. "I have a lot of respect for (Brodeur), but he's human."

Brodeur led the NHL in wins and shutouts and was fourth in goals-against average. In the playoffs, he's given up three goals in three games.

But on March 12, he gave up three goals in 5:15 to Martin Lapointe in a 4-3 Boston win in which he was benched 10 minutes into the second period.

"That day every puck was getting through and they weren't blocking the shots in front of the net," Lapointe said. "Now it seems they're making the conscious effort to block shots in front of him and he's making the big saves.

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Senior Brandi Cross hit two homeruns last weekend in a sweep of Rhode Island. The Diamond Bar, Calif. native has hit 11 dingers this year, a UMass single-season record.

Arnold, Holtz dominate

Continued from page 10

With the base loaded, Arnold got URI shortstop Gabby Zagami to ground out, ending the threat.

After a pair of insurance runs from Puglia and Kelley, the stage was now set for Arnold's dramatics. Arnold walked to the mound and sat down the first batters. Arnold had just recorded her first career no-hitter at UMass while posting nine strikeouts and one walk.

The Minutewomen will return to action today, with a trip to Storrs, Conn. for a matchup with Connecticut. First pitch is scheduled for 3:30 p.m.

***

Arnold was named the A-10 Pitcher of the Week on Monday, the second straight time the sophomore has won the award.

Arnold went 2-0 last week and gave up zero runs in wins over Rhode Island and Harvard. The URI victory was also the first no-hitter of Arnold's career. Arnold tossed five innings in the Harvard win on Thursday, giving up four hits and striking out six as the Minutewomen mercy-ruled the Crimson, 8-0.

Arnold is 10-4 on the season with a 1.62 ERA. She has struck out 72 batters in 90 innings and has recorded four straight shutouts.

Tebucky traded to Saints

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) – The New England Patriots traded safety Tebucky Jones to the New Orleans Saints on Monday for three draft choices, two of them this year.

The Patriots will get a third- and seventh-round pick this year and a fourth-rounder in the 2004 draft.

New England now has 13 picks in this year's draft, equaling the most they've had since the NFL switched to a seven-round draft in 1994. They also had 13 in 1996.

Jones, 28, was a first-round draft pick, 22nd overall, for New England in 1998.

He has had 195 tackles on defense and 65 on special teams in a five-year career with New England. He also intercepted four passes, recorded 2 1/2 sacks, forced six fumbles and recovered three.

But he became expendable when the Patriots signed former Chargers free agent Rodney Harrison.

New England had designated him as its franchise player, meaning he would have to be paid at least the average of the five highest-paid players at his position, which for a safety is currently $3.04 million.

Had another team signed him as a free agent, they would have given the Patriots two first-round draft picks.

Rumsfeld honors Jordan before finale

WASHINGTON (AP) – Michael Jordan received a U.S. flag from Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, beginning a night of honors for Jordan during his final home appearance as an NBA player.

A bigger tribute was scheduled to take place after Monday's game between the Washington Wizards and the New York Knicks, with the details kept secret.

Rumsfeld, who received a loud ovation, presented Jordan with a flag that flew over the Pentagon on the one-year anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks. Jordan cradled the flag in his right hand, his head bowed, before the national anthem was played.

Jordan's introduction during the starting lineups was a letdown, with the cheers not much louder than the ones for Rumsfeld. The MCI Center crowd gave Jordan a standing ovation that lasted a mere 25 seconds, some 3 1/2 minutes shorter than the one he received in his final game at Chicago earlier this season.

Then again, Jordan himself tried not to make a big deal out of the game, with the greater focus on what he says will be his final NBA game ever – Wednesday's season finale at Philadelphia.

"It's just another night, really," Jordan said after the morning shootaround. "I know that this is my last home game in Washington, D.C., and that is something I definitely will treasure, but I woke up this morning and I thought that there was this certain feeling that I should be feeling – and I had breakfast, coffee, did my normal stuff – and nothing seems out of the ordinary."

For his teammates, there was a sense of melancholy that they were sending Jordan out on a losing team.

"We're disappointed it's MJ's last game, that we didn't make the playoffs," guard Tyronn Lue said. "Hopefully, Michael will go out at his last game at home with a win."

Although he couldn't produce a winning record, Jordan brought national exposure and big profits to the Wizards, who shattered attendance records over the last two seasons. All 82 home games in the 20,000-seat arena were sellouts, averaging 5,000 more fans per game than in the season before Jordan returned to the court.

But that was nothing new for Jordan, who regularly sold out Chicago Stadium and the United Center during his 13 seasons with the Bulls. The last time Jordan played a home game that wasn't a sellout was Nov. 20, 1987.

The 40-year-old Jordan has been feted everywhere he's gone this season, with huge cheers and video tributes at away arenas. The Denver Nuggets gave him a motorcycle last month, and the Miami Heat retired his No. 23 last week.

www.DailyCollegian.com

A gig you can bank on.

Local supermarket branches are seeking:

Bankers

(Selling products, providing customer service, and processing transactions)

Call 1-877-INAISLE to apply today.

Where there's a Citizens Bank supermarket branch, there's a unique opportunity for you to market your sales skills on the floor. How? Simply by approaching in-aisle shoppers to sell our great products and services. With variable schedules including evening and weekend hours and great benefits for full-time and part-time employees, it's as easy as freshly-baked pie.

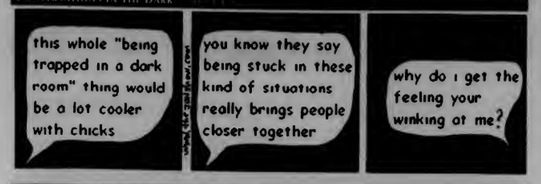
CITIZENS BANK
Not your typical bank.®

www.citizensbank.com/employment

Citizens Bank is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer committed to building a diverse workforce. M/F/D/V.

PETER PAN BUS TICKETS
COPIES & FAXES
UPS PACKAGE SHIPPING
$2.00 OFF ANY ROUND TRIP BUS TICKET PURCHASED IN APRIL WITH THIS AD
O2O
COPY CENTER
on campus in101 Herter Hall

Interested in Business?



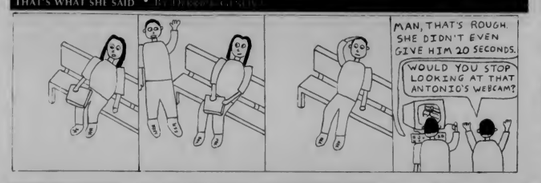
The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the 2003/2004 school year. Great resume builder!
Current Freshmen/Sophomores strongly encouraged to apply
call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center
Need to possess strong business and communication skills

sports@dailycollegian.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 8
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/11/03 - Thursday 4/17/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
ANGER MANAGEMENT (PG13) 1:10 1:55 4:00 4:35 7:25 7:50 10:00 10:30*
I'M THE BOSS (R) 1:55 4:50 7:45 9:50*
A MAN APART (R) 1:25 4:25 7:15 9:40*
WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 1:50 4:30 7:25 10:15*
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:10 9:35
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:15 4:10
OLD SCHOOL (R) 10:30
DREAMCATCHER (R) 7:00 10:05
THE CORE (PG13) 1:00 4:05 7:05 10:10
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:15 7:40 10:25
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:20
PHILBY'S BIG MOVE (G) 1:05 3:00 4:55
THE HUNTED (R) 7:30 9:45
Coming 4/16/03
BULLETPROOF MONK
Coming 4/18/03
HOLES
MALLORY'S MOST WANTED
Senior Show 4/17/03
• PHONE BOOTH
*Late passes/supersavers
• NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

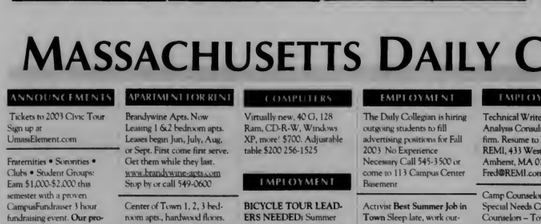
APPLICATIONS FOR SPORTS EDITOR AND ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR FOR NEXT YEAR ARE NOW BEING ACCEPTED. IF YOU ARE INTERESTED, BRING THREE CLIPS, A RESUME AND A COVER LETTER DOWN TO THE COLLEGIAN NEWSROOM THIS WEEK AND ASK FOR JIM OR SCOTT.

CONVERSATIONS IN THE DARK

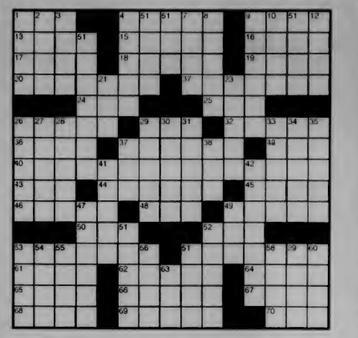


CONVERSATIONS IN THE DARK

JAYHOO AND JAWHOO



THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID



THE TORQUES

THE TORQUES

ACROSS
1 Consumer protection org.
4 Like Heidi
9 Challenge for jrs.
13 Vietnam neighbor
15 Pine cousin
16 "Blondie" kid
17 Mattly or Felipe
18 Follow upon
19 Midnight opposite
20 Thumbed a ride
22 Ladies
24 Portable bed
25 Green parrot
26 Disprove
29 Marshy area
32 Spunk
36 Midterm or final
37 Computer capacity
39 "— appetit!"
40 Shuttle destination (2 wds.)
43 Nabokov novel
44 Puts forth effort
45 Smooth the way
46 Jaunty hat
48 Pigment
49 Destines
50 Noncom
52 Distress call
53 Band instrument
57 Roomette
61 Annapolis inst.
62 Pnma donnas
64 Flashy sign
65 Hang around
66 Jung's feminine side
67 Like horror flicks
68 Tree paces
69 Gulf nation
70 Mermaid's domain

DOWN
1 Unexciting
2 Romantic island
3 Car wheel lock
4 Frozen rain
5 Magician's prop
6 Capone foe
7 Move quickly
8 Valentino role
9 Letter answerer (2 wds.)
10 Gin flavoring
11 Love, to Claudius
12 Scads
14 Knuckle under
21 Peppery
23 Dairy keeper
26 Fix up an old house
27 Ooze out
28 Storybook elephant
29 Honored in style
30 Manicurist's board

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

12-15-02 © 2002 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

31 "Cannery Row" actor
33 "Lusitania" sinker (hyph.)
34 Grove
35 Trouser parts
37 USA neighbor
38 Thing in law
41 Release (2 wds.)
42 Deserting
47 Literary works
49 Watch pocket
51 Tomorrow's
52 — B. Anthony
53 Sloppy kiss
54 Movie terror
55 Break suddenly
56 Number of Muses
57 Visited
58 Execs
59 Knowledge
60 New Age singer
63 Robust energy

HOROSCOPES

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
When you come to a fork in the road, pick it up.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
You have the same sign as the sexiest graphics player of the week.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Don't do that. Your face is going to get stuck. Oh wait, it already did.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Stop staring at the kid sitting in front of you. We all know he hasn't showered.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You'll discover you can wiggle your ears today and will be quite good at it.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Despite drooling on that girl this weekend, you still have a chance.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't accept any cookies from strangers today.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Stop trying to make those old shoes fit and grab the pair in front of you.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Playing near a sink will be dangerous today. Better watch out.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Stop stalking that girl in your writing class. She has a boyfriend.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Go nowhere without a floatation device; you never know.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
If you build it , they will come. Just wait a little longer.

All departments at the Collegian are now hiring. Please stop by the office for job inquires

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

TUESDAY
- High: 84
- Low: 56

WEDNESDAY
- High: 69
- Low: 28

THURSDAY
- High: 43
- Low: 31

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Cuban Black Bean Soup
- Macaroni & Cheese
- Chicken Nuggets
- Plain Chicken
- Beans & Rice (vegan)

DINNER
- Cuban Black Bean Soup
- Honey Garlic Roast Pork
- Baked Stuff Fish
- Red Thai Tofu Steak (vegan)
- Jamaican 3-Beans (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andy Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Eric Soderstrom
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Jennifer DiNeglio
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lloyd / Gerry Auger

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"A man ain't nothing but a man, but a son? Well now, that's somebody."

- Toni Morrison

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Tickets to 2003 Civic Tour Sign up at UmassElement.com

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups: Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condominium for rent excellent condition 1/2 mile away from campus 4 bedroom apt for female roommates $550 full room, $350 to share plus utilities. 413-592-0540

Apt. located in Brandywine Furnished Apt. Seeking Female Roommate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sandy @ 413-546-0489

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlocal-rentals.com 253-7879

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlocalrentals.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

95 Geo Prism Purple 95K 5 Speed good condition $3000 OBO 413-665-3022

COMPUTERS

Virtually new, 40 G, 128 Ram, CD-R-W, Windows XP, more $700. Adjustable table $200 256-1525

EMPLOYMENT

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED! Summer teenage bicycling trips. USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Programs, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, www.bicycletrips.com

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS: Pennsylvania children's sleep-away camp. If you love children we have positions for Directors, Asst Dir's, and Counselors for Tennis, Golf, Drama, Camping/Nature, High & Low Ropes, Gymnastics, Sports, Sailing, Water-skiing, Ceramics, Jewelry, Guitar, Aerobics, Self-Defense, Video, Piano, and Nurse (RN). Dates 6/19-8/16/03. On Campus Interviews arranged. Call 1-800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

EMPLOYMENT

The Daily Collegian is hiring outgoing students to fill advertising positions for Fall 2003. No Experience Necessary Call 545-3500 or come to 113 Campus Center Basement

Activist Best Summer Job in Town Sleep late, work outdoors, cool people, cool boss. Great Issues! *protect our air and water *fight corporate polluters *defend public health *promote renewable energy Earn $4,000-5,000 this summer Call today, Start tomorrow 413-584-9830

Summer Office Help Amherst Leisure Services is looking for a summer registration clerk. Duties include service, accepting registrations, data entry, answering phones, filing, and other clerical duties. Hours are M-F 9 a.m.-4 p.m. Pay range is $7.44-8.61/hr. depending upon experience. Apply at Human Resources, Town Hall, 4 Bolrwood Ave., Amherst, MA 01002. AA/EOE

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

EMPLOYMENT

Technical Writer for Policy Analysis Consulting/Software firm. Resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or Fred@REMI.com

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors – Town of Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. old. 5 range for both positions: $8.19-9.48 hr, 35-40 hrs per week, June 30-Aug. 15 Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept. 4 Bolrwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

EMPLOYMENT

WSI/Lifeguards The Town of Amherst, Department of Leisure Services and Supplemental Education (LSSE) Aquatics Program is now accepting WSI applications for summer 2003 season. All Applicants must possess current WSI and Lifeguard certifications. Previous experience preferred. $8.19-9.48 hr. Application deadline: 4/21. Applications are available from the Town Hall Human Resources Dept., 4 Bolrwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Opportunity Employer

Economic / Business Development Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED! Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

EMPLOYMENT

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

Fall internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands on experience in the legal field- work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary; training provided. Deadline to begin application process is 4/22/03. Contact the Legal Services Office 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

FOR SALE

For Sale 1 full couch, 1 love seat and 1 twin mattress and box. Great condition Call: 549-4972

FOR SALE

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedroom house available this summer / next year. Beautiful location, 10 minutes from Amherst Center. Call 256-0613

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1638

MISCELLANEOUS

www.advantagesemtrom-plus.com

ROOMMATE WANTED

For Fall Semester on Main St. $340 plus utilities per month 256-4257

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUBLET

Pufton Sublet from June 1st- August 31st 3 beds 2 baths 1140 per month Call Mark 253-1479

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WANTED TO RENT

Furnished Summer Rental or House share Male, non-smoker, no pets Will pay up to $500.00 508-240-5069

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Pitching duo dominates

Holtz, Arnold shutout URI in doubleheader

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Lilling Katla Holtz's shoes is going to be a hard task next year but sophomore Kelli Arnold seems to be up to the challenge. This hurling duo put on a pair of impressive performances in Sunday's doubleheader against Rhode Island at the UMass Softball Complex.

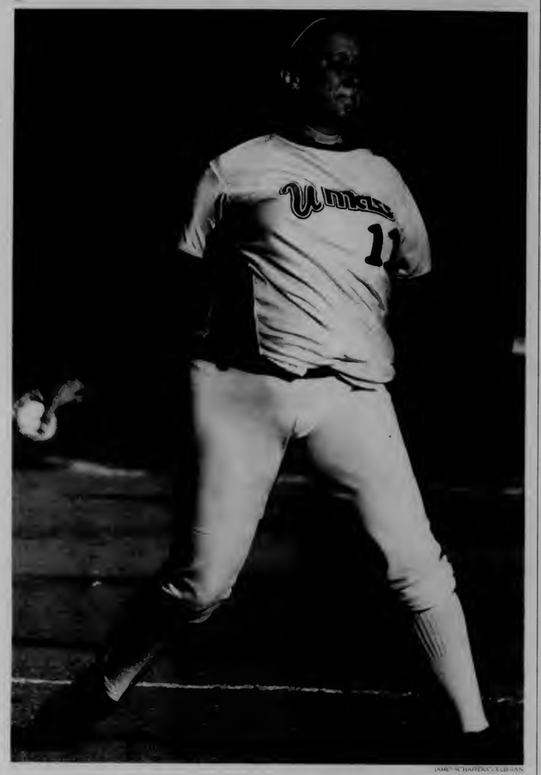
In two games, the two hurlers gave up only one hit while the Massachusetts softball team (23-10, 4-0 Atlantic 10) walked away with two easy wins, 8-0 and 5-0, due to the dominance on the hill.

"I thought they both did a pretty good job," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "Katla had a good pitch count and her ratio of strikes to pitches thrown was a good count.

"Kelli, I thought had a good game, but I think she is capable of a little bit more. Her strikes need to come up in the amount of pitches thrown. She had a couple of 0-2 counts and could have finished a little bit better. Overall, giving up one hit in 13 innings there's nothing wrong with that."

Holtz opened up the doubleheader with another solid outing on the hill. The 2002 A-10 Pitcher of the Year had a perfect game through five innings before giving up a hit to Rams catcher Jayme Rautenberg, who singled to leftfield. The senior finished with a one-hit shutout, nine strikeouts and zero walks. Holtz now posts an A-10 best 0.99 earned run average with an 11-6 record and 96 Ks in 113 1 innings pitched.

A host of Minutewomen supplied more offensive support in the opener. Senior Brandi Cross and freshman K.J. Kelly each picked a homer. Cross went 4-for-6 with four runs batted in on the day and crushed her second homer in the concluding game giving her 11 diggers on the year. Her home run total leads the conference with teammate Emily Robustelli's five dingers good for third place. Robustelli also had a homer in the second contest.



Senior Anna Peres had a perfect day at the plate going 3-for-3, while junior Aisha Franke went 2-for-4 with a run and an RBI. Robustelli and Holtz each contributed a hit and a run.

"We're just getting better and I think quite frankly, we are just starting to hit our stride," Sortino said. "We can be a little bit better at keeping our hands on the ball to get a better contact, so we worked hard on that today. [We have just] one more practice this week but next week [this] is something I hope we can really improve upon."

After a total team offensive effort and Holtz's performance on the mound, Arnold had a tough act to follow, but did not disappoint.

With a three-run lead after the fifth inning, Arnold hadn't given up a hit and had walked just one batter.

With one out Arnold allowed her second walk and was followed by an error on Kelly, allowing runners on first and second. With the pressure on, Arnold struck out the next batter. Then the following batter reached on an error from Hilary Puglia.

JAMES SCHAPIRO/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore hurler Kelli Arnold earned her second straight A-10 Pitcher of the Week honor after a no-hitter against Rhode Island Sunday. Arnold has pitched four consecutive shutouts.

Minutemen bomb Fordham in Bronx

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team is on a roll.

After the Minutemen lost five of its first six games, it looked as if UMass coach Mike Stone would be sitting through a long season. But since their March 27 home opener, the Minutemen have won eight of nine. After a three-game sweep of Fordham in which they defeated the Rams, 10-8, on Monday and swept a doubleheader, 4-3 and 2-1, on Sunday, they find themselves tied with Rhode Island for first place in the Atlantic 10's East Division.

"We're playing good baseball," Stone said. "Our guys are getting on base and we're hitting the ball well and knocking them in. We have a ways to go, but we're starting to do the things it takes to win ballgames."

The Maroon and White (11-9 6-3 A-10) sent freshman Matt Torra to the hill for the finale of a delayed weekend series with the Rams. However, the righthander lasted only five innings after surrendering four earned runs on four hits.

On the short end of a 5-3 score after Torra's departure, the UMass offense came to life in the top of the seventh, rallying for four runs off of the Fordham duo of Bryan Kelley and Dave Rodriguez. The runs came via RBI singles from senior designated hitter Chris Morgan and junior second baseman Cullan Maumus, an RBI double from sophomore centerfielder Jason Twomley, and a sacrifice fly by senior first basemen Jeff Altieri.

With sophomore righthander Anthony Gallo taking over on the mound, the Rams cut into the newfound Minuteman lead with a single run in the seventh, but freshman catcher Frank Curreri made up the difference with a solo homerun in the top of the eighth.

The Rams again cut the Minuteman lead to one run in the bottom of the eighth on a solo homer by Jeremy Bourgeois. But UMass came back with two runs in the top of the ninth on a solo homer from Morgan leading off the inning and an RBI single from senior Matt Boulanger.

Sophomore closer Scott Ratliff recorded his fifth save of the season despite allowing a run in the ninth as the Minutemen held on for the 10-8 victory.

"We're still looking at our pitching staff trying to see exactly what we have," Stone said. "We have some guys who are pitching well for us, and we just need to find the right situations to use what we have."

In Sunday's second contest, sophomore Keith Doherty earned his second win of the season to improve to 2-2. The southpaw hurled 5-1/3 innings, scattering seven hits and giving up three runs while striking out two. Ratliff notched the save with an inning and a third of scoreless relief.

Morgan and Curreri paced the offense with RBI doubles, while the latter added an RBI single in the 4-3 win.

"Again, we're swinging the bats well and getting guys on, which leads to runs," Stone said. "That's what we've been trying to emphasize, getting guys on the bases to make things happen."

In the first game, junior Eric Chown tossed a complete game five hitter, surrendering just a single run while striking out four to improve to 3-2 on the season.

Maine transfer Matt Reynolds continued to swing a hot bat, knocking in the first UMass run in the fourth with an RBI single. After Fordham tied the score in the bottom of the sixth on an RBI groundout by Kurt Thomas, the Minutemen pushed across the winning tally in the top of the seventh, as Boulanger doubled off of the Rams' John Baco and later scored on an error.

The Minutemen return to action today, as they will host the Connecticut Huskies at Lorden Field. First pitch is scheduled for 3 p.m.

Tennis splits vs. A-10 foes

Wraps up fourth seed for conference tourney

By Anna Edwards
Collegian Staff

After a demanding weekend of victory and defeat for the Massachusetts tennis team, the Minutewomen sealed a No. 4 seed in the Verizon Atlantic 10 Tournament which kicks off Thursday, April 17 in Baltimore.

As the Minutewomen have focused the entire season on placing in the top five seeds, they are pleased with the result.

On Friday, the Minutewomen traveled to Philadelphia to play Temple, which resulted in another 4-3 loss for UMass, a score that has become commonplace for the team and plagued its season.

"If we turned around our 4-3 matches this season, things may have been different," UMass coach Judy Dixon said.

During a match tormented by rain and the constant shuffle of players having to move from the outdoors, the Maroon and White were able to take Temple to match point, but this crucial opportunity was lost.

"This was a test of mental fortitude," Dixon said. "I was pleased with the play and intensity throughout the changes of the day; it was amazing college tennis and an amazing team effort."

Dixon described the close-knit squad as "really upset" after this loss.

"We weren't expecting to win but we came so close," said junior captain Susan Hyams, who tried to look at the weekend positively. "It was a really good weekend to pick up momentum to close out this week."

The Owls secured wins over the Minutewomen in the top three singles positions. UMass junior Jafra Deponites was knocked out of the top spot 6-2, 6-1 by junior Danira Penic.

No. 2 singles saw Minutewoman Stephanie Price have a close battle in the first set with her opponent freshman Mia Marovic but fell in straight sets, 7-6, 6-2.

UMass' Camilla Knight took up the No. 3 spot, a rare position for the freshman, and was beaten 6-1, 6-3 by freshman Ana Maslesa.

Victory in the bottom three singles enabled the Maroon and White to even the score at 3-3. Sophomore Sasha Edelstein crushed senior Rene Deyzel without dropping a game 6-0, 6-0, while freshman Dorothy Iwanowicz topped freshman Lauren Verrall 6-2, 6-2. Susan Hyams defeated freshman Laura Seiverling 6-4, 6-2.

It was the close doubles matches that proved the decider for UMass and gave victory to the Owls.

Penic and Maslesa defeated Price and Deponites, 9-8, in the No. 1 doubles in a closely contested match that came down to match point, while Deyzel partnered Seiverling to win, 8-5, over Hyams and Knight.

The Maroon and White only had success at the No. 2 doubles position with Edelstein and Iwanowicz powering their way to an 8-2 victory over Marovic and Verrall.

Next stop for the Minutewomen was George Washington on Saturday, where they were victorious, 6-1.

The Colonials were missing their No. 1 singles player, favorable for the Minutewomen but it did not ensure an easy win. On her way to victory, Price took the first set, 6-3, comfortably, but dropped the second set, 4-6. She went on to seal the match beating junior Nazli Gencsoy, 7-6, in the final set.

It was a bad day for Knight, who lost in straight sets to sophomore Sevla Gonca, 6-0, 6-0 in her No. 4 singles while Hyams struggled in her victory against freshman Estee Bartell, 3-6, 6-3, 6-3 at No. 6 singles. The pair lost its doubles match 9-8 against sophomore Natasha Bode and Bartell.

"It was not how I wanted to play," Hyams said. "I didn't play how I wanted in doubles, but the others played well."

George Washington will need to be confirmed in the No. 5 seed for Thursday, but this will mean UMass will meet them again during the A-10 and probably with their key No. 1 singles player in full force.

"We need to beat George Washington again, but the team is there I want for this point of the season."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore Stephanie Price won both of her matches in UMass' win over GW Saturday.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Susan Hyams won two singles matchups this weekend as UMass' No. 6 seed.

Williams leaving Kansas for UNC

By Doug Tucker
Associated Press

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) – Roy Williams told the Kansas Jayhawks he is leaving to coach North Carolina, his beloved alma mater, according to players who attended a meeting with him Monday.

The decision comes three years after Williams rejected an offer to take over the Tar Heels' storied basketball program, where he learned his craft as an assistant under Dean Smith.

"It's sad for the program and the players who are here," said Jeff Boschee, who graduated from Kansas last year. "It's tough for them."

Williams' return to Chapel Hill, N.C., ends his 15-year tenure at a program he helped turn into one of the nation's most successful.

The fastest coach in NCAA Division I history to win 400 games, Williams (418-101) won nine conference championships at Kansas and took the Jayhawks to the past 14 NCAA tournaments, including title games this season and in 1991.

Not all the Jayhawks in the half-hour meeting at Allen Fieldhouse were sad after hearing the news. Wayne Simien, who dislocated his shoulder in January and later had season-ending surgery, appeared angry.

"I gave my right arm for him, literally," said Simien, wearing a sling.

Stephen Vinson, a freshman walk-on, added: "I'm sure you can imagine it was not a good time in there."

Williams emerged teary-eyed from the meeting and refused to reveal his decision. Instead, he planned an evening news conference, although he did not say whether it would be held in Lawrence or Chapel Hill.

North Carolina said it would hold a news conference at the men's basketball practice gym, although the topic wasn't disclosed. Kansas chancellor Robert Hemenway said a statement from the school would be released during North Carolina's news conference.

A private jet awaited at Lawrence's municipal airport with a flight plan for Chapel Hill, said Lloyd Hetrick, of Hetrick Aviation Services.

"This is personal fellas. There is something I want to say," a choked-up Williams told reporters after the team meeting. "This has been a special place. I really appreciate the way you have treated me."

Williams lost last week to Syracuse in the national championship game and angrily refused to answer questions about the North Carolina job after the game.

The Tar Heels are seeking to replace Matt Doherty, who resigned shortly before the Final Four.

Williams' fierce loyalty to his players kept him in Kansas when he was first offered the job in Chapel Hill three years ago, and many Jayhawks fans hoped he would stay in Lawrence for good.

In June 2000, Williams spent an agonizing week following the retirement of North Carolina coach Bill Guthridge, forced to choose between two programs that desperately wanted him.

After a weeklong vacation at his home in South Carolina, and a day spent in Lawrence thinking it over, Williams announced his decision to 16,000 Jayhawk fans at Memorial Stadium.

"I'm staying," Williams said simply.

Given a second chance at North Carolina, he decided to go.

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 2003 · NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 · VOLUME CIX ISSUE 118

UMass employee charged with theft

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts employee was arraigned in Northampton District Court yesterday in connection with the theft of potentially tens of thousands of dollars in lab equipment from the UMass campus.

Daniel Hunt, of 197 River Rd. in Whately, Mass., was arraigned on 12 charges each of breaking and entering, receiving stolen property and stealing from a building. UMass Police Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald said that Hunt was arrested Friday at 4:20 p.m. in Greenfield on a warrant stemming from an eight-month investigation by the both the UMPD Detective Bureau and UMPD line officers. Hunt worked as a technical specialist in Physical Plant attached to the Department of Environmental Health and Safety.

Archbald said that the investigation stemmed from the theft of lab equipment in multiple academic buildings, including the Graduate Research Center, Morrill Science Center, Hasbrouck Lab, Chenoweth Lab and the Goodell building.

According to Archbald, the list of stolen equipment is long, including microscope equipment, calipers, camera lens, a micrometer and scales.

"It's an extensive case," he said. "We're still tallying."

Archbald said that the UMPD carried out a search warrant on Hunt's home in Whately as well. "We obtained property there that has been alleged to be stolen from the University. We're currently in possession of property that hasn't even been reported as stolen yet," he said. "This investigation still has a long way to go."

Archbald said that the UMPD will make descriptions of the recovered stolen equipment available as soon as possible. The UMass Web site is available online at www.umass.edu/umpd.

"Through use of our Web site, we will be putting out generic descriptions of missing equipment and give people the chance to claim ownership if they can identify it," Archbald said.

Lead investigator on the case, Brian Davies, will also continue to receive phone calls from people who suspect they may have had something stolen, Archbald said.

UMass police do not yet have a dollar estimate on the amount of equipment that has been stolen and recovered as of yet.

Hunt was released on $10,000 bail on Friday.

"As a condition of his release, he has been told to stay off of University property," Archbald said.

Donald A. Robinson, the director of Environmental Health and Safety, was in meetings most of the afternoon yesterday and was not available to comment on Hunt's status as a University employee.

It has not yet been confirmed which thefts are tied to Hunt, but the University has experienced multiple larcenies of lab equipment over the last year, including the theft of two balances reported from a laboratory in the Morrill Science Center on Feb. 21. They were valued at between $3,000 and $3,500.

Chancellor announces new scholarship fund

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts Chancellor John V. Lombardi has announced the Chancellor's Merit Scholarship Fund, a new scholarship program targeted at outstanding high school seniors. The goal of the scholarship fund is to help the university become more competitive in selecting potential students who are enrolling in college this fall.

"We are delighted to announce this program of support for our outstanding students," said Commonwealth College Dean, Linda Slakey. "It reflects our commitment to attract and serve the state's most talented young people, which is a mission of Commonwealth College."

The scholarship fund is open to high school students applying to the University with a minimum 3.8 grade point average and SAT scores of 1450 or higher. There is no official application a student must fill out to apply. He or she must simply apply to the University and meet the criteria.

Students enrolling next year who meet the award criteria will be entered into a pool to receive the scholarship, which is aimed at students who are planning to attend the Commonwealth College, the University's public honors college. Students do not need to enroll in Commonwealth College to receive the award, which will be offered to students entering the University for the fall 2003 semester.

The four-year scholarships are valued at between $2,000 and $5,000 per year. The fund for the scholarships comes from $100,000 donated through fundraising by various donors for Lombardi's inauguration in February.

The decision to set the stakes for the scholarship high was that of Lombardi. He said that it is important for the University to be able to compete with other schools and to find the best students in the state.

"Like all of America's premier public research universities," Lombardi said. "We compete for the best students in our state, and the generosity of UMass Amherst alumni and friends makes possible the scholarship program, another enhanced opportunity for the Commonwealth's exceptional college students."

Meredith Lind, a spokeswoman of Commonwealth College, said that if more students apply for the scholarship than there are open slots, the school must look at other criteria in order to select winning applicants.

"We would be looking at leadership activities, community service, Advanced Placement classes, and research projects," Lind said, adding that the college would also be looking at other activities the student performed that qualify them as outstanding.

JAMES SCHAPIRO/COLLEGIAN

Chancellor John V. Lombardi

First steps in establishing Iraqi government taken

TIM SLOAN/AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE

Zalmay Khalilzad, second from right, White House special envoy to Iraq, tries to maintain order at the end of the U.S.-sponsored meeting of Iraqi opposition groups Tuesda, at Talil Air Bas in southern Iraq.

By Nicole Winfield
Associated Press

UR, Iraq (AP) – Under a white-and-gold tent at the biblical birthplace of Abraham, the United States assembled Iraqi factions on Tuesday and told them it has "absolutely no interest" in ruling Iraq.

Yet the gathering of about 80 people in this ancient city on the Euphrates River, a first step to creating a postwar government, reflected the obvious difficulties of the task: Some Shiite Muslims boycotted and thousands demonstrated nearby, shouting: "No to America and no to Saddam!"

The session ended with an agreement by show of hands to meet again in 10 days to discuss forming an interim authority. Participants also agreed to a list of 13 points, beginning with the principle that Iraq must be democratic and calling for the dissolution of Saddam Hussein's Baath party.

Retired Lt. Gen. Jay Garner, who will head the U.S.-led interim administration in Iraq, opened the conference under a tent – white on the outside, gold on the inside – at Talil air base near the 4,000-year-old ziggurat at Ur, a terraced temple platform of the ancient Sumerians.

Garner, who wore a twin American and Iraqi flag pin, turned 65 on Tuesday.

"What better birthday can a man have than to begin it not only where civilization began but where a free Iraq and a democratic Iraq will begin today?" he said.

According to the Bible, Abraham migrated from Ur to Canaan, where his son Isaac carried on the Israelite line. Abraham, who is revered by Muslims as the prophet Ibrahim, also was the father of Ismail, forefather of the Arabs.

White House envoy Zalmay Khalilzad told delegates that the United States has "no interest, absolutely no interest, in ruling Iraq."

"We want you to establish your own democratic system based on Iraqi traditions and values," Khalilzad said.

Participants included Kurds and Sunni and Shiite Arabs from inside the country and others who spent years in exile. U.S. officials invited the groups, which picked their own representatives.

But many Iraqis boycotted the meeting in opposition to U.S. plans to install Garner atop an interim administration. Thousands of Shiites – who constitute Iraq's most populous religious group but were repressed under Saddam – demonstrated in nearby Nasiriyah.

"Iraq needs an Iraqi interim government," one Shiite leader, Abdul Aziz Hakim, said in Iran. "Anything other than this tramples [on] the rights of the Iraqi people and will be a return to the era of colonization," said Hakim, whose Supreme Council for Islamic Revolution in Iraq is the country's largest Shiite group.

Iraq's Shiite majority has for years chafed under Sunni Muslim dominance, which dates to the early days of what is now modern Iraq. Shiites have seen the fall of Saddam, a Sunni Muslim, as an opportunity to take what they see as their rightful political place and have shown little patience for negotiations at which they fear they will be pressured to compromise.

In negotiations before the war, Iraqi exiles at a London meeting backed by the United States gave Shiites about half the seats on an advisory board some envisioned as a government-in-waiting – a breakthrough acknowledgment of Shiites' weight, but not one recognizing their majority status. About a third of Iraq's 24 million people are Sunni Muslim and most of the rest are Shiite Muslim.

The Shiites are also handicapped by a power struggle within their own community.

In a sign of the fissures among Shiites and of the difficulties that the new U.S.-led interim administration in Iraq could face, a mob last week killed Abdul Majid al-Khoei, a prominent Shiite cleric opposed to Saddam, and Haider al-Kadar, a cleric loyal to Saddam and widely hated by Shiites, as they paid a joint visit to a shrine in southern Iraq in an attempt to promote Shiite unity.

U.S. officials stressed that Tuesday's meeting was just the first of many in Iraq. They hope other Iraqis will join the process.

Once selected, the interim administration could begin handing power to Iraqi officials within three to six months, but forming a government will take longer, officials said.

The delegates also discussed the contentious issue of religion's role in society. Sheik Ayad Jamal Al Din, a Shiite religious leader from Nasiriyah, urged the delegates to craft a secular government. But Nassar Hussein Musawi, a schoolteacher, disagreed: "Those who would like to separate religion from the state are simply dreaming," he said.

Iraqi exile Hatem Mukhliss quoted President Kennedy's exhortation, "Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country," and called on Iraqis to write a constitution, establish a legal system and consider what role the army should play.

He asked coalition representatives to address problems of security, electricity and water and help rebuild destroyed and looted hospitals.

"Saddam reduced the country to such a state that it

Continued on page 3

Vice Chancellor to address SGA

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

JAMES SCHAPIRO/COLLEGIAN

SGA President Dave Carr is hoping for approval from the Senate for more Executive Cabinet positions tonight.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Joanne Vanin will address the Student Government Association at tonight's Senate meeting.

President Dave Carr will also present more Executive Cabinet allocations to be approved by the Senate, including the resurrection of the once lost Secretary of Diversity position.

Budget issues will also make a presence at tonight's Senate meeting. Jared Nokes, chair of an ad-hoc budget committee, and Carr, along with other University of Massachusetts students, met with Secretary of Higher Education Peter Nesson for further discussion on Governor Mitt Romney's proposed plan today.

Issues surrounding new proposed changes to Romney's plan are to be discussed by members of the Senate as well as by concerned UMass students.

"We're a little upset, because basically Governor Romney took a headline from The Collegian and used it as the SGA giving our support which wasn't the most accurate representation," Speaker Dan Saunders said. "It's really too early to have a position because we don't have enough information to go on, and I don't see how anyone could."

Saunders continued by explaining that currently the SGA has no official position on Romney's proposed changes for the higher educational system other than that they have not given their support, but they are continuing to look into all its aspects.

Vanin will address the senate tonight and also field questions from the SGA members. With many new positions opening in Whitmore, and search committees reviewing applicants, Vanin will ultimately be faced with many questions regarding what is in store for the future of the UMass campus.

Issues surrounding space allocations in the Campus Center and Student Union have been up for discussion, as well as what the future holds for the Campus Activities office which is currently under an interim-management staff.

Saunders explained that he felt Vanin coming will help clear up questions that Senators may have regarding student life, particularly in the face of changes for the future.

Carr is also looking forward to adding a few more names onto his Executive Cabinet roster. The position of Secretary of Diversity is once again becoming official, as it has lain unfilled for just one term.

Saunders spoke on the resurfacing position explaining that it's an important position within the SGA and it needs someone dedicated to hold it.

"I hope it all goes well and I'm sure the person is very qualified. It's an important position in the SGA," Saunders said.

Other unnamed cabinet positions are also up for Senate approval tonight.

"There are still a couple of questions marks, but I've pretty much made my decision and I just need to speak with the other applicants," Carr said. "I want to be able to look outside the box, but it's tough because people outside the box don't really want to be apart of the SGA. This year is looking even better than last year and will see what the Senate thinks tomorrow."

Members of the SGA are again looking to discuss a few tabled motions that occurred at last weeks Senate meeting. A motion requesting that the Senate increase its Senator to constituent ratio from one senator representing 250 students, to representing 350 students was tabled back to the Administrative Affairs committee for further review.

Tonight's SGA Senate meeting is at 7 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center and all meetings are open to the public.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 12
COMICS PAGE 11
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

FOOD INVESTIGATION
ARE ALL DINING COMMONS THE SAME?
PAGE 4

SEXY?
ARE TODAY'S ROCK STARS SEXY?
PAGE 6

HARVARD BOUND
MEN'S LACROSSE TRAVELS TO CAMBRIDGE TODAY
PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN COMMUNITY BULLETIN

WEDNESDAY APRIL 16

SMITH COLLEGE – A lecture entitled "Asset Allocation: The Key to Investing Success" will be held at Food for the Soul in the Neilson Library Browsing Room. A senior research fellow from Harvard Management Company will be the guest speaker. The lecture is free. For more information call 585-2730.

UMASS – Passover Seder will be held at Chabad House at 30 North Hadley Rd. in Amherst at 8 p.m. For more information/RSVP call 549-6749. A $10 donation is optional.

THURSDAY APRIL 10

UMASS – A lecture entitled "The New Multipolar Agenda: A National Perspective?" will be held at 4 p.m. in Room 226 of Thompson Hall. Admission is free and open to the public. For more information call 545-5946.

SMITH COLLEGE – An Acne Intervention will be held at 5 p.m. in Seelye 106. The workshop is to learn about what new treatments are available. The sponsor is Student Health Services.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Maundy Thursday Ecumenical Worship Services from 12:15 p.m. in the Interfaith Sanctuary of the Chapel.

AMHERST COLLEGE – A lecture on "Managing the Post Crisis: The Role, Past Present and Future" will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Cole Assembly Room in Converse Hall. Jim Kavan, current President of the United Nations General Assembly and lifelong advocate of democracy and human rights speaks. The Office of the President and the Political Science Department are the sponsors for the event. Admission is free.

UMASS – Passover Seder will be held at Chabad House at 30 North Hadley Rd. in Amherst at 8 p.m. For more information/RSVP call 549-6749. A $10 donation is optional.

FRIDAY APRIL 17

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A Buddhist Retreat to Deer Park, New York will take place from April 18-20. Donations are welcome but there will be a mandatory $30 fee for transportation. The sponsor of the retreat is Buddhists in Gathering BIG. For more information send email inquiries to offbeliefs@hotmail.com

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Good Friday Ecumenical Worship Services from 12:15 p.m. in the Interfaith Sanctuary of the Chapel.

SUNDAY APRIL 20

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Easter Sunrise Services at 6:30 a.m. in the Amphitheatre. The sponsor for the services is the Religious Life Office. For more information call 538-2034.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Easter Drumming, an Egg Hunt and Art Festival, starting at 2 p.m. at Skinner Green. Admission is free.

MONDAY APRIL 21

UMASS – An exhibition entitled "MFA Thesis Show: Kim Hindman" that runs until April 25 in the East Gallery in Herter Hall 125A. The exhibit runs until April 25. Gallery hours are Monday-Friday 11-4 and Saturday and Sunday 1-4. For more information call 545-0976.

UMASS – An exhibition entitled "MFA Thesis Show: Sandy Litchfield" in the West Gallery of Herter Hall, 125A. The exhibit runs until April 25. For more information call 545-0976.

SMITH COLLEGE – An exhibit of painting by Xiaodong Zhang in the Oresman Gallery in the Hillyer, Brown Fine Arts Center. The reception is from 4:30-6 p.m. The sponsors for the exhibit are the Art and East Asian studies departments. Admission is free.

SMITH COLLEGE – A lecture entitled "The Politics of Environmental Decision Making: A Conversation with Congressman Richard E. Neal" at 4:30 p.m. in Wright Hall Auditorium. Admission is free.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – "College Democrats Professor Panel" at 7 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium. Admission is free.

TUESDAY APRIL 22

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Clothesline Project from 11 a.m.-6 p.m. on the Skinner Green. The Project is an art piece concerning violence against woman and the sponsor of this event is the Feminist Collective.

UMASS – "Dan Stead Collins lecture in Renaissance Studies" at 4 p.m. at the Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies at 650 East Pleasant St. in Amherst. Admission is free for the public. For more information call 577-3600.

UMASS – A class entitled "Shakespeare's Tragedies: Early and Late with Normand Berlin" will be held from 7-9:30 p.m. at the Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies at 650 East Pleasant St. in Amherst. Admission is free for the public. For more information call 577-3600.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A Japanese Tea Ceremony will take place at 7:30 p.m. at Wa-Shin An in Eliot House. The sponsor of the ceremony is the Office of Religious Life. Call 538-4364 or sign up by email: nyamashi@mtholyoke.edu.

• • •

Anyone with information for the Community Bulletin, contact the Collegian news department at news@dailycollegian.com

-Compiled by Courtney Charles

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Sean Costello Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Lee Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Brandon McNutt Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Is Looking For a
Bright, Talented, Multitasking Wizard!

Now Accepting Applications For:
'HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGER'

*Freshmen and Sophomores preferred
*Great Resume Builder
*10 hours per week

Applications Available in Room 113 Campus Center Basement. Attn: Mia Ferolito
-Please Bring Resume-

General Electric
Price Waterhouse Coopers
NHL Corporation
MBNA Financial
State Street Bank

Q: What do these companies have in common?
A: Former Collegian Accounting Clerks

The Collegian is now accepting applications for Accounting Clerk

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, with your resume for more information.

Applicants should currently be a Sophomore

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967

Iraq in disarray as war continues

DAVID LEESER/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A man accused of looting at a Baghdad bank, is brought to a U.S. military base tied to the hood of a Humvee. The American military have started street operations to try to stop looting and bring order to Iraq's capital city.

By NIKO PRICE
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) – A group of Iraqi policemen drove through this lawless city with sirens blaring Tuesday and immediately made themselves useful by collaring their first crook.

Though tiny, unpaid and poorly armed, the embryonic patrols are crucial to the success or failure of the U.S.-led war here, because the American occupying force has been unwilling or unable to effectively police the cities it is capturing.

Baghdadis cheered the three white patrol cars as they drove through the central al-Shorja market, following a U.S. Marine Humvee and trailed by a red bus filled with Iraqi police officers in black berets and crisp uniforms in assorted shades of green.

The convoy sped along the Tigris River, kicking up a cloud of dust, and into the city's biggest hospital complex, Saddam Medical City. There, Marines looked on from tanks as the officers lined up in ragged formation and received orders to set up checkpoints and patrol the hospitals.

"It's sad and gloomy. But whatever it is, it's better than the Americans," said Dr. Saleh Agailani, a surgeon eyeing the new recruits.

Anger at Americans has been rising in Baghdad. U.S. forces have yet to restore electricity, water, phone service or order since Iraq's government broke down in advance of their invasion from the south.

The medical center, which includes different varieties of hospitals and teaching facilities, has been partially looted. Thieves made off with tables and sofas even as the police officers arrived.

Marines set up checkpoints outside the complex last week, but don't go inside unless there is shooting. They have not sealed the perimeter, allowing looters to ransack the hospital.

U.S. forces have appealed to Iraqi police officers to contact them and get back to work as the city remains in chaos. Looting and gun battles are common, and black smoke from fires set by looters coats the sky.

A few joint patrols of U.S. Marines and Iraqi police officers have begun and are expected to gather momentum in coming days.

Soudad Fadel, 28, a six-year veteran of the Baghdad police force, said some 2,000 officers have signed up and that thousands more would be joining in coming days.

"Yesterday I joined the Marines" on a patrol, he said. "Today we got our first job."

Elsewhere in Baghdad, retired Iraqi Army Col. Imad al-Azawey met Tuesday at a former Baath party headquarters with Lt. Col. Michael Belcher of the 3rd Battalion, 7th Marines, to discuss efforts to rebuild the police force in northeastern Baghdad.

"We just want life to go back to normal," al-Azawey said.

Al Azawey said former soldiers and police were forming a new force that might one day number nearly 100 people in neighborhoods under their control near the Tigris River. They are also trying to recruit Congress, on them as leader of a new Iraqi administration. Neither Chalabi nor many other leaders of anti-Saddam groups attended Tuesday's meeting, but they sent delegates.

And even some of those at the meeting said they did not want Garner leading the interim administration.

"An administration by Garner is not acceptable," said Muwaffak al-Rubaie, an Iraqi physician and opposition activist.

Hoshyar Zebari, a representative of the Kurdish Democratic Party, called the meeting a "kickoff," and explained the lukewarm response of some of the tribal leaders in attendance this way: "They are still nervous. They don't believe Saddam is gone yet."

Associated Press writer Patrick McDowell in Kuwait City contributed to this report.

Powell denies possible war

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – Trying to calm a charged atmosphere, Secretary of State Colin Powell said Tuesday the United States has no plans to go to war with Syria or anyone else to bring democracy to a totalitarian state.

"Iraq was a unique case, where it wasn't just a matter of a dictator being there," Powell said at a news conference with foreign reporters. "There is no war plan to go and attack someone else, either for the purpose of overthrowing their leadership or for the purpose of imposing democratic values."

Democratic values have to ultimately come from within a society and within a nation," he said, tempering heated rhetoric from Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and some other senior U.S. officials.

Having declared war against terror worldwide, singled out Iraq, Iran and North Korea as an "axis of evil," and then gone to war with Iraq, President Bush has raised fears abroad, particularly in Europe and the Middle East, that the world's only superpower would use its muscle freely against dictatorial regimes.

Accusations that Syria provided Iraq with war materiel, gave haven to senior Iraqi and Baath party officials and permitted Syrian fighters to join the war against the U.S.-led coalition fueled those apprehensions.

And while generally avoiding the harsh words, Powell renewed the accusations against Syria on Tuesday.

But he rejected any suggestion the administration had a list of countries against whom it might send troops again.

"There is no list," he said, even as he registered unhappiness with some policies of Iran as well as Syria.

At the White House, Bush met separately with Powell and with Rumsfeld and took a 20-minute telephone call from French President Jacques Chirac, their first conversation since Feb. 7.

They discussed Syria and the situation in Iraq, and they agreed Syria should not harbor Iraqi leaders, presidential spokesman Ari Fleischer said.

Chirac also told Bush he wanted to play a "pragmatic role in reconstruction events in Iraq," Fleischer said, offering no details.

"We have differences," the spokesman said. "We still have some of those differences. But that won't stop the president from working in a businesslike and professional way with an ally like France."

By threatening a veto, France prevented the United States and Britain from obtaining approval by the U.N. Security Council of a second resolution approving the use of force to disarm Iraq.

The Anglo-American coalition went to war anyway, relying on an earlier Council resolution threatening Iraq with "serious consequences" for defying U.N. disarmament demands.

At the Pentagon, a U.S. defense official said Syria had not repositioned its military forces in anticipation of any U.S. attack from Iraq.

First steps taken for Iraqi government was necessary for people to sell off personal possessions," Mukhliss said. "Now it's time to take our country back."

Continued from page 1

There are already tensions between the United States and some Iraqi factions.

For example, Kurdish groups appear unwilling to compromise on their demand to expand the border of their autonomous area to include the oil-rich city of Kirkuk and Kurdish parts of the city of Mosul.

That could pose a problem for Washington because Turkey worries that Kurdish control of Kirkuk could encourage separatist Kurds in Turkey.

Iraqi opposition leaders fear the United States is trying to force Ahmed Chalabi, head of the London-based umbrella Iraqi National

News meeting today at 5 p.m. in the Campus Center basement

SARAH LEIGH COLLEGIAN

Gordon Hall

The new poly-economic research institution, Gordon Hall, is set to be the new home for the labor center and legal studies. Designed by local architect Sigrid Miller Pollin, the new building is expected to be finished by Fall.

UMass Summer Session 2003
French • German • Italian
Latin • Spanish
Summer Session I: June 2-July 10
Summer Session II: July 14-August 20
And one-, two-, and three-week courses.
For a free catalog: call 545-2414 or e-mail contined@contined.umass.edu.
www.umass.edu/contined
Division of Continuing Education
UMassAmherst

Rental Office
1040 N.Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413.549.0145
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving All Of Your Rental Needs
www.pufftonvillage.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Is Syria next on the list: America needs to step back

[illegible] since the dawn of the post-9-11 world. And where increased activity seeking out intelligence on terrorist threats has become a necessity in America today, active military action in numerous countries still seems out of line.

America needs to think clearly about what any kind of military action in Syria would mean to the United States. Russia and the European Union have already come out against the United States using military force in Syria. Many others will.

While Bush, Rumsfeld and Powell have all said that no military action is planned on Syria, the threats that have been made to leadership in Damascus are of the nature that was once only reserved for Baghdad. It is easy to question how long discussions will last before the United States pulls out of talks with Syria and launches a strike on them.

The United States can take a stand and launch a successful military strike on Syria. But when will it end? How many more nations could fall into disfavor with leaders in Washington?

The tension with Syria raises questions with how many conflicts the United States can negotiate at the same time.

Iraq has all the makings of being a successful campaign. But how then can the United States military and leadership spread itself successfully.

The more fronts that the United States opens, the more perilous their position gets. It would be in the best interest of all involved for the United States and Syria to resolve their differences peacefully.

Information from CNN was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board

[illegible] of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Going undercover at the DC

Gilad Skolnick

"All of the [Dining Commons] have the same kind of food, and I suggest you get the unlimited meal plan so that you can come by as many times as you want" were the words spoken to me by the University of Massachusetts tour guide during a recent tour, when I cleverly disguised myself as a non-UMass student inquiring about this fine institute of higher education. Using spiffy words such as "cafeteria" instead of DC and "UMass Card" instead of I Card, I managed to elude the tour guide from finding out my true identity. I made sure not to wear any UMass clothing, and put on my "I'm excited to go to college and start a whole new life" look. The plan worked out perfectly, and she didn't even suspect a thing.

Now, UMass claims that all of their DC's have the same kind of food, and the only difference is their locations, but after hearing dozens and dozens of complaints about the terrible food in Franklin, I decided to find out if this was true or if UMass was lying to its new students, which I could never imagine them doing.

I walked into the Franklin DC on an average Friday afternoon and got ready to enjoy a delicious meal. Since meals come out to $6.50 each on the Basic Meal Plan I'm using this plan because I have yet to meet someone who used all of their meals in Value meal plan. I decided to judge my meal on what I would expect for that price. Finding a clean table adequately stocked with napkins was not difficult, and at the entrance there's always a stack of newspapers.

It didn't take long for me to figure out that this was an all you can eat buffet style. I found a tray and began taking food. Dessert being the most important thing, I made finding it a priority, and in my search for it, I failed to find a chocolate-oriented dessert, leaving me in shock and awe. Could this actually be true? It being a cold day, ice cream was not an option, and thus I ended up dessert-less. In desperation, I hoped they could make this up with a delicious muffin but sadly none could be found. When the peas are the highlight of your meal, that's not a good thing.

My trip to the salad bar was disappointing as well, as olives could not be located, a key element to any salad meal. Furthermore, the first two forks I pulled out were dirty, and only Styrofoam cups could be found, which are one of the worst things for the environment. (Well at least I think I remember something about some Masspirgian ranting about how it takes hundreds and hundreds of years to degrade.)

> "When the peas are the highlight of your meal, that's not a good thing."

If there was a good selection in anything, it was fatty greasy foods, as they had plenty of mozzarella sticks, oily pizza and hamburgers. Franklin is also a big fan of bean centered foods, and they've served such foods as red bean, southern black bean stew, Brazilian black beans beans and rice, Cuban black beans, ginger black beans and ginger black bean soup. Unfortunately, as our society enforces a negative aura around people with gas and gas in general, this bean selection isn't too appealing.

I decided to go with the pasta bar, which fellow students informed me is a popular place in Franklin. This so-called bar consisted of two kinds of pasta, extra-overcooked pudding like pasta, and spaghetti. Covering this with meat sauce, I sat down to enjoy the food, which was no Bertucci's. Somehow, perhaps out of my hunger, I was able to swallow and gulp down this thing they call "food."

In a desperate hurry to get something good to wash this awful stuff down, I attempted to get out of Franklin when a DC worker rudely stopped me. Perhaps some information had leaked that I, a food critic, was visiting their institution and they wanted to apologize for the lack of chocolate. I turned around with a smile on my face, but no, this was not so, and they began yelling something about me attempting to walk out with a collection of silverware. In not one place did I see a sign saying that taking spoons, forks, and knives were not permissible. Was I supposed to assume this? How was I supposed to eat in my room? Of course I planned to bring this back at the end of the year. They should know that all college students are kleptomaniacs, and I certainly did not get $6.50 worth of pasta. I decided not to let the women know that Franklin only scored one star, as food quality and lack of chocolate brought their rating way down.

All the DCs have the same kind of food? Worcester has a better selection, the food is served for longer hours, and overall you tend to get a $6.50 meal. Go to Worcester Dinning Commons, then to Franklin, and tell me what you think tour guide!

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian Columnist.

The Whitmore gremlin returns

Ben Feder

[illegible] courses just didn't make it [illegible] the course guide onto the [illegible] Others are left for specific people like honors students, freshmen. Still others you need to specifically sign up for with the department or professor.

Let's not even get into the ordeal that any of the incoming freshmen will face. Sure you can sign up for [illegible] class you want and it'll tell you if you get into it right away. Just as likely you won't so sign up for Entomology 104 or Intro to Swedish you'll be fine. Oh you want to take communication class-es. Well you're going to have to wait for everyone else to finish taking them first, then you'll get your choice.

So how can you register for any of these classes that [illegible] doesn't recognize as ever existing? First you'll want to go to the registrar's office where they will send you to the department that offers the class. Who will turn in turn send you back to the registrar's office where they'll give you a form to have the academic dean of that department sign. The department will then tell you that you first need the professor teaching the course's permission to take the class. Who will, of course be out of town for the next two weeks in which case you'll want to shoot yourself in the foot rather than deal with this administrative redundancy. You'll probably get the shot treated faster than you get that class you want anyway.

Now call me a traditional kind of guy, but I remember a time when you could physically hold a pre-req form and actually see what course we were picking while registering for them. And if the course wasn't there, we didn't register for it, instead of getting your hopes up just to search for a class to find that it isn't offered. Sure, the phone registration had its problems, many of which Spire hasn't remedied but we all got to know the feminine voice behind the system, telling us to choose another action code. She was a friend, a guide through the administrative ether, which, while frustration set in, could provide some assistance, albeit limited as it was.

> "Sure, the phone registration had its problems ... but we all got to know the feminine voice behind the system, telling us to choose another action code."

Spire, on the other hand, becomes a silent foe, mocking us in our time of desperation. It lies in wait, sending us on an online "wild goose chase" from one page to another searching for the answer.

Little by little, Spire seems to be less of a student's registration savior, and more like a beast of burden. A burden to all of us who need those few remaining class requirements to actually graduate on time so we may focus on life's many other pressures.

I think it's about time we showed the administration what they have unleashed upon our campus. They should be subjected to Spire's devious ways. Have them try and use it's confusing functions and windows to register for something as simple as, let's say, a parking permit, and then will see what kind of logistical monster they have fostered for the supposed betterment of the UMass community.

Ben Feder is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, [illegible] and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed to "Letters to the Editor." Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as "Editorial/Opinion." Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

Anyone interested in drawing editorial cartoons for The Collegian call 545-1809 or email editorial@dailycollegian.com

Pro-war, not protest

Dan DiNardo

I know that all of you are reading this and wondering, "why is he telling us that, it has nothing to do with Iraq." You are absolutely right, but it does show you what could potentially happen should we stay removed from foreign affairs. These protesters are acting like Saddam Hussein is the good guy. He needs to be taken out of power. He has caused deaths of 1.5 million people. Half of those people have been his own. Furthermore, Saddam has torched oil fields and poisoned and drained the marshes in southern Iraq so that the rebels cannot hide from him.

Also, the intelligence we gather isn't from U.N. inspectors, but rather it's from Iraqi defectors that tell us about the weapons he has. I understand that war will bring about the death of innocent people, but military intervention can potentially prevent death and suffering on a much greater level. It did in Yugoslavia. If these protesters are so concerned for the lives of the Iraqi people then why wouldn't they want to put a stop to them being tortured and raped?

Some protesters say that it's not right for the United States to stop violence with more violence. They think that it is wrong. It is kind of ironic that some protesters who say this can be later found engaging in violent protests. Some of the protesters have thrown rocks at British and U.S. embassies. They have also burned a figure that is made to look like Bush. Some protesters, here in America mind you, have burned the American flag. Now I'm sorry, I do agree with the right to free speech, but if you have the audacity to burn the American flag then I suggest that you get out of the country. That is insulting every person that has honored that flag and died for your freedom.

Most protesters are wondering why people are telling them to support the troops. They say they aren't protesting the troops but the decision for war. Why are they chanting "you are killing innocent people?" Who do they think the "you" is? Bush isn't out on the battlefield. They are yelling at the troops who need our support the most. They have no choice in the matter. People are mean towards the soldiers when they are also home. A couple soldiers have told me that they are called baby killers by different people who are against the war, and have had drinks thrown in their face for fighting for the country. These protesters wouldn't fight for the country.

My brother is in the Air Force right now stationed in Italy, while my close friend is in the Marines waiting to be sent to Kuwait, and I am so proud of them. I am also very protective which is why it bothers me that they are putting their lives at risk for people who don't even care about them. Please be mindful of the troops. The time for stating your opinion is over.

Dan DiNardo is a UMass student.

The axis of stupidity

Adrienne Bossi

According to President Bush, the leaders of Iraq and North Korea are considered the "Axis of Evil." I, however, believe I have found two more evil-doers to add to America's (or at least my own) list of archenemies.

Through diligent research and much contemplation I was able to pinpoint AIM Rate-A-Buddy and HotOrNot.com as two of the most insidious and grotesque institutions that threaten American well-being. Why are they threatening? Put simply, they make you more stupid. I assure you I am not attacking these institutions because of bitterness. This is a well-based assault grounded in more reason than simply not receiving a well-deserved average score of 10 on hotornot.com.

The sheer existence of Rate-a-Buddy and Hot Or Not is a mockery of our generation's intelligence. They are the epitome of superficiality and facetiousness. These websites are breeders of image-consciousness in an already image saturated society. They encourage us to spend time assessing others appearances and obsessing about our own. Yet, at the same time, I am sure there are very few of us who can say we have not, at least once, been to one of these sites. After all, who doesn't like to look at pretty people? Although it is normal to do this, these sites are more than pretty people. In a world already so divided we should not encourage ourselves to further judge each other by visiting these sites.

Also, I have discovered additional threats to American integrity. These threats are individuals whose stupidity is so excessive that mere exposure to them will make us more stupid. Prime examples of said stupid people are Carson Daly, Joan Rivers and Anna Nicole Smith. Carson Daly is just a tool. Daly's show has no entertainment value beyond that derived from making fun of his awkwardness. I have nothing more to say about him.

Joan Rivers and her daughter are bigger tools. They spend their lives discussing the wardrobes of famous people who also think they are tools. They greet every celebrity with the same disproportionate enthusiasm and the same plastic smile. Their lives are pointless facades. It makes me sick that they are successful while individuals with more socially significant jobs struggle.

Even worse than the two Rivers ladies is Anna Nicole Smith. She is the embodiment of everything that world-wide Anti-Americanism stems from. I see the commercials for her show, or flip channels and watch for a minute, and I get mad; not only at her, but at the little entourage that follows her around, kissing her fat ass and comforting her as she whines about everything. I mean, have you seen her? She is the pinnacle of white trash. She is the essence of American excessiveness that other cultures despise so much. She is too fat, too made up, too whiny, too lazy, too materialistic, too frivolous, too dramatic, too sleazy, too ungrateful and too stupid.

Picture this (if you dare): Anna Nicole Smith sporting bright blue eye shadow, her huge fake blonde puff and her body crammed into a t-shirt 3 sizes too small that says "Princess" on it. Now, imagine the impact that image has on cultures who do not allow women to be seen without their entire bodies covered.

I am not making a judgment of right and wrong. I am simply trying to justify the premise that Anna Nicole Smith embodies everything negative other nations hold against America. She has no self-respect and no boundaries. She has no morals and no regard for the "finer things in life". She has no appreciation or even understanding that happiness can be derived out of immaterial things like relationships and health. She has so much, yet she has nothing.

There are many other stupid people and stupid organizations out there. We must be careful not to insult our own intelligence by indulging in the initial appeal of AIM Rate-a-Buddy and HotOrNot.com. Although, it is sometimes a boost to our self-confidence to watch someone more ridiculous and embarrassing than ourselves, Anna Nicole Smith is ultimately the downfall of American society.

Furthermore, Joan and Melissa Rivers' life long dedication to reporting on skirts, sundresses, and sandals earns them the title of "saddest specimens of human life in existence." If you are ever depressed about the direction your life is taking or question your ability to accomplish anything worthwhile, take their lives into account as examples of something easy to strive above. Lastly, Carson Daly is a huge tool.

Adrienne Bossi is Collegian Columnist.

Why women are superior

Saram Hakim

There are three things in life that confuse me the most. One, why is it that the Orchard Hill via Butterfield bus only comes around when I don't need it? Two, if Tupac Shakur is really dead, how did he come out with six new albums? Three, where the hell did the historical public opinion that man is better than woman come from?

I guess it all dates back to the time of Adam and Eve. It is a popular Christian belief that God created Adam and then created Eve from Adam's rib. People worldwide took this to mean that man was a sub-product of man. I ask you now to sit back and absorb these numbers: There are 250 babies born every minute and 15,008 babies born every hour. Out of those 250 babies born every minute, not a single one pushed its way out of a man's body. It surprises me that a man has the nerve to take the credit of giving life when all he did was lose a rib...once.

> "Some men make stupid comments. Some women deserve them. But, in the end, we're all humans, deserving of respect."

A less theist version of the mystery of the creation of man is evolution. The theory of evolution basically states that, essentially, we came from apes. In time, we grew legs, turned into monkey-like creatures, eventually shrunk the skull, lost the hair, made a fire and became humans. Anthropologists have studied findings to, not only solve the question of where we came from, but to find our fun facts about the past...like the roles of men and women. The current standpoint of many anthropologists is that the role of the man was to hunt and protect the family. The role of the woman was to raise the children and gather nuts and seeds. Looking at these four roles alone, you can clearly see why women are better than men. Please allow me to explain:

A wolf is a carnivorous animal. When you open the mouth of a wolf, you see sharp, pointed teeth...made for eating meat. Humans, on the other hand, have flat, rounded teeth...perfect for eating nuts and seeds. Granted, meat is good. However, it is not a necessary part of our diet, but rather an added bonus. The role of the woman was to raise the children and gather nuts and seeds, ensuring survival and a tomorrow. Meanwhile, the man played his role by frolicking in the forest, killing a few squirrels and bringing them home to his family.

History's mistake was calling man the provider of food, when, in reality, he was just the provider of the added bonus. The other advantage of the male was to provide the family unit with protection, or, in other words, something big and stupid to stand in the way of harm, convinced that he is standing in the way of harm because he is superior. Obviously, the male role was a sacrificial role rather than a superior one.

The point of my article isn't to feed the feminist flame that is spreading viciously throughout America. Feminists have taken an awkward turn in the advancement of women. The feminist voice has changed from its desire for advancement to a desire to eliminate men from the face of the earth. This is not a good desire. The only way this could ever really happen is if artificial insemination encounters a very dramatic technological advancement. That is just weird.

What I wanted to demonstrate was that the stories of the past could be interpreted in different ways, depending on the mind analyzing them. Stories of the past, regardless of the interpretation, have affected the mindset of today's society. Unfortunately, men were looked at as the superior gender, and women were looked at as less than human.

I am not suggesting that it is the woman's turn to be raised on a pedestal. I am not suggesting that men have an insignificant role in the birthing process. My suggestion is not only to feminists, but to people in general. The underlying point of the feminist movement was not to bring women up or to bring men down. The point was to keep everyone at the same level, regardless of history and regardless of differences. Some men make stupid comments. Some women deserve them. But, in the end, we're all humans, deserving of respect. That's the only underlying point of any movement that should be looked at.

Sunam Hakim is a Collegian Columnist.

Hypocrisy and impotence

Daniel Cote

"Seinfeld" fans will remember that episode where Jerry goes to rent a car. He goes to the rental agency and is told by a woman that they've run out of cars even though he made a reservation. He proceeds to tell them what a reservation is and this woman tells him that she is aware of how a reservation works. But he explains that anyone can take a reservation but it's the holding of the car that matters.

This rental agency reminds me of the United Nations, making up resolutions all the time that they have no intention of enforcing. 17 times they have made up resolutions that were supposed to get Saddam Hussein to account for all his weapons of mass destruction and destroy them, and all these countries signed their names to them. 17 times Saddam has laughed and given the United Nations the finger. Should a leader like Saddam have gotten all these chances? What would more time have accomplished? Why didn't the United Nations go through with their first resolution? Isn't it just a little ridiculous to keep making up resolutions if you have no intention of enforcing them?

Time and time again the United Nations has failed to live up to the very reasons it was created. If you don't believe me just ask Rwanda. While the Hutus and the Tutsi slaughtered each other and everyone in sight, the Belgian troops were kicking back with a few beers. The United Nations could have stopped all this, but it didn't.

Or take the first Gulf War for another example. George H.W. Bush wanted to go to Baghdad and get Saddam out of there. The United Nations and Colin Powell convinced him that he should remain in power. They believed that Saddam could be contained. Anyone remember what happened when Europe tried to contain Hitler?

Let's face it...the United Nations isn't the bastion of peace it would like to be. It's the bastion of hot air. Look what country is in charge of disarmament: Iraq. Maybe just a little conflict of interest there, you think? Even better is what country is in charge of human rights: Libya. That's right the very same people who brought you Lockerbie are in charge of watching out for human rights.

> "That's right the very same people who brought you Lockerbie are in charge of watching out for human rights."

What I find interesting is that the United Nations wants everyone to believe that Iraq is a U.N. problem and they will decide when to go to war. However, when it comes to a country that has nuclear weapons and the willingness to sell them to the highest bidder, like North Korea, the U.N. wants the United States to handle it on our own. Nuclear weapons are a global problem so it's a U.N. issue. The problem came out of our good comrades Russia and China giving North Korea the weapons and technology. But the United Nations isn't making big bucks off North Korea so it becomes a U.S. issue. I believe hypocritical is the word I'm looking for.

Now after the United States and Britain made them look bad, they want in on Iraq. Oh I see: now that the fighting is done, you look powerless. Or is it that coalition troops are finding evidence of weapons of mass destruction? Or is it that they want to control the oil fields? Whatever their intentions are they aren't very magnanimous. Just look at what coalition troops are finding on these troops and in these bunkers. Everything is stamped with "made in France," "Germany," or "Russia." Russia, it looks like, was helping Iraq during the war. The French embassy in Damascus, is printing up visas for Saddam's family and henchmen as we speak. Syria has given safe haven to Saddam's family and top leaders. These are just some of the countries that make up that stronghold of peace and goodwill we call the United Nations. Is the United Nations really something the United States needs to be a part of?

Daniel Cote is a Collegian Columnist.

The lover in every playa

Regan McKendry

Every year I'm amazed at what MTV comes up with for their Spring Break coverage. This year is no exception. Picture yourself going on a spring break with some friends, looking to have fun down in Cancun and enjoy the pool, the clubs, the alcohol, the girls (or guys, whatever your taste may be). Your plan is to go down there and be a playa, livin' up spring break in all its glory. Now throw in your parents and ex, spying along the whole time, just so your ex can confront you afterwards for some closure. What a great way to party.

You look at any television show or movie and the college social scene always seems to be built around having a good time while we're young. Students go out and party hearty, hooking up all over the place, experiencing the most out of life that they can before they get old and settle down. To be fair, there's lots of fun in being unattached and always getting to go out on the hunt, with the potential of a new experience each night.

There are things missing though. Every time out means starting from scratch. There's no connection or past events to draw a group history on. The physical fun is there, but the emotional joy that is derived from two people mutually loving each other is absent. There are of course the trials and tribulations of a relationship, as my friends who are coupled tell me, but as the perpetual single guy, I'd like to have a partner to call my own.

The desire to find a significant other obviously leads to a lot of crushes, and I've got one bad. I'm also determined not to mess it up in a quick blaze of playa glory.

I still remember the first time I met him. I was at the club I go to down in the big city, also known as Springfield, Mass., and there he was tending bar. I talked with him that night, getting to know the basics, and for some reason I was smitten. Like most instances, my mind converted into playa mode and I began to fantasize the fun of getting to hook up with him. Let's face it...the thrill of the hunt is some of the most fun in the whole process.

Overtime, I realized that he was going to be hard to get. As a bartender he knew how to equally be a charmer and keep his distance. His number has never been given out to anyone, though he has a huge collection of digits he's received back at his apartment. He also turns out to be one of the nicest people I have ever met.

> "Instead, it became a hunt to break through his protective barrier and find a relationship."

Once I'd gotten by that friendly nature a person in his occupation is required to have, I realized that he genuinely was a considerate and caring person. This caused a change in my goals. The more I got to know him, the quest for the hookup vanished. Instead, it became a hunt to break through his protective barrier and find a relationship. The physical pleasure and fun of being a playa didn't seem nearly as desirable as actually finding a person to love and care for.

I've never truly been in a relationship before. I can remember one friend who came close, yet we never officially became a couple. I'd really like to find that special someone. Even if it's not "the one," it would be nice to have someone to get to know and grow closer with, and maybe he could turn into "the one." It's still been a tough go. He's become more friendly, but we still haven't spent time together outside of the club. We keep saying we will, when we find the time (whenever that is).

Time is growing short. This infatuation I've had for the past five months has to make some progress soon. In a little over a month I'll graduate and return home and he will go back home to New Jersey. This fall we each go off to grad school. I'll be heading to the Midwest while he takes his rightful place among the beauties in San Diego. Even though week after week continues to pass without progress, I still hold out hope. I have to. For the moment I concede that nothing will ever come of our casual friendly discourse at the club. I lose.

At the end of that MTV spring break special, the guy who's been spied on makes an appeal to his ex that he still cares about her more than anyone and she decides to take him back. I can only hope that the one I adore will realize that I'm not looking at him like a playa in search of another notch in the cap, but instead as someone looking for long term love.

Regan McKendry is a Collegian Columnist.

The next stage in the war on terror

Will Hillyard

Now that U.S. forces have moved into Baghdad and statues of Saddam have come tumbling down, it's time to look ahead to what could be the next stage of the Bush Administration's war on terror. Naturally, the next step in the process is a direct result of what has already been accomplished.

The expected replacement for Saddam is a coalition run by and for Americans, which will probably allow American companies to gain control over the oil in Iraq, as well as allow us to establish military bases throughout the country. Iraq is smack in the middle of the Middle East, and therefore gives the United States an invaluable base for military operations in the region.

The next target is probably Iran, which seems reasonable enough. The U.S. government has hated Iran ever since the Revolution under the Ayatollah and the hostage crisis of 1979. George W. Bush cited Iran as a member of the Axis of Evil, and Iran is probably much more dangerous to the United States than Iraq was under Saddam. So it doesn't seem surprising that Bush now wants to focus attention on Iran after having defeated Saddam.

The other country that has become a target is Syria. Located just to the west of Iraq, Syria has always been something of a thorn in America's side. Now Bush is charging them with providing safety for Iraqi leaders who escaped the American invasion, along with developing chemical weapons and supporting terrorists. You'll notice these are pretty similar to the charges that were made against Saddam.

That's not all the two countries have in common. Syria has had its own form of Saddam in President Hafez al-Assad, who ruled the country with an iron fist. Just like Saddam, Stalin and Big Brother, he put up pictures of himself all over the place. In 1999, he managed to earn no less than 99.9% of the vote in the Presidential election. When he died the next year, his son Bashar took power and has ruled ever since. So if the goal of the war is to liberate people from a despotic dictator, then Syria seems like a very good target indeed. Perhaps we can expect to see Operation Syrian Freedom go into effect within the next year or so.

> "Perhaps we can expect to see Operation Syrian Freedom go into effect within the next year or so."

Bush is correct when he calls Syria a nation that supports terrorists, because the Syrian government openly supports Hezbollah against Israel. There are some pretty good reasons for Syria to hate Israel, however. Israel has been occupying the Golan Heights ever since 1967, when they were a part of Syria. This strategically valuable area is part of the occupied territories that the United Nations has told Israel to withdraw from. Syria is an important part of the Arab coalition that is calling for a Palestinian state within Israel. And they have always protected the interests of Lebanon, another state at odds with the Israelis. You might remember that back in the 1980s, Lebanon was the scene of a terrorist attack against an American military compound in Beirut that killed 241 Marines. Beirut remains one of the world's most dangerous war zones to this day.

There once was a state known as Greater Syria that included modern-day Lebanon, Jordan, and Israel. And there are some people who would like to see Greater Syria reestablished, which would obviously mean the end of Israel. Since Israel is America's strongest ally, any country with so many reasons to oppose Israel would naturally become an enemy to the U.S.

Occupying Iraq provides the perfect position from which to strike at both Syria and Iran. There are even historical ties between the two countries, as Syria stunned the Arab world by supporting Iran against Saddam and Iraq in their brutal war back in the 1980s. So as the administration makes its way around the world, Syria and Iran are the most obvious places to go into after conquering Iraq.

But is a campaign against Syria the right thing to do? Surely another war would only strengthen anti-American sentiment throughout the Middle East. The response to an American invasion of Syria may well be an increase in the number of terror attacks against Jews in Israel. And Syria lacks the oil resources of Iraq.

So if the United States wants to avoid making the situation in the Middle East even worse, they would be smart to avoid attacking Syria at all. An even smarter idea would be to get Israel to comply with the United Nations by withdrawing from the Golan, as well as the rest of the occupied territories. This would almost certainly lead to less suicide bombings in Israel, not to mention showing respect for international law. If history is any indication, this is the last thing Israel and their American allies will be willing to do. And an attack on Syria and Iran is only going to make the situation in the Middle East that much worse.

Will Hillyard is a Collegian Columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Are rock stars sexy anymore?

Let's define sexy: "Arousing or tending to arouse sexual desire or interest," according to dictionary.com. Now, let's put this into context.

Are rockers sexy anymore? Is rock n' roll sexy anymore?

Nope.

Well, "nope" may be a little too extreme. Rock definitely arouses sexual desire among select women, but not as much as the old days.

Rap has now taken over the definition of sexy, and even though I personally disagree, it's true. Rappers like Nelly and 50 Cent are considered sexy. Rap in general is considered sexy. Why is that? Who has rap stolen rock's thunder?

It used to be the complete opposite.

Look at Elvis Presley. Look at The Beatles. Look at Jimi Hendrix. I could go on forever, but my point is that rock used to be extremely sexy. The presence of an electric guitar and a nice drum beat in the background shot tingles all around, up and down the female fans who adored them.

Rockin' Out

Samara Marblestone

Even when rap first broke out in the late 1970s it was not considered sexy at all. Rappers wore thick, black sunglasses – indoors. They wore bright colored Adidas unitsuits with sneakers to match. Huge, gaudy gold chains added weight to their necks, and a dorky hat atop the head made it definite that rap and its rappers were far from sexy.

Rock definitely had no competition at first. But still, let's look at how rock evolved. It went from The Bee Gees to Poison with their big hair, tight leather, and glossy make-up. Twisted Sister might as well have been drag queens or cheap prostitutes.

Sexy? No.

So I'll admit. Bon Jovi was sexy. So was Guns N' Roses. But honestly, the big hair, bright, tight clothes and other accessories that would look better on a chick than a dude was predominately the "cool" thing in rock 'n' roll back then. How embarrassing.

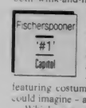
So, let's fast-forward a couple decades. If you put rock and rap into a high school scenario, rock is the nerdy unpopular dude, while rap is the popular "look, bling-blingin' it with girls wrapped around them 24 hours a day.

And I don't know why that is.

Well one thing is that rock is definitely not sexy anymore. This is mainly due to rock music sucking lately, to be blunt about it. All modern day rockers such as Good Charlotte, The Ataris, Queens of the Stone Age, Simple Plan, and a bunch of others are not sexy at all. Their image is old and repeated, and their original music doesn't help.

On the other hand, here you have 50 Cent, wearing nothing but baggy pants, a sweaty six-pack and gold chains whose worth could feed a small country. I personally don't find this sexy, but it seems that just about everyone else does. His music videos consist of skanky women in booty shorts shaking their butt like there's no tomorrow. When 50 Cent is on MTV, everyone freaks out. The same goes for Nelly.

Continued on page 8



PHOTOS COURTESY OF MIRAMAX FILM CORP.

Fischerspooner bind tacky sci-fi beats to form 'music'

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

The two guys who make up New York electro stylists Fischerspooner – Casey Spooner and Warren Fischer – are both wink-and-nudge ironists and daft punk nostalgists. These NYC art-school posers are the leading luminaries in the new, hipster-elite electroclash movement, a movement that's really just a throwback to early/mid-'80s synth-pop. Fischerspooner are one of those bands whose live shows – glammed out performance spectacles featuring costumes more outlandish than anything Cher could imagine – are better known than the actual music.

Which may possibly be because Fischerspooner don't write what you could actually call songs. Instead, what they do is string together bloodless, chintzy sci-fi beats into chains of pretentious "musical" insincerity. This is the kind of music for those trendy fashionista types think taste involves a wash of glitter and style instead of substance.

"#1," their major label debut, has everything you'd expect: burping synths and tinny, aloof drum pulses; a singer (Spooner) whose pallor gives him the sound of an indulgent vampire. The music, on the other hand, isn't very memorable. Unlike early forebears – such as Soft Cell, whose "Tainted Love" is still fondly remembered – the songs of Fischerspooner have a glaring lack of hooks. The so-called "songs" are muddled, bland hodgepodges of aimlessly throbbing techno-art blips.

Songs like "Emerge" are finding places on the dance music charts, yet it's hard to see how the stiff rhythms and muddy syncopation could burn up the dance floors. Indeed, neither the lethargic bleating of "Sweetness" nor the goofy ping-pongs on "Invisible" seem like the kinds of songs that get pulses racing.

Despite their concessions to the sniffling Manhattan glitterati, Fischerspooner's beats tend to skew simplistic and repetitive. These are strictly kindergarten level beats: "#1" displays all the sonic complexity of a Spice Girls track doing Ecstasy.

There is one song on "#1" that rises above Fischerspooner's affected, cheesy murk. "Tone Poem" is a minimalist whisper that seems almost at odds with the rest of the empty flash here. The stark landscapes sound better than the vapid, shiny stuff surrounding them. "Tone Deaf" is the kind of airy, flowing song destined to be rejected by the same people who think the mannered electroclash of the rest of "#1" is the epitome of hip. But "#1" isn't the epitome of hip; it's the epitome of shrill faddism.

Leaders of nation's two major actors unions approve merger

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Leaders of the nation's two major actor unions have voted to merge, hoping to increase the unions' clout in the face of growing consolidation by media and entertainment companies, union executives said Monday.

The ruling boards of the Screen Actors Guild and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists voted during the weekend. SAG's board was 87 percent in favor and AFTRA was 89 percent in favor, officials said.

The plan will be presented to the unions' 150,000 members next month.

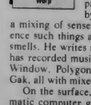
A merger has been rejected in the past. In recent years, however, the merger of companies like America Online and Time Warner and the creation of the entertainment conglomerate Vivendi Universal have concentrated industry power in fewer hands, and Hollywood labor supporters say they must do the same to stay competitive.

SAG President Melissa Gilbert said she expects the plan will be approved.

"I've certainly not kicked back and relaxed completely yet. I have a feeling our work is ahead of us. What we really need to do is simply to educate. We need to make people aware of what this plan is," Gilbert said.

AFTRA President John Connolly said the merger would also give the guilds strength to combat so-called runaway production in which foreign cities such as Toronto and Montreal are used in place of cities like Los Angeles and New York to save on expenses.

AFTRA represents mostly recording artists, TV and radio broadcasters, and performers in daytime TV, game or reality shows. SAG represents actors in film, commercials and prime-time TV shows.



The merged organization would be called the Alliance of International Media Artists.

– Gail Schiller, Associated Press

Aphex Twin's '26 Mixes for Cash' a masterpiece

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

Richard D. James, named after an older brother who died during childbirth (his gravestone appears on the cover of Aphex Twin's "Girl/Boy EP"), is one of the most prolific and critically acclaimed electronic musicians of all time. His parents met while working in a mental institution and regularly filched LSD prescribed to the patients there. He has been making experimental noise with homemade synthesizers and tape loops since he was 14. His back catalogue includes a double album with square color panels for song titles is inspired by Synaesthesia, in which there is a mixing of senses causing the person to experience such things as colored hearing, and auditory smells. He writes music while lucid dreaming. He has recorded music as Aphex Twin, AFX, Caustic Window, Polygon Window, Bradley Strider and Gak, all with mixed results.

On the surface, he appears to be a lanky, asthmatic computer geek whose knob twiddling has fooled the entire world into considering him a genius. From another angle though, it becomes apparent that he is that genius whose knack for creating intricate soundscapes that have never touched the human ear before has brought an edge to both underground and mainstream music that was lacking before he arrived. Sure, maybe he wasn't the first to perform "intelligent techno" or "intelligent dance music" (though it was his mailing list that coined the term), but it is his international acclaim that exposed artists like Mu-Ziq, Venetian Snares, Kid606, Bjork, The Notwist, and "Kid A" era Radiohead to a brand of music they would eventually absolve into their own hybrids.

Yet across the surface of popular music that he has inspired, Aphex Twin continues to exist in a world completely his own. He admits that he never heard the originals for most of the remixes he did on "26 Mixes for Cash." In fact, he did not even use the samples he was given for a few of them (the two Nine Inch Nails "mixes" contain one straw-blowing sound from "Eraser," but are otherwise pure James compositions). Thus stated, this is not a remix album in the same vein as say The Crystal Method's "Weekend Service" or The Chemical Brothers' "Brothers Gonna Work it Out." The artists and titles are mere formalities. This is a retrospective of hard-to-find Aphex goodies that span his revolutionary, lush and spiritual reworking of Curve's crunch guitar eurotrashy "Falling Free" to last year's bubbling and manic take on 808 State's "Coma Flow" (labeled here as simply "Remix by AFX").

"Across the surface of popular music that he has inspired, Aphex Twin continues to exist in a world completely his own."

As the two-disc set spans nearly his entire recording career, it presents the diverse range of electro plodding of which James is capable. This is both an enticing and ostracizing trait for new fans looking to get their feet wet in the expressionistic disco of Aphex Twin's braindance. One who has never heard Aphex Twin or the countless contemporaries that he spawned will undeniably react to his music with the revelatory proclamation that "This is weird," perhaps with a face to match it. His most commercial release, 1997's "Come To Daddy" EP, won many converts with its heavily rotated title video depicting James's face superimposed on dozens of wee tykes who decimate a London street at the behest of an emaciated and twiglike alien father figure straight of the final scene of "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

The album itself, though far from mainstream, contained some of his most hauntingly beautiful melodies ("Flim") in addition to jackhammer speed, marble-dropping rhythms. At the height of his success, he disappeared into side projects and alienating double disc musique concrète excursions, allowing the new wave of glitchcore and IDM microstars to explore the territory that people were sure Aphex Twin would discover first.

Continued on page 8

Michael Moore

Filmmaker Moore criticizes Bush again

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) – Filmmaker Michael Moore, who slammed President Bush and the U.S.-led war in Iraq during his Oscar acceptance speech, continued his criticism before a university crowd in Bush's home state.

The documentary maker said Monday night that the president's approval ratings are high because the American people rally around their leader after a tragedy, and Bush "is the one occupying the federal land at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue."

But Moore said the United States is at war with Iraq because of the former Texas governor's need to keep the public's eye off his domestic failures as president.

"It's not about the weapons of mass destruction; it's about the weapons of mass distraction," he told 4,400 students and guests at the University of Texas.

Pulling his Oscar from a bag, Moore passed the gold statue around the audience, joking, "What are the chances I'm going to get that thing back?"

Moore won his first Oscar last month for "Bowling for Columbine," an examination of gun violence in America. He received a standing ovation when he won and a mixture of cheers and boos with his fiery criticism of President Bush – a speech he said he hadn't prepared.

Moore told the Austin American-Statesman before his lecture that 90 percent of the response he's gotten has been positive and that, despite having investigated the roots of violence in his most recent documentary, he hasn't received any threats.

"Should I be getting death threats?" he said, jokingly. "It is pretty risky of me to be coming to Texas, don't you think?"

Robert Conrad May Face Felony for Crash

SAN ANDREAS, Calif. (AP) – The California Highway Patrol will recommend a felony charge against Robert Conrad, whose car crashed head-on into another vehicle two weeks ago, seriously injuring the driver, police said.

Conrad, best known for his roles in "Baa Baa Black Sheep" and "The Wild Wild West," was arrested on suspicion of driving under the influence of alcohol after the March 31 crash on Highway 4 near Arnold.

Police wouldn't release details of Conrad's blood-alcohol test, but said Monday the results will warrant the felony charge of driving under the influence with injury to another person.

Conrad was taken by helicopter to a Modesto hospital, about 60 miles southwest of the accident. Donna Gaba, who works for Conrad's agent, David Shapira, said at the time the actor was in stable condition. A call to the agent's office wasn't immediately returned.

The driver of the other vehicle, 26-year-old Kevin Burnett of Forest Meadows, suffered multiple injuries, Officer Bryan Duquesnel said Monday.

"He [Conrad] caused significant injury to Mr. Burnett and his blood alcohol results place us in a position that we're going to recommend to the district attorney's office that he face a felony charge," Duquesnel said.

Duquesnel said the recommendation to file charges would be forwarded within a week to the Calaveras County district attorney's office.

Police listed Conrad's age at 74. Television and film reference guides report the actor is 68.

Ed McMahon

Ed McMahon settles toxic mold lawsuit

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Former "Tonight Show" sidekick Ed McMahon settled a lawsuit against the last of several defendants he sued for toxic mold that allegedly sickened him and his wife, killed his pet and made his Beverly Hills mansion unlivable.

McMahon, 80, agreed to accept $230,000 to resolve the dispute, court documents revealed Monday. He'd sued American Equity Insurance Co., two insurance adjusters and several cleanup contractors for $20 million last year, claiming his 8,000-square-foot mansion was ruined.

The other defendants made settlements over the past few months. The settlement reached Friday was paid by Controlled Environmental Solutions.

McMahon filed the lawsuit in April 2002 claiming that a plumbing pipe in his home ruptured in July 2001, flooding his den. The company he hired to clean the mess, Alliance Environmental Group, allegedly painted over the stachybotrus chartarum, and didn't tell him about the mold.

Soon afterward, McMahon claimed he and his wife got sick and their sheepdog, Muffin, developed respiratory illness and died. The couple moved – per doctor's orders – in Sept. 2001, and rented another home at $23,000 a month. Toxic mold later was found in McMahon's master bedroom.

The case had been scheduled to go to trial this week.

John Grisham

Grisham happy with film 'A Painted House'

JONESBORO, Ark. (AP) – John Grisham said he's pleased with the film version of his novel "A Painted House," based on his childhood years in northeast Arkansas.

"It captures the story, it captures the characters. It has a lot of cotton, a lot of mud, and a lot of floods and a lot of good stuff," Grisham said Monday night at the film's premiere, which about 1,000 people attended at Arkansas State University.

Grisham is best known for his legal thrillers, including "The Firm" and "The Client," but "A Painted House" deals with the rewards and frustrations of a cotton-farming family in the early 1950s. Born in Jonesboro, the 48-year-old Grisham grew up in the Black Oak and Parkin communities.

The movie is set in an Arkansas Delta town in 1952, and features a young boy who must unravel secrets that could "change his family and town forever," another release said. It's scheduled to air April 27 on CBS.

The screening, and a $1,000-a-plate dinner beforehand, were fundraising events for ASU's new doctoral program in heritage studies.

Arnold Schwarzenegger

Schwarzenegger to host villains special

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Arnold Schwarzenegger, who's portrayed robots both killing and kindly, will host an upcoming television special about the top 100 heroes and villains of the screen.

An American Film Institute poll asked voters to choose among 400 nominated characters from American film history and decide which should be considered wicked or virtuous.

Schwarzenegger's T-800 killer robot is nominated twice, once for the attacking character he played in 1984's original "The Terminator," and again for 1991's "Terminator 2: Judgment Day," in which the android he played was a protector.

The show is scheduled for June 3 on CBS and will feature interviews with actors including Kirk Douglas, Susan Sarandon, Kathy Bates, Glenn Close, Harrison Ford, Dennis Hopper and Christopher Reeve.

AFI sent ballots to nearly 1,500 directors, actors, studio executives, critics and others in the entertainment industry.

Some characters are nominated en masse, such as the zombies from 1968's "Night of the Living Dead" and "The Wild Bunch" cowboys from director Sam Peckinpah's 1969 western.

Previous AFI lists included the 100 best American films, led by "Citizen Kane" and the 100 funniest movies, with "Some Like It Hot" at No. 1.

Marlene Dietrich

Dietrich's daughter donates letters

BOSTON (AP) – Marlene Dietrich's daughter was honored at the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum for donating a collection of intimate letters that novelist Ernest Hemingway wrote to her mother.

The papers donated by Maria Riva include a Christmas card, 30 letters and telegrams that were written between 1949 and 1959, as well as early drafts of several Hemingway poems and stories.

Under the terms of Riva's gift, the correspondence can't be opened to the public until 2007.

During Sunday's ceremony, Patrick Hemingway, the writer's son, presented the Hemingway-PEN Award for a first book to Gabriel Brownstein for his collection of stories, "The Curious Case of Benjamin Button, Apt. 3W."

Adam Haslett, author of a collection titled "You Are Not a Stranger Here," received the L.L. Winship-PEN New England Award, which is named after longtime Boston Globe editor Laurence L. Winship.

The Kennedy Library is home to most of Hemingway's papers, including 95 percent of his manuscripts and correspondence. President Kennedy was an admirer of Hemingway, though the two never met, and Hemingway's wife, Mary, saw the Kennedy Library as a fitting place for the writer's papers.

Ali Landry

Ali Landry desribes personal style as having element of drama

NEW YORK (AP) – Ali Landry, host of WE: Women's Entertainment's "Full Frontal Fashion," describes her personal style as having an element of drama.

"I'm not a minimalist but I'm not over the top," said the 28-year-old actress, whose films include 2000's "Beautiful," directed by Sally Field and starring Minnie Driver.

Landry, a former Miss USA, says "get-it-for-less" is one of her favorite segments on the weekly TV show because "that's where my friends in Levi's can relate."

"I'm a shopper but I love a good bargain," she told The Associated Press in an interview. "I own a few designer pieces but I wear Target."

Landry said her first real "fashion experience" – the spring 2003 New York shows – was both overwhelming and exciting.

Growing up in Louisiana, we were always a year or two behind the trends," said Landry, who was born and raised in Breaux Bridge.

"Full Frontal Fashion" moved to Sunday nights on the WE cable network earlier this month. It had aired on New York's MetroTV since September 1999.

– Associated Press

GET PAID TO GO TO SCHOOL.
TALK ABOUT
ROLE REVERSAL.

The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Daily Collegian
Now Hiring Advertising
Account Executives for Fall 2003

Call 545-3500
or stop by our office, room 113
in the Campus Center Basement, for more information.

All Majors & Classes
Welcome to Apply
Current Freshmen Strongly Encouraged to Apply

Actress Marilyn Monroe, in New York in 1954. Jewelry that once belonged to the Hollywood star has been stolen from an exhibition in London.

Marilyn Monroe's jewelry stolen

STOCKHOLM (AP) – Two pieces of jewelry that belonged to Marilyn Monroe have been stolen from an exhibition in Sweden, police said Tuesday.

The items – a diamond-encrusted gold ring with a "W" motif and a gold bangle together worth about $65,000 – were stolen from central Lidingo ... Cumes Hall Gallery, where the ... is hosting the exhibition about the ... Marilyn Monroe Life of a ...

Scotland Yard said the items were ... Monday afternoon. One man was arrested in the thefts and was being held ...

Another male suspect remained at large, and police have appealed for information to help trace the stolen items.

Monroe, the star of such films as "Some Like It Hot" and "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," died in August 1962 at ...

In Sweden, an opera about St. Birgitta to be performed

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) – An opera about the life of Birgitta, Sweden's only saint, will be performed this summer to mark the 700th anniversary of her birth.

The new three-act performance will run July 26-Aug. 11 at the Vadstena Academy, a conservatory near the Vadstena Abbey Church that holds her remains, 125 miles southwest of the capital, Stockholm.

St. Birgitta, also known as Brigid, lived from 1303-73 and was renowned for her visions of Christ and the Virgin Mary.

She died in Rome and was canonized in 1391. In 1999, Pope John Paul II made her one of three woman patron saints for Europe.

The opera, called "Birgitta," a Medieval spelling of her name, tells the story of her life and the founding of her Catholic order. The opera will be conducted by Cecilia Rydinger-Alm with a libretto by Magnus Carlsson.

Churches and museums throughout the largely Lutheran Scandinavian country of 8.9 million residents are expected to mark the anniversary of Birgitta's birth.

ESPN and Wimbledon agree on a four-year deal

BRISTOL, Conn. (AP) – ESPN reached a four-year agreement to televise Wimbledon from 2003-06.

ESPN and ESPN2 will broadcast nearly 120 hours of programming from the All England Club starting June 23, the network said Monday.

Coverage will feature one men's and one women's semifinal. NBC will show the finals, besides other coverage.

The addition of Wimbledon means ESPN airs three of the four Grand Slam events.

Associated Press

'CSI' and college basketball help CBS win the weekly ratings

NEW YORK (AP) – Cher's farewell tour played so well on television she might want to consider another.

The multicostumed singer and Oscar winner drew 16.6 million viewers to her two-hour NBC concert special, finishing among Nielsen Media Research's top 10 programs for the week.

CBS' "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation," with 26.4 million viewers, was easily the week's most popular show. Coupled with Syracuse's victory over Kansas in the NCAA men's basketball final, seen by 18.6 million people, CBS won the week.

CBS averaged 11.5 million viewers (7.7 rating, 13 share). NBC was second with 10.7 million viewers (7.2, 12). Fox had 8.9 million (5.4, 9), ABC 7.2 million (4.8, 8), UPN 3.2 million (2.1, 3), the WB 3 million (2.0, 3) and Pax TV 1 million (0.7, 1).

NBC's "Nightly News" won the evening news ratings race, averaging 10.8 million viewers (7.8 rating, 15 share). ABC's "World News Tonight" was second, averaging 9.7 million viewers (7.0, 13) and the "CBS Evening News" had 8 million (5.7, 11).

A ratings point represents 1,067,000 households, or 1 percent of the nation's estimated 106.7 million TV homes. The share is the percentage of in-use televisions tuned to a given show.

For the week of April 7-13, the top 10 shows, their networks and viewerships: "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation," CBS, 26.4 million; "American Idol-Tuesday," Fox, 20.1 million; "American Idol-Wednesday," Fox, 19.1 million; "Survivor: Amazon," CBS, 19.1 million; NCAA Men's Basketball Championship: Syracuse vs. Kansas, CBS, 18.6 million; "Without a Trace," CBS, 17.5 million; "Cher's Farewell Tour," NBC, 16.6 million; "Friends," NBC, 14.9 million; "Prelude to a Championship," CBS, 14.1 million; "Law & Order: SVU," NBC, 13.8 million.

-David Bauder, Associated Press

Singer and Oscar winner Cher's concert special, televised on NBC, drew boffo ratings.

Aphex Twin's latest album infectious

Continued from page 6

And those familiar with his career probably will not find anything new here on "26 Mixes for Cash," the sardonic title hinting at the album's real intentions. Most obviously, this is because all but two of the recordings have already been released. However, these songs also mirror the phases of the Aphex Twin evolution. From the acidic blasting squelches of his early singles reflected in Mescalinum Unlimited's "We Have Arrived" to the prickly yet pretty pizzicato strings frequented on his "Richard D. James" long player reflected in The Beatniks's "Une Femme N'est Pas un Homme," this is an album that tries to be everywhere at once. The result is a bit jumbled, not to mention daunting at 140 minutes, but retrospectives such as these tend to be. The bipolar mood swings of the disc alter with great frequency, allotting for an intense manipulated space in which a carefully articulated masterpiece begins to emerge. Was it intentional? With the rate that James pumps out occasionally subpar material, no one can be sure.

But you can be certain that "26 Mixes for Cash" is far from subpar. The melodies and their correlative clicks and cuts are infectious in their own right. Sure, none will probably go on to knock Moby from his high tier of stardom, but the Aphex Twin remixes represent a different hierarchy of music altogether in which music is math and beauty is a complicated calculated endeavor (though well worth it).

In his reworking of Phillip Glass's orchestral reproduction of David Bowie's "Heroes," Bowie's voice is simultaneously soaring above the cinematic Koji Kondu style score and entrenched within the layers of strings as a harmonious echo. Only given four hours with the masters before they were to return to a Swiss vault, the tracks sounds like a critical undertaking months in the making.

Elsewhere, James gleans angelic reverberated vocal samples and infuses a whisk of modern classicism into them, as he does in the euphoric rendering of Gavin Byars's "Raising the Titanic." Early '90s Britpop teen icons Jesus Jones have their forgotten, conservative single "Zeroes and Ones" stripped of any pop stasis and transformed into the missing track from Aphex Twin's pulseless tour de force "Select Ambient Works II." Conversely, one of James's own tracks from that album appears in a completely new light as he goes AWOL assaulting the chiming repetition with a barrage of burp beats and scratchy new blips.

Perhaps due to its associations with the bland genre of the remix (or maybe because it's the second double disc from Aphex Twin in about a year's time and the last one was universally and unfairly panned by critics after an expensive advertising campaign), "26 Mixes for Cash" is being pushed with little fanfare by Warp. It's a shame. It may go down in history as his forgotten masterpiece.

Rappers, such as the wildly successful 50 Cent (above), are being touted as sexy.

Are rappers Cent to thrill?

Continued from page 6

What's so sexy about gold teeth and a white band-aid like strip pasted on his cheek? Nothing – but that's what's considered sexy right now.

It's so sad because rock used to be so damn hot. The music, the image, everything. Rock image and sexiness is now a made for TV movie based on a film made years ago.

So why isn't rock sexy anymore?

Is it because rap is now the new sexy thing, or is it because rock is just not plain sexy anymore? I'm thinking that it's a little bit of both. It used to be the complete opposite, and it's so amazing how it all changed. Rock needs to step up and reclaim its trademark sexiness. But by the way things are going, doesn't look like that's going to happen anytime soon.

Samara Marblestone is a Collegian Columnist.

CINEMARK
The Best Stof In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Thurs. 4/10/03 - Thurs. 4/17/03
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
ANGER MANAGEMENT (PG13) 4:15 7:00 9:40
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:15 7:00 9:45
PHONE BOOTH (R) 4:45 7:15 9:55
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:15 9:55
A MAN APART (R) 4:40 7:10 9:50
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 8:00
WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 1:30 4:45
PIGLET'S BIG MOVIE (G) 1:40 4:05
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 4:15 7:05 9:45
THE HUNTED (R) 1:30 4:45 7:30 9:55
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:45 4:30
BULLETPROOF MONK (PG13) 4:45 7:20 9:50
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:40 7:25 9:50
HOLES 1:30 4:15
MALIBU'S MOST WANTED 7:15 9:45
DREAMCATCHER (R) Senior Show 4/17/03 - PHONE BOOTH
THE CORE (PG13) NO PASSES/SUPERSAVERS
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & Showtimes available at cinemark.com

Styles by Deborah

Featuring Foil Highlights & Designer Haircuts for Students
$10 off Foils with a Style Haircut with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03
$5 off Clipper Cuts with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03
Complementary consultation with every visit
65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

Burgers • Hot Dogs • Chicken
Seafood • Fries • Onion Rings
Shakes • Smoothies • Soft Serve
GREAT 8 ATE
Phantom Gourmet's 2003 Pick Top 8 Burgers in New England "Pete's Big Bopper Deluxe"
NOW SERVING BREAKFAST
287 RUSSELL ST
ROUTE 9 • HADLEY
585-0241
CREDIT CARDS OCMP
PETE'S DRIVE-IN

Sometimes Accidents Happen.
FAST TRACK™ EMERGENCY SERVICES
For minor emergencies.
Walk-ins welcome. No appointment needed.
Open 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. seven days a week.
COOLEY DICKINSON HOSPITAL
DARTMOUTH-HITCHCOCK ALLIANCE
40 Locust Street • Northampton, Massachusetts
413 582-2421
www.cooley-dickinson.org
www.cooley-dickinson.org

GET SKIRTS. to the max
free people
zio angie hot sauce
funky people
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Local rookie makes debut

By JIMMY GOLEN
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – Rocco Baldelli wasn't nervous for his first game at Fenway Park, even though more than 100 friends and family members were coming to the game from his native Rhode Island.

"I don't really worry about who I'm playing in front of," said Baldelli, the Tampa Bay Devil Rays centerfielder from Cumberland, R.I. "Once I'm on the field, it doesn't really matter."

Little else has fazed Baldelli so far in his rookie season.

He batted .400 in his first 50 major league at-bats while hitting safely in his first 12 games, including Tuesday night against the Boston Red Sox, his childhood team. He was among the candidates for player of the week after hitting a major league-best .571 with an .857 slugging percentage.

"This is where I grew up watching baseball," said Baldelli, who remembers his first game at Fenway Park when he saw Roger Clemens pitch for the Red Sox.

"To be in that clubhouse and walk through that tunnel...this is how baseball is meant to be played. When you're young coming out here, that Monster looks like it's 200 feet tall."

Baldelli is getting his chance in the majors this year because the Devil Rays are building with youth and he can be thrown into the lineup without much pressure. He said he is trying to maintain the same attitude that he had in the minors last year, when he was Baseball America's minor league player of the year.

The big difference between the majors and the minors is the consistency required, he said.

"They're great players," Baldelli said. "If you don't come out here every day to play against these guys, you're not going to stay."

Baldelli said he didn't have time to go home and catch up with friends after the Devil Rays got to town. Instead, he spent Monday night in his hotel room. He said he expected more than 100 people from his high school alone to attend Tuesday night's game.

The Clash

Freshman Dane Collins (right), was integral to the Minutemen's success last Saturday against Yale. His services will be of prime importance again today.

Williams seeks discipline at NC

By DAVID DROSCHAK
Associated Press

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) – Roy Williams needed a few minutes to muster the courage to sit in the chair behind his desk – the spot once occupied by Dean Smith.

It was a day full of adjustments for the new North Carolina coach, who had to get used to surroundings he knew so well at the beginning of his career.

"I sat at the side to gather myself a little bit," said Williams, who left Kansas after 15 successful seasons to return to his alma mater Monday night. "I had to think about what I was doing for a couple of minutes."

The 52-year-old Williams looked tired Tuesday and still a bit shell-shocked to find himself back in the Smith Center, where he learned his trade for a decade as an assistant to Smith, and where he and his two children attended college.

In fact, Williams won't be at North Carolina's basketball banquet Tuesday night. Instead he's planning to fly to Kansas to be at his former team's season-ending function Thursday night.

"That will be hard," he said. "Most of the years I walked in to a standing ovation. I don't think I'll get that this time, but I want to be there because those people are genuine. I'm going to show respect for my team and love for my team."

Williams will also be wearing a Final Four ring from the Jayhawks to North Carolina's first fall practice. He's doing it to make a point.

"I'll wear this until this team gives me a new ring," Williams said. "It's not a slight to North Carolina's program. I'm hoping it will be incentive if they want to get that Kansas ring off my hand."

Williams takes over a team that is young and talented, but was also undisciplined at times during a 19-16 season. The Tar Heels took too many outside shots and had turnover problems.

Williams said the Tar Heels will try to run teams into the ground, just as his Kansas teams did.

"I hate it when the ball gets walked up and down the court," Williams said. "I've watched them play and I think we have the ability to do that. We're going to try to make them run faster than they ever have in their lives. And we're going to play man-to-man defense because I can't coach zone – and I despise it."

North Carolina is expected to return to prominence under Williams.

His biggest challenge comes off the court, where several problems arose in the storied program under Matt Doherty, who was forced to resign April 1 after three seasons.

Players said Doherty, a former teammate of Michael Jordan with the Tar Heels in the early 1980s, was difficult to get along with and at times was demeaning to certain individuals in front of the team. They met with athletic director Dick Baddour to voice those concerns days before Doherty was forced out.

The extended Carolina family also became split under Doherty, who didn't follow many of the same philosophies Smith and Bill Guthridge applied in four decades of building a college hoops power.

Williams is closer to a Smith clone, a no-nonsense tactician who also has a tender side – and a top-notch resume.

"In his expertise, I'm light years away," Williams said. "In his successes, I'm about light years away. But I do try to do so many things like him because that's my background, that's the way I was taught to do it."

One thing is clear: Williams plans to work hard mending fences in and around the Smith Center, and with the large North Carolina fan base.

"When you looked from the outside, everybody wasn't on the same page," Williams said. "My teams have never been accused of not being on the same page.

"Off the court, we need to act better as a team, better as a family," he added. "Part of the problem is that Matt had an almost unbearable situation of factions with diverse attitudes. It wasn't together and at this level to succeed against Duke and Maryland you can't have too many warts."

Downtrodden Penguins fire coach Rick Kehoe

By ALAN ROBINSON
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH (AP) – The Pittsburgh Penguins are looking for a new coach who is comfortable working with no-names and prospects, not superstars.

The Penguins, virtually stripped of the big names that made them a playoff team for 10 years, fired coach Rick Kehoe on Tuesday and began looking for a replacement who understands winning won't come easily, or immediately.

Kehoe's record of 55-81-14-10 was the worst of any Penguins coach since the mid-1980s, and he was the first since Bob Berry (1984-87) to miss the playoffs in consecutive seasons. The Penguins were 27-44-6-5 this season, their worst record since Mario Lemieux's rookie season in 1984-85.

Still, Kehoe was all but absolved of blame by general manager Craig Patrick, who said the team's moneysaving moves all but made losing inevitable.

The Penguins have traded away or lost stars Jaromir Jagr, Alexei Kovalev, Robert Lang the last two years, leaving a cast of little-known players and developing prospects, many of whom are still in the minors.

Lemieux, the owner-player who came out of retirement 2 1/2 years ago, also is only a formal announcement away from retiring for a second time.

"I talked to Rick today, and I said I wasn't blaming him," Patrick said. "It was bad circumstances. I wish we had done better, but it wasn't [Kehoe's] fault. I'm not blaming him for our failures."

Kehoe, a player, scout or coach with the Penguins for 29 years, ranks fourth in career scoring with the team. He is expected to stay on in an undetermined role, as are assistant coaches Randy Hillier and Joey Mullen.

Patrick said the Penguins need a coach who is comfortable working with young players and is a good communicator.

"It's a different era, we're rebuilding. We're a lot younger and we've got different personnel to coach," Patrick said. "We need a strong communicator and a better teacher."

The Penguins made the playoffs every season from 1991 to 2001, winning two Stanley Cups, but financial restrictions forced them to dump their top-salaried players to keep Lemieux's ownership group solvent. The team emerged from bankruptcy in 1999 when Lemieux's group bought them.

Lemieux recently ordered Patrick and team president Ken Sawyer to make a top-to-bottom evaluation of the organization. Patrick said the team is in a "survival mode" until a new NHL labor agreement is reached.

The firing means the Penguins will be seeking their seventh coach since the 1990-97 – Lemieux's last full season before he initially retired.

Former general manager Eddie Johnston was fired as coach midway through that season and replaced on an interim basis by general manager Craig Patrick.

Kevin Constantine was hired in 1997, but was fired in December 1999 after several run-ins with star Jaromir Jagr. He was succeeded by Herb Brooks, who coached the team the rest of the season but could not be persuaded to take the job full time.

Ivan Hlinka replaced Brooks, coaching the team to the Eastern Conference finals in 2001, but he was replaced by Kehoe four games into the 2001-02 season after the team got off to a slow start.

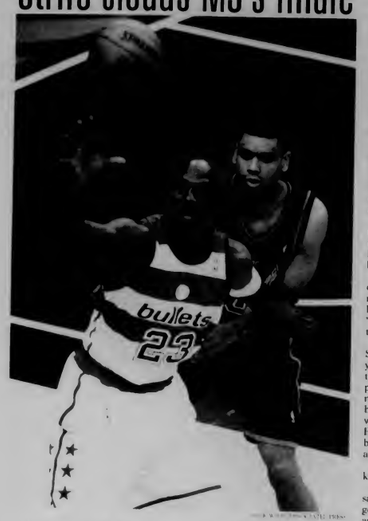
The Penguins finished the last two seasons poorly under Kehoe. They were winless in their final 10 games (0-9-1) last season, and won only twice in their final 21 games this year (2-17-2).

"You can give all the excuses you want, but you still have to work with the guys you have," Kehoe said recently. "You win as an organization and lose as an organization."

Kehoe had one year left on a contract worth about $350,000, making him one of the NHL's lowest-paid coaches.

From the students who brought you Haigis Hoopla...

new balance SoccerFest
April 27, 2003
Presented by the University of Massachusetts Sport Management Program



The Soccer Showdown
"We're putting the Show Down, so you Show Up"
UMASS Men's Soccer
2002 Atlantic 10 Champions
VS.
UNC Tar Heels
2001 National Champions
Sunday, April 27th at 12:30 PM
Rudd Field
Pre-Sale: $2 Kids, $4 Adults
Day of event: $3 Kids, $5 Adults
UMass students FREE with student ID

Soccer Tournament
Age Groups:
3 v 3 Tournament:
10 and under, 11-12, 13-14
$60 per team/ max of 5 players
6 v 6 Tournament:
High school, college/adult, over 30
$120 per team/ max of 10 players
Separate men's and women's divisions Winners of each division receive free New Balance shoes
Registration deadline: Friday April 18th
For registration materials and more information, visit our website: http://courses.umass.edu/nbsoccer
Registrations are on a first come, first serve basis
All participants in the tournament receive a free t-shirt, ticket to the Soccer Showdown, and entry into the New Balance FanZone
SPECIAL THANKS TO:
UMASS FOOD SERVICES
NORTHAMPTON BOYS & GIRLS CLUB
new balance
KAPLAN
The Coca-Cola Company

Graphics
THE COLLEGIAN IS HIRING
for next Semester
Freshmen and Sophomores
are encouraged to apply
come talk to Mike, Ruth, or Shannon
or call 545-1864
105 Campus Center Basement

THINK SUMMER
UMass Summer Session 2003
Over 200 credit courses in more than 40 academic departments–evenings, daytime, weekends, and online.
Summer Session I: June 2–July 10
Summer Session II: July 14–August 20
And one-, two-, and three-week courses
For a free catalog: call 545-2414 or e-mail contined@contined.umass.edu.
www.umass.edu/contined
Division of Continuing Education
UMassAmherst

Strife clouds MJ's finale

Washington Wizards' Michael Jordan (23) looks for the pass against New York Knicks' Allan Houston, back, during first-half action.

By Joseph White
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – Michael Jordan surely expected a different ending, not a finale amid the turmoil of his self-assembled crumbling team.

Jordan finishes his NBA playing career – part three – in Philadelphia on Wednesday night. His Washington Wizards teammates will probably try to send him out a winner, but there's no telling what to expect after the tongue-lashing some players got from coach Doug Collins at Jordan's last home game.

After Monday night's 93-79 loss to the New York Knicks, Collins criticized some players for showing "insidious" disrespect to the coach. He implied it could lead to a roster purge in the offseason.

"It doesn't matter how much money you make or what you do, you still respect the people who are trying to bring the best out in you," Collins said. "Somewhere along the line, that's been lost. And I sure hope we can get it back, not just here, but in all cities in the NBA."

Caught off guard by Collins' remarks, Jordan supported the coach but said the timing or the method might not have been the best.

"These are things you have to deal with," said Jordan, who plans to return to the Wizards' front office. "I'd rather for them not to be out for everyone's opinion. Those are things I'd like to field internally, but I think Doug felt very disrespected."

At least this is helping the 40-year-old Jordan with one wish: He didn't want a big, somber fuss over his retirement. Instead, he's got a big mess.

His next job probably will be to fix it and continue his quest to turn around a franchise that hasn't won a playoff game in 13 years. Even with Jordan on the court, the Wizards have had back-to-back losing seasons marred by bad chemistry.

He'll sit down with team owner Abe Pollin after the season.

"My ending is going to be when this team is successful," Jordan said. "I am sure everybody would love to see the hit the game-winning shot in the finals. Sometimes not being able to be as successful is a great signal because it lets you know that it is the right time to move on and do other things."

Jordan said he would give himself just an average grade for his three years as the Wizards de facto general manager. In the future, he said he'll concentrate more on finding players with desire, passion and a willingness to be learn and be coached – even if they are considered marginal by the NBA's talent standards.

"I would take 12 guys who have a strong passion to play this game over 12-stars who don't respect the game," Jordan said.

But that's Jordan the personnel man. What about Jordan the player, who wanted so badly to get to the playoffs one last time? He signed some promising names this season for that final run – Jerry Stackhouse, Bryon Russell, Larry Hughes, Charles Oakley – but the playing styles and personalities were a bad mix from the start.

Then again, according to Collins, even making the playoffs might have been enough to satisfy Jordan, his critics or even his fans.

Is there any way Michael could win coming back to play?" Collins said. "Is the only scenario that we win a championship? It's perception. If we were to win four more games and get swept in the first round, would Michael have been successful?

"What is success? If we don't win the championship, for him coming back is a failure. He's judged at a standard no one else even comes close to."

As for whether Jordan will retire for good – he's come back twice already – he pointed out that this was the first time he announced it in advance. He wasn't really ready to quit last time, but he didn't want to play for another coach other than Phil Jackson in Chicago, where they won six championships together.

"With the Bulls, it wasn't my option," Jordan said. "If Phil would have stayed, I would have still played. That wasn't the end, it was because I didn't want to play for a rebuilding project. This is my choice. I'm looking to walk into this because I know there won't be another chance of me being in the league."

Johnson, Schilling, other aces suffer early

By Bob Baum
Associated Press

PHOENIX (AP) – Randy Johnson and Curt Schilling are a combined 0-4 in six outings, and they're not alone. Across baseball, aces have started the season like jokers.

Greg Maddux lost three times before getting his first victory. Pedro Martinez is 0-1 in three starts with a 5.12 ERA. Barry Zito allowed seven runs in four innings in his last start. Tom Glavine got off to a rocky start before turning things around with his new team in New York.

Nowhere is the situation more startling than with the Diamondbacks, though, because Johnson and Schilling have been one of the most devastating lefty-righty tandems ever.

"The run that those guys have been on the last couple of years has been like nothing I ever saw in the game of baseball," Arizona manager Bob Brenly said. "So that set the bar pretty high to expect that kind of thing every year."

The past two seasons, Johnson and Schilling were a combined 90-24. Last year, while earning his fourth consecutive NL Cy Young Award, Johnson won pitching's triple crown with the NL's most wins (24-5), strikeouts (334) and best ERA (2.32, a career best.). Schilling was 23-7 and fanned 316 with a 3.23 ERA. They were the first teammates in baseball history to top 200 strikeouts apiece.

Is it unrealistic to expect them to keep up that kind of pace?

"I don't think it is at all," Schilling said. "We expect it out of ourselves. He's got very high expectations of himself, and I'm likewise. I have a lot of pride in what I do. I'm very proud of what I've done. I want the reputation that I've earned, that you earn through achievement."

Johnson says critics should give him a break. He's especially sensitive when his difficulties are linked to his age. He turns 40 in September and has a new, two-year, $52 million contract extension.

"Why are you guys making a big deal about it? Holy cow!" Johnson said. "If me and Maddux have a bad game, we're over the hill. Someone that's seven years younger, that's just a bad start, like Pedro or Barry Zito."

As Johnson said after his latest loss, "I don't turn water into wine."

"I haven't had a bad year in 10 years," he said this week. "Am I not entitled to have a couple of bad games? I've always said that, I have what, 31 more starts? How many games did I lose last year? Obviously, I'm losing more quicker than I did last year, but what's to say that all of a sudden I can't rattle off 10? So let's not make more out of it than what it is."

Schilling has had two decent starts and one bad one. Johnson has had two awful starts and one good one. Each is 0-2.

Last year, Schilling didn't lose his second game until June 14. For Johnson, it was June 9. Johnson's ERA is 8.31, Schilling's 5.40.

Adding to Johnson's slow start, the team said Tuesday he would miss his scheduled start Wednesday against Colorado because of inflammation in a knee.

Johnson is second to Maddux in earned runs allowed and runs allowed. Schilling, usually a master of control, has walked a team-high nine in 18 1-3 innings.

"They both set the bar so high where no one thinks they're ever going to lose a game or ever have a bad day," catcher Chad Moeller said. "Both of them are human. Both make mistakes on the mound. That's what it is, and we haven't helped them out with run support."

While both have made costly mistakes on the mound, and Johnson has struggled with command of his awesome fastball, and that's affected the effectiveness of his slider, neither is far from straightening things out, Moeller said.

"Stuff-wise, they're both right there," he said. "I don't think anybody's concerned about it. I know I'm not. I know they both want to get on the winning side. They're not used to the way this has started, and they're not happy about it. But they also understand there are difficult times throughout the year. It's just a lot more obvious when it's early in the year."

While Johnson's next start was postponed, Schilling faces the Rockies on Thursday.

"Until you get a win and eliminate all these questions, I'm sure that everybody's going to have them under a microscope," Brenly said. "But it's not going to change what they do and it's not going to change what we do. They're going to go out and battle and try to win ball games the best way they know how."

Heads down

Lori Kain (left) and Hope Zellinger battle for a loose ball. The 7-5 Minutemen (3-1 Atlantic 10) travel to Duquesne Friday.

Hillenbrand saves Sox

Continued from page 12

enjoy it a lot less when you lose."

Rey Ordonez singled to lead off the eighth, moved to third when Carl Crawford singled and scored on a wild pitch. Damian Rolls singled to put runners on first and third, then Baldelli singled to make it 5-3.

Timlin relieved Mendoza and got Huff on a groundout before Anderson tied it with a single to right. Timlin got Ben Grieve on a fly to right and Toby Hall on a groundout.

The Red Sox went ahead in the first when Johnny Damon led off with a double and scored on Manny Ramirez's single. Damon also homered in the third in his fourth in four games.

Boston added one in the fourth on consecutive doubles by Hillenbrand and Jeremy Giambi, and two in the fifth when the two had back-to-back RBI singles.

Nick Bierbrodt had his second poor start against the Red Sox this season, allowing five runs on 10 hits and a walk in 4 2-3 innings. On April 3, he gave up seven runs in four innings of a 14-5 loss.

Notes: Red Sox third base coach Mike Cubbage returned, three days after collapsing on the field with a diabetic seizure. Pitching coach Tony Cloninger, who has bladder cancer, was also back at the ballpark; he watched the game from the clubhouse and hopes to return to his regular duties in a few days.... Kevin Millar has a 12-game hitting streak for Boston....didn't make it out of the fifth inning in his last start....Baldelli, a native of Cumberland, R.I., singled to right in the first inning to extend his hitting streak to 12 games – a club rookie record.... Terry Shumpert's second-inning home run for Tampa Bay hit a sign above the new Green Monster seats and bounced back onto the field....Seven of Tampa Bay's 13 games have been decided in the last inning.

Mussina leads Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) – Mike Mussina gave the New York Yankees just what they needed, allowing three hits in eight sharp innings to beat the Toronto Blue Jays 5-0 Tuesday night for the best start in franchise history.

Jorge Posada homered and Bernie Williams had three hits and two RBIs for the Yankees, who have won 11 of 13 to open the season for the first time.

Yankees	5	Mussina (3-0) struck out nine.
Blue Jays	0

Mussina threw 17 pitches to the first two batters, walking No. 2 hitter Frank Catalanotto on nine pitches. Then, with a 2-1 count on Vernon Wells, Mussina induced an easy double-play grounder to get out of the inning.

He retired 18 of the next 19 batters – allowing only a single by Catalanotto with one out in the fourth before Eric Hinske and Greg Myers singled with one out in the eighth.

Mussina got the runs he needed in the first against Roy Halladay (0-2). Alfonso Soriano singled and Jason Giambi walked with one out. Williams then hit an RBI single to make it 1-0.

Cubbage, Cloninger return to Red Sox

BOSTON (AP) – Boston Red Sox coaches Mike Cubbage and Tony Cloninger were back with the team for Tuesday night's game against the Tampa Bay Devil Rays.

Cubbage returned to the third base coach's box where he collapsed in a diabetic seizure three days before. Cloninger, the pitching coach who has bladder cancer, was back for the first time since opening day.

Cloninger was not in uniform, instead watching the game in the clubhouse. He hopes to be ready to resume his full duties in two or three days.

"I'm ready to go," he told a pool reporter. "I want to help people do their job."

Cubbage had a seizure during Saturday night's home opener and spent the night in the hospital. He missed Sunday's game, when bench coach Jerry Narron replaced him on the baseline.

Cubbage, who wears a pump on his belt to regulate his blood sugar, said he exacerbated the problem when he gave himself an insulin shot that he mistakenly thought he needed.

"I overtreated it," he said Tuesday. "When you're diabetic, you have to be your own doctor 365 days a year, and I didn't do a very good job on Saturday. I mismanaged my medicine and my food intake and that was the result."

–Associated Press

Looking ahead

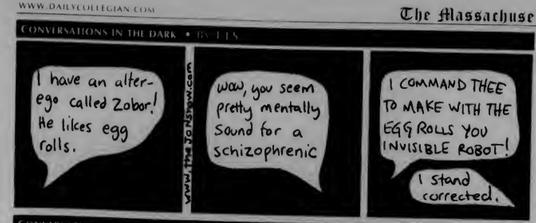
Kevin Glenz (six goals, 10 assists) and the Minutemen travel to Harvard today. They will entertain Georgetown on Saturday at Garber Field.

sports@dailycollegian.com

PETER PAN BUS TICKETS
COPIES & FAXES
UPS PACKAGE SHIPPING
$2.00 OFF ANY ROUND TRIP BUS TICKET PURCHASED IN APRIL WITH THIS AD
COPY CENTER
on Campus in 101 Herter Hall

Interested in Business?

The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the 2003/2004 school year. Great resume builder!
Current Freshmen/Sophomores strongly encouraged to apply
Call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center.
Need to possess strong business and communication skills



GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 → Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 → A great place to get contact lenses
3 → FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 → Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 → Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 → FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

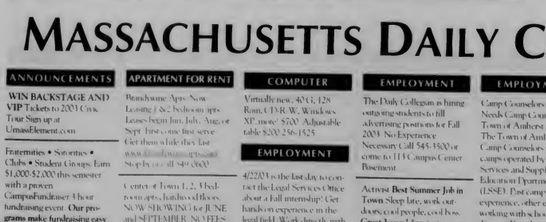
McMurphy's welcomes Live Music

THE GUITAR DUDES every wednesday
NO COVER
positive ID required

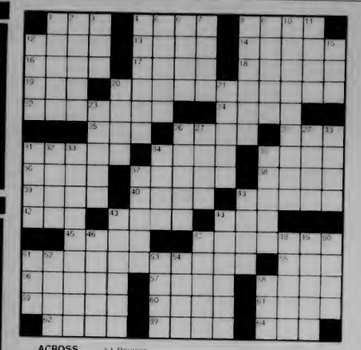
CONVERSATIONS IN THE DARK • BY T.J.S.

CONVERSATIONS IN THE DARK • BY T.J.S.

ELSIE HOOPER • BY ROBERT D. KRZYKOWSKI



JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • BY MARK VELARD



THE TORQUES • BY KEN FREDETTE

THE TORQUES • BY KEN FREDETTE

ACROSS
1 Scratch or dent
4 Hard cooker
8 Glimmering
12 Hay unit
13 Singer ___ Tenuta
14 Prairie
16 Like some fans
17 Rent or Lena of film
18 Acquire, as debt
19 Sodden in gray
20 Snowboarder's course (2 wds.)
22 Cracker shapes
24 Knowing look
25 All-purpose buck
26 Unusual sightings
28 Hold gently
31 Championship
34 Mountain pass info
35 — mater
36 Arthur — of tennis
37 Get the suds out
38 Comic section
39 Exists
40 Some CDs
41 Outfits pursuers
42 Foreman star
43 Hairy primates
44 Ex-Polish Bobby
45 Mild
47 Wild ponies
51 Reunion attendee (hyph.)
55 One in combos
56 Gracie or Woody
57 Milk to Yves
58 Move like a butterfly
59 Ask urgently
60 Finish a jacket
61 Medieval plant
62 Ends the sun
63 Sledded
64 9-digit ID

DOWN
1 Expert
2 Suspect's need
3 Rainbow hard
4 Lawrence of Arabia' star
5 Electrical units
6 Tennyson heroine
7 Barcelona youngster
8 Spring blooms
9 — Schlesin
10 Gerb
11 Flu symptom
12 Actress Ineda —
15 Re wrong
20 Can't stomach
21 Mitt
23 Wagon-train team
26 Rabbi compatriots
27 Actor — Parker
29 Out cattle
30 Bird twice
31 Diplomat's nest
32 Winter Olympian
33 Choked
34 Limerick locale
35 Make pretty
37 Less green
41 Front of a boat
45 Cuts up
46 Give a speech
48 Yet to come
49 Light pancakes
50 Flight grades
52 Pizza topping
53 Venue
54 Chant
55 Clay pot
— Medoc wine
58 Bambi and Nutshell
59 Scale notes

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
You make think Leveille is God, but remember: there is no "o" in team.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Look behind you...someone is staring at the back of your head!

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
If you dream them they will come, but only in your dreams.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Even though you've been hurt before, give love another chance...

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Keep going after the one you want...they'll come around eventually.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Stop analyzing everything, you're driving everyone crazy with all your whining!

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Spire, remind yourself how you miss the woman on the phone system.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Go to the bathroom and brush your teeth.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Go out and have fun today...you deserve it.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Don't be afraid to tell your parents what you really want.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You will look really hot today.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Lent's almost over...soon you can stop being a cannibal.

QUOTE OF THE DAY
I write entirely to find out what I'm thinking, what I'm looking at, what I see and what it means. What I want and what I fear.
- Joan Didion

THE HARP IRISH PUB
163 Sunderland Rd.
548-6900
THE DECK IS COMING!
Wednesday
Reggae Night
Thursday
Third Rail
Jam Band Rock
Saturday
Havin' Fun Band

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

WEDNESDAY
• High: 70
• Low: 27

THURSDAY
• High: 44
• Low: 25

FRIDAY
• High: 41
• Low: 32

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Cream of Broccoli Soup
• Baked Ziti
• Kickin' Chicken
• Plain Chicken
• Beans & Rice
(vegan)

DINNER
• Cream of Broccoli Soup
• Turkey Cutlet
• Roast Beef
• Madras Tofu Curry
(vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Sarah Lloyd
COPY EDITOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Lizzy Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Scott Cruso / Jennifer DiMeglio

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WIN BACKSTAGE AND VIP Tickets to 2003 Ozzfest Tour. Sign up at UmassElement.com

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups. Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 4 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling, so don't get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6861. Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condominium for rent excellent condition 1/2 mile away from campus 4 beds own apt for female roommates $550 full room, $350 to share plus utilities. 413-592-0540

Apt. located in Pembwome Furnished Apt. Seeking Female Roommate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sandy @ 413-546-0489

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Pembwome Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sept. first + one mo. first serve Get them while they last www.kimballpropertymgt.com Steph's cell 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstapartments.com 253-7879

Hobart Circle 4 bedroom, hardwood floors, study, steam, basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstapartments.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing unused car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

95 Geo Prizm Purple 95k 5 Speed good condition $3000 OBO 413-665-8222

COMPUTER

Virtually new, 4GG, 128 Ram, CD-R/W, Windows XP, new 17GO Adjustable table $200 256-1825

EMPLOYMENT

4/22/03 is the last day to contact the Legal Services Office about a fall internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal field required- training is provided. Contact Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Colleague Entrepreneurs Inc. Looking for experience painters for full time summer work great pay, fun atmosphere Call Jenna 648-2920 - Nortons, Amherst, Marshfield MA attn: emily

Rent in your ears? $5 for half an hour just for listening 545-6842 or eranter@student.umass.edu

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150/450/day. No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

EMPLOYMENT

The Daily Collegian is hiring outgoing students to fill advertising positions for Fall 2003. No Experience Necessary. Call 545-3500 or come to 113 Campus Center Basement

Activity Best Summer Job in Town Sleep late, work outdoors, cool people, cool boss. Great Issues! "protect our air and water "fight corporate polluters "defend public health "promote renewable energy. Earn $4,000-5,000 this summer Call today, Start tomorrow 413-584-0847

Summer Office Help Amherst Leisure Services is looking for a summer registration clerk. Duties include service, accepting registrations, data entry, answering phones, filing, and other clerical duties. Hours are M-F 9 a.m.-4 p.m. Pay range is $7.44-8.61/hr. depending upon experience. Apply at Human Resources, Town Hall, 4 Bolwood Ave., Amherst, MA 01002 AA/EOE

Bartender Trainees Needed $250/00 a day potential. Local Positions NO 294-8985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors – Town of Amherst Rec Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). For Camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, esp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. old. $ range for both positions $8.19-9.48/hr, 35-40 hrs per week, June 30- Aug. 15. Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept. 4 Bolwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

Technical Writer for Policy Analysis Consulting Software firm. Resume to Fred Trevz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or Fred@REMI.com

EMPLOYMENT

WSI/Lifeguards The Town of Amherst, Department of Leisure Services and Supplemental Education (LSSE) Aquatics Program is now accepting WSI applications for summer 2003 season. All Applicants must possess current WSI and Lifeguard certifications. Previous experience preferred. $8.19-9.48 hr. Application deadline: 4/21 Applications are available from the Town Hall Human Resources Dept. 4 Bolwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Opportunity Employer

Economic / Business Development Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Trevz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software Year round 665-2779

EMPLOYMENT

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS-Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Trevz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

Fall internships with the Student Legal Services Office, get hands-on experience in the legal field- work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary, training provided. Deadline to begin application process is 4/22/03. Contact the Legal Services Office- 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

FOR SALE

For Sale: Blue Couch and Chair 256-3166

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TTMP Turntables 1 Gemini PMX90 Mixer Records Extra's $50 Cash Call 413-546-0701

MISCELLANEOUS

Do you still swallow pills? Spray nutrients right into your mouth! www.2581581.myvitamist.com

ROOMMATE WANTED

For Fall Semester on Main St $346/ plus utilities per month 256-4257

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9900

SUBLET

69 Townhouse Sublet June 1st – August 31st Room for 4 $450 per month or $130 Call 549-0798

Pvt'm Sublet from June 1st - August 31st 3beds 2baths 1146 per month Call Mark 253-1479

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS. America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WANTED

Egg Donors Needed, non-smokers. Donors Ages 21-32. Generous compensation paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781) 769-6900

WANTED TO RENT

Furnished Summer Rental or House share Male, non-smoker, no pets Will pay up to $500.00 856-240-3069

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Freshmen fall to Huskies

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts baseball coach Mike Stone has seen a lot go right for his team during its recent seven game winning streak. His young pitching staff has been effective and his lineup has gotten on base and delivered timely hits to help the Minutemen move into a tie for first place in the Atlantic 10 East Division.

However on Tuesday afternoon at Earl Lorden Field, Stone saw everything go the opposite direction against the University of Connecticut.

Leading 6-1 heading into the top of the fourth, freshman starter Jason Hickey combined with classmate Jon Davis to surrender six runs on four longballs in the inning, and with their short-lived lead having evaporated, the Maroon and White saw their bats go silent while UConn's were just heating up.

UConn	20
UMass	8

The Huskies (17-14 6-6 Big East) sent 15 men to the plate in the sixth inning and saw 10 of them cross the plate, two via homeruns, and cruised to a 20-6 advantage. John Seed's two-run single in the bottom of the ninth was too little too late as the Huskies pounded the Minutemen 20-8.

"Our pitchers don't really have enough experience," Stone said. "Those guys are freshman out there. They don't have the experience, the command or the poise and confidence to know what they have to do out there to get college hitters out. [The homeruns] were a result of that and that led to us having a lot of trouble today."

The game began on a positive note for the Minutemen, as junior shortstop Mike Athas and senior designated hitter Chris Morgan both doubled and scored off of UConn starter Shawn Hoggatt in the first inning. After freshman catcher Frank Curreri singled and scored a lone run in the second to chase Hoggatt from the game, the Minutemen erupted for three more in the third off of the Connecticut bullpen.

Following a solo homerun from sophomore centerfielder Jason Twomley, his first of the season, senior rightfielder Matt Boulanger doubled and scored on a triple from Curreri. Sophomore leftfielder Curt Szado then proceeded to drive Curreri in with a line-single, but that would be it for the UMass offense until the ninth.

The lonesome of sophomore southpaw Keith Potvin, freshman righthander Ryan Christopher, lefthanded classmate Brendan McGinn and senior righthander Eric Drown blanked the Minutemen over the middle innings on only three hits before freshman Mike Ianies surrendered the final two UMass tallies in the ninth.

Stone knows, however, that his team's troubles were centered on the mound and not in the batters box, as all of the five pitchers he used in the game were first-year players.

"Everything starts on the mound, you have to get people out," Stone said. "When you have 16 hits that should give you a chance to win, but not if you can't get anybody out. Today we just struggled to get people out."

Athas paced the UMass attack by going 3-for-4 with a double and a run scored, while Seed, Morgan and Curren all added two hits.

Freshman righthander Jon Davis took the loss, allowing seven runs on six hits in 2-2/3 innings of relief.

Prelude to G-Town

Gene Tundo holds off an intruder early this season. The sophomore has 11 goals and eight assists this season, and will be called into action today when the Minutemen play Harvard in Cambridge, Mass.

Lax heads to Harvard

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team travels to the ivy-covered campus of Harvard University at 3 p.m. today, with the looming shadow of Saturday's matchup against No. 3 Georgetown.

But the Minutemen (9-1, 2-1 Eastern College Athletic Conference) are focused on today's game, according to coach Greg Cannella. He insists that "no one on this team is looking ahead [to Georgetown]."

The preparation that Cannella's squad has done for the Crimson is no different, he says, than any other game.

The Minutemen are coming off of a 12-10 win over Yale in which the Bulldogs came back from an early three-goal deficit, and later a third-quarter four-goal UMass lead. After the game, Cannella and the Maroon and White players both cited the offense's inability to hang on to the ball in its zone.

So, today will be a pre-test of sorts, the Minutemen's last chance to shore up the deficiencies before taking on Georgetown, and then Syracuse next week.

In the most intriguing development of the week, the defense that saw those Bulldogs claw back from 3-0, and later 8-4, will have its star back in the lineup.

Senior defenseman Tom Fallon, who has been absent from the lineup since the Maroon and White's 10-9 victory over Navy on March 8, dressed for last Saturday's game against Yale, and participated in practice on Monday. According to Cannella, Fallon "is a go," though it is unclear that he will play today, rather than hold off until the Hoyas come to Garber Field on Saturday.

Should Fallon return, the UMass defense will certainly be bolstered, and at the perfect time. With just four games to go and a tournament berth to hunt for, the sturdy 6-foot-4, 245 pounder would be a welcome sight in the Minuteman lineup.

As for the Crimson, it is sitting at 4-6 on the season (1-3 Ivy League), coming off a 12-8 loss to Princeton. Harvard rallied from an early 10-2 deficit, but came up short. Still, freshman attackman Sean Kane earned the Ivy League Rookie of the Week award for his five goals – including a hat trick against Brown – in the Crimson's last two games.

Whether or not Kane will have to battle with Fallon should be the most interesting subplot of today's game.

Sox win despite bullpen

By JIMMY GOLEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) – It has been called Closer by Calamity and Closer by Catastrophe. By any name, the Boston bullpen experiment has been a failure so far this season.

Shea Hillenbrand rescued the Red Sox after another late collapse Tuesday night, breaking a ninth-inning tie with his fourth hit of the game to lead Boston to a 6-5 victory over the Tampa Bay Devil Rays.

"You can't just pinpoint the Red Sox, or the Red Sox bullpen [as the problem] right now," Hillenbrand said. "It's a team. We've got to pick each other up."

Red Sox	6
Devil Rays	5

Boston took a 5-1 lead before Ramiro Mendoza gave it all back in the eighth without retiring a batter. But in the ninth, Boston loaded the bases with one out and Hillenbrand bounced a single up the middle to win it.

Mike Timlin (2-0) inherited a 5-3 lead and two baserunners from Mendoza and gave up the tying, two-run single to pinch-hitter Marlon Anderson. But Timlin retired five consecutive batters after that to prevent further damage and earn the win.

Al Levine (1-1) pitched a perfect eighth but gave up a lead-off walk to Bill Mueller in the ninth. Nomar Garciaparra singled Mueller to third, then Bobby Seay walked pinch-hitter Todd Walker on four pitches to load the bases.

Hillenbrand fouled off the first pitch from reliever Travis Harper, then knocked the second through the middle.

Casey Fossum pitched seven strong innings for the Red Sox, allowing six hits and a run, striking out four and walking none. But Boston's much-discussed closer-by-committee failed for the third time in five tries.

No one has been worse than Mendoza, who was booed when he was introduced at the home opener and again after each hit Tuesday. After failing to retire a Tampa Bay batter, his ERA went from 11.57 to 16.71.

"He laced four hitters and didn't get any of them out," Red Sox manager Grady Little said. "This kid will help us out. He's just getting off to a rough start."

After the game, the closer-by-committee lost its first member when the Red Sox optioned Bobby Howry to Triple-A Pawtucket, with plans to replace him on Wednesday. Howry had blown his only save opportunity and allowed at least one run in each of his four appearances.

"It's not a message," Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein said. "It's just a move to get a guy going."

Rhode Island native Rocco Baldelli had three hits for the Devil Rays in his first game at the ballpark he frequented while growing up. But he also got caught trying to steal third right before Aubrey Huff doubled in the sixth – depriving Tampa Bay of a scoring opportunity.

"Coming to Fenway, I don't know if there's any way I wouldn't have enjoyed myself," Baldelli said. "Obviously, you

Continued on page 11

Bruins solve Brodeur, stop Devils

By HOWARD ULMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) – Dan McGillis scored twice and the Boston Bruins finally beat Martin Brodeur, driving the goalie from the game and staving alive with a 5-1 playoff win over the New Jersey Devils on Tuesday night.

Brodeur allowed just three goals as the Devils won the first three games. But in Game 4, he was replaced by Corey Schwab with 3:37 gone in the third period after Boston scored twice in two minutes.

Bruins	5
Devils	1

Boston's Jeff Hackett allowed only a goal by Scott Niedermayer at 1:37 of the third period as the Bruins forced a fifth game in the best-of-seven opening round Thursday night in New Jersey.

The Bruins entered Tuesday's game facing a daunting challenge. Only two teams in NHL history had won series after trailing 3-0. Boston was 0-13 when it lost the first three games, losing seven of those series 4-0 and the other six 4-1. Now, at least, the Bruins have a chance to make it to a sixth game Saturday in Boston.

They were stymied for three games by the Devils' emphasis on defense and the stinginess of Brodeur, who saved 79 of 82 shots. And on Sunday, he posted his 14th playoff shutout in a 3-0 win.

But Tuesday, he was beaten twice by defenseman McGillis, who has three goals in the series after scoring just three in 71 regular-season games, and once by Joe Thornton, Martin Lapointe and Marty McInnis.

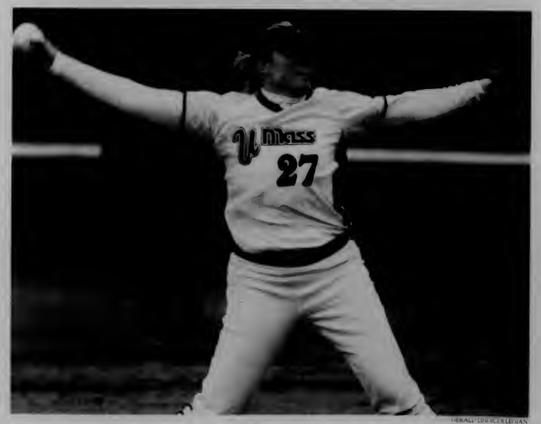
For the second time in just over a month, Brodeur was benched in Boston. On March 12, he was pulled by coach Pat Burns 10 minutes into the second period after Lapointe scored three goals in 5:15 of a 4-3 Bruins win.

On Tuesday, Hackett was the star in net as he turned aside 24 shots and won for only the third time in eight playoff decisions. Brodeur has 70 postseason wins.

Thornton, the NHL's third-leading scorer, had just two assists in the first three games. But he finally broke free of the tight coverage by defensive forward John Madden and scored one of Boston's two power-play goals with 13 seconds left in the first period.

Thornton scored on a rebound after Brodeur stopped two shots from Nick Boynton. After the second save, the puck bounced into the slot and Thornton swooped in and fired a 15-footer low to Brodeur's left.

McGillis made it 2-0 early in the second period, 42 seconds after Scott Stevens was penalized for holding the stick. Jonathan Girard shot from the top of the left circle and Brodeur stopped the puck with his shoulder. Again, the rebound went into the slot and McGillis scored from 15 feet.



He made it 3-0 later in the period on a shot from the right circle, but Nidermayer made it 3-1 with a low wrist shot past Hackett.

Any chance New Jersey would gain the momentum ended just eight seconds later when Lapointe scored his first goal of the series at 1:45.

And when Brodeur allowed McInnis' shot from the top of the right circle to go between his pads, the Bruins led 5-1 and the star goalie was done for the night.

Notes: The Bruins have won just one playoff series the last eight seasons....The Devils are in the playoffs for the seventh straight year.... Hackett returned to the net in Sunday's 3-0 loss after missing 12 games with a broken finger.

UM tries to rebound

Kaila Holtz could be in the spotlight today against Boston College. Holtz leads the Minutewomen with an 0.99 earned run average in 17 appearances this season.

By JEFF BOYD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team will return home to face Big East power Boston College this afternoon at the UMass Softball Complex.

Boston College (18-13) is currently in first place in the Big East and is riding a four-game win streak. One of the reasons for BC's recent success has been the play of junior outfielder Erin Mackey and senior pitcher Kim Ryan.

Mackey was named last week's Big East co-Player of the Week following a four game span during which she batted .500 with five runs batted in.

Ryan was named co-Pitcher of the week by the Big East after winning two games for the Eagles and saving one. In her three appearances on the mound, Ryan allowed no runs in 14-2/3 innings of work and struck out 28.

After a shaky start to the season, the Eagles have won 10 of their last 11 games, all mostly against Big East teams. Their recent dominance has put them atop the Big East standing with a conference record of 7-1.

Experience has been one of the keys for Boston College. With eight returning starters from last season, and 12 returning letter winners, the Eagles are used to playing together.

The Eagles have allowed just two runs throughout their streak and have outscored their opponents by a combined margin of 17-2 during that period.

UMass is coming off of a disappointing 1-0 loss to Connecticut yesterday. The Minutewomen, who had started to come alive at the plate recently, could not manage any offense against the Huskies. The loss also put an end to UMass's 14-game winning streak.

Sophomore pitcher Kelli Arnold followed up her no-hitter against Rhode Island earlier in the week with another solid performance against UConn. Arnold allowed UConn only two hits for the entire game, and even held them hitless through 4-2/3 innings.

The game was decided in the bottom of the seventh inning when UConn scored the game-winner on an unearned run. The Minutewomen had their share of chances to pull out the win, but stranded a total of 11 runners on base.

The loss dropped UMass's record to 23-11 and will likely jeopardize its chances of sneaking back into the top 25.

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 119

Perseverance & frustration

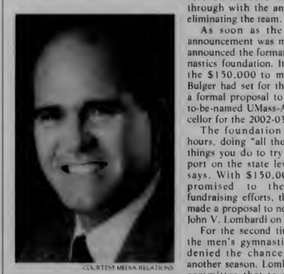
A team reflects on its failed efforts to keep a sport afloat at UMass

By DAN LAMOTHE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

They symbolized everything positive that the University of Massachusetts Athletic Department stood for.

They were competitive, winning three straight Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) championships between 1999 and 2001. They were smart, posting an average 3.4 cumulative GPA over their last 20 years of existence with a graduation rate of 95 percent. And they were active in the community, hosting camps and busing in students from elementary schools across Amherst to their facilities for performances.

It wasn't enough.



The men's gymnastics team was eliminated last spring, wiped away by budget cuts that erased six other sports at UMass with it. The administration, led by then-Athletic Director Bob Marcum, said the seven sports needed to be cut to save the University about $1 million per year.

"I just felt like they took my life away," says senior Darren Morace, a former gymnast. "I did it for 18 years and I wasn't ready for it to end."

The cuts were announced on March 11, 2002 – two weeks before the conference championships. Facing the emotional stress of it potentially being the last competition they would ever be in, the Minutemen finished second to Temple University, missing out on their bid for a fourth straight title.

"It was more or less me trying to finish out my career as best I could so that I could walk away from the sport happy," says Patrick McFarlin, a star on last year's squad.

Then things got interesting.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Coach Roy Johnson

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The 2001-02 men's gymnastics team poses with the trophy it earned at the 2001 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference championships.

RUNNING ON HOPE

Former men's gymnastics coach Roy Johnson admits it wasn't a promise. But according to Johnson, early on the morning of March 11 before the cuts to the athletic department were announced, UMass President William Bulger said through a "good contact" that the elimination of their squad was not necessarily the end of the road.

"He told our contact that if we could raise half of the money for our own budget, that we would be reinstated," Johnson said. "On that quote, we went to town."

Johnson says that Bulger told the contact that because it was the "eleventh hour," he had to go through with the announcements eliminating the team.

As soon as the budget cut announcement was made, Johnson announced the formation of a gymnastics foundation. Its goal? Raise the $150,000 to meet the goal Bulger had set for them and make a formal proposal to the then yet-to-be-named UMass-Amherst chancellor for the 2002-03 school year.

The foundation put in long hours, doing "all those grassroots things you do to try and get support on the state level," Johnson says. With $150,000 in money promised to them through fundraising efforts, the foundation made a proposal to new Chancellor John V. Lombardi on July 9.

For the second time in a year, the men's gymnastics team was denied the chance to compete another season. Lombardi told the committee that to reinstate the program, it would need to find a $10 million endowment or something like it in nature.

This frustrates Johnson.

"That's more than the athletic department raised for 29 sports over a 100-year history," he said.

EXPLAINING REJECTION

Chancellor Lombardi joined the UMass campus in July with numerous budget cut decisions to make and UMass hurting for money everywhere. While he sees the cutting of seven sports as unfortunate, he also approached the decision grounded in grim reality.

"For any sport to succeed at a university, it must have a stable financial base," he said. "A stable financial base means that there is enough money available to pay for the costs of the sports: athletic scholarships, coaching salaries, travel and other expenses and facility expenses."

Lombardi says that the most important consideration has to be financing the team because even with solid financial support, it is still very difficult to have a competitive team.

"The purpose of an intercollegiate sports team is to be competitive," Lombardi said.

Johnson despises that school of thinking and the gradual philosophical changes to UMass athletics that have come from it.

"I subscribed to Dick Garber's coaching philosophy," Johnson said, referring to the late UMass coach who until recently was the all-time winningest coach in college lacrosse history. "Winning wasn't a goal then. Winning is the result of doing all the right things before you get to play the game."

He says that Marcum is in large part responsible for the elimination of gymnastics and the other cut sports because of the money he spent trying to upgrade other more glamorous and potentially lucrative sports, such as football.

"When I look at revenue to expenses," Johnson said. "I think Bob Marcum spent a lot of money that [the University] didn't have, and that led to the $1 million deficit. Those sports didn't cause it. I don't look back and have any regrets, but I feel bad for the athletes."

Continued on page 3

JASEN W. DANIELS/COLLEGIAN

Chancellor John V. Lombardi

U.S. raids home of Iraqi biologist

By DAVID CRARY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Special Forces Wednesday raided the Baghdad home of a microbiologist nicknamed "Dr. Germ" who ran Iraq's secret biological laboratory.

In the northern city of Mosul, tensions were high after anti-American unrest in which, according to U.S. Central Command, seven people were killed by U.S. troops.

In Washington, the Bush administration lowered the national terror alert level to "yellow" Wednesday for the first time since March 17, days before the war began.

The special force raid in Baghdad, backed by about 40 Marines with machine guns, was carried out at the home of Rihab Taha, who was in charge of a laboratory that weaponized anthrax. Troops brought out boxes of documents and three men with their hands up.

Taha is the wife of Gen. Amer Mohammed Rashid, Iraq's former oil minister. Her whereabouts weren't immediately known.

The incident in Mosul, which occurred Tuesday, was one of the worst involving U.S. troops and Iraqi civilians since Saddam Hussein's regime was toppled.

Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks of the U.S. Central Command, at a briefing Wednesday, said American troops were trying to secure a government building when a crowd of townspeople began throwing rocks at them, hitting them with fists, spitting at them and setting cars afire. He said some of the Americans fired back after shots were fired at them and some members of the crowd began trying to climb over a wall into the government compound.

"Fire was, indeed, delivered from coalition forces. It was lethal fire, and some Iraqis were killed ... on the order of seven," Brooks said. "The attacking was occurring from two sides and there was clear observation of men with weapons involved in firing on the building."

Another shooting occurred in Mosul on Wednesday; hospital officials said three people were killed and 11 wounded. Some of those wounded accused American troops of firing at them from rooftops, but a Marine sergeant denied that and said Americans on one roof were only returning gunfire from another building.

The overall commander of the war, Gen. Tommy Franks visited Baghdad on Wednesday, his first trip to the capital since combat.

The decision in Washington to lower the United States' terrorism alert – from "orange," or high risk, to the lower level "yellow," or elevated risk – was based on the end of major fighting in Iraq and reviews of intelligence, the Department of Homeland Security said.

On the outskirts of Baghdad, a Marine unit found a terrorist training camp where bomb-making apparently was taught. A Marine spokesman, Cpl. John Hoellwarth, said the camp consisted of about 20 permanent buildings and had been operated jointly by the Iraqi regime and the Palestine Liberation Front.

Among the documents found were forms that included such questions as

HAMAD AL-HATEM/ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. soldiers stand guard in the center of Mosul, Iraq, yesterday.

"What type of missions would you like to carry out?" according to Hoellwarth. He said many recruits replied that they wanted to carry out suicide missions.

The camp included an obstacle course and what appeared to be a prison, to teach terrorists what to do if captured and interrogated, Hoellwarth said. Recruits were also apparently taught how to make bombs, he said; the Marines found chemicals, beakers and pipes.

Despite the start of joint U.S.-Iraqi police patrols in Baghdad, throngs of looters ransacked sacks of sugar, tea, flour and other food supplies Wednesday from warehouses at the International Fairgrounds. Booty was piled into a red double decker bus, or stuffed into cars which soon became tangled in a traffic jam.

A U.S. armored personnel carrier was less than a mile away, but the soldiers did not intervene.

The looting came a day after small numbers of Iraqi policemen resumed law enforcement duties, and made their first arrest, in an American-backed effort to curtail the looting and lawlessness that has plagued Baghdad since Saddam Hussein's regime collapsed.

A Marine patrol passing the Iraqi National Bank caught armed robbers Tuesday and recovered $3.6 million in U.S. currency.

Other Marine patrols conducted raids to secure key infrastructure sites. U.S. forces are trying to provide security for hospitals and establish a cellphone service for emergency services to use while the regular telephone system is repaired.

In western Iraq, an U.S. Army cavalry unit accepted the surrender of the 12th Iraqi Brigade, seizing 40 tanks and close to 1,000 weapons, said Marine Maj. Stewart Upton, a U.S. Central Command spokesman. He said the number of prisoners taken had not yet been calculated.

Although major combat in Iraq is over, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Richard Myers, said he remains worried that Iraqi chemical or biological weapons could fall into the hands of terrorists.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 12
COMICS PAGE 11
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

EXORCISING ALLAH
BUSH ADMINISTRATION PUTS PREACHERS IN IRAQ
PAGE 4

FOOD FLAVOR
THE SLOW FOOD MOVEMENT REVEALED
PAGE 5

MINUTEMEN WIN
MEN'S LACROSSE BEATS HARVARD
PAGE 12

Call for quorum ends SGA meeting

By COURTNEY CHARLES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Minutes before voting on a motion submitted by Commuter Senator Matthew Progen, a senator called for a quorum, in effect ending the meeting of the Student Government Association shortly after 10:30 p.m. last night.

The motion proposed by Progen read, "the applications for the candidates that the SGA president submits to the senate for affirmation be made available to the senators one week before the scheduled meeting at which the applicant will come before the senate body."

"If we are mandated to affirm this candidate, then we should affirm them in an educated manner," Progen said.

He said that 10 to 15 minutes of questions posed to the candidate before the body of the senate is not enough time to "examine the capabilities of a cabinet member."

Progen said that this motion is one that needs to be addressed by discussing the role of the Senate body at large in considering this issue.

"Most senators are not aware of what the executive branch has done out of bounds, or are too new to the SGA that they do not have the institutional memory of past administrations that have abused and walked all over the Senate's powers," Progen said.

The total body of the SGA is 76 members. Quorum is a minimum of 39 members that must remain in order for voting to continue.

"It really upsets me that people leave," Progen said. "There's a hardcore group in there that stayed until past 10:30. It's the few who don't stay that ruin it for the rest of us."

Before quorum was called, the SGA passed nine motions.

A hand count was needed for the motion of the "Computer Take Back Campaign." The motion proposed that the University include in all future information technology equipment contracts clauses requiring Dell and other computer and electronics equipment vendors to take back used equipment at the end of its useful life or at the end of the contract. It also proposed establishing time frames for the vendor to offer equipment for sale that does not contain toxic materials such as mercury and cadmium.

The motion was sponsored by Senators Ana Carrillo and Gladys Franco.

"This will save us money and it will help the environment," Carrillo said.

Other senators expressed concerns over the motion.

"They're not going to provide this service for free," Senator Philip Brady said. "I honestly don't see how they could."

Despite the reservations of some senators, the motion passed by a hand count of 24 in favor to 13 opposed.

A resolution proposing that information regarding the functionality of digital video cameras in housing areas also passed. It stated that cameras paid for by student fees should be publicized by the Director of Housing and that a report should be given to the Public Safety Select Committee. The sponsors of the motion were Senators Laura LaPlume and Tracy Kirschen.

According to Kirschen, Michael Plume, the Director of Housing, "couldn't tell where all the digital cameras are.

"Students should be aware that surveillance cameras are there watching them," Kirschen said.

The three other motions that passed included a motion to include a representative of the Faculty Senate in the Senate agenda, a motion to "restore the integrity of the men's track program" and a motion to place bike racks in the proximity of all Dining Commons.

"You see bikes locked to railings on stairs and trees," said Senator Olaf Aprans, a sponsor of the motion. He said that he thought that Franklin was the only dining hall with a bike rack.

Secretary of University Policy Brian Long announced that the trustees vote next week on shortening the time to appeal tickets from Parking Services from 21 to 14 days.

Other announcements included that the budget will be presented on April 30. The vote was scheduled for May 7.

DANIEL J. SOUTHERN/COLLEGIAN

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Joanne Vanin engages the SGA in a question and answer session last night.

Planning ahead

Resident Assistants Anna Cerilli and Mark Zammuto help students from the Thatcher Lewis Johnson Cluster select their rooms for the Fall 2003 semester last night.

Iraqis meet with Americans to set up new government

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press

Iraqis met under American auspices to shape a new government Tuesday and said "the rule of law must be paramount" following Saddam Hussein's fall. In a war dividend, U.S. officials said they had taken Palestinian terrorist Abul Abbas into custody in Baghdad.

Four weeks after U.S.-led forces unleashed their assault, President Bush promised to "liberate every corner" of Iraq and American troops hastened to redeem his pledge. Marines solidified their grip on Tikrit, Saddam's hometown, and American officials said fighting had ended in Qaim, a town near the Syrian border.

Acting on a tip, commandos searching a home in Baghdad found a weapons cache with a sizable chemical laboratory and documents they said were instructions on making chemical and biological weapons. They also reported finding a bomb concealed inside a bottle, another in an umbrella and a third in a telephone.

The U.S.-organized meeting on a new government drew scores of Iraqis to a gold-colored tent erected in Ur – birthplace of the biblical patriarch Abraham – and to an anti-American protest in a nearby city.

"No to America and no to Saddam," chanted thousands of Shiite protesters in Nasiriyah, exercising their new freedom of speech to object to the imminent creation of an American interim governing authority.

Inside the meeting, White House envoy Zalmay Khalilzad said the United States has "no interest, absolutely no interest, in ruling Iraq."

He added, "We want you to establish your own democratic system based on Iraqi traditions and values."

A 13-point statement released after the session envisioned a democratic country where "the rule of law is paramount." It said Saddam's "Baath party must be dissolved and its effects on society must be eliminated."

It wasn't immediately clear whether the paper was drafted by U.S. officials in advance of the meeting.

Abbas, the leader of a Palestinian group that killed an American on the hijacked cruise liner Achille Lauro in 1985, was captured by U.S. commandos on Monday, U.S. officials disclosed.

A number of his associates also were detained during raids at several sites around Baghdad, these officials said on condition of anonymity.

Abbas, whose name actually is Mohammed Abbas, led a faction of the Palestine Liberation Front, a Palestinian splinter group. His faction was in Tunisia until the attack on the Achille Lauro, after which it relocated to Iraq. Leon Klinghoffer, an elderly American, was shot and tossed overboard in his wheelchair during the hijacking.

JEAN-MARC BOUJU/ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPC Richard Heglund, of Bravo Company, 3rd Battalion, 187th Regiment of the 101st Airborne Division, writes "USA" on the hands of a crowd of Iraqi children in Baghdad yesterday.

There was no major combat during the day, but at least 10 Iraqis were reported killed and 16 injured in a clash between U.S. Marines and a stone-throwing crowd in Mosul in northern Iraq. The New York Times reported. Lt. Cmdr. Charles Owens, a spokesman at U.S. Central Command in the Persian Gulf, denied reports that U.S. troops shot into the crowd but said he didn't have other details about the incident.

Central Command reported an unidentified Marine was shot to death in Baghdad by a member of his unit who mistook him for an Iraqi soldier. Another Marine, Cpl. Ariel Gonzalez, 25, of Hileah, Fla., was killed Monday when a commercial refueling vehicle collapsed on him in southern Iraq, the Pentagon said.

While anti-American sentiment flared in Iraq, U.S. forces also won cooperation from civilians eager to restore order and vital services.

Some Marines in Tikrit wore flowers in their uniforms, gifts from residents of the city.

Joint Iraqi-U.S. patrols made their first forays into Baghdad. American commanders reported ample assistance from Iraqis eager to help troops uncover regime secrets.

"We're getting millions of these tips, some credible, some not so credible," said Lt. Col. Philip DeCamp. The United States was offering incentives, too. Defense officials said the Pentagon would pay up to $200,000 for information on the whereabouts of regime leaders.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1991. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 9 AM and 5:30 pm.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Like it Cheap & Easy?

Spending $100 at Retail gets you...

Grand Theft Auto: Vice City (PS2) $49.99

Caddyshack DVD $19.95

King of Torts by John Grisham $27.95

Spending $100 at Half.com gets you MORE!

Grand Theft Auto: Vice City (PS2) $24.99

Tom Clancy's Ghost Recon (Xbox) $29.99

Prey by Michael Crichton $1.89

Jackass DVD $12.58

Pearl Jam: Ten $2.20

Caddyshack DVD $10.88

Coldplay: A Rush of Blood... $8.29

The Jester by James Patterson $7.85

$5 off $20 purchase*
Enter promo code "UMASS1" in your shopping cart
Coupon Expires 5/25/03

half.com™ by ebay

Copyright 2003 Half.com, Inc. Half.com and the Half.com logo are service marks of Half.com, Inc. All other trademarks and service marks are the property of their respective owners. All prices are as of 4/9/03 and are subject to change. Quantities, prices and availability are not guaranteed and will vary due to supply and demand. *First-time buyers only. Limited time offer; excludes shipping and handling; offer subject to change or termination without prior notice.

A team reflects on the end of its sport

Continued from page 1

Marcum could not be reached for comment.

Johnson says that he has spoken with Ian McCaw, the new athletic director hired by Lombardi, and that McCaw told him that Lombardi believes there has been too much "consternation" to restore the program.

Lombardi says that it is unfortunate the program has been cut, but that if the financial base isn't there, the sport cannot exist. He does little to refute the idea that there is too much consternation to support men's gymnastics rising from the ashes. Without adequate financial support, he believes the University cannot recruit students, pay for coaches, pay the expenses of the program or otherwise fulfill its responsibilities to the student athlete.

"Under such circumstances, we would indeed see much consternation," Lombardi said.

He said in August that the program didn't need an endowment to survive budget cuts, but that he wanted to make it clear that gymnastics could not be supported on "$1.95 and bake sales." He stands by that.

"The funding of an athletic program is no ad-hoc matter," he said.

GIVING IT ALL THEY HAD

In retrospect, there were warning signs that regardless of whatever money the foundation could rally together, men's gymnastics would never exist again.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Darren Morace believes the support the program had in the area would have sustained men's gymnastics.

For one thing, campus leadership on the issue at the time, which included Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams and the soon-to-retire Marcum, showed no support for the foundation and what it was trying to do.

Johnson acknowledges that. He says they ignored campus leadership and went ahead with their fundraising plans because they didn't see Marcum and Williams as strong leaders involved with the decision.

"We didn't feel the administration on campus was running things," he said, referring back to Bulger's office.

The decision to reinstate gymnastics, though, is a campus decision, according to John Hoey, a spokesperson for Bulger's office. Hoey denies that Bulger ever made a promise to men's gymnastics.

"We never made such a commitment," he said.

Johnson said that he doesn't understand what got lost in the process.

"I guess my question is, what happened?" he said. "One-hundred fifty thousand dollars was a lot of time to chase a wild goose."

ACCEPTING IT

The money raised has all been returned to the donors now, and the $500,000 gymnastics facility in Boyden with the homemade landing pit has been eliminated. Team members have moved on to other things, but accepting the decision made has been difficult for many of them. Some are still involved with gymnastics in other places. Others never will be again.

Morace isn't sure what else could have been done to keep the program, but he believes the support they have in the area would have sustained the team financially. He was an active part of the foundation's fundraising.

"We did come up with a lot of money," he said.

He spends his days now coaching the sport at a YMCA in Greenfield and awaiting his graduation. He has also secured a full-time job as the boy's head coach and program director of a gymnastics program in a club gym in Portsmouth, N.H.

McFarlin, a junior today, has taken his tumbling skills to another arena – joining the UMass co-ed cheerleading squad.

"It gave me something to do," he said. "It was a sport I could pick up pretty well that kept me in contact with gymnastics. I still get to tumble and fool around a little bit here and there."

McFarlin was an active part of the fundraising push, attending rallies and making a visit to the chancellor's office. He understands the decision wasn't easy.

"I think with all the things going on, it was a tough decision to make," he said. "I would have liked to see it go the other way, of course, but I'm not sure that was in the cards."

McFarlin will stay at UMass, but says he would definitely have chosen another school with a gymnastics program had he known UMass' would be eliminated. He said that after this year is over, the full scholarship he was granted to compete for the team will be eliminated.

Johnson has moved into a completely new arena, selling houses for Jones Town and Country Realty Services, located on nearby Triangle Street in Amherst.

He says that he's happy with his new life. While he had no plans to leave UMass gymnastics, he says he was unwilling to start over coaching a new program at this point in his life.

"I always felt a gymnastics coach needed to be young and have a lot of energy," he said. "It was time for me to try something new. I was ready for something else."

Johnson's eyes light up when he mentions the additional time that he now has to spend with his three sons, ages 15, 13 and 8, respectively. The former gymnastics coach spent the winter coaching the middle son, Chris, and his Suburban League basketball team.

He says the last thing he wants to do is make everything that has happened sound like sour grapes.

"The transition for me was awesome," Johnson said, upbeat. "Change is invigorating."

Then he reflects.

"It was a great ride – I just feel bad for the kids."

Roberto Weil, a cartoonist in Venezuela and men's gymnast at UMass from 1984 to 1988, penned this cartoon and sent it to coach Roy Johnson in support of the UMass men's gymnastics program.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Patrick McFarlin will lose his scholarship to attend UMass at the end of the year now that men's gymnastics is gone.

Presidential candidates searching for money

By SHARON THEIMER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – Several Democratic presidential hopefuls scouring the country for campaign cash have found it in familiar places: John Edwards collected more than half his money from fellow attorneys, while John Kerry, Dick Gephardt and Joe Lieberman found windfalls in their home states.

Roughly $4 million of the $7.4 million Edwards raised from January through March came from attorneys, according to a campaign finance report he filed Tuesday with the Federal Election Commission. Edwards was a trial lawyer before North Carolina elected him to the Senate in 1998, a connection Republicans have tried to turn into a campaign issue.

Edwards spokeswoman Jennifer Palmieri noted that Edwards also collected millions of dollars in the South, including at least $924,825 from North Carolina donors and $158,800 from early-primary state South Carolina, the most of any Democratic hopeful. He drew around $300,000 each from Alabama and Florida in the first quarter.

"We think what people look for in an Edwards candidacy is evidence that as a general-election candidate he would do well in the South, and this is evidence of a good initial base of support in the Southern states," Palmieri said.

Several hopefuls looked to their home states for a big share of their early money.

In all, Kerry raised $7 million in the first quarter, with more than half coming from three states. His home state of Massachusetts yielded about $1.65 million, while Californians contributed about $1.5 million and New Yorkers at least $897,484.

Kerry campaign spokesman Robert Gibbs said that while much of Kerry's money came from traditional Democratic strongholds, his financial base is broader than that.

"We're pleased to have received contributions from every state in the country and we intend to continue to further develop the deep network we've started," he said.

Kerry will decide by fall whether to accept public financing for his primary campaign, Gibbs said. Most others in the nine-way Democratic race, including Edwards and Gephardt, have said they will accept public funding and the spending limits that come with it.

Kerry led the field in early cash on hand, reporting about $8 million in the bank. Edwards had $5.7 million, Gephardt $4.9 million, Howard Dean $2 million, Lieberman nearly $1.8 million and Sen. Bob Graham $1.1 million.

Gephardt raised $3.5 million in the first quarter, with at least $900,000 coming from his home state. In addition, he transferred $2.4 million from his St. Louis-based congressional campaign, lifting his total receipts to about $6 million.

Lieberman raised about $3 million in the first three months of the year, including $636,810 in Connecticut, his home state. New York was the second biggest source of money for the 2000 vice presidential candidate, with donors there contributing $563,710, followed by Californians, who gave at least $363,300.

Graham drew more than $982,000 of his $1.1 million from his home state of Florida.

CASH FOR BOOKS
BRING 'EM IN OR CALL US
Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 S. Prospect St. Amherst 253-3870, 256-7816

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995

New WORLD Theater
presents Full Circle Productions in
Soular Power'd
$5 for students (with valid I.D.)
An extraordinary blend of Hip-Hop and Theater, featuring DJ's, poets, percussionsts, singers, graffiti artists, the infectious flourish of Latin rhythms, beatboxing and energy-driven African and urban Hip-Hop dance styles, that the New York Times describes as "...so daringly acrobatic it's hard to imagine it really happened!"
Tickets: $15-general public; $8-low income/senior; $5-students. Call FAC Box Office 413.545.2511
Thur. & Fri. April 24 & 25
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium

Rent One of Ours
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Cargo Vans
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
549-RENT (7368)
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass Amherst

PETER PAN BUS TICKETS
COPIES & FAXES
UPS PACKAGE SHIPPING
$2.00 OFF ANY ROUND TRIP BUS TICKET PURCHASED IN APRIL WITH THIS AD
COPY CENTER
on campus in101 Herter Hall

comedy CONNECTION
Host of BET's "Comic View" & played 'Santa Clause' in the movie "Friday After Next"
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive, Chicopee
1st Time Appearance!
THIS SATURDAY AT 8PM!
RICKEY SMILEY
APRIL 26TH 7PM From NBC's "Saturday Night Live"
DEAN EDWARDS
APRIL 26TH 10:30PM Comedy Central's "Crank Yankers"
DANE COOK

Interested in Business?
The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the 2003/2004 school year. Great resume builder!
Current Freshmen/Sophomores strongly encouraged to apply
Call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center.
Need to possess strong business and communication skills

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Busch Light 24 bottles $9.99 + dep
Killians 12 Pack $9.99 + dep.
Monday Saturday 9am 11pm
333 Russell St., Rt. 9 584-8174

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Collective effort is needed to ensure the well being of our country

Another day and another flux in our nation's terror alert; lowered to "yellow" yesterday in a move that suggests, on behalf of the United States government at least, that the threat of terror related to United States military action in Iraq has lessened.

The level had previously been raised to orange on March 17, before the primary Iraqi strikes began, indicating a "high" level of anticipation heading into combat. Back at yellow now, U.S. intelligence is once again reporting that few legitimate threats have surfaced on its radar.

And once again, it's communicating such information via a five-tier color-coded system that is virtually useless to its target demographic: that being quite simply, every citizen of the United States.

It has been written here, and certainly elsewhere before. While the U.S. enforces its ideals and employs both strategic and hurried military tactics in Iraq, we're left to color in the lines and determine largely through guesswork what our primary choices mean. Colors come and go, but without the aid of additional information, interpretation remains at a standstill.

In a laughable move aimed at satiating such curiosity, the government went online with www.ready.gov, which advises us, "Don't be afraid. Be ready." Readiness includes, in part, checklists, proper supplies and detailed plans for exiting moving vehicles and high-rise buildings.

Coupled with the schemes put forth by the Department of Homeland Security, there is still a remarkable lack of information on why such cautions change.

The downgrade implies a strong confidence and assured method of information gathering on behalf of the U.S.; both qualities we've seen fall under strong question before. It implies that, because we've supposedly "won" the war, our guard can be let down. It implies that, as the government shuffles its deck, it's again ignoring its citizens and the genuine concerns they are trying to voice.

If nothing else, the voice of anti-war protestors across the world suggested that there was indeed a large, like-minded community willing to both speak out modestly and act out radically. Those interests, re-worked, should further be placed toward the sustained well being of our domestic and foreign interests. The safety of everyone, though it may seem idealistic, for always should be a preventative measure rather than a rash, reactionary decision.

That commitment by both sides – citizens and the government – is a vital piece to how the near future will evolve. It's an old story with a modified face, one that needs its criticism now, rather than later, and quite likely, too late.

Information from The Boston Globe was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Disillusioned by produce

Paige Cram

When we are young, we learn certain indisputable facts that we live as the foundation for the rest of our knowledge that we gain during our adult lives. The Earth is round; two plus two is four, and what goes up will inevitably come down. We learn to count on these first few tidbits of information to give us our sense of reality. What happens when one of these absolute truths is suddenly proved to be not so absolute is total disillusionment, a feeling which I unfortunately have come to know in the past few days.

It started out as a simple enough task: to settle the controversy over the classification of an olive. It seemed that no matter who I talked to, no one could state with confidence, whether the olive was a fruit or a vegetable. While a few people considered it to be in the fruit family, the majority felt that it more likely belonged with the vegetables. Still others felt that it didn't quite fit into either category and in fact should be considered under "other." So I began to research and what I found was shocking to say the least.

The olive is, in fact, a fruit, but that is now a moot point because in researching, I discovered a number of things which were much more surprising. Accompanying the olive in the fruit category are its relatives the tomato, the cucumber, the squash and the pepper. All that wasn't news enough, acorns, chestnuts, and all grains (yes, that's right, grains) are also considered to be fruit. In addition to that, peanuts are not classified with other nuts, and peas are not classified with other vegetables. These foods fall into a separate category known as legumes.

All of this information was entirely too much for me at first. I suddenly felt as if my whole life had been a lie. If peppers and grains are not what I thought they were, then there was no limit to the number of inaccurate facts I could have been fed and naively accepted as truth. Perhaps there are not eight other planets in the galaxy, and perhaps dinosaurs still exist somewhere. How was I to know what was real anymore? So, to give myself a new sense of validation, to justify the lies I had been told, I read further.

I went to the one friend who had not yet shattered my trust, Webster, and he had this to say: a fruit is "any plant product, as grain or vegetable, an edible plant structure containing seeds inside a juicy pulp; many true fruits that are not sweet, such as tomatoes, are popularly called vegetables." In fact, some listed synonyms for fruit are grain, nut and root, with a footnote to "see also vegetable." So it seems that anything containing or consisting of seeds, whether it's commonly known or not, is a fruit.

> "The one other issue that was still nagging at my mind was this business about legumes. I could not rest until the matter was settled."

However, there is a redeeming point for those who helped in spreading the vicious lies about these produce products: it seems that the classification of fruits and veggies is also determined by custom, culture and usage. So, it's not entirely a lie that things like tomatoes, peppers and squash are vegetables because since they are used as such in our society, a sort of adoption takes place. Biologically, these items belong with the fruit, but socially they are accepted among the vegetables.

The one other issue that was still nagging at my mind was this business about legumes. I could not rest until the matter was settled. So, once again, I consulted my friend Webster. According to him, legumes are defined as "any of an order of plants having seeds growing in pods." That seemed simple enough, and it became very clear to me why peas, beans and peanuts fall under this classification.

Having gained what I considered to be a respectable amount of information, I sat back to digest it all. The feeling of disillusionment was still there, but I no longer blamed those who had taught me incorrectly. I realized that the correct information had been out there for the finding, and it had simply been a matter of my own failure to discover it. I felt satisfied with the conclusions I had reached, now finally understanding the distinctions between the produce categories. In fact, I felt even more satisfied than if I had simply found a single, definite answer to my question. I had set out to clear up a minor controversy, and ended up redefining my sense of self. This time, it was based not on what others told me the truth was, but on what I knew to be real facts. I take it back, this discovery had not left a feeling of disillusionment but one of enlightenment instead.

Paige Cram is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

(413) 545-1699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

Movie to create a better tomorrow

Jamie Loo

This weekend a very controversial movie will be opening in Boston. This film was featured at the Toronto International film festival and stirred a tide of controversy at the Sundance Film Festival last year. It was recently picked up by MTV Films, and is the first movie to be released under this new label. The movie is about four middle-upper class teenagers who form a suburban gang. They live a fast-paced life filled with sex, drugs and crime until the movie reaches a surprising end.

Sounds harmless, right? Why would people at the Sundance Film Festival get all riled up about a seemingly cookie-cutter film about teenagers and gang life?

Oh wait, I forgot to tell you, they're Asian teenagers.

Should that make a difference? Apparently it does. People at the film festival were horrified that the movie "Better Luck Tomorrow" showed suburban Asian-American teenagers committing crimes and living very un-stereotypical lives. One critic at the festival asked director Justin Lin, "How could you make a movie that was so denigrating to your race?" Strangely, Robert Ebert, who hated the movie Bamboozled, a social commentary on the portrayal of African-Americans, defended Lin. According to reports, Ebert stood on a chair and screamed, "You wouldn't say that to a white filmmaker!"

Ebert is absolutely right.

It's the endless paradox that has been created by society on Asian America. When one Asian-American does something, somehow it's representative of us all (I can say "us" because if you haven't noticed from that awful photo on the top left corner, I'm of the Asian persuasion).

John Cho, who plays Steve in the film and has been in movies such as American Pie, Evolution and American Beauty, said the movie isn't really an "Asian-American movie;" it just presents characters that happen to be Asian. Cho definitely realizes the impact the movie could potentially have.

In an interview with MTV he said, "It's threatening to some people because they want a particular image... You see on TV, it's all positive model minority cut-out [type characters] – it's just a function in a scene. What this movie does is give you protagonists that are very deeply flawed. And I think in order for Asian-American cinema to progress, we need to have characters who are deeply flawed."

> "According to reports, Ebert stood on a chair and screamed, 'You wouldn't say that to a white filmaker.'"

My parents and their friends would probably be appalled by this film. My friends and I expect it to be a welcome addition to our weekend. This movie is exactly what many in the Asian-American community have been waiting for. This isn't just a movie; it's something that could change the way Asian-Americans are perceived, in a way never seen before. As regular people.

Just the creation of Better Luck Tomorrow is a culmination of many different issues such as stereotypes and media representation that Asian-Americans are discussing on college campuses all across the country. Asian-American student groups are beginning to branch out from traditional social activities to become more politicized. It's this type of discussion around identity politics and ideas on assimilation that led to the creation of ethnic studies such as African-American and Latin-American studies. Institutions of higher education are just starting to recognize that Asian-Americans also need an outlet to explore these issues, because we are a distinct culture in the U.S.

Sadly, UMass has been slow to recognize this. While there is currently an Asian-American studies certificate program, it seems the university is reluctant to turn it into an actual department. Ethnic studies such as African-American studies were created out of different social conditions of the time, and Asian-Americans in Massachusetts and in the country have reached this point. There is a buried history of Asians and their role in this country, as well as the modern day concerns of the Asian-American community. Scholars are currently clamoring to do research on the Asian-American experience while we are at this unique point in history. It's an emerging academic field, and if UMass wants to keep up with the times, it should seriously consider expanding the program beyond what it is.

Movies and the media definitely have an impact on the way we view the world, and Better Luck Tomorrow should be the beginning of more realistic portrayals of Asian-Americans. Director Justin Lin might be the Spike Lee that Asian-Americans have been waiting for. Hopefully, there will be less mindless kung fu movies, nerdy Asians in small roles and less walking stereotypes in future films because of this. So, when Better Luck Tomorrow rolls into your local theater, take the time to open your eyes and your mind. I'm sure you won't regret it.

Jamie Loo is a Collegian Columnist.

Exorcising the Allah within

Mark Ostroff

"To everyone who conquers and continues to do my works to the end, I will give authority over nation to rule them with an iron rod," – 1 Revelation 3:26

As Iraqis take to the streets in "celebration" (that's Bushian for "running, screaming and looting") and another CIA-borne thug skips town, the Bush administration prepares the disheveled nation for the wrap-up of its glorious fiasco, Operation Iraqi Freedom: Too Hot for TV.

Among the seedy packs of fraudsters and corporate hustlers who now have a stake in the birthplace of civilization, Iraq's dream team will now include some unexpected guests – ministers Franklin Graham and Jerry Vines.

The two ministers, along with their respective "humanitarian" missions, will take it upon themselves to christen what the Bush administration has now called "Little America." And as President Bush already knows, you couldn't ask for anyone better to help Iraqis conceive of deserving even more hellfire and damnation for their heathen Islamic ways.

Although seemingly humanitarian in purpose, Vines' Southern Baptist Convention and Graham's "Samaritan's Purse" are poised to enter Iraq, after celebrations of liberation (?) have subsided, and divvy up the large Muslim population for an all out Pax Christiana.

The purpose: to replace what Graham calls an "evil and wicked religion," with the benign faith of Christianity – religion that could never in its history be associated with terror or death...right?

Anyway, let's take a look at the religiously tolerant gentlemen who are behind this sudden burst of American compassion, shall we?

> "The 'dissemination of American values' would never be complete without striking the fear of Jehovah in a backward population, now would it?"

First, we have the Reverend Jerry Vines. Last year Vines, a former president of the Southern Baptist denomination, ran his mouth in front of thousands of delegates, proclaiming, "Allah is not Jehovah. Jehovah's not going to turn you into a terrorist."

Yes, folks, this is a guy we can certainly trust for solely "humanitarian" purposes in a country with a 98 percent Muslim population.

The bigger player in all of this, however, is the Reverend Billy Graham Jr. He is a personal friend to President Bush and is son to the Reverend Billy Graham. The President even invited the Evangelical leader to lead the nation in prayer at his inauguration. On top of that, he claims that Graham was the inspiration that led him to quit drinking (even though it took another three years for that "inspiration" to finally kick in).

Aside from ostensibly "inspiring" Iraq's dream team will now include some unexpected guests – ministers Franklin Graham and Jerry Vines.

many of Bush's pre-campaign "Jews go to Hell" comments (not to be confused with Bush's 1988 backstage "pussy" indiscretion), Graham has claimed that "The God of Islam is not the God of the Christian faith," and that Christianity and Islam differ as "lightness and darkness." It also goes without saying that Bush and Graham share the same religious denomination (although Bush's seet allows for much saltier language behind closed doors).

For both Graham and Vines, there is certainly a much broader purpose to this than just being a bunch of nice guys.

Perhaps they're being just a little too nice.

In carrying out their missions, they will be helping the White House carry out its creepy vision of an American "manifest destiny," proposed by the likes of Rumsfeld, Cheney and others. The "dissemination of American values" would never be complete without striking the fear of Jehovah in a backward population, now would it?

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian Columnist.

Student health care in jeopardy

Matthew Saradjian

The Supplemental Health Insurance Plan for more than 6,000 undergraduate and graduate students at UMass-Amherst is in great danger. Proposed cuts to this health insurance will hurt these students and their families.

By law in Massachusetts college students must have health insurance. Students have three choices: (1) join their parents' insurance if they are allowed; (2) buy their own (costing $3,000 or more); or (3) buy the UMass Supplemental Health Insurance Plan (SHIP) for $1,265 per year. Most international students and graduate students take the third option. The same law has regulations with minimum levels of coverage, usually meaning that the insurance company will pay 80 percent of the medical bill.

The SHIP currently provided by Chickering/Aetna pays for 100 percent of services in hospitals if the patient suffers an emergency, or if the patient first sees a generalist doctor and gets a referral to a specialist. However, the University is trying to save money by making students pay the 20 percent that the insurance company has always paid. While 20 percent may not sound like a lot, 20 percent of the cost of a Magnetic Resonance Image (MRI) – a common diagnostic test – would amount to $300 or more. Twenty-percent of the cost of knee surgery would be at least $1,000. Twenty percent of the cost of care for a serious injury (like medical help after a car accident or for an emergency health problem) can be $10,000 or more. Students cannot afford to pay so much money if they get sick. Instead, they will avoid getting care to save money, and the problem will grow worse.

Students require 100-percent coverage because the purpose of insurance is to protect student health. Anyone can be in a car accident. Anyone can have an appendix rupture, which would prove fatal without medical care. Anyone can slip and fall on the ice. Anyone can develop meningitis or cancer, and some of your fellow students or their spouses must handle this disease. The only thing more frightening than living with cancer would be knowing you are unable to afford the treatment that you or your spouse needs.

The lives of the sick will become miserable if the university proposal makes coverage drop from 100-percent to 80-percent reimbursement. Many will have to leave this public university, unable to rely on 80-percent coverage for cancer or other high-cost treatment. This exclusion of the sick and vulnerable from the UMass community disgraces the public nature of this institution. According to the bid for the next health insurer, which will be decided in a few weeks, "the fundamental mission of the University is to provide the highest possible quality of instruction, research and public service to the widest possible segment of the citizens of the Commonwealth." But if you fall sick or have a chronic condition, then tough luck.

> "The lives of the sick will become miserable if the university proposal makes coverage drop from 100-percent to 80-percent reimbursement."

While the cut from 100 percent to 80 percent is currently a proposal, the University demonstrated last summer it would harm student health in order to save money. Prior to August, the insurance company paid for the prescribed medication that a student needed. Beginning this year, the University changed that rule without notifying students, so that the insurance only paid for the first $1,000 in medication. Again, this amount may not sound so bad, but the price of medication in the U.S. is very expensive. About 200 students must pay from their own money because their pills cost more than $1,000. This cost for students is very difficult to pay. They must choose between spending thousands of dollars on medication or saving their money and becoming sicker. An increase in the SHIP premium of only $30 could have allowed these 200 students to get their needed prescriptions. This situation is not acceptable.

But students do not have to suffer and accept cuts to coverage. The SGA and GSS passed a joint resolution in March for a return to the benefit levels of '01-02 (with 100-percent coverage and no $1,000 limit on prescription medication), even if that means premium increases. Financial aid covers the health insurance premium, but it does not cover hospital or medication bills. Thirty dollars or 200 lives?

Please oppose the cuts to student health insurance. There are currently petitions circulating concerning this issue. Students should also call the decision makers such as University Health Services Director Bernette Melby and UMass Treasurer's Assistant Shane Conklin. Even though student representatives were arbitrarily and illegally kicked off the University Health Insurance Committee in February, we shall overcome. Ask them to commit to comprehensive coverage to save the SHIP.

Matthew Saradjian is a UMass graduate student of health care policy.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Actress Aisha Tyler mixes things up on 'Friends'

By LYNN ELBER
Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) – Aisha Tyler looks at a reporter's hand extended in greeting and declines to shake. Is the new addition to "Friends" unfriendly? No, just considerate.

"I have a cold," she says apologetically, clutching a tissue. It takes more than a minor bug to keep Tyler down, however. The actress and comedian is energetic, smart and, sniffles or not, a real stunner.

Tyler, who begins a four-week run on "Friends" starting Thursday, April 24 (8 p.m.), also happens to be among the very few nonwhite love interests – or faces, for that matter – to grace the popular NBC comedy.

Ross (David Schwimmer) and Joey (Matt LeBlanc)

Aisha Tyler

compete for the attentions of Tyler's character, a sexy paleontologist who shares Ross' passion for dinosaurs.

She's not the first nonwhite girlfriend on "Friends," Tyler points out – Asian-American actress Lauren Tom and Gabrielle Union, who's black, have appeared. But Tyler has a sustained role in a show that's been criticized for whitewashing multiethnic Manhattan.

"The role wasn't written particularly for an African-American. I think they were just trying to cast the right actress," Tyler said.

She nearly didn't survive hearing the good news from her manager, delivered by cell phone while Tyler was driving in Los Angeles traffic.

"I screeched over and practically killed three people. And I started banging on my car, and it was new, and I was thinking I probably shouldn't bang on my car," she said. "It was the biggest thing in the whole world."

Bigger even than her job as the host of E! Entertainment's "Talk Soup." In 2001, she became its first female host (following Greg Kinnear, John Henson and Hal Sparks).

The 11-year-old comedy show ended last year but helped make her a media darling: Esquire magazine deemed her one of the "Women We Love" and Maxim listed her among its "Hot 100." It also won her the devotion of fans, including high school and college boys who write such sweet nothings as "You're the funniest chick I've ever seen" and offer to buy her a beer.

When Tyler tried out for "Talk Soup," she thought the show would never hire a black woman.

"I was just going to go in and have a fun time," Tyler said.

Given a shot as guest host, she drew such an overwhelming response from viewers that she was hired full time. Witty and sexy – what's not to like? Others appreciated what she stood for as well.

"What's wonderful is there are people who would write in saying, 'It's so great to see a smart, offbeat black woman on TV...

The Slow Food Movement
Is it time to savor our food?

Jessica Pelletier
Collegian Staff

Do you ever get sick of running to work and classes with only enough time to choke down a chicken sandwich betwixt your agenda? Does the thought of a smiling, red-headed clown dishing out fast food burgers nauseate you? If the answer to either of these questions is yes, then you may be interested in a new movement that has been taking the country by storm.

The Slow Food Movement was founded by Carlo Petrini, originated as an Italian association in 1986 and grew into an international coalition with the addition of a headquarters in Paris in 1989. One of the most important reasons for why the movement originated was as a response to current American fast food trends. To date, there are 60,000 members of the movement in over 45 countries.

During the international opening of the Slow Food Movement, a manifesto was approved, part of which states, "let us rediscover the flavours and savours of regional cooking and banish the degrading effects of Fast Food. In the name of productivity, the Fast Life has changed our way of being and threatens our environment and our landscapes."

One of the most basic human functions includes the need for nourishment on a semi-regular basis. Culturally, consumption of food is a social event, which can strengthen family ties and reinforces the idea of connection on a more personal level. This becomes especially true, considering nearly every marriage ritual on the planet involves the sharing of some sort of food, whether it takes the form of a goblet of wine or a slice of cake.

But today's world of grab-and-go food has altered this concept on a drastic level, leaving

Continued on page 6

"Proponents of the Slow Food Movement have been called everything from leftist radicals to 60's throwbacks, but a new name may be developing for the activists ... committed realists."

Continued on page 7

Dar Williams carries the night at the Calvin

By CHRIS FLOUTON-BARNES
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Making yet another triumphant return to Northampton, Dar Williams treated an adoring crowd at the Calvin Theatre to a showcase of new material and back-catalog nuggets.

Battling the tail end of a cold, Williams gamely plowed her way through a set that highlighted most of the tracks from her latest Razor & Tie effort, "The Beauty of the Rain."

Standing next to a vernal bouquet of flowers, Williams opened with "Fishing in the Morning," and followed it up with "I Saw a Bird Fly Away." The latter lacked the harmonica and male vocal harmonies of John Popper, who appears on the studio version, as keyboardist Julie Wolf couldn't quite capture the harp melody that anchors the song.

Dar Williams
Calvin Theater
April 14

Always appreciated for her uniquely witty stories, Williams did not disappoint with a recollection of her days on a futon in Northampton that left the audience in stitches and provided an appropriate segue into "Farewell to the Old Me."

The driving beat of "Spring Street" marked her first foray away from "Beauty of the Rain," with longtime drummer Steve Holly contributing colorful cymbal work to this uplifting tune about reflection and rejuvenation. Williams continued this retrospect of her 2000 album, "The Green World," with the timely and relevant "And a God Descended."

Williams' new song of nurturance and love, "The One Who Knows," sorely missed the distinctive harmonies of Alison Krauss-studio appearance, but Wolf's accordion infused the piece with a dramatic poignancy.

A highlight of the night was a spellbinding version of "After All," one of Williams' most moving lyrical compositions. The band left her on stage for a solo performance of "You're Aging Well," where Williams' voice struggled throughout a breathy, almost wheezing rendering of this ballad.

"I Have Lost My Dreams" featured some nice slide work from axeman Ben Butler, who shined at times but largely failed to measure up to former guitarist Stewart Smith. This was a good, but not great, supporting lineup. Bassist Michael Visceglia was consistently unremarkable; Williams has hired better in the past.

Williams closed her set with "Mercy of the Fallen," with Holly and Wolf collaborating on a well-read introduction.

Williams was promptly summoned back for an encore, and gratified the crowd with perhaps her best-loved song, "Iowa." A clever bit about the Seven Sisters served as an interlude before the theatre joined her in full voice for a succession on choruses.

The crowd was on its feet and dancing for a raucous rendition of "As Cool as I Am," replete with an enthusiastic conga drum solo from percussionist Carol Steele.

Insistent applause pulled Williams back for a second encore, and she ended on a high note with a joyous reading of "Your Fire Your Soul."

Despite the challenges of a sore

Continued on page 7

'Malibu's Most Wanted' promotes the same old stereotypes among races
Jamie Kennedy's new flick in serious identity crisis

By CHRISTY LEMIRE
Associated Press

For a movie that preaches about being yourself, "Malibu's Most Wanted" has a serious identity crisis.

It's practically a big-screen version of a Tony Robbins self-empowerment book, tucked inside a parody of "8 Mile," then smothered in the same tired racial stereotypes that have provided the flimsy premise for a string of recent comedies, including "Bringing Down the House" and "Head of State."

(And considering how much money these movies have made at the box office, it looks like we'll be inundated with more of them.)

Jamie Kennedy stars as a white, Jewish, wannabe rapper named Brad Gluckman – and he's mildly funny at first, but his character is so one-note, he and his motto ("Don't be hatin'") quickly grow tiresome.

'Malibu's Most Wanted'
Directed by John Whitesell
Jamie Kennedy
Warner Bros.
Rated PG-13
85 mins

Kennedy developed the character from a sketch he does on his WB comedy series "JKX: The Jamie Kennedy Experiment." And like The Ladies Man, Pat, Mary Katherine Gallagher and a myriad of other "Saturday Night Live" characters who've gotten their own movies, he'd have been better off sticking to television.

Brad, or "B-Rad," as his crew calls him, because he considers Brad his "slave name, a'ight?" – dresses and talks like he's straight outta Compton, when he really lives in a beachfront mansion in Malibu.

His behavior becomes a liability to his father, Bill Gluckman (Ryan O'Neal), who's running for governor of California. So here's how Bill's campaign manager (played by Blair Underwood, who's black) proposes to fix the problem: He'll pay two actors, Sean and PJ (Taye Diggs and Anthony Anderson, who are also black), to pose as gangstas, carjack B-Rad's hydraulic Cadillac Escalade and drag him to the 'hood. This, in theory, will "scare the black out of him."

It's slightly funny at first when prissy PJ and juilliard-trained Sean try to act ghetto; they fight like jealous high school girls over who gets to wear the cornrows, and need an urban dictionary to figure out that "wack" means "weak, or of poor quality." But that joke loses its luster quickly, too.

B-Rad's kidnapping unfortunately serves as the movie's forced, feel-good turning point. He runs into several people who provide him with affirmation that if he truly believes he's down, and that his rhymes are

Continued on page 6

"Malibu's Most Wanted" is a parody of "8 Mile," with tired racial stereotypes providing the flimsy premise for another comedy.

Enron's art collections to go on auction block

HOUSTON (AP) – Contemporary art and photograph collections owned by Enron Corp. are going on the auction block to help pay the bankrupt company's creditors.

A U.S. bankruptcy judge Tuesday authorized Phillips de Pury & Luxembourg, an international art auction house, to conduct both sales.

The artwork will be auctioned May 15 and 16 in New York, and the photographs will be sold sometime in the fall.

The collection is expected to bring $13 million to $18 million. Phillips de Pury & Luxembourg spokeswoman Elissa Swanger said Wednesday. Enron creditors have filed 23,000 claims worth $400 billion.

Among the 10 art pieces to be sold is Claes Oldenburg's "Soft Light Switches," a vinyl pop sculpture of what appears to be a melted light switch.

The collection was purchased by the company's in-house art committee, headed by Lea Fastow, the wife of indicted former chief financial officer Andrew Fastow.

The committee had a budget of $20 million and made purchases of about $4 million from late 2000 until it disbanded in 2001, when the energy company collapsed.

Associated Press

Kennedy's new flick in serious identity crisis

Continued from page 5

tight, then he's got to keep it real.

"You've just gotta stick with it and be yourself and don't let anybody tell you who you are," says Shondra (Regina Hall), PJ's cousin who serves as the bait in the kidnapping.

Later, a talking rat (voiced by Snoop Dogg, whose lexicon clearly influenced B-Rad's speech) comes to him in a dream and says, "You need to stop listening to all these perpetrators and just be yourself."

More warm, fuzzy tidbits come from B-Rad's dad, who confesses in a climactic epiphany, "I wasn't there for you. I can't change that. But I always loved you."

Is this the same movie that, just minutes earlier, made fun of Korean liquor store owners and Hispanic gang members?

Directed by John Whitesell (whose credits include "See Spot Run" and "Calendar Girl"), the film lists four screenwriters – including Kennedy – who seem to aim for equal opportunity in their hackneyed racial imagery.

The most offensive and ill-timed of all: B-Rad's friend Hadji (Kal Penn), who's of Arab descent, shows off his rocket-powered grenade launcher, which he says was a Christmas gift from his Uncle Ahmet.

Even a riff on "8 Mile" – the movie that made another white rapper, Eminem, socially acceptable – falls flat. B-Rad's kidnappers take him to a club, where he engages in a rap battle.

"This is my one chance, my one shot. I gotta prove myself," he tells Shondra.

To quote the character known as the Token Black Guy in "Not Another Teen Movie," which is looking better by the minute, "That is wack."

Tired racial jokes based on withered stereotypes overload the film.

Ever growing, The Slow Food Movement gives McDonald's a run for its money

Continued from page 5

some with the desire to regain some of their cultural past. In 2000, the United States joined the list of countries that participated in the Slow Food Movement.

Recent books, such as Eric Schlosser's "Fast Food Nation: The Dark Side of the All-American Meal," have galvanized readers into acting against the standardization of American culture and the United States obesity epidemic.

One of the difficulties of ensuring constant growth for the movement is the presence of heavy advertising on the part of fast food giants such as McDonalds. Creating a fantasy environment for children with the addition of greasy/sugary foods fosters a type of loyalty to the corporation that doesn't easily fade away. When the fantasy fades in the teenage years, many young adults find that their mealtime options are severely limited. This fact, combined with the added bonus of hectic family schedules, limits the amount of time spent eating healthy foods in an intimate social environment.

Statistically, teenagers in families that eat meals together on a regular basis consume a higher percentage of vitamins and less fat than those who do not share a common dinnertime. Those who do not participate in a scheduled mealtime are four times more likely to smoke cigarettes, three times more likely to smoke marijuana and twice as likely to partake in underage drinking.

Since its inception a little over a decade ago, the Slow Food Movement has gained momentum and now sponsors two publications, an awards ceremony, a University dedicated to gastronomical education and several festivals and workshops throughout Europe. The following is a sample of what the movement offers to its members.

Recently, the quarterly journal "Slow" was made available to the American public. In its pages you can discover the market place in Ulan Bator, Mongolia and the famed Vietnamese Snake Tavern. The eclectic magazine covers issues such as wildlife and agricultural preservation and focuses on locally grown organic foods and the farmers who produce them.

The "Slow Food Editore" is a publication released by the movement, which advocates environmental-friendly tourism, consumer awareness and higher-quality gastronomic production.

One event sponsored by the Slow Food Movement is the five-day Salone de Gusto (Room of Taste), which was meant to foster culinary education as well as provide samples of local food products. Here, one may discover over 300 stalls and workshops with topics ranging from "Monastery Cheeses" to "Palestine and Israel: Table Talks."

Another aspect of the movement was the creation of the University of Gastronomic Sciences in the Italian countryside. Agenzia di Pollenzo and Colorno are the two primary campuses for the University, which focus on food science and wine studies as well as environmental studies and food production.

The architecture of Pollenzo dates back to 1833 when it was used as a farmhouse. Currently, the facility houses a hotel, a large restaurant, a wine bank and the main campus of the University. A training course of three years will be available to students, combined with an additional two years of training in communications. Meanwhile, the Palazzo Ducale of Colorno is the converted remains of a fortified castle and is located outside the city of Panna. Two-year courses in management and university master courses are available at this site.

The Ark of Taste was created with the intent of saving food from becoming lost to the system of industrialization currently in effect. Its purpose is the rediscovery and promotion of forgotten foods, which are in danger of becoming extinct due to environmental deterioration. Examples of these foods include the plum tomato of Corbara, mullet roe and violino de capra. Intertwined with the Ark is the foundation known as the Presedia, which funds local events, supports food production by local farmers and advertises promotions for the Ark.

The Slow Food Award was created in 2000 as a means to celebrate activities of research, production and marketing that benefit biodiversity. Nominations for the award are sent to a panel of over 100 global experts in the field of agro diversity. Naples is scheduled for the fourth annual awards ceremony, which will be held in 2004 at the Teatro San Carlo. Previous winners of the award include Uma Bawang Residents Association, the American Chestnut Foundation and the Escuelas Radiofonicas Populares del Ecuador.

Proponents of the Slow Food Movement have been called everything from leftist radicals to 60's throwbacks, but a new name may be developing for the activists ... committed realists. As the effects of industrialization continue to threaten the ecosystem, the popularity of organically grown foods is increasing at an incredible rate.

With a slow but steadily increasing membership only one thing is certain, The Slow Food Movement is giving the yellow-suited clown a run for his money.

Boston Pops conductor Keith Lockhart to be a father; Bob Hope's aging glory

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Bob Hope, whose 100th birthday is next month, was too frail to attend the rededication of one of his stars on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

But comedian Dennis Miller said Hope probably wouldn't have come anyway. "I know if he was up-and-about he would have made a beeline for Iraq to entertain our brave men and women over there," said Miller, one of several celebrities at the gathering Tuesday.

"Frasier" star Kelsey Grammer said Hope's "laughter has helped us through some very difficult days and helped us relish the good ones.

"Bob Hope's contribution to this country and our society is invaluable and it will last for centuries to come," he said.

At the event, an embedded plaque describing Hope as "citizen of the century" was unveiled on the star. Others in attendance included Hope friends Phyllis Diller, Eva Marie Saint and Cindy Williams, and his daughter, Linda Hope.

The ceremony coincided with the release by Universal Studios Home Video of the "Bob Hope 100th Birthday Tribute Collection," 12 DVDs feauring 17 of his movies.

Hope and his wife, Dolores, spend their days mainly at his suburban golf estate just across the Los Angeles River behind Universal Studios. He stopped making public appearances about two years ago.

• • •

WASHINGTON (AP) – One casualty of the war with Iraq is the First Amendment right to oppose it, actor Tim Robbins says.

Robbins and longtime companion actress Susan Sarandon are war opponents whose scheduled appearance at baseball's Hall of Fame was canceled last week by former Reagan administration aide Dale Petroskey, now the hall's president.

"A chill wind is blowing in this nation," Robbins told a National Press Club luncheon Tuesday. "Every day the airwaves are filled with warnings, veiled and unveiled threats, spewed invective and hatred directed at any voice of dissent."

Robbins, 44, said he didn't regret supporting the 2000 presidential campaign of consumer activist Ralph Nader, who has been blamed for taking enough votes away from Al Gore to enable George W. Bush to win the White House. He said he hadn't decided whom to support in 2004.

Petroskey sent a letter to Robbins and Sarandon, telling them the 15th-anniversary celebration of "Bull Durham," set for April 26-27 at Cooperstown, N.Y., had been called off. Robbins and Sarandon co-starred in the 1988 baseball film.

• • •

LONDON (AP) – Scores of volunteers shed their clothes near Parliament and the River Thames to pose for nude photographs by artist Spencer Tunick.

Tunick, 35, has created nude landscapes in cities around the world. He arranged the 160 naked models on a terrace overlooking the Thames at dusk Tuesday to coincide with the opening of the nearby Saatchi Gallery. Tunick recruited his nudes through advertisements.

Tourists riding a popular Ferris wheel on the other side of the Thames ended up getting more in their photos of Big Ben, Westminster Bridge and Parliament than they had planned.

Following Tunick's directions, the volunteers – some of them giggling with embarrassment – posed several times, lying down in a courtyard just above a path by the Thames and standing there in several positions.

At the nearby Saatchi gallery, the onlookers included Mick Jagger's daughter, Jade, and British actor Stephen Fry, who said: "It's good to have an artistic reason for watching this sort of thing."

Tunick has been photographing and filming nude volunteers in unlikely public places around the world since 1992, organizing more than 50 group performances, some of which have led to his arrest.

He plans to package his photos in a portfolio, "Nude Adnft."

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) – An authorized biography of astronaut Neil Armstrong, the first man to walk on the moon, is coming out in 2005.

"First Man" will be written by historian James Hansen, who has exclusive access to Armstrong's personal archives.

The book "will trace Armstrong's life from his boyhood to his time as a Korean War fighter pilot through his experiences in the American space program and his historic place as the first astronaut to set foot on the moon in 1969 and up to the current day," publisher Simon & Schuster said in a statement Tuesday.

Financial terms were not disclosed.

Hansen, a professor of history at Auburn University, is the author of "Spaceflight Revolution" and other books.

• • •

BOSTON (AP) – Boston Pops conductor Keith Lockhart is going to be a pop. The 43-year-old conductor and his wife, violinist Lucia Lin, are expecting a baby sometime in late summer.

"Luci and I are thrilled to be expecting our first child," Lockhart said in a statement this week. "Luci and the baby are doing well. The Boston community has always been very supportive of me, and Luci and I really appreciate your good wishes at this special time in our lives."

Lockhart and Lin were married in September 1996. Lockhart became conductor of the Boston Pops in 1995 after serving as associate conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and the Cincinnati Pops.

Lin joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1985 after graduating from Rice University. She became one of the BSO's first violins after serving as assistant concertmaster.

Associated Press

Dar Williams delights at the Calvin Theatre

Continued from page 5

throat and an occasionally underwhelming band, Williams rose to the occasion, as she always does, in a town that claims her as one of its own. Playing in front of knowledgeable and devoted fans, Williams welcomed the opportunity to unearth songs like "Road Buddy" and "Another Mystery" that don't get performed as frequently as her marquee numbers. While this song selection came at the expense of several well-known and well-loved songs, the combination of exceptionally strong new material and newly dusted chestnuts made for a rewarding evening with one of folk's most intelligent and talented songwriters.

Newcomer Ben Taylor plodded through an oleaginous set of unwieldy atmospheric pop to open the show.

Aisha Tyler mixes things up on 'Friends'

COURTESY MARSHA HEALTON INC.

"Typically, black women are not seen as attractive ... Maybe it's a coup for us that we start to be seen as attractive – not as pretty for black girls, but just beautiful, period," Tyler reported.

Continued from page 5

But I don't think I set out to have a standard-bearer career. I just set out to be funny and communicate with people."

Being an agent of social change is "a heavy burden," she said, jokingly. But she knows that pop culture images carry weight.

"Typically, black women are not seen as attractive in white culture, so maybe it's a coup for a black woman who isn't light to appeal to black and white men," she told Heart & Soul magazine last year. "Maybe it's a coup for us that we start to be seen as attractive – not as pretty for black girls, but just beautiful, period."

The 6-foot Tyler is accustomed to being in the vanguard, by choice or not. Her family (her father is a photographer, her mother a teacher) stretched itself financially to send her to a private school in San Francisco, where she was at times the only black student.

"And my parents were vegetarians. I'd show up at school this giant black kid, with none of the cool clothes and a tofu sandwich and celery sticks," she recalled over afternoon tea at the Beverly Hills Hotel. "It was very alienating, and I could have just laid down and died. Instead I said, 'I'm going to make friends.' I was forced to intersect and interact and assimilate with a lot of other kids."

As a performer, she said, that has given her the ability to reach out across ethnic and gender lines. Hard work was also part of the formula: After graduating as a political science major from Dartmouth College (where she met her husband, attorney Jeff Tietjens), she worked days as an advertising executive in San Francisco and nights honing her stand-up skills at clubs.

Tyler, 32, hasn't abandoned her work ethic. Besides "Friends," there are movies (including "The Santa Clause 2" and the upcoming "Never Die Alone" with David Arquette) and a "comedic, post-feminist anti-'The Rules'" book she's writing, which she intends as an antidote to the best-selling dating manual.

The next step? She admires Jennifer Aniston's career but has her eye on another Hollywood role model.

"I'm looking forward to doing

Graphics

THE COLLEGIAN IS HIRING

for next Semester

Freshmen and Sophomores

are encouraged to apply

come talk to Mike, Ruth, or Shannon
or call 545-1864
105 Campus Center Basement

From the students who brought you Haigis Hoopla...

new balance SoccerFest
April 27, 2003
Presented by the University of Massachusetts Sport Management Program

The Soccer Showdown

"We're putting the Show Down, so you Show Up"

UMASS Men's Soccer
2002 Atlantic 10 Champions
VS.
UNC Tar Heels
2001 National Champions

Sunday, April 27th at 12:30 PM
Rudd Field
Pre-Sale: $2 Kids, $4 Adults
Day of event: $3 Kids, $5 Adults
UMass students FREE with student ID

SPECIAL THANKS TO:

UMASS FOOD SERVICES · NIKE · new balance · KAPLAN · The Coca-Cola Company

Soccer Tournament

Age Groups:

3 v 3 Tournament:
10 and under, 11/12, 13/14
$60 per team, max of 5 players

6 v 6 Tournament:
High school, college/adult, over 30
$120 per team / max of 10 players
Separate men's and women's divisions. Winners of each division receive free New Balance shoes

Registration deadline: Friday April 18th

For registration materials and more information, visit our website: http://courses.umass.edu/nbsoccer

Registrations are on a first come, first serve basis

All participants in the tournament receive a free t-shirt, ticket to the Soccer Showdown, and entry into the New Balance FanZone

the Daily Collegian is

Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives for Fall 2003

All Majors and Classes Welcome to Apply
(current freshmen strongly encouraged to apply)

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement for more information

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on.
(Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

STUDENT TRAVEL
change your world
Amsterdam.....$207
London.....$299
Paris.....$350
Rome.....$471
Eurail Passes from.....$249
Budget Hotels from....$18
Fare is round trip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
pick up your complimentary, premiere issue of BREAK magazine at your local STA Travel branch.
ISIC www.statravel.com STA TRAVEL
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/11/03 - Thursday 4/15/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
ANGER MANAGEMENT (PG13) 1:10 1:35 4:00 4:35 7:25 7:50 10:00 10:30
PHONE BOOTH (R) 1:55 4:50 7:45 9:50
A MAN APART (R) 1:25 4:25 7:15 9:40
WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 1:50 4:30 7:25 10:15
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:10 9:35
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:15 4:10
OLD SCHOOL (R) 10:30
DREAMCATCHER (R) 7:00 10:05
THE CORE (PG13) 1:00 4:05 7:05 10:10
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:15 7:40 10:25
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:20
PRILLY'S BIG MOVIE (G) 1:05 5:00 8:55
THE HUNTED (R) 7:30 9:45
Coming 4/16/03
BULLETPROOF MONK
Coming 4/18/03
HOLES
MALIBU'S MOST WANTED
Senior Show 4/17/03 - PHONE BOOTH
* no passes/coupons/savers
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Rubinoff 1.75 lt $9.99
Milwaukee's Best 30 Pack $10.99 + dep.
Monday Saturday 9am 11pm
333 Russell St., Rt. 9 584-8174

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Cloud Nine Productions
Love Bomb
Eagles
UPSTAIRS
LATE NIGHT MENU TIL MIDNIGHT

Tennis set for postseason

UM to face stiff challenge in Atlantic 10 tournament

By ANNA EDWARDS
Collegian Staff

There will be many worries playing on the minds of the Massachusetts tennis team today as it begins the three-day Verizon Atlantic 10 Tournament in Baltimore.

Confidence is not one of them, although losing the last match of the spring schedule was not the ideal scenario that the Minutewomen wanted to find themselves in when entering the most crucial point of the season.

Also, the added possibility of facing strong opponents such as Temple, Xavier and Richmond in the tournament is going to be a tough challenge for the Maroon and White.

Temple is seeded No. 1 for the A-10 tournament after a 7-0 spring record. It will be under the guidance of head coach Tracey Tooke who played six months on the Professional Satellite Circuit.

On March 29 at the Arthur Ashe Tennis Center, the Owls lost a close battle against Xavier, 4-3. Playing such a tough all-for team and making Xavier really earn this victory is not that Temple could potentially be dangerous during the A-10.

George Washington is the only team that Temple did not struggle to defeat with the Owls coasting 5-2.

Xavier will be seeded No. 2 today under the direction of head coach Jim Brockell, who will be concluding his 30th season.

The Musketeers have a key player in the No. 1 singles position in Lauren Clary. The sophomore had an impressive season with a record of 22-5 in singles. Last year, Clary led the team with a 29-7 singles record, including 15 wins in 18 matches at No. 1 singles.

Freshman Kristin Clary is also a key player for Xavier and a successful season, which takes her into the tournament with a 23-5 singles record.

If unable, the team of senior classmates Lindsey Dingman and Katy Wolfe is one that could strengthen Xavier's result at the A-10 tourney.

"[Number] 1 doubles point will be a major factor in our success this year," said Brockoff.

The University of Richmond women's tennis team hosted the 2003 Atlantic 10 Championship with a 7-8 record overall and a 1-0 mark in conference action. Head coach Mark Wesolek was the 2002 Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year and has led Richmond to three NCAA Tournaments during his 14-year tenure.

Senior Casey Cohan leads Richmond with 14 overall wins and a 9-4 record in spring dual matches. Senior Vanessa Bagnato posts an 11-15 mark in singles after playing at all three top spots while freshman Meghan Wolfgram played eight contests at the No. 1 slot and registered three wins. She currently holds a spring record of 6-4.

Richmond picked to finish first in the league's preseason poll, played only one conference match during its regular season as the Spiders defeated George Washington 5-2 in early January. Richmond recorded four singles wins and swept the doubles matches.

Despite not having seen as much conference action as other teams in the A-10, the Richmond Spiders will be the favorites to take the title for 2003.

The Minutewomen will be seeded No. 4 in the A-10 with the top of its lineup arguably as strong as Temple's. The question is whether the Maroon and White can pull out the stops and play the amazing tennis that has been seen from it only on a few occasions this season.

"Anything fourth and above gives us a good feeling," said head coach Judy Dixon. "Competitiveness is up."

UMass strength lies in junior Jafra Depontes, sophomore Stephanie Price and sophomore Sasha Edelstein, who are all capable of amazing tennis. Depontes holds a 5-4 singles record this season after recovering from a shoulder injury. Price has had a positive season, with an 8-8 singles record and a 10-6 doubles record, and she will be looking to conclude her season with the success she has felt throughout the spring.

The player to watch for the Minutewomen will be Edelstein in the singles No. 3 position. The Israeli native is ranked as the No. 2 junior player for her country, and she achieved an International Tennis Federation ranking of No. 240.

Edelstein is capable of playing superb, competitive tennis and she could be a serious factor in the tournament.

On Monday, the Minutewomen traveled to Hamden, Conn. to play Quinnipiac. Following a 4-3 loss to the Bobcats, UMass dropped to 6-12 on the spring season.

The Maroon and White dominated the top spot in getting victories from its No. 1 and No. 2 singles positions. Price cruised passed junior Kim Piazza 6-3, 6-1, while UMass' Depontes dropped the second set on her way to a 6-1, 3-6, 7-5 victory over junior Danielle Rautenber.

Edelstein will add to the concern for UMass entering the A-10 tournament as she dropped the No. 3 singles position to senior Cristin Arahovites, 2-6, 6-4, 6-2.

This was a memorable final home collegiate match for Arahovites, as she helped lead Quinnipiac to a 4-3 victory over the Minutewomen.

"It was very ironic that our winner, a senior captain, won the match for us on senior day," said Quinnipiac coach Mike Quirke.

The Maroon and White saw victories in all three doubles matches (worth one point), but it was the losses at the bottom end of the singles draw that sealed the Bobcats' victory.

"I thought that it was a classic, down-to-the-wire college tennis match – which last year's was also," said Quirke. "Last year it was 5-5 off the court and they won it. This year it was 5-5 off the court and we won it.

"UMass is a very talented and well-coached team," added Quirke.

Sports@dailycollegian.com

A fan running onto the field attacked first base umpire Laz Diaz Tuesday night at Chicago's U.S. Cellular Field.

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Umpire attacked by fan

By RICK GANO
Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) – First base umpire Laz Diaz turned to watch a fly ball that was hit along the right-field line. A split-second later, a fan was grabbing him around the waist.

Just seven months after Kansas City coach Tom Gamboa was assaulted by a father and son who'd run on the same field, another fan at the Chicago White Sox's home park was shockingly attacking Diaz.

The fan entered the field not far from where Gamboa had been surprised and then pummeled in the first base coach's box last September.

"We spoke about it in the locker room, this is where Tom Gamboa got attacked. We thought nothing was going to happen, but it was a full moon out there," Diaz said.

"He just grabbed me by my waist and that's when I turned him around and got him down ... and everybody jumped on him."

Royals general manager Allard Baird told The Kansas City Star that the team will not play Wednesday night's game against Chicago unless he is satisfied that security at the stadium is improved.

The Royals must be assured "that things have been upgraded where we can feel comfortable to where we can take the field," Baird said. "Otherwise we won't take it. I'm worried about my manager, my staff and my players – period. But I do feel for the families who came out to the game."

Known as Comiskey Park when Gamboa was attacked, the facility is now called U.S. Cellular Field after a $68 million naming rights deal was reached before the season.

As the host for this July's All-Star game, the stadium has already undergone a major sprucing up. Now it has a black eye, its safety record questioned by yet another ugly attack at a Royals-White Sox game.

"As a major league baseball player, you shouldn't have to worry about your health on the baseball field from the fans," Kansas City star Mike Sweeney said. "When they come on the field to do harm, that's when it gets scary."

Immediately after Carlos Lee flied out to end Chicago's eighth inning, a man ran on the field and tried to tackle Diaz.

Security and players rushed to the aid of the 40-year-old Diaz, who served in the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve. The fan was quickly taken away and Diaz, who was not hurt, finished the game.

"When I looked over, there was one of the fans from the stands and I just got him off me," Diaz said. "I just turned around and got him off me. The good hand-to-hand combat they taught me worked."

Police spokesman Wayne Frisbie said investigators wanted to talk with Diaz before deciding whether to file charges against the man. He remained in police custody Wednesday.

Frisbie said the man, who has not been identified, was treated for minor injuries at St. Anthony's Hospital in Chicago.

MAKING ART Making a Living

Wednesday workshops for emerging artists

• Art and the Law, April 23
• Art-Related Careers for Artists, April 30

Wednesdays, 4:30-6:30 p.m., Campus Center, UMass Amherst

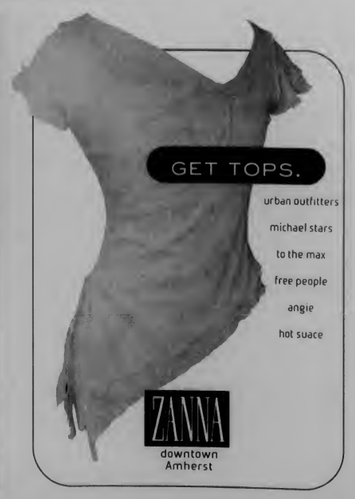
Who should come?
• UMass and Area Students in the Arts
• Dancers
• Visual Artists
• Musicians
• Actors • Writers

No workshop fee, but for 5-College students, suggested donation $10. Call Arts Extension Service at 413-545-2360 or e-mail aes@contined.umass.edu to reserve a seat. Sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Amherst Arts Council.

www.umass.edu/aes

UMASS Arts Extension Service
Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst

WANT TO LIVE OFF-CAMPUS?



Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145

www.pufftonvillage.com

MaGahee a possibility

Pats have yet to rule out former Miami Hurricane

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) – Willis McGahee's major knee surgery hasn't scared off the New England Patriots. After all, they were willing to wait a year for another drafted running back to get healthy.

"I wouldn't rule anything out," coach Bill Belichick said Wednesday. "If we felt that the player would be healthy and play productively, we'd do it."

Antwoine Womack of Virginia didn't play at all for the Patriots last year after missing most of his senior season with ankle problems, then having postseason reconstructive knee surgery.

But the Patriots knew he'd been the Atlantic Coast Conference's leading rusher as a junior and drafted him in the seventh round. Now he's participating in the team's regular offseason workouts.

McGahee had surgery Jan. 5 after tearing the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee during Miami's loss to Ohio State in the Fiesta Bowl national championship game.

The Hurricanes' single-season rushing leader was walking without crutches seven weeks after the operation and his recovery appears to be ahead of schedule.

Using a high pick on a player recovering from major surgery could be risky, even though McGahee likely would have been a first-round choice if he weren't injured.

But the Patriots have plenty of picks.

They have 13 of them in the NFL draft April 26 and 27, including the 14th and 19th overall. Belichick didn't specify what round he'd consider taking McGahee and said "it wouldn't surprise me at all" to trade at least one pick.

The experience with Womack, who could compete for playing time this year with starter Antowain Smith, could be instructive.

"I'm not going to make any specific comment on (McGahee's) situation," Belichick said. But Womack "is now a full participant in the offseason program.

"Whether (McGahee's recovery) is better, worse, faster, slower, the same, different. I really don't know. But there's what one player did last year."

Belichick said he visited McGahee in Miami this month, but the player didn't run or work out for him.

"I don't know how quick his recovery's going to be," Belichick said. "It's three months after the surgery. He's not going to go out and play tomorrow. We know that. But the season doesn't start tomorrow and he's going to have some time to rehab his injury."

It's difficult to predict how players will come back from surgery. Some have missed two straight years and played again, while others who were injury-free throughout high school and college get hurt immediately in the pros," Belichick said.

"You have to play the percentages, go with what your medical people think," he said.

The rehabilitation of Womack also could influence the Patriots to stay away from McGahee. That would give them four healthy running backs – Smith, Womack, Kevin Faulk and J.R. Redmond – and they might decide to draft players at positions where they need more help.

One of those is defensive tackle, which would enable them to move Richard Seymour to end in a 3-4 alignment.

The top defensive tackles available in the draft include Dewayne Robertson of Kentucky, Jimmy Kennedy of Penn State, Jonathan Sullivan of Georgia and Kevin Williams of Oklahoma State.

Robertson and Sullivan would fit in better with the Patriots system since they play more directly opposite the center than the other two.

"We evaluate the player based on our team. We can't worry about what the rest of the league thinks about him," Belichick said. "If he doesn't fit our system and he's not going to do that for us then we just have to accept that and move on."

Interested in writing for Collegian sports? Come to our meeting this Monday at 4 p.m. in the Collegian newsroom!

www.dailycollegian.com

Examining the closer-by-committee

Amidst the dreary rain and gray skies encompassing Fenway Park on its season opener, loyal Red Sox fans stood, waiting for their first chance to cheer their hometown heroes. But Sox fans were also licking their collective chops, for this was also their first chance to pounce on members of a certain committee who have single-handedly raised blood pressures and the sale of antacids all across New England. Sure enough, as each member of the Red Sox bullpen was introduced, a hail of boos came down almost as hard as the raindrops that were falling from the sky. After their performance during the season-opening road trip, Theo Epstein's closer-by-committee is about as popular among Red Sox fans as Nixon's committee to re-elect.

The numbers tell the story on the atrociousness of this bullpen during the early going. Going into Tuesday's game against Tampa Bay, Chad Fox, Alan Embree, Ramiro Mendoza, Mike Timlin, Bobby Howry, Steve Woodard and Brandon Lyon had pitched 38 innings. In that time they had been tagged for 28 runs (27 earned), a 6.53 ERA, 49 hits and 21 walks. They have two blown saves, while boasting only one save, and have allowed six of nine inherited runners to score. They have given up 13 runs in the 9th inning. Most disturbing is that this was against the bottom of the A.L. – Tampa Bay, Baltimore and Toronto.

The good news is that the committee will not be pitching quite this bad over the entire season. The bad news is that unless one or two of these guys step up as a reliable presence at the end of the game – that is, deal with the pressure of close games and register 20-plus saves – the Red Sox will have a tough time making the playoffs.

Modern day baseball is designed so that having a dominant reliever out of the bullpen is almost vital for a good team. Over the past fifteen years, teams in the World Series routinely have had a dominant, go-to pitcher in the bullpen – Troy Percival, Rob Nen, Mariano Rivera, Jose Mesa, Mark Wohlers, Rick Aguilera, Dennis Eckersley, John Wetteland, Trevor Hoffman and Armando Benitez to name a few.

Since 1990, 19 of the last 24 World Series participants have had closers with 30 or more saves. In 1991 and 1992, the Braves made a point of acquiring a closer in mid-season and went on to make the World Series. The 2001 Diamondbacks and 1997 Indians made the World Series without a dominant bullpen presence, but the Diamondbacks had the two best starters in the game and the Indians won only 86 games during the season. Both teams also experienced significant problems closing games during the Series. This is the way the game is played today.

Having a bullpen without a set closer can be effective in one of two cases: 1.) the team has an abundance of talent in the pen or 2.) the team has strong starting pitching, such that the pressure is not always on the bullpen. But any successful team, even one using the closer-by-committee, needs a reliable presence at the end of games.

Take a look at other teams that have employed the closer-by-committee. The 1990 Reds didn't have great starting pitching, but they had three up-and-coming young flamethrowers (Randy Myers, Rob Dibble, Norm Charlton) and they had someone step up as that presence (Myers, with 31 saves). Many teams from the '70s and early '80s won pennants and World Series with closers-by-committee, but that was also an era when teams would feature multiple starters who would log 250 innings and throw 10 complete games, which takes a lot of pressure off of the pen and reduces the need for specialty roles and dominant closers. Yet there was always someone they could count on at the end of games that would have 15-20 saves, even if it was someone time forgot (Roger McDowell – 22 saves for '86 Mets, Jeff Lahti – 19 saves for the '85 Cardinals, Jay Howell – 21 saves for the '88 Dodgers).

Theo Epstein made a smart move in not shelling out $6 million for Ugueth Urbina. Yes, he is 4-for-4 in save opportunities this year, but last year he showed that he is not a primetime closer and is certainly not worth $6 million. And with no one else available, Epstein did not want to be stuck with an overpaid, far-from-reliable closer with no one to pitch in front of him. Keep in mind, too, that none of these pitchers have ever worked this sort of system. Indeed, all of them are used to a bullpen anchored by a closer, where roles and expectations are easily defined, so someone knows they are the setup man or the situational lefty. It takes time to adjust mentally, and add that to the fact that April is usually a bad month for relievers, and the result is the mess we are seeing.

But this is a collection of decent – not great – role pitchers who are being thrown into a system with no roles and who don't offer a whole lot of depth. They are going to be asked to pitch a lot of innings because this starting staff is not going to go deep into games. Even when they start to pitch better, games will continue to be lost unless someone emerges as that reliable force that can hold the 2-1 and 3-2 9th inning leads. At that point, the others will be able to settle into more stable roles and the bullpen will have more of a cohesive feel.

Is it going to happen? Maybe, but it's going to take a career year out of someone. Embree and Mendoza are better pitchers than they are showing, but neither is being used properly. The former is best suited in situational work, facing two or three batters at a time, not closing or pitching full innings. The latter is to be used sparingly, not appear in half your team's games, and is more suited for middle/long relief work and maybe 5-7 saves.

Brandon Lyon seems to be a hard thrower and he could be a surprise, but he is unproven. Fox has good stuff, but his arm is being held together by glue and he really should not be a prominent reliever on any contending team until he proves himself. Howry is on the downside of his career, and Woodard is an anonymous journeyman who should be in mop-up duty. Timlin is the most likely candidate – he has experience (he has closed out a deciding World Series game and has had double digits in saves five times) and has been one of the better members of the committee so far. However, he is also 37, and it may be asking a little much for him to be a go-to guy in the thick of a pennant race.

The committee will settle down over the next couple weeks, but if no one takes charge, the Red Sox are going to have trouble competing with the Yankees and A's, and Theo Epstein and Bill James will have to concede that the talent they brought in may not be good enough to pull off a revolving door style closer system. It will then be time to try other options, like sticking Casey Fossum or Robert Person in the closer role. If there is still no answers come June, it will be time for them to start looking into someone like Kelvin Escobar or Jose Jimenez, and hopefully by that time they will not be too far out of contention.

Sean Holmes is a Collegian Columnist.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Is Looking For a Bright, Talented, Multitasking Wizard!

Now Accepting Applications For:
'HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGER'

*Freshmen and Sophomores preferred
*Great Resume Builder
*10 hours per week

Applications Available in Room 113 Campus Center Basement. Attn: Mia Ferolito
-Please Bring Resume-

Leveille leads Minutemen past Harvard

Fiore chips in to pace offense

Continued from page 12

Cannella, who notched his 74th victory at the helm of the Maroon and White. "I'm happy that he's going to be able to play for us over the last few games."

Leveille scored the eventual game winner on a clever play started by junior Jeff Zywicki, who quickly set up for an inbound and had it in Leveille's stick before the Crimson defenders were ready. The 5-foot-10-inch attackman fired a quick shot that had just about everyone in attendance surprised.

Harvard managed to put a little pressure on, mostly due to the expert work of freshman Sean Kane (two goals), but it was held to one goal in the fourth quarter, a late extra man tally by Matt Pinnin with one minute left.

It would be too little, too late, though, and the Minutemen cruised to their third straight victory, sending them sailing into this weekend's clash with rival Georgetown.

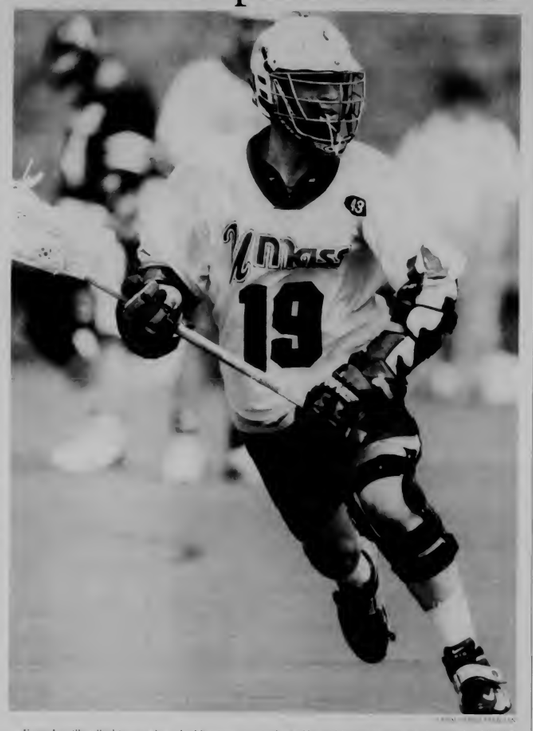
"It's very positive, a good outcome," Cannella said. "In the first half we weren't really able to get in the flow, we really didn't have the ball. I thought Harvard really possessed the ball well. But I was happy with the way it turned out in the second half. You're happy anytime you win, especially against a good team like Harvard."

The Minutemen began to pull away in the third quarter, as Kevin Leveille scored three goals in eight minutes – including two tallies in 111 seconds – to give the Minutemen an 8-5 advantage to start the final stanza.

Leveille's last goal of the period was a combined product of luck and hustle. No. 19 looked to be stuck behind the play after being tangled up with Harvard goalkeeper Jake McKenna, but when Zywicki grabbed a Harvard turnover Leveille was the recipient of a one-on-one duel with McKenna, and the ball was in the cage when all was said and done.

Arguably the most important goal of the game, though, was a third quarter tally by Fiore. The midfielder from Freeport, N.Y. set up on the wing for the opening face-off of the half, and found the ball at his feet after the draw. He then streaked across the field and in toward the Crimson net, firing a low bounce shot past McKenna. Fiore needed just 13 seconds to start the half off with a bang, and give the Minutemen a 5-3 lead.

"We weren't winning face-offs," Cannella said. "So we put Chris on the wing in the face-offs, in the spot where the kid was putting the ball all day. It's a great individual play, and it was nothing but making the adjustment at halftime and putting the short stick on the wing."



"We just switched it up and tried putting the short stick over there," said Fiore, who reached the century mark for career points on the play. "The ball went down, I just saw an opening and started running."

UMass took a 4-3 lead into the locker room after a second quarter devoid of any sustained offense. Sean Morris opened the quarter up with a running bounce shot from inside 30 feet. That put the Minutemen up 4-2 with 7:18 to go in the half.

Doug Logigian later mimicked Morris's feat, only from a little closer, and his shot was in before Bill Schell could react to cut the UMass lead to one.

The first quarter saw the Minutemen get off to an early 2-0 lead on goals from Fiore and Leveille. The latter's goal was the fruits of Neil Lundberg's labor, as the big midfielder drew a double team out away from the net. His feed to Leveille found McKenna out of position, and the net gaping for his 22nd goal of the season.

Harvard returned fire, though, with tallies from Steve Cohen and Jeff Gottschall, who scored a workingman's goal, firing a shot off while he was being hurled to the ground by a check. The Crimson allowed one more goal, though, near the end of the quarter, when Zywicki, stationed 15 feet in front of the net, ripped a Morris attempt past McKenna to give the Minutemen a 3-2 lead at the horn.

Kevin Leveille tallied four goals as the Minutemen cruised past Harvard in preparation for their weekend ECAC contest with Georgetown.

Jordan a loser in his final game

By Chris Sheridan
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA (AP) – Michael Jordan's final shot was a free throw, and like his final appearance in an NBA uniform, it was good.

Jordan played the last game of his illustrious career Wednesday night, receiving a lengthy standing ovation from nearly everyone in the arena – including the coaches and the other players.

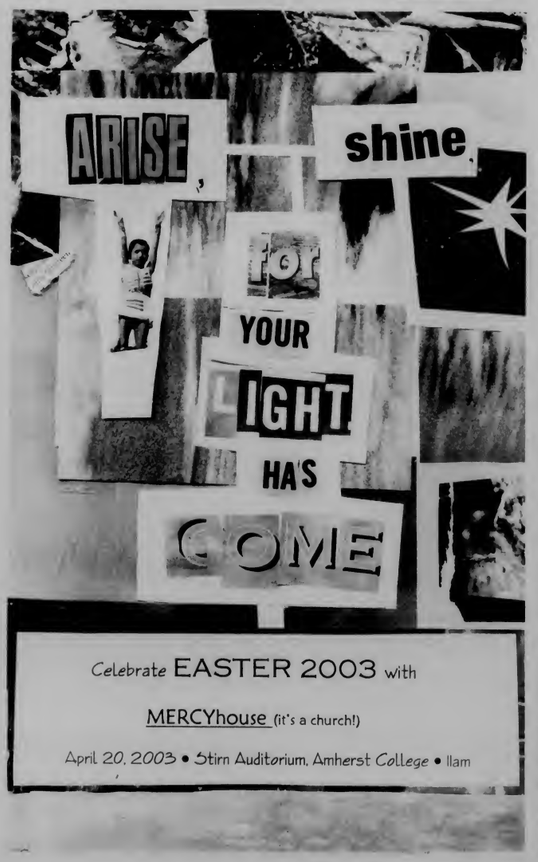
Jordan soaked it all up with a wide smile and a wave to the crowd after exiting the game for good with 1:44 remaining in the fourth quarter of a 107-87 loss to the Philadelphia 76ers.

Jordan finished with 15 points, four rebounds and four assists in 28 minutes – drawing several adoring ovations from the last sellout crowd that will ever watch him play.

His final points almost looked scripted, with Eric Snow of the 76ers fouling Jordan in the backcourt, for no apparent reason except to send him to the line.

Both foul shots went in, and the Wizards committed a foul one second later so that Jordan could be removed from the game and receive the proper send-off. In a rare scene, the 10 players who remained on the court turned to Jordan and applauded, too.

It wasn't the kind of ending Jordan would have preferred: a game that was meaningful only to the opposing team. But it was a stirring night nonetheless, the last time the basketball public was treated to the sight of one of the greatest athletes in history playing the game one last time.



With the Sixers ahead by 21 points with 9 1/2 minutes remaining, the crowd began chanting "We want Mike." The chant grew louder as the period progressed with Jordan remaining seated, and fans ignored the game to stand and stare at the Wizards' bench, wondering why Jordan wasn't playing.

Eventually, this being Philadelphia, they booed.

Jordan finally pulled his warmups off and re-entered the game with 2:35 left for his brief final appearance.

The 76ers had a couple of pregame surprises for Jordan, presenting him with a golf cart that was driven onto the court by Moses Malone and Julius Erving, then having longtime Chicago Bulls public address announcer Ray Clay introduce Jordan with his familiar inflection of "From North Carolina..."

The standing ovation that Jordan received lasted about three minutes, with Jordan smiling, nodding and chewing gum throughout.

Celebrate EASTER 2003 with

MERCYhouse (it's a church!)

April 20, 2003 • Stirn Auditorium, Amherst College • 11am

General Electric
Price Waterhouse Coopers
NHL Corporation
MBNA Financial
State Street Bank

Q: What do these companies have in common?

A: Former Collegian Accounting Clerks

The Collegian is now accepting applications for

Accounting Clerk

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, with your resume for more information.

Applicants should currently be a Sophomore

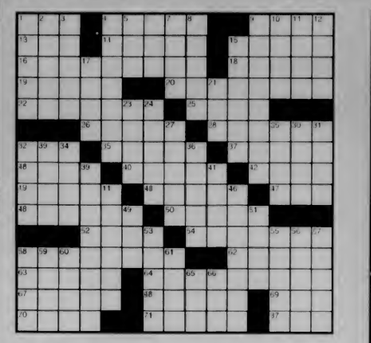
The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967

Conversations in the Dark • By T.E.S.

JayHoo and JawHoo • By Mark Vitard

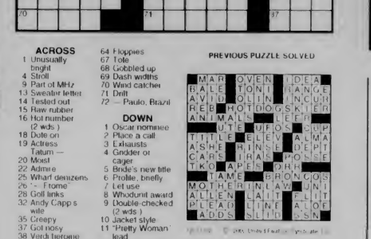
That's What She Said • By Derrick Genova

The Torques • By Ken Fredette



Conversations in the Dark • By T.E.S.

The Torques • By Ken Fredette



www.dailycollegian.com

ACROSS
1 Unusually bright
4 Stroll
9 Part of MHz
13 Swedish letter
14 Tested out
15 Raw rubber
16 Hot number (2 wds.)
18 Date on
19 Actress Tatum —
20 Moist
22 Admire
25 Wharf denizens
26 "— Rome"
28 Golf links
32 Andy Capp's wife
35 Creepy
37 Got noisy
38 Verdi heroine
40 — point
42 French I verb
43 Violent weather
45 Ache
47 Buddhist practice
48 Called
50 Post T.S. —
52 Baldwin of "The Shadow"
54 Swim gear
58 Rustic
62 Marsupial
63 Spoken
64 Hoppes
67 Tote
68 Gobbled up
69 Dash writing
70 Weird catches
71 Drift
72 — Paulo, Brazil

DOWN
1 Oscar nominee
2 Place a call
3 Exhausts
4 Gridder or cager
5 Bride's new title
6 Prolific, briefly
7 Let use
8 Whodunit award
9 Double-checked (2 wds.)
10 Jacket style
11 "Pretty Woman" lead
12 Gave the pink slip
15 — computer
17 Geographic feature
21 Lairds' prefix
23 Kitchen pro
24 Fortunetellers card
27 Granny
29 Hotel name
30 Bonesdry
31 Blissful spot
32 Go without grub
33 Lo-cal
34 Smell
36 Peers of the realm
39 Sculptor's framework
41 Kind of roast
44 Tuna
46 Library item
49 German title
51 Pony's gait
53 Military student
55 Jackson and Capshaw
56 Mama —
57 Hounding need
59 Fill a trunk
59 Tom Sharp
— Lange
60 Prepare the laundry
61 Polygraph
— Booker
65 Sault — Marie
66 Barbie's beau

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

© 2003 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

Horoscopes

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Someone caught you on camera yesterday. Check the internet.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
If you try to learn anything today, you'll forget where you live.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
The guy next to you is trying to read the comics. Move your arm.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
The TV is the only one that loves you. That's sad.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't think about Elephants...hey, what did I just tell you?!

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your boy/girlfriend's parents like you. Chill out.

leo • Jul., 23-Aug. 22
You need to work on your hand-shakes. You come off as weak.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your ability to sway people's feelings is powerful.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
There are about five people staring at you right now. Weird, eh?

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It's been long enough. Get those warts removed. They're gross.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
When people tell you they like you, it's because they feel bad.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Remember what you had for breakfast? You missed your mouth.

Quote of the Day

Our scientific power has outrun our spiritual power. We have guided missiles and misguided men.
- Martin Luther King Jr.

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

THURSDAY
• High: 45
• Low: 25

FRIDAY
• High: 52
• Low: 41

SATURDAY
• High: 54
• Low: 37

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Tomato Rice Soup
• Cheese Quesadilla (vegetarian)
• Philly Steak Sandwich
• Grilled Chicken
• Tofu Fricassee (vegan)

DINNER
• Tomato Rice Soup
• BBQ Chicken Quarters
• Baked Chicken Quarters
• Old Fashioned Beef Stew with Biscuit
• Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jesse Greenspan
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schatter
COPY EDITOR
Matthew F. Sacco
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Dan Simmons, Scott Ciruso

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

WIN BACKSTAGE AND VIP Tickets to 2003 Civic Tour Sign up at UmassElement.com

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups. Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser. 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Interested in a loan? We can help, regardless of your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6901 Good or bad credit accepted

Apartment for Rent

Apt. located in Brandywine Furnished Apt. Seeking Female Roommate Low rent cost Good location If interested call Sandy @ 413-546-0469

Apartment for Rent

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug., or Sept. First come first serve. Don't miss out on these while they last! www.brandywineapartments.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NO SECURITY DEPOSIT and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlinehousing.com 253-7879

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, studio area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NO SECURITY DEPOSIT and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlinehousing.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

93 Honda Civic DX 143K Great Condition Sound System $2800 OBO 413-262-8203

95 Geo Prism Purple 95K 5 Speed good condition $3400 OBO 413-665-3727

Employment

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Summer teenage bicycling trips: USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, www.bicycletrips.com

Live in Jobsitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS: Pennsylvania children's sleep-away camp. If you love children we have positions for Directors, Arts/Dance and Counselors for Tennis, Golf, Drama, Camping/Nature, High & Low Ropes, Gymnastics, Sports, Sailing, Water-skiing, Ceramics, Jewelry, Guitar, Aerobics, Self-Defense, Video, Piano, and Nurse (RN). Dates 6/19-8/16/03. On Campus Interviews arranged. Call 1-800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynepa.com

Collegiate Entrepreneurs Inc. Looking for experience painters for full time summer work, great pay, fun atmosphere. Call Jenna 648-5240 Norton, Attleboro, Mansfield, MA area only

Employment

4/22/03 is the last day to contact the Legal Services Office about a Fall internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal field required; training is provided. Contact Legal Services today! 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Rent us your ears! $5 for half and hour just for listening 545-6837 or swimmer@student.umass.edu

The Daily Collegian is hiring outgoing students to fill advertising positions for Fall 2003. No Experience Necessary. Call 545-3500 or come to 113 Campus Center Basement

Activist Best Summer Job in Town Sleep late, work outdoors, cool people, cool boss. Great Issues! "protect our air and water "fight corporate polluters "defend public health "promote renewable energy Earn $4,000-5,000 this summer Call today. Start tomorrow 413-584-9830

Technical Writer for Policy Analysis Consulting Software firm. Resume to Fred Trevz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or FredT@REMI.com

Employment

Summer Office Help Amherst Leisure Services is looking for a summer registration clerk. Duties include service, accepting registrations, data entry, answering phones, filing, and other clerical duties. Hours are M-F 9 a.m.-4 p.m. Pay range is $7.44-9.61/hr. depending upon experience. Apply at Human Resources, Town Hall, 4 Boltwood Ave., Amherst, MA 01002. AA/EOE

Camp Counselor and Special Needs Camp Counselors Town of Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience or other experience working with school age children, and/or related course work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. old. 5 range for both positions: $8.19-9.48/hr; 35-40 hrs per week. June 30-Aug. 15 Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept. 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

Employment

WSI/Lifeguards The Town of Amherst, Department of Leisure Services and Supplemental Education (LSSE) Aquatics Program is now accepting WSI applications for summer 2003 season. All Applicants must possess current WSI and Lifeguard certifications. Previous experience preferred, $8.19-9.48 hr. Application deadline: 4/21 Applications are available from the Town Hall Human Resources Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Opportunity Employer

Economic / Business Development Assistant for economic, software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Trevz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. mail@remi.com

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic, software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Trevz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038 mail@remi.com

Employment

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round $65-$279

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

MOVIES EXTRAS-MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/day. No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

For Sale

For Sale Blue Couch and Chair 256-3166

1 pr Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

Miscellaneous

Do you still swallow pills? Spray nutrients right into your mouth! www.25851.mysupplement.com www.advantagenutrisupplus.com

Rental Problems

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house / apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Room for Rent

Reasonable 10 minutes to UMass. Large Quiet Comfortable furnished. For Male Grad/Professor 617-901 Fall option 413-549-1578

Two furnished rooms available $375.00, utilities included. Free cable, no lease. Call 253-3670

Roommate Wanted

For Fall Semester on Main St $340 plus utilities per month 256-4257

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-9992

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Summer Sublet

4 bedroom house @ Hadley 584-2867

69 Townhouse Sublet June 1st – August 31st Room for $ 450 per month or BO Call 549-2798

Patton Sublet from June 1st – August 31st 3 beds 2 baths $1450 per month Call Mark 253-1479

Travel

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips, on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Wanted to Rent

Furnished Summer Rental or Home share Male, non-smoker, no pets. Will pay up to $500.00 508-246-3569

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen stomp Harvard

Four goals for Leveille

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CAMBRIDGE – In its last tune-up before the final three games of the season – and the three most important – the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team trounced Harvard yesterday, 11-6 at Jordan Field.

Senior Kevin Leveille had four goals, and classmate Chris Fiore notched his 100th career point in the victory, the Minutemen's second straight over an Ivy League opponent.

After a hotly-contested first half, the Maroon and White (10-1, 2-1 ECAC) was able to do in the final two periods what it could not do last Saturday against Yale – pull away.

UMass	11
Harvard	6

The Minutemen scored four goals – three from Leveille – in the third quarter to create the margin, and followed up with two more in the final stanza to polish off their 10th victory of the season.

The 10-1 start is a tie for the program's best, matched by the 2001 squad.

Senior Tom Fallon, who hadn't played in more than a month, finally returned to the lineup, making his first appearance at the 8:40 mark of the first quarter.

"The point was just to get out there and test it out, see how it would do in a game situation," Fallon said. "It felt good to be playing, instead of sitting on the sidelines."

"It was nice to get [Fallon] in there," said UMass coach Greg

Continued on page 8

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Chris Doyle and the Minutemen shut down the Harvard Crimson en route to an 11-6 non-league victory in Cambridge, their second win over an Ivy League school in a week.

Maroon and White glad to have Fallon back on field

By MATT BRADY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CAMBRIDGE – It may not have been the comeback people had hoped for, but it was a comeback nonetheless. For the first time since the third game of the season, a UMass player wearing No. 44 was back on the field yesterday against Harvard.

For the past few years, the defense has been led by No. 44, be it in the person of the graduated Matt MacFarland or in this year's stalwart, Tom Fallon. But Fallon had been absent from the Maroon and White lineup for 39 days coming into yesterday's 11-6 victory, so to the Minutemen faithful, the senior certainly was a sight for sore eyes.

"It was definitely nice to see him back out there," senior midfielder Chris Fiore said.

Fallon's performance was far from jaw dropping. In fact, on some occasions, he coughed the ball up when trying to clear the ball out of the defensive zone, with passes falling far wide of their marks or balls bouncing off his stick. However, Fallon's mere presence seemed to bring everyone's play up a notch.

The foursome of Matt Garcia, Chris Gervat, Jack Reid and Steven Byrnes all had impressive games, while Bill Schell was once again rock-solid in net. Since Schell has taken over as the leader of the defense, he has been on fire, turning aside nearly 63 percent of the shots he has faced. Now, with Fallon back in the lineup, Schell will not need to feel as much pressure as the leader of the defense.

Since Fallon injured his groin against Navy on March 8, the incredibly youthful but incredibly talented defensive corps has taken charge and become the strong point of what is often considered one of the top offensive squads in the country. But with Fallon in the lineup, the Minutemen have one more body out there who can be a force as a longpole, and who will ensure that the Maroon and White will have far more fresh legs on defense than its opposition.

But where Fallon's presence may truly begin to be felt is this Saturday, when the Minutemen square off against archrival Georgetown. Last year, when UMass dispatched the Hoyas in a 16-13 victory, Fallon went head-to-head with attackman Mike Hammer, who failed to register a point in his seven shots on goal. Hammer, now a senior, leads G-Town in points, and more than likely will be looking to exact revenge on the Maroon and White when he visits Amherst on Saturday.

Without Fallon, the Minutemen showed that they have one of the most talented, athletic defensive units in the nation, allowing just over seven goals per game despite playing a high tempo offensive style. With Fallon back in the lineup, who knows how far the defense could carry this team.

Minutewomen shut out BC

By TODD FOSTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There is no love lost between Boston College and UMass.

That was evident yesterday as the Massachusetts softball team hattled to a 2-0 victory over the Eagles at the UMass Softball Complex.

The Minutewomen (24-11, 6-0 Atlantic 10) were putting their 46-game home winning streak on the line against BC (20-14, 7-1 Big East). At the 5 p.m. start, the game felt like the spring fever of softball season had returned. About an hour later the field was filled with heavy winds, making the last four innings almost unbearable.

UMass	2
BC	0

"Our kids did a good job, especially after the loss to Connecticut," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "We came in tired, but still did what we came to do. I thought we got a great performance from Kaila. She pitched so well that the defense didn't have to do much."

Kaila Holtz, who recorded her sixth shutout of the season, turned in another dominating performance. The senior scattered four hits, didn't allow a walk for the second straight game and had six strikeouts. Holtz improved her record to 12-6 while lowering her earned run average to 0.95.

Holtz also drove in the first UMass run – the only one she would need to hold off the Eagles. After a bloop single from Brandi Cross, Holtz sliced a double into the right-center field gap to get Cross home all the way from first.

The Maroon and White is now 1-1 against Big East teams. On Tuesday, it suffered its first loss in 14 games to UConn. The win over BC gives UMass a moral boost heading to Dayton on Saturday.

"We needed to play well today to prepare for this crucial weekend," Sortino said. "[We're] coming down the stretch. A good, solid performance today helps us breath and gives us a day off. [They] can get their studies done and rest, so it's good."

Though Holtz didn't give the defense much work, outfielder Denise Denis still made an eye-opening catch worthy of the title "Web Gem." With one out and a runner on second, BC hitter Jacqui Goodchild sent a shot down the left field line. Denis sprinted to the ball, making a diving catch as she crashed hard into the fence. After the collision, she still managed to get to her feet and throw out the runner tagging from second base.

UMass would add another run after BC outfielder Goodchild made a spectacular diving catch of her own to repay Denis. With BC now having the momentum, Jamie Cahalan launched a pitch over the right field fence. The homer added an insurance run, extending the Minutewomen's lead to 2-0 after four innings. Cahalan had been in a slump of late, but she seemed to be more confident and in good spirits.

"It felt good to finally get a good piece of the ball," said Cahalan, who has two dingers on the year. "I've been struggling the last couple days, but she put it right in there for me. I can thank her."

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Kaila Holtz and the Minutewomen blanked Boston College Wednesday afternoon at the UMass Softball Complex.

UMass looking to bounce back against HC

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team will look to bounce back from a 20-8 trouncing at the hands of Connecticut when it travels to Worcester this afternoon to face Holy Cross.

The game will serve as the Minutemen's final tune up before they return home to face Rhode Island in a battle for first place in the Atlantic 10 East Division. UMass (11-10, 6-3 Atlantic 10) coach Mike Stone hopes that his pitching staff will again turn for the better with the return of some of his experienced pitchers to the hill.

"We're going to start Mike Crane on Thursday," Stone said. "Having the series [with Fordham last weekend] backed up a day really set us back with our pitchers, which is why we went with all freshman [against UConn]. We're just hoping that we can be effective again with our regular guys back in the mix having had some rest since [the Forham series]."

Stone is also looking to get his lineup back on track. Despite rattling off 17 hits against a myriad of UConn hurlers, the veteran skipper thought his team wasted too many opportunities by not getting timely hits and having trouble moving runners along.

"When you get 17 hits, you should score a lot of runs," Stone said. "We didn't score enough for having that many hits, and we need to capitalize when we have the chance to score runs if we want to continue to play well and win ballgames."

Designated hitter Chris Morgan, who collected a team-high two hits against the Huskies, will look to continue to swing a hot bat for the Minutemen. The senior went 4-for-5 with three doubles and two runs batted in in a victory over Fairfield last week, and added to it by going 4-for-9 with a double, a homer and three runs batted in during the three-game series at Fordham.

The Crusaders (7-13, 3-5 Patriot League) have rebounded to win four of six after dropping 10 of 12 to open the season. They're coming off a weekend split of a four-game series with Lafayette in which the teams split a pair of doubleheaders. Like the Minutemen, Holy Cross is taking a brief interlude from its conference schedule, as it will host Patriot League rival Navy in a pair of weekend contests.

"We won seven games in a row [prior to the UConn contest]," Stone said. "We were playing good baseball and the guys need to remember that. We should be proud of that, and hopefully we'll be able to get right back in stride and start winning games again. We need to get back to doing some things well: moving runners along, playing good defense and getting good pitches to hit.

"But it all starts on the mound. We need to be effective and get guys out, and hopefully we can get back on a roll."

Today's game will take place at Holy Cross, with the first pitch scheduled for 3 p.m.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, APRIL 18, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 120

Saddam's half brother is captured by U.S. forces

AP PHOTO/KHALID MOHAMMED

Plumes of thick smoke mark Baghdad's skyline Thursday. U.S. forces have begun to crack down on lawlessness in the Iraqi capital amid criticism that they have not done enough to protect the city.

By DAVID ESPO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

American forces seized a half brother of Saddam Hussein in a commando raid on Thursday, eager to interrogate him about secrets of the old Iraqi regime. The FBI joined the hunt for irreplaceable antiquities stolen from the National Museum in Baghdad.

In northern Iraq, there were grim hints about life – and death – under Saddam. Kurds brought American officials to what they said was a large area of unmarked graves around Kirkuk, a region where thousands of Kurdish men disappeared in the 1980s.

With the fighting all hut over, Americans struggled through another day of trying to restore security as well as vital services for civilians. Soldiers thwarted a Baghdad bank robbery over the protests of Iraqis eager to share in the loot. Marines sought to calm tensions in Mosul after shooting 17 Iraqis to death in clashes over the past two days.

"The war is not over," Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld warned an audience at the Pentagon. But the State Department awarded Bechtel Restoration of San Francisco a contract worth $34 million immediately and as much as $680 million over 18 months to evaluate and repair Iraq's power, electrical, water and sewage systems.

And the USS Constellation steamed from the Persian Gulf for its home port of San Diego, carrying dozens of warplanes that helped bomb Iraqi forces into submission. It was the second aircraft carrier ordered home in recent days.

Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks announced the capture of Barzan Ibrahim Hasan, a half brother of the former Iraqi leader, whose on the five of clubs in the Pentagon's deck of most-wanted Iraqis. Barzan Hasan was an adviser to Saddam "with extensive knowledge of the regime's inner workings," the general said. He also was responsible for managing the Saddam's wealth, according to the Coalition for International Justice, a nonprofit organization based in The Hague, Netherlands and Washington.

A U.S. intelligence official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Barzan Hasan had been a presidential adviser to Saddam's regime since 1998, but had a shaky relationship with his half brother and was not part of the regime's inner circle.

He was a representative to the United Nations in Geneva from 1989 to 1998. Earlier, from 1979 to 1983, he headed Iraq's Mukhabarat, or intelligence service, a period when the organization arranged executions of regime opponents in Iraq and overseas, the official said.

Brooks provided scant details of the operation that netted Barzan Hasan, saying that he was taken inside Baghdad and that U.S. special forces were aided by Marines. He said there were no casualties.

Another of Saddam's three half brothers, Wathan Ibrahim Hasan, was captured earlier by U.S. forces. The third has not been found.

The search for weapons of mass destruction continued in Iraq, but Rumsfeld said he doubted any would be found until Iraqis lead American forces to them.

"I think what will happen is we'll discover people who will tell us where to go find it. It is not like a treasure hunt where you just run around looking everywhere, hoping you find something," he said.

FBI Director Robert Mueller disclosed that agents are in Baghdad with orders to assist in the recovery of items taken from the antiquities museum and other cultural facilities looted in recent days.

They will aid international efforts to recover stolen items "on both the open and black markets," he said. "We are firmly committed to doing whatever we can to secure these treasures to the people of Iraq," he added.

In addition, Mueller said that 25 FBI agents were among the U.S. officials who are carefully examining Iraqi documents, found by U.S. forces, for links to terrorists, potential terror plots, evidence of weapons of mass destruction and activities of Iraqi intelligence agents.

International experts, appalled at the looting of Iraqi historical artifacts, met in Paris under U.N. auspices and called for a temporary embargo on Iraqi cultural objects.

Some of the participants at the meeting said it appeared the looting was organized, and that some of those involved had keys to museum vaults and were able to remove items from safes.

One official suggested the effort was organized from outside Iraq.

"I have a suspicion it was organized outside the country, in fact I'm pretty sure it was," said McGuire Gibson, a University of Chicago professor and president of the American Association for Research in Baghdad. He added that if a good police team were put together, "I think it could be cracked in no time."

The Baghdad museum housed irreplaceable Babylonian, Sumerian and Assyrian collections that chronicled ancient life in the cradle of civilization, the area around the Tigris and Euphrates rivers.

American forces have been criticized for failing to stop looting in several cities, and there have been complaints, as well, that humanitarian relief has been slow in arriving.

More than a week after Saddam's regime collapsed, Marine Staff Sgt. Jose Guillen said power has been restored – by use of diesel plants – to only about 500 homes in Baghdad, a city of roughly 5 million. He said U.S. forces expect to get one of the city's power grids on line by Friday.

At the same time, Marines foiled one brazen act of lawlessness during the day when they interrupted a robbery in progress at a branch of the al-Rashid Bank and took away $4 million for safekeeping.

Thieves had blown a hole in the vault and dropped children in to bring out fistfuls of cash. As word spread that the robbery was under way, Iraqis gathered, saying they had accounts at the branch, and a riot broke out.

Marines broke it up – over the protests of Iraqis not involved in the robbery – and removed $4 million in American dollars. The thieves were arrested.

"These people want the money and they believe it is rightfully their money, but they don't understand that the proper distribution is not first-come, first-served," said Col. Philip DeCamp, a battalion commander.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9
NEO-CONS BUSH'S CRONIES OUR BIGGEST THREAT PAGE 4
BULLETPROOF MONK MARTIAL ARTS FLICK LAME AND STUPID PAGE 5
RIVALS CLASH UMASS, GEORGETOWN MEET AT GARBER PAGE 10

United Nations inspectors wish to return to Iraq to finish job

By DAFNA LINZER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS (AP) – U.N. arms inspectors are ready to get back into Iraq to finish the job of looking for any chemical, biological or nuclear weapons but don't want to work under a new U.S.-led disarmament effort.

"We're not dogs on a leash," said chief U.N. inspector Hans Blix, who said it was key his teams remain independent. He said U.N. teams would be willing to confirm any discoveries of banned weapons the Americans report, but repeatedly noted that U.S. troops haven't found any such weapons thus far.

The Bush administration said one of the war's main missions was to rid Iraq of the weapons it believes Saddam was concealing. With U.S. troops controlling most of Iraq, Washington has all but replaced the U.N. inspections with its own search for banned Iraqi weapons.

The U.S. teams have visited between three and four dozen sites, a Pentagon official said. So far they haven't found any evidence of weapons of mass destruction but some samples taken Thursday at the Tallil air base needed further testing, the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity. Iraq acknowledged years ago that it had stored chemical artillery shells there during the Gulf War.

But Saddam Hussein's regime had said at least since 1998 that it no longer had such weapons programs.

Secretary of State Colin Powell, in a failed effort to win international support for the war, told the United Nations in February that U.S. intelligence proved Iraq had such weapons.

But on Thursday Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld that U.S. troops would need to rely on the Iraqis to find the weaponry.

"I don't think we'll discover anything, myself," Rumsfeld said. "I think what will happen is we'll discover people who will tell us where to go find it. It is not like a treasure hunt where you just run around looking everywhere, hoping you find something."

No one knows that better than Blix, who came under heavy criticism at times from U.S. officials angered that he wasn't backing their position.

"We had credibility and we didn't lend it to their contentions, and I think that we were right and I think so far nothing has proved us wrong," Blix told The Associated Press in an interview Wednesday.

The U.N. Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission, led by Blix, pulled out of Iraq shortly before the war and after 3 1/2 months of work on the ground.

But U.S. officials, deeply skeptical of the U.N. teams, have said privately that they wouldn't be welcome to

Continued on page 3

Database error causes SPIRE to crash during pre-registration period

By DAN LAMOTHE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A database table error on the University of Massachusetts SPIRE computer system kept students across campus from registering for classes yesterday, backing up registration appointments and potentially changing appointments for other students today.

Robert Mack, project manager for the Student Information System (SIS), said that a "script running against the production database" ran in a way that overwrote the personal files of some people in the system. Mack said the people whose files were overwritten weren't necessarily all students.

"We have half a million personal records on the database. It impacted everybody," he said.

The problem began at 11:58 a.m., with nearly everyone on the SPIRE system at the time knocked off immediately. Mack warned students that anyone who wasn't knocked off immediately and was on the system at the time should double-check to see if their selections went through.

"Anyone that was working on the system at 11:58 or after is going to have to verify that their enrollments took effect," he said.

Mack said that the error was not at all related to a high volume of students using the system this week for fall registration. In fact, he said that volume has been much lower than anticipated, with only 5,000 course enrollments made as of yesterday morning for the fall semester. Mack's office had been expecting between 10,000 and 15,000 enrollments.

"The appointments [for students registering in the fall] have been pretty spread out for this particular registration," Mack said. "We started early in the week and then we had a day and half off with no appointments."

Mack said that the Registrar is planning on moving appointments that were missed while the system was down to some time today "so that people can still get on in the original order of their appointments."

"We are going to have to squeeze things together a little tomorrow in order to be fair to students who missed their appointments," Mack said. "It's safe to say that it's [new appointment dates] never going to be earlier than it was."

Mack could not foresee problems with the system not running due to a higher volume of students because of the registration and the backlog of students who were unable to access SPIRE yesterday.

The system was back online last night by 8 p.m.

50 Cent, Rahzel and Reel Big Fish featured in Spring Concert

By COURTNEY CHARLES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This year's Spring Concert, presented by University Productions and Concerts will feature hip-hop artists 50 Cent and Rahzel, with the band Reel Big Fish and local group The Cold Duck Complex. The concert is scheduled for 5 p.m. on May 4 in the Mullins Center.

Tickets go on sale Friday, April 25 at noon. Tickets are free for UMass students with a valid ID and $15 for Five College students with a valid ID. Students must go to the Mullins Center Box Office to get their tickets.

50 Cent, with his recently released 2003 album, "Get Rich or Die Tryin," is most notable for his singles "In da Club," and "Wanksta."

According to the MSN entertainment website, "once snubbed of his breakthrough opportunity, Queens rapper 50 Cent retreated to the mixtape circuit for a brief moment before a major-label bidding war ensued in 2002." His career has had many ups and downs, and he released dozens of underground tracks, according to the site.

"Eminem ended up signing 50 Cent to his Shady/Aftermath label, reportedly offering over a million dollars," according to MSN. "But it was the track record of Eminem and Dr. Dre that swooned the Queens rapper, not the money."

Rahzel debuted with his solo album, "The Fifth Element: Make the Music 2000." He is probably most known as a member of The Roots, who produced and performed several tracks on the album. The Roots will perform Saturday, May 3 at Amherst College.

According to the Ultimate Band List (www.ubl.com), Rahzel is an MC that specializes in the "fifth element" of hip-hop culture, which is beatboxing. The site states that Rahzel actively discourages the classification of his music, as he is attempting to remain on the "eclectic edge" of commercial music. Information on the website also noted that Rahzel's goal as an artist "is to gain respect for beatboxing as a true form on its own merits." His influences include Biz Markie, Doug E. Fresh, Buffy of the Tat Boys, Bobby McFerrin, and Al Iarreau.

Reel Big Fish, a band based in Huntington Beach, California was one of the ska-punk bands to meet with mainstream success following the success of No Doubt and Sublime, according to the UBL website.

"Like most of their peers, the band was distinguished by their hyperkinetic stage shows, juvenile humor, ironic covers of new wave pop songs and metallic shards of ska," according to UBL.

The line-up, already up for weeks on the Pollstar website, was only recently confirmed by the Mullins Center website.

COURTESY MSN.COM

Hip-hop artist 50 Cent will perform at the Spring Concert on May 4 in the Mullins Center.

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

"What did you think about the abortion protest?"

By Emilie Duggan- Hicks

Amanda Angie
Senior
Psychology

"I think that everyone has the right to protest but I don't think that was the right was to do it. Not everyone who is pro-choice is pro-abortion, but I support a woman's right to choose."

Mike Troisi
Junior
Economics

"I think that if someone is saying something you don't like you should still support their right to say it."

Michael Morin
Senior
STEPC

"I think it's great that any debate happens on campus. I'm pro-choice but I'm glad the Republican Club was out there. It sparked discussion."

John Pilvenis
Senior
Natural Resources

"Chris Carlozzi is an idiot and it's a touchy subject."

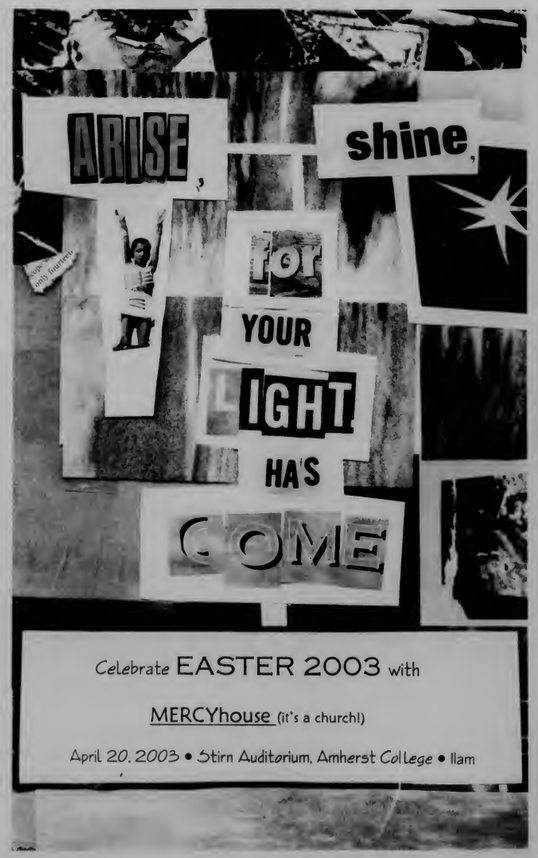
Katie Mayer
Junior
Psychology and Sociology

"I really dont appreciate anyone- especially males- telling me what I can and can't do with my body. Having a child is a hard decision to make."

Jamie Kaplowitz
Senior
Art

"Although I'm pro-choice i think everyone is entitled to an opinion. I appreciate the fact that they stood there all day and talked about it."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Sean Costello Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Brandon McNutt Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Celebrate EASTER 2003 with

MERCYhouse (it's a church!)

April 20, 2003 • Stirn Auditorium, Amherst College • 11am

General Electric
Price Waterhouse Coopers
NHL Corporation
MBNA Financial
State Street Bank

Q: What do these companies have in common?

A: Former Collegian Accounting Clerks

The Collegian is now accepting applications for

Accounting Clerk

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, with your resume for more information.

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967

U.N. inspectors look to return to Iraq to search for weapons

Continued from page 1

return right now.

Now the search is being conducted by U.S. disarmament teams, made up of military specialists, scientists and former U.N. inspectors searching for the weapons Iraq was banned from having after the 1991 Persian Gulf War.

Only in the past few days, Rumsfeld said, have enough weapons searchers arrived in parts of Iraq where U.S. intelligence indicates chemical or biological weapons could be found.

"The teams have been trained in chain of control, really like a crime scene," he said. "That will not stop certain countries and certain types of people from claiming, inaccurately, that it was planted."

Such fears have been privately voiced by Security Council members such as Russia and France, which remain unconvinced that Saddam had weapons of mass destruction.

Both countries want inspectors back in the field as soon as possible as does Secretary-General Kofi Annan who has said only U.N. inspectors – and not the Americans – have the legal authority to oversee Iraqi disarmament.

While the 74-year-old Blix seems eager to return his staff to Baghdad, he said he would wait for a nod from the Security Council.

Blix's also displayed ambivalence about working with the Americans.

"When American and British inspectors have been all over the country I would imagine they would like to tell us what they have seen and perhaps show us what they have seen. But we're not going to be dogs on a leash. We have a mandate from the Security Council, and credibility requires that we have independent judgment," he said.

As many as 1,000 people are believed to be involved in the U.S.-led effort compared to a little more than 100 U.N. inspectors who went to Iraq. Noting the sheer size of the American operation, Blix said he expected them to have a better chance at determining whether Iraq really was hiding weapons.

"They have so many more people, they are all over the place, they get tips from private individuals, they stumble upon ammunition storage so there is a good chance they will cover wide areas but they still have much to go to and haven't found anything yet."

Blix said he hasn't been in contact with Washington since the beginning of the war and that the only information he gets regarding the disarmament process is through media reports.

"We get a fair amount of information that way and we then compare with what we found on our visits."

He also cast doubt on reports that some of Iraq's weapons may have been moved to neighboring Syria.

"I'd like to see solid evidence that things have gone to Syria as we would like to see solid evidence of weapons in Iraq."

In the meantime, Blix is maintaining his team's readiness to return. He says they would need about two weeks notice and he plans to brief the Security Council next week on preparations he's making in case he's given the go-ahead.

Congressmen meet with Arafat amid clashes in West Bank, Gaza

By Paisley Dodds
Associated Press

JERUSALEM (AP) – A U.S. congressional delegation met with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and the newly appointed Palestinian prime minister on Thursday, smoothing the way for a U.S.-backed peace plan that envisions a Palestinian state.

It was the first high-level meeting between U.S. officials and the embattled Arafat since President George W. Bush effectively boycotted him in June, conditioning Palestinian statehood on Arafat's departure.

The talks, however, were not sanctioned by the State Department.

The three congressmen said Arafat assured them he would give designated Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas, also known as Abu Mazen, real power to lead Palestinians – a key demand for the peace plan to move forward.

"Arafat agreed," said Rep. Nick Rahall, D-W.Va. "He has to give Abu Mazen the freedom and authority to lead the Palestinians."

The talks came as clashes erupted between Israeli troops and Palestinians on the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Soldiers shot and killed a 16-year-old in the West Bank and shot a 17-year-old in the chest in Rafah on the Gaza Strip. Witnesses said the boys were throwing stones at troops.

In 30 months of violence between the Israelis and Palestinians, about 2,269 Palestinians have been killed. On the Israeli side, there have been 758 deaths.

Part of the U.S.-backed "road map" calls for the cessation of violence. It also calls for the eventual withdrawal of Israeli troops from the West Bank and Gaza. Under the plan, a provisional Palestinian state could be formed as soon as this year.

The so-called road map is expected to be unveiled once Abu Mazen confirms his new government, which could occur as early as Sunday.

"Abu Mazen will present his government to the Palestinian Legislative Council by Sunday," Palestinian Planning Minister Nabil Shaath said Thursday.

British Prime Minister Tony Blair, meanwhile, invited Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon to England for talks. Sharon's office said it was reviewing the invitation.

Sharon, like Bush, has refused to deal with Arafat. Israeli troops all but confined Arafat to his bombed out office compound a year ago. Sharon has said, however, he is willing to start talks with Abu Mazen once the government is formed.

"There is a road map that has been worked out...and we should now pursue peace," said Rep. Darrell Issa, R-Calif. Maurice Hinchey, D-N.Y., was also part of the U.S. delegation.

Jeffery Feltman, a spokesman for U.S. Consulate in Jerusalem, said the State Department "did not think (the delegation's visit) was a good idea. The administration does not believe that Mr. Arafat is an interlocutor for peace," he said.

Senior Israeli officials also disapproved of the meeting. Israel accuses Arafat of sponsoring terrorism and failing to rein in militants.

Palestinians said the visit signaled a thawing in U.S.-Palestinian relations.

"For a long time, the Americans didn't visit Arafat," said Saeb Erekat, Palestinian Cabinet minister. "The visit shows good American support for the road map and a real will to revive the peace process in the region."

Rep. Rahall said Arafat had served as "a symbol of the Palestinian drive for a state and self-determination," but that "sometimes one has to realize that it is time to step aside and give someone else a chance to take the reins."

The three congressmen would meet with Syrian President Basher Assad on Sunday, Rahall said. Senior U.S. officials have accused Syria of providing Iraq with war material and harboring terrorists.

The West Bank and Gaza Strip, meanwhile, remained under a tight closure after Israeli officials received information that Palestinian militants were planning attacks during the Jewish holiday of Passover, which began Wednesday.

Last year, a Palestinian suicide bomber blew himself up in a hotel in the Israeli seaside resort of Netanya during a Passover meal, killing 29, the bloodiest single Palestinian attack in the 2 1/2 year conflict.

Bechtel awarded Iraq reconstruction contract

By Larry Margasak
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – The government on Thursday awarded Bechtel Corp. a contract that could reach $680 million for helping rebuild Iraq's power, water and sewage systems and repairing airports and a seaport.

The U.S. Agency for International Development said the San Francisco engineering and construction company initially will receive $34.6 million. Bechtel could earn the larger figure over 18 months if Congress approves the funds.

Several Democratic lawmakers have complained the Bush administration did not allow open competitive bidding. Inviting a few companies to submit proposals.

One critic, Democratic Sen. Ron Wyden of Oregon, said the contract showed that "a troubling pattern is beginning to emerge, as some of the most powerful business interests in the country continue to receive these huge contracts without ... open, transparent bidding."

Wyden and others are sponsoring a bill that would require a public explanation of contracts awarded under a limited bidding process.

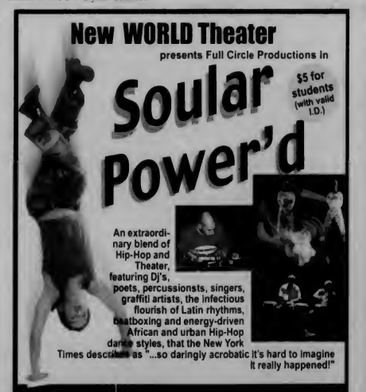
The federal agency has defended the procedure as the only way to get help to Iraq quickly.

Other companies invited to bid were Parsons Corp.; Fluor Corp.; Louis Berger Group Inc.; and Washington Group International Inc. A subsidiary of Halliburton Co., which was formerly run by Vice President Dick Cheney, was invited to bid but decided instead to seek work as a subcontractor.

Bechtel rose from a family business into a privately held international engineering powerhouse. Its executives have included former Secretary of State George Shultz and ex-Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

Bechtel is the management firm for Boston's $14.6 billion Central Artery/Third Harbor Tunnel project.

President Bush named Ross Connelly, a former Bechtel executive, as executive vice president and chief operating officer of the Overseas Private Investment Corp. - the agency that supports U.S. investment around the globe.



EMILIE DUGGAN-HICKS/COLLEGIAN

Make a statement without saying a word

Matt Progen, a member of the Republican Club, mans the protest against abortion outside the Student Union yesterday.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

PETER PAN BUS TICKETS
COPIES & FAXES
UPS PACKAGE SHIPPING
$2.00 OFF ANY ROUND TRIP BUS TICKET PURCHASED IN APRIL WITH THIS AD
$2O
COPY CENTER
on campus in101 Herter Hall

New WORLD Theater
presents Full Circle Productions in
Soular Power'd
$5 for students (with valid I.D.)

An extraordinary blend of Hip-Hop and Theater, featuring Dj's, poets, percussionsts, singers, graffiti artists, the infectious flourish of Latin rhythms, beatboxing and energy-driven African and urban Hip-Hop dance styles, that the New York Times describes as "...so daringly acrobatic it's hard to imagine it really happened!"
Tickets: $15-general public; $8-low income/senior; $5-students. Call FAC Box Office 413.545.2511
Thur. & Fri. April 24 & 25
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive, Chicopee
Host of BET's "Comic View" & played 'Santa Clause' in the movie "Friday After Next"
1st Time Appearance!
THIS SATURDAY AT 8PM!

RICKEY SMILEY
APRIL 26TH 7PM From NBC's "Saturday Night Live"
DEAN EDWARDS
APRIL 26TH 10:30PM Comedy Central's "Crank Yankers"
DANE COOK

McMurphy's
welcomes
Live Music
every sunday
Keith and Andy
NO COVER
positive ID required

UMass Summer Session 2003
Over 200 credit courses in more than 40 academic departments–evenings, daytime, weekends, and online.
Summer Session I: June 2–July 10
Summer Session II: July 14–August 20
And one-, two-, and three-week courses.
For a free catalog: call 545-2414 or e-mail contined@contined.umass.edu.
www.umass.edu/contined
Division of Continuing Education
UMassAmherst

RIGHTS AT RISK
A Public Forum on Civil Liberties
What's happening? What can we do?
Jones Library, Amity St., Amherst
Tuesday, April 22, 7:00pm
PLEASE JOIN US!
Moderator: Anne Awad
Panelists: Mahsa Khanbabai, Bill Newman, Chris Pyle, James Shaw, Nancy Talanian
They're Your Rights to Keep - or Lose!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, APRIL 18, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The First Amendment conundrum: Protecting the speech we hate

Free speech means free speech for all and sometimes it means listening to voices we don't want to hear.

This past week there was a very visible statement on the Student Union Lawn. Controversial to many, the symbolic protest touted statistics on abortion. Labeled as the "Students for Life," for days the group sat amidst white crosses, standing for the numbers of abortions performed.

At the same time a pro-choice rally sprung up a stone's throw away, across the sidewalk.

Using chalk instead of crosses, this pro-choice rally stood just as symbolically, using the written statements on walls and the sidewalk to counter the pro-life standing protest.

Heated debate ensued, reported clashes between the two groups and others either for or against the displays littered the week.

Now a tattered display, many of the white crosses have been leveled and cleared. Most of the chalk-drawn statements have stood, but wear further with every step over them.

Both of these were proud expressions of free speech. Each group settled in their side of the argument. Free speech and expression – the first amendment guaranteed rights – coexisted.

There have also been a number of war debates and discussions going on around campus. Held in residence halls across the campus, members of the Republican Club pull up chairs next to members of the Radical Student Union and the Anti-war Coalition.

Not much is resolved at these debates – it's nearly impossible to sway either side's opinion – but the open forum exists. To many on this campus the pro-war, pro-American stance is the harder one to stomach.

But it exists, and it exists around the commonwealth and it exists around the nation and it exists around the world. How strongly it is heard, how loudly it is pronounced is hard to determine and often swept over.

And just because it may be speech that is in a minority here, it still needs to be allowed and should not be removed for the sake of the more shared opinion.

But it's never that easy.

In reality, people don't want to hear both sides of an issue, they want to hear their own and others that coincide. So when opposing views are made public – either through spoken word, chalk drawings or standing displays – they anger a lot of people.

It's important to hear the sides of the issues, to debate them openly in the hope that the better side may win out – this is the ideal.

It doesn't always happen and often comes down to who can yell more loudly, but in order for the value of free speech to last no one side can be allowed to continue living over the other, no one opinion surviving at the cost of another.

The opposition best proves the opinions – a defeat or victory based on that opposing view shows the virtues of the argument. In order to show the stronger truth, values and opinions need the opportunity to react against each other.

Unsigned editorials are the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Superman is super slow

Erika Lovley

Spring is in the air. So are a plethora of hormones. Most sorely affected by the season are the members of the male population. Driven wild by testosterone and the mere glimpse of any woman's bare leg, the UMass campus is teeming with true Minutemen. I understand that it is spring, when a young man's fancy turns to thoughts of love. Truthfully, the fancies of most young women do too. We are more willing now more than in any other season to accept approaches from suitable male admirers.

However, there is a certain style, grace, and flair gentlemen must possess for the "coupling" process to be successful. We ladies have been forced to witness far too many spring fever cases that bloom into utter disaster. In order to save the grace and faces of our Minutemen, I have selected a true-life case study to illustrate what does and does not fly in the spring fling world. Gentlemen, please learn from this chosen character. It will save you a lot of time, money and humiliation.

The name of the subject is Jay Red, a typical UMass male, whatever "typical" may mean. Jay Red is not a model. Jay Red is not a frat boy. Jay Red likes AIM, wings, and women. Typical. Jay Red has a roommate named Dr. Evil. Dr. Evil's personality is just like the name implies. He constantly loses all his money at poker, guzzles Starbucks, and is of average intelligence. Dr. Evil makes outrageous claims such as "zee" is a real word on the Scrabble board. Jay Red is highly influenced by Dr. Evil's tips on women, which are probably of poor quality, false or anatomically incorrect. Typical.

In the first experimental situation, Jay Red sits in Franklin Dining Commons, alongside a female dinner date. Jay Red finds it necessary to loudly announce the appearance of any semi-attractive female who walks by. If he happens to know the girl, he bellows "Buon giorno principessa," Italian for hello princess, at the top of his lungs. If the poor girl doesn't die of embarrassment on the spot, Jay Red's dinner partner certainly does.

Secondly, Jay Red believes he's sexy because he can belch like a cow. He proceeds to demonstrate this talent after the meal. At dessert, rather than simply consuming ice cream like a normal human being, Jay Red licks his cone seductively, making love to the fro yo. He then wonders why all the women are moving to the opposite side of the DC.

Jay Red has a few issues with style as well. He dresses fairly well; American Eagle makes decent clothes. However, he owns three pairs of identical jeans and a slew of identical dark blue and black shirts. Sadly, Jay Red appears to never change his clothes. He never takes his hat off, so it appears that he doesn't shower either. A variety of clothing styles and colors is important. For women, a man with variety, style, and personal hygiene is the spice of life.

When speaking to his date, Jay Red breaks every rule of acceptable conversation. Firstly, being on the smaller side of the growth charts, Jay Red first shares that he has the same sized shoes as his date. This is a very, very bad choice of information to share. Then, he summarizes the recent activities of his physics club, which included watching a pendulum swing, another poor choice. Jay Red chronically reminds his date that he is from the south, so he is naturally "the nicest guy in the world." He will do anything to prove he is the nicest guy, like ordering a medium Domino's pizza so his date can eat the free Dots and he won't have to pay extra for her chow.

Finally, at the end of the date, Jay Red tells his date his life story, including his passion for crawfish, red beans and rice, and his ex-girlfriend who lives somewhere in the backwoods of Colorado. Because Jay Red is the nicest guy in the world, he has remained friends with ex-girlfriend Verruca. He still sleeps with the stuffed cat she gave him, which he fondly calls "Pussy."

Even after being dismissed by his terrified date, Jay Red still believes he is the nicest guy in the world. He still believes he can get any woman he wants, even though he hasn't had a date in months, except with Dr. Evil and the Game Cube. Sadly, Jay Red still fails understand why his actions drive every possible female to the ends of the campus. Gentlemen, when looking for love this spring, take a hint. Don't be a Jay Red. Or a Dr. Evil, for that matter.

Erika Lovley is a Collegian Columnist.

Saturday morning's perpetual question

Johnny Donaldson

Why do we drink alcohol? What is it about the golden amber color of beer and tequila, the watery clarity of vodka and whiskey, the fizzy bubbling of champagne that attracts so many college students and proceeds to lead them down a nightlong path to debauchery?

We've all been there, the party where you have had just a little too much to drink. You end up losing every lunch you had that week, or forget everything that happened that night. Or you may end up, as in my case last Halloween, the victim of an incriminating photograph that you were too drunk to regret until you were sober enough to bang your head against the wall.

Drinking has long been a part of the college life, yet for the life of me, I can't understand why. The list of cons by far outweighs the pros of drinking. However, we all head out to bars and clubs and parties with the intent of making ourselves well-lubricated, and staying that way throughout the night. You've done it. I've done it, the kid sitting next to you has done it. But why?

First, alcohol tastes incredibly awful. Beer is bland and boring, and tastes like bread-flavored soda. Drinking most hard liquor is like trying to swill down turpentine. I have had the unfortunate, ill-advised "opportunity" to take a shot of rum and vodka straight up, and let me tell you, it was horrendous. I felt like someone poured ammonia down my throat. I found out earlier this month that the lime is an important tool of the tequila shot tradition – otherwise it will burn your throat to no end. In fact, I still think my uvula is scarred. The worst alcohol I ever had, however, had to be in the form of a Blue Sapphire Martini – or battery acid with a lemon twist. Since wine tastes like grape juice, and I am not a big fan of grape juice, the only good-tasting alcohol I can think of is the light taste of champagne, which reminds me of soda for some reason.

Second, the immediate effect alcohol has on you is not exactly the stuff of heaven. At first, the buzz of alcohol is fine. But then the more you drink, the worse it gets. Since I have a pretty high tolerance of liquor – for being as light a drinker as I am – I have never had to deal with puking or passing out. But how fun can that be? I would never want to spend the night hugging the porcelain god. Vomiting is never fun. Neither is passing out stone cold, leaving your body vulnerable to mischievous drunk friends. Nor does it sound particularly amusing to forget everything the next morning, unaware of what shameful stupidity you may have gotten ourselves into.

> "Vomiting is never fun. Neither is passing out cold, leaving your body vunerable to mischievous drunk friends."

Third: the dreaded hangover. Who wants to have a killer migraine the next morning? Especially when you have to work the next day (believe me, working as a cashier on even a minor hangover is not fun.) It sounds like a gas to be writhing in cranial agony, doesn't it?

Fourth, the mental effect isn't very stimulating. You lose your inhibitions, which isn't necessarily a good thing (just ask a girl gone wild). You gradually lose your ability to speak coherently. You start to think you can do things you could never possibly do, and therefore you are led down the rabbit hole of physical torture. Your deepest secrets may come to fore, or you will just end up looking and acting like a giant fool.

Fifth, being drunk is just so not sexy. Think about it: You get sick from too much. Your breath smells. Your face gets red and puffy. You begin to act like a slobbering idiot. If you are a man, drinking may retard your libido – therefore, you won't be getting it up (if I can speak crudely for a moment). You gain lots and lots of unwanted weight. You develop rose-colored glasses, so that you may wind up with somebody, let's just say, not your type. You may not be aware of the decisions you are making – which could lead to date rape and pregnancy.

Sixth, there are the long term and highly dangerous effects. Drinking too much at once can lead to death from alcohol poisoning. There is the long-term death of brain cells, and the threat of cirrhosis of the liver if you drink too much. And of course there is the specter of drunk driving.

I am not trying to admonish the act of drinking, even though I want(ed) to go straightedge (a task I consistently fail at, even though I hate smoking and illegal drugs). I am just trying to understand what the appeal of alcohol is. I have nothing. Just reasons not to do it, even though everyone does it. Is it social? Then why not bond over juice? Is it the high? Why not get high on life? What is it about alcohol that is so appealing? If you know, please let me know.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian Columnist.

Bush II: The neo-cons strike back

Yousef Munayyer

There is a strange breed of thinkers that have re-taken the policy making in Washington, D.C. They are called "neo-conservatives." I had a professor that said that anyone who used terms like "neo-" did not know what they were talking about. I think a more proper term to describe this clique would be "surrealists." It is also important to understand why the Neo is used. There is a difference between these guys and conservatives. It's very important to know who these guys are, what they want and why that's important.

Many people have heard of some of the big names inside this close knit group. Wolfowitz, Perle, Kristol, Feith, these are all names of typical neo-conservatives. However, if you follow their race they are not your typical conservatives. In fact, most of them are social liberals (shocking, isn't it?!). They joined the Republican bandwagon in the Reagan years (hence the 'neo' prefix), stuck around for Bush 1, and are now back for Bush II after a short hiatus. There are a few reasons why they switched but the biggest reason was the liberal stance on Vietnam.

So what exactly do these people want? Well in a nutshell, here it is:

New weapons: This is a must for neo-cons. We began to see this with the policy making in the Reagan administration that initiated the "Star Wars" program or the Strategic Defense Initiative. These are the guys who are pushing to fill outer space with weapons so they can be "dominating the space dimension of military operations to protect U.S. interests and investment" and achieve "full spectrum dominance." Sounds like some pretty extreme stuff, but if you want to read more, check out the Project for the New American Century or Space Command Vision 2020.

> "They don't care too much for the status of the American people as long as American military dominance is supreme."

Cold War level military spending: During the Reagan years these neo-cons decided the best way to get the Soviets to stop producing nukes was to produce many more here in the U.S. and then bargain the Soviets down. Though this completely defies the logic of the arms race it worked to an extent. Now neo-cons want to keep spending high. They don't care too much for the economy. They don't care too much for the status of the American people as long as American military dominance is supreme.

Taking down China: After the fall of the Soviet Union, neo-cons turned their attention to the next great potential threat: a communist government with nuclear weapons, a booming economy and 1.3 billion people. They recognize China as a potential threat to American domination. The future will feature a struggle for global hegemony between these two powers, or so they think, and they aren't going to stand by and wait.

American Empire: This is the overall goal. Neo-cons hold this highest above all. They will not approach it as historical empires in the past have but in a new way. As they have done now in Afghanistan and Iraq, they will dismantle states that used to contain the Soviets and destroy any threats they have built up in the past. This sounds like the realist school of thinking but I do not believe that. These guys push for an American empire and they say they are defending American interests. However they fail to acknowledge their actions could result in retaliation against national interests around the world.

When you ask a neo-con why foreigners hate the U.S. they will tell you that it's because they hate freedom or civilization or some nonsense like that. They will never acknowledge that American foreign policy enrages foreigners and creates an anti-American sentiment. Since they do not take this into consideration, they are not completely defending American interests. That's why a more appropriate term for them would be surrealists.

So who are these guys? Most of them dominate the defense department and are an earshot from an already absentminded President. Rumsfeld, Cheney, Perle, Wolfoftz, Fieth, Kristol, Bolton, Abrams and the list goes on and on. They typically have no experience in the military at all, unlike generals such as Colin Powell who take a different stance on these issues. They advocate constant war to maintain the status of a great American empire. They don't mind putting other people in the line of fire. They do not recognize the Just War Doctrine or international organizations, which attempt to regulate an already chaotic war. They do not care about civil rights and you can thank them for the PATRIOT Act. They support Israel blindly, particularly its right-wing parties who advocate "transferring" Palestinians and building more and more settlements.

These guys are controlling American foreign policy and they are irrational. They had their way with Iraq and could care less for public opinion. They will use Sept. 11 as justification to add many countries to the "axis of evil" list. It is very important to be aware who these people are and what they really intend to do. It would be a good idea to read more about these "surreal" thinkers to get a greater understand of just how unorthodox and irrational their line of thinking is. The longer American foreign policy is formed in this fashion, the greater danger the future holds.

When a European poll found George W. Bush to be the greatest threat to world peace, they weren't far off. The greatest threat to world peace is these selfish neo-conservative war-mongers who are feeding Bush his lines.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the author's name, class standing, phone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-600 words and addressed to the Collegian Editor. Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and address [illegible]. All submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-3699

Collegian Editorial Department
Campus Center Room 113
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 18, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Shania, Tolkien in Entertainment Today

GERMAN MOVIE TO DRAMATIZE ADOLF HITLER'S LAST DAYS

MUNICH, Germany (AP) – Adolf Hitler's last days in the Berlin bunker before his suicide and Nazi Germany's collapse will be the topic of a German movie due out next year, a producer said.

"We are making a grand, epic feature film," the film's producer, Bernd Eichinger, told reporters Wednesday. "Authenticity is the top priority."

Swiss-born actor Bruno Ganz will play Hitler. Juliane Koehler, who starred in the Oscar-winning Holocaust drama "Nowhere in Africa," will play Hitler's companion, Eva Braun.

The $14.6 million production will be filmed in Berlin, Munich and St. Petersburg, which has many well-preserved streets that recall prewar Germany, Eichinger said. It will be directed by Oliver Hirschbiegel, a German who has mainly worked for television.

Tentatively titled "Der Untergang" ("The Downfall"), the movie will chronicle events in the bunker starting with April 20, 1945 –Hitler's 56th birthday – and including his April 30 joint suicide with Braun, whom he married the day before.

Outside, the Soviet army was closing in on central Berlin in a fierce house-to-house battle. On May 8, the Third Reich surrendered.

Eichinger said he was inspired in part by the recollections of Traudl Junge, who was one of Hitler's secretaries from 1942-45 and took down his will two days before his death.

Junge's memoirs were published last year. She died shortly afterward at age 81, hours after a documentary on her life premiered at the Berlin Film Festival.

A conscious element of fiction in the new movie's story line is a 12-year-old boy, a Hitler Youth pressed by the Nazis into the doomed defense of the capital who sees his comrades die in the pointless battle.

OLD TOLKIEN HOME SOLD IN OXFORD, ENGLAND

LONDON (AP) – It has no kitchen and no central heating, but a house that "Lord of the Rings" author J.R.R. Tolkien lived in 85 years ago has sold for $1.1 million after a bidding war.

The Georgian town house in central Oxford sold this week for $80,000 more than the asking price, a real estate company said this week.

That could have as much to do with Tolkien's fame as with Britain's overheated housing market, especially in highbrow cities such as Oxford.

Tolkien lived in the historical, seven-bedroom house with his wife, Edith, in 1918, while working at The Ashmolean, Oxford's museum of art and archaeology, after serving in World War I.

Real estate agent James Penny said the Tolkien Society had wanted to buy the house, but couldn't find the cash. "Other Tolkien nuts were also trying for it," he said. "It went to bids and the price went up."

Penny said the property at 50 Saint John St. would need extensive restoration. Its original kitchen had been removed during a renovation.

'TODAY' SHOW'S OUTDOOR SUMMER CONCERT SERIES BEGINS FRIDAY

NEW YORK (AP) – NBC's "Today" show begins its outdoor summer concert series Friday with a performance by Fleetwood Mac.

Live performances are scheduled through Oct. 10 outside the "Today" show's street-level studio at Rockefeller Center in midtown Manhattan.

Other concerns include Jewel, May 2; Mariah Carey, May 9; Train, June 6; Beyonce Knowles, June 10; Annie Lennox, June 13; Ashanti, July 18; Shania Twain, Aug. 1; LL Cool J, Aug. 8; Amy Grant, Aug. 22; Alan Jackson, Sept. 19; Michelle Branch, Sept. 26; Sting, Oct. 2; and R.E.M., Oct. 3.

Additional performances will be announced throughout the season, NBC said this week.

- Associated Press

'Bulletproof Monk' is full of holes, Yun-Fat and Scott lack chemistry

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

'Bulletproof Monk'
Directed by Paul Hunter
Starring Chow Yun-Fat Seann William Scott
MGM
Rated PG-13
104 mins

Kung fu has become the primary engine for the American action film culture. The elements of martial arts – the gymnastic athleticism, the mystic spirituality, the nimble feats of lethal dexterity in which an agile-limbed fighter takes down an enemy with a well-place blow to the knee or arm or whatever – have become the mode for delivering adrenaline-pumping blasts of cinematic "excitement." But for every movie like "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" or "The Matrix," movies in which the spirit of martial arts is treated with the grace and elegance it deserves, we get a half a dozen movies like "Cradle 2 the Grave" in which the martial arts have been reduced to choppily edited conduits for much lame, macho Steven Seagal bluster and attitude.

I would have loved to have been a fly on the wall for the high-concept pitch for "Bulletproof Monk." It's "Crouching Tiger" meets "The Matrix" starring "American Pie's" Sifler! The movie takes the anti-gravity fighting of the former – the way the heroes seemed to float in the air and on the treetops – and the "bullet-time" special effects of the latter, and proceeds to leech the sophistication out of the both of them. The director, Paul Hunter, is a music-vid veteran, so it may be no surprise that "Bulletproof Monk" comes off like "Crouching Tiger" reduced to a frenzied rubble.

The movie opens in 1943, with a sharp-faced Nazi commandant (Karel Roden, one of the Eastern European maniacs in "15 Minutes") and his crew invading a sacred Tibetan monastery (that's home to a magical, mystical scroll. And just when we thought that the Indiana Jones movies used up the patent on using Nazis as cartoon bad guys.

The scroll has many powers, such as the prevention of the onslaught of age (Joan Rivers would love to have a piece of the parchment) and the ability to shape the world into whatever image the one who reads it imagines. It has been entrusted to a young monk (Chow Yun-Fat) who has been charged with protecting it for the next 60 years.

Chow, who isn't necessarily bullet-proof but can certainly dodge bullets with the best of them, kicks and chops his way through the faceless bad guys and escapes. Cut to 2003 and the monk – he has no name – is in Toronto passing for New York City, on the run from his now decrepit nemesis and the man's goons, who in typical fashion, are outfitted in three-piece suits and earpieces.

So far, so usual. So it's no surprise that a wise-cracking sidekick turns up, this time in the form of cocky pickpocket Kar (Seann William Scott). Kar is pegged as the prophesied heir to bodyguard status for the scroll, but he of course balks at becoming enlightened – as he says this is America, home of hot dogs not enlightenment.

"Bulletproof Monk" is not a movie that you would call enlightened. It's not even a movie that you would call intelligent. It's a movie that you could say is lacking in anything resembling smarts, coherence and purpose. The movie is a silly and simplistic tale that far too often crosses the line between dumb fun and just plain dumb.

Too much implausibility puts a strain on the movie, which has the effect of sapping the fun from the proceeding. In the fight scenes, Chow is called on not just to do the usual kung fu moves, but to do things that are basically limited by a thing called the laws of physics. He flips, flies and practically dances through the air, and soon enough Scott is following his lead. When this effect is done in "The Matrix" there is a believable reason for this to be happening, and the poetic, magical-realistic tone worked for "Crouching Tiger." Setting the action in the real world makes the leaps through the air look rather goofy, with or without pat, cop-out explanations. It hardly helps matters that the special effects are almost hilariously unconvincing.

Chow strides through the movie with a look of humored determination as if trying to hide his embarrassment for the folly he's stuck in. Scott, meanwhile, is charismatic but plays Kar with the same swagger and ironically cocky he strutted Sifler through. Model laime (formerly James) King shows up as a heiress/ pouty bad girl/ bland love interest. Together Chow and Scott offer a few moments of stupid amusement, but not enough to save "Bulletproof Monk" from itself.

Madonna retools new video

By Nekesa Mumbi Moody
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – Madonna's "American Life" video has been reincarnated as a tamer, nonviolent version of its former self.

The performer scrapped the original version because she thought its violent, antiwar themes were inappropriate during the U.S.-led conflict in Iraq.

The first video from her new "American Life" album – which comes out Tuesday –features explosions, a runway show of couture army fatigues and Madonna dancing in a military uniform. At the end, she threw what looked like a hand grenade into the lap of a President Bush look-alike.

The new version, which premiered Wednesday night on the cable network VH1, still features Madonna dressed in a military uniform, but she's simply singing in front of a backdrop of ever-changing flags of different countries.

When Madonna decided not to release the original version earlier this month, she said: "Due to the volatile state of the world and out of sensitivity and respect to the armed forces, who I support and pray for, I do not want to risk offending anyone who might misinterpret the meaning of this video."

But in a VH1 special that aired before the video's debut, the 44-year-old singer said she was frustrated that some celebrities who express antiwar sentiments are suffering a backlash.

The Dixie Chicks, for example, saw sales of their best-selling disc "Home" drop after lead singer Natalie Maines told a London audience she was "ashamed" of President Bush, a remark for which she later apologized.

"You know, it's ironic we're fighting for democracy in Iraq because we ultimately aren't celebrating democracy here," Madonna said. "Because anybody who has anything to say against the war or against the president or whatever is punished, and that's not democracy –p it's people being intolerant."

This is not the first time Madonna's videos have caused a stir.

In 1989, religious images in "Like a Prayer" led Pepsi to drop her as a spokeswoman. In 1990, MTV refused to air "Justify My Love" because of its sexual content. Two years later, it relegated "Erotica" to early morning hours, and in 2001, VH1 and MTV wouldn't air "What it Feels Like For a Girl" because of its violent content.

COURTESY DAVE LACHAPELLA

Madonna has redone her new video, entitled "American Life" because of its contrversial war content. The new, more toned down version is now in regular circulation on VH1.

'Holes' shows unusual promise but ending is too dissapointing

By David Germain
Associated Press

Viewing a movie about juvenile miscreants endlessly digging holes in the desert sounds as interesting as watching a film called "Paint Drying."

Yet Louis Sachar's 1998 novel "Holes" has charmed young readers and some adult fans, among them director Andrew Davis, whose adaptation of the book proves fleetingly fresh and eccentric before tumbling into gooey sentiment at the end.

Davis, best known for action movies such as "The Fugitive," deftly applies his big-canvas visual style to a more intimate and innocent adventure of a wrongly accused hero.

The juxtaposed panoramas captured by cinematographer Stephen St. John lend a mythic scope, and Davis' largely unknown teen performers and name-brand adult actors – led by Sigourney Weaver, Jon Voight and Patricia Arquette – embrace their offbeat characters with gusto and sincerity.

Beyond the book's fans, though, it's hard to imagine who will want to see it. The oddball premise of "Holes" and the convolutions it follows in spinning a story through three different eras might prove off-putting to a family audience.

Parents would like the essential wholesomeness of the tale, but the movie's darker themes may cut too deeply for young kids, while teens might just find the story corny.

Shia LaBeouf plays Stanley Yelnats IV (that last name is Stanley spelled backward), a teenager mistakenly convicted of swiping a prized pair of sneakers donated to an orphanage by a star athlete.

Separated from his mother (Siobhan Fallon Hogan) and father (Henry Winkler), who's a crackpot inventor trying to cure foot odor, Stanley is sent to Camp Green Lake, a dust-bowl juvenile center whose inmates are forced to dig holes in a dry lake bed to build character.

"You take a bad boy and make him dig holes all day in the hot sun, it turns him into a good boy," says Mr. Sir (Voight), one of the camp's jailers.

The suspicious behavior of Mr. Sir and his cruel associates, the Warden (Weaver) and Dr. Pendanski (Tim Blake Nelson) make it clear that their real motive is not to reform delinquents. The Warden's looking for something in the desert, and Stanley and new buddy Zero (Khleo Thomas) – the introverted runt of the camp's inmates – become central figures in unraveling the mystery.

The story flits between the present day and the Old West, where a schoolmarm (Arquette) transforms herself into the vengeful bandit Kissin' Kate Barlow after tragedy strikes down her lover (Dule Hill).

"Holes" also jumps back to 19th century Latvia to spin the tale of a curse placed on the Yelnats family by a fortuneteller (Fartha Kitt).

Sachar, who also wrote the screenplay, gradually stitches all three story lines together into a magical tale of fate and fortuitous coincidence. When the inevitable happy ending for the good guys and comeuppance for the heavies come, though, "Holes" totters into a pit of schmaltz, a disappointingly simpleminded, black-and-white ending to a tale that had shown unusual shades of gray for a story about adolescents.

Volght fans who enjoyed his ventures into unrecognizability as Franklin Roosevelt in "Pearl Harbor" and Howard Cosell in "Ali" may want to catch "Holes" solely to see him bury his persona again, this time under an outrageous pompadour and sideburns and a belly fat pack.

"Holes," a Walt Disney release, is rated PG for violence, mild language and some thematic elements. Running time: 116 minutes. Two stars out of four.

COURTESY PHIL BRAY

Stanley Yelnats (Shia Labeouf) makes a deal with Zero (Khleo Thomas) in Disney's new movie "Holes."

Canadian invasion: Hot Hot Heat warms up Northampton

By Lauren DeFillipo
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – It's been said that good things come to those who wait. After two somewhat lackluster opening sets and eternally long changeovers, British Columbia's Hot Hot Heat needed to be absolutely flawless. They delivered without disappointment. Lighting a fire under the crowd with their fusion of new wave, punk, 1960's mod, and even disco influences, dance tunes made it nearly impossible to sit still.

The evening began hours earlier with local rock outfit Spoons. The five-piece, which employed two drummers, has a sound similar to that of Spoon, but significantly watered down. Spoons entertained a small, but appreciative crowd with their own blend of melodic pop and witty lyrics that even namecheck Freddy Mercury. All in all, a toe-tapping good set.

New York City's French Kicks took the stage after a short intermission. Obviously taking some style cues from Yellow New Yorkers The Strokes and The Walkmen, the Kicks possess everything necessary to make a splash on the indie scene, except that little bit of punch. Their sound is a combination of technical precision, complete with smooth guitar riffs and near Motown-style songwriting sensibilities, complimented by their slick vocal harmonies. Each element slowly drew the crowd closer, but elicited little more than head-bobbing. None of the songs played during the course of their forty minutes (with only one exception) stood out, due in large part muffled vocals and needlessly complicated musical arrangement.

After a teasingly long sound check, the Hot Hot Heat took the stage, opening with a long intro that soon morphed into "Touch You, Touch You," from their 2002 LP "Knock Knock Knock." The rocking four-piece wowed the nearly 200 people in attendance in youth and set the mood for them to get their dance on. The quick pace did not stop when the song ended. Instead it was followed by the equally danceable "Talk To Me, Dance With Me."

Lead singer Steve Bays kept the energy high by trading the small stage with impassioned fervor. Energy like that is simply contagious. Despite all this movement, Bays was far from winded, making each song sound album-fresh.

The set, like the two that preceded it, was roughly forty minutes in length. That is pretty respectable considering few of their songs break the four-minute mark. Most of the material came from "Make Up The Breakdown" album with the occasional insertion of a track from "Knock Knock Knock." Shortly after the band abandoned the stage, the prompting claps of the audience urged them back up. The one-song encore, "Dust Down," was complete with a short pause and a perfectly orchestrated mid-air resumption. The night proved that the Hot Hot Heat are not only aptly named, but a great time.

Hot Hot Heat
Reading
April 15

Susan Sarandon talks cold, politics and her new CBS film 'Ice Bound'

By Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – News dispatches gripped the outside world: A doctor encamped on Antarctica was treating her own case of breast cancer.

Now in the CBS film "Ice Bound," Susan Sarandon portrays Dr. Jerri Nielsen, whose yearlong hitch at the Amundsen-Scott South Pole Station came with a challenge severe even for that desolate outpost: The lone physician among 41 "Polies," she was stranded with her progressive illness until a daring evacuation in October 1999 – months after she first discovered the lump.

Apart from the drama of Nielsen's self-administered therapy, "Ice Bound" (9 p.m. EDT Sunday) is absorbing for its window on a unique team of earthlings and the alien environment they occupy.

"Nobody ever left this place the same person they were when they got here," a colleague tells Nielsen shortly after she arrives.

Sarandon can see the truth in that. After four weeks' shooting at Toronto's frozen Lake Simcoe and on a chilly sound stage (where the research station set was erected) "I started to kind of understand the appeal of cutting yourself off from the world – the forced interdependence, the sort of nonexistence of time; the whole new set of serious rules.

"It was cold," she says during an interview, "but for once, I was dressed appropriately in a movie for the actual conditions – instead of running around in a spring outfit in the snow," as she recalls doing for her 1994 film "Safe Passage," set around Easter time.

Sarandon met the real Jerri Nielsen briefly during the shoot, but in portraying her relied on Nielsen's 2001 book, "Ice Bound," as well as taped interviews and footage of the medical procedures she underwent.

Despite the treacherous circumstances of the disease's onset and initial treatment, Nielsen is now cancer-free.

"That's an important message," says Sarandon, who hopes the film "will encourage people to take control of their own lives in terms of their health. Beyond that, the film reminds us that we're all dependent on each other – yet that, sometimes, it's so difficult for people to ask for help."

For the 56-year-old Sarandon, whose film credits include "Thelma & Louise," "Bull Durham" and an Oscar-winning performance in "Dead Man Walking," this new film addresses two themes she says recur throughout her career.

"One is the courage it takes to make yourself vulnerable by reaching out to other people" – as with Nielsen, who despite her staunch independence, learned to accept help from her comrades. "The other: becoming a protagonist in your own life, and in some way trying to have control over your decisions. The key to that is information."

Sarandon, who just last month co-starred in the Sci Fi Channel miniseries "Children of Dune," expresses hope that "Ice Bound" will spur women who otherwise might be among an estimated 40,000 victims of breast cancer in the United States this year. Far too many women, she says, are frightened by the specter of breast cancer to take even early measures that might help them prevent it.

Susan Sarandon opens up about her stance on the war in Iraq, her cancelled appearance at the Baseball Hall of Fame, and her new CBS movie "Ice Bound."

This reminds her of a timeless, all-pervasive human quandary: "Do you want to eat from the Tree of Knowledge and get kicked out on your own? Or do you want someone to take care of you – so you don't ask any questions or express an opinion?

"When people are frightened, they don't want to know about anything that's complicated or might scare them even more. Breast cancer is one of those things.

"A destabilized world is another," she adds, referring to the complicated – and in her view, insufficiently debated issues that led the U.S. into war against Iraq.

With her companion Tim Robbins, Sarandon is one of the entertainment industry's loudest voices against the war. This, she says, has made her "a lightning rod."

In March the United Way of Tampa Bay scrapped a fund-raising dinner at which Sarandon was to be the keynote speaker after the charity got three dozen complaints about her antiwar stance. And just last week, the Baseball Hall of Fame canceled a 15th anniversary celebration of "Bull Durham" because of antiwar statements by Robbins and Sarandon, the film's co-stars, who were scheduled to attend.

"It's painful, because I love my country, and I think it's part of being an American to have a debate. That's what keeps democracy healthy," She predicts this war and its repercussions will be part of American life for a long time to come – "so everyone's supposed to just be quiet now, and not ask about these things?"

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Is Looking For a
Bright, Talented, Multitasking Wizard!

Now Accepting Applications For:
'HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGER'

*Freshmen and Sophomores preferred
*Great Resume Builder
*10 hours per week

Applications Available in Room 113 Campus Center Basement. Attn: Mia Ferolito
-Please Bring Resume-

MAKING ART Making a Living
Wednesday workshops for emerging artists

• Art and the Law, April 23
• Art-Related Careers for Artists, April 30

Wednesdays, 4:30-6:30 p.m., Campus Center, UMass Amherst

Who should come?
• UMass and Area Students in the Arts
• Dancers
• Visual Artists
• Musicians
• Actors • Writers

No workshop fee, but for 5-College students, suggested donation $20. Call Arts Extension Service at 413-545-2360 or e-mail aes@contined.umass.edu to reserve a seat. Sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Amherst Arts Council.
www.umass.edu/aes

UMASS Arts Extension Service
Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Rental Office
1040 N.Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413.549.0145

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

Serving All Of Your Rental Needs
www.pufftonvillage.com

Baseball takes off

Continued from page 10

plined at the plate and get good pitches to hit, we can score a lot of runs."

Athas was the offensive star of the game for UMass, as the shortstop went four for six with a double, two runs scored and three runs batted in. Morgan finished the day three for five with two RBIs, while Twomley chipped in by going three for five with an RBI.

Right-hander Jason Lynch took the loss for the Crusaders to fall to 1-2, as the sophomore allowed five runs on eight hits in 5-2/3 innings.

For Crane, the win was his fourth of the season and the complete game his second.

"We need guys who can get batters out consistently, and [Crane] can do that," Stone said. "He knows his limits and abilities out there. He has some things to work on, but he has been throwing the ball well."

Winners of eight of their last nine, the Minutemen will play their first home Atlantic 10 series of the season this weekend when Rhode Island (14-17 8-4 A-10) comes to town.

The series, consisting of a doubleheader Saturday and a single contest Sunday, will serve as a battle for first place in the A-10 East Division. The Minutemen will likely look to the trio of sophomores Keith Doherty and Anthony Gallo and freshman Matt Torra to handle the mound duties against the Rams, as Stone again will put the emphasis on his young hurlers to produce.

"We need to continue to play smart ball, and that all starts on the mound," Stone said. "We need our pitchers to get guys out and establish a good rhythm, and that will carry over into the other parts of our game."

Saturday's first game is scheduled for 12 p.m. with the second to follow, while Sunday's first pitch is set for noon as well. All games will take place on Earl Lorden Field.

New Jersey ousts B's

Continued from page 8

After killing off most of the penalty, Grant Marshall forced Bruins defenseman Hal Gill to send the puck around the boards. Madden retrieved it above the left circle and his shot got through three players and past a screened Hackett.

Brodeur, who also had a 3-0 shutout in Game 3 and gave up just three goals in New Jersey's four wins, was the difference in the opening minutes when Boston outshot New Jersey 11-4. He made a nice toe save on Lee Goren and stopped Jozef Stumpel shortly after Madden scored.

The Bruins' best scoring chance came in the opening minutes of the second period, when Glen Murray missed an open net on the rebound of a shot by defenseman Jonathan Girard.

Axelsson's penalty wasn't the only foolish one. The Bruins took the first five penalties, and Hackett did a good job of keeping his team in the game.

Safe!

Junior Aisha Franke's pursuer meets her at second base, without the ball. Franke's .372 batting average leads the Minutewomen, who travel to Dayton, Ohio for a two-game set against the Flyers. The Maroon and White's 6-0 conference record puts it atop the Atlantic 10.

Runyan's tale

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

WATERTOWN, Mass. (AP) – It's days like this that Marla Runyan doesn't mind being known as a blind runner.

On the course, Runyan insists on being treated like any other athlete, even though she is legally blind due to a degenerative disease that began taking her sight at age 9. But here at the Perkins School for the Blind, Runyan is a natural inspiration for students.

"It isn't something I think about daily. It's who I am," she said at the school last week while she was in town for Monday's Boston Marathon. "But, obviously, there's another side to my story. And it can be helpful to other people, which is great."

Indeed, Runyan is more than a novelty.

She is the top female marathoner in the United States, and the only American man or woman with a chance to contend in Boston this year. She finished fourth last year at the New York City Marathon – her first ever – with the fifth-fastest time ever run by an American woman.

But she is more than a marathoner, too.

She has competed at everything from the high jump to the 26.2-mile distance, at the world championships, the Pan Am Games, the Olympics and, yes, the Paralympics. A former heptathlete, she has set an American record in the 800 meters and the 5,000.

"The vision thing is not even a story in my eyes," said her coach and husband, Matt Lonergan. "Anybody who knows anything about the sport doesn't pay attention to that. If they know the history of the sport, they know there's never been anybody who's done what Marla's done."

Still, what brought her to Perkins is the fact that she's done it despite Stargardt's, a macular disease that has left her with 20-1,000 vision. Even wearing contact lenses, which improve her eyesight to 20-300 on one side (20-400 on the other), she cannot read the big "E" at the top of the eye chart.

Runyan can see 10-15 feet without trouble, so she sees potential obstacles like potholes and trolley tracks in plenty of time to avoid stumbling over them when she runs. Keeping an eye on the other runners is not a problem, either.

"Seeing my competition is the easiest thing I do," she said. "It's easier if they're behind me."

For Boston, Runyan will be accompanied by a race official on a bicycle who will tell her about the course and her pace; her water bottle will be the first one on the table, so she doesn't have to search for it. Similar arrangements were made for her in New York.

"I'm not going to get any special accommodations," Runyan said. "For the most part, I'm just like everybody else."

It's a statement that is equally true on the course from Hopkinton to Boston and here at Perkins. The nation's oldest school for the blind, it counts among its former students Helen Keller and her teacher, Anne Sullivan. It is the birthplace of the Perkins Brailler, a typewriter that is the industry standard, manufactured here on a verdant campus in the Boston suburbs.

The school currently has 200 students, many of them with multiple handicaps. A few dozen of them awaited Runyan on Tuesday, sitting on a mat or in wheelchairs in the gymnasium where they play goal ball and race with scooters, the boundaries marked with raised tape so they know when they cross the finish line.

An ambassador for the school since she visited after the 2000 Olympic trials, Runyan knows to go tap the students when she calls on them. She knows to stand directly in front of them when they talk. And she knows that otherwise simple tasks can be a challenge. But the challenges can be the most rewarding for her.

"They have to work twice as hard," Runyan said. "They have to put in twice as much effort. Everything they do academically, I know I did in school."

On the track overlooking the gym floor, Runyan, Lonergan and four-time Boston winner Bill Rodgers take turns taking laps with the students, offering an elbow to guide them around the oval track. In many cases, the elite runners have to strain to keep the eager students from running ahead.

"We know that you are all very busy people and we appreciate your taking the time to talk to us," student council president Stephen Yerardi said, reading from a Braille speech. "Your experience has inspired all of us toward achieving our goals, regardless of our visual impairments."

Runyan told the students to make running a habit, challenging them to complete the marathon distance in a week. At 24 laps to the mile, they would have to run or walk around their indoor track more than 600 times; they applaud when she assigns the problem to them as math homework.

Interested in writing for sports? Come to The Collegian office in the Campus Center basement for our staff meeting on Monday at 4p.m.

From the students who brought you Haigis Hoopla...

new balance SoccerFest
April 27, 2003
Presented by the University of Massachusetts Sport Management Program

The Soccer Showdown
"We're putting the Show Down, so you Show Up"

UMASS Men's Soccer
2002 Atlantic 10 Champions
VS.
UNC Tar Heels
2001 National Champions

Sunday, April 27th at 12:30 PM
Rudd Field
Pre-Sale: $2 Kids, $4 Adults
Day of event: $3 Kids, $5 Adults
UMass students FREE with student ID

SPECIAL THANKS TO:

Soccer Tournament

Age Groups:

3 v 3 Tournament:
10 and under, 11-12, 13-14
$60 per team/max of 5 players

6 v 6 Tournament:
High school, college/adult, over 30
$120 per team/ max of 10 players

Separate men's and women's divisions Winners of each division receive free New Balance shoes

Registration deadline: Friday April 18th

For registration materials and more information, visit our website:
http://courses.umass.edu/nbsoccer

Registrations are on a first come, first serve basis

All participants in the tournament receive a free t-shirt, ticket to the Soccer Showdown, and entry into the New Balance FanZone

UMASS FOOD SERVICES · new balance · KAPLAN · The Coca-Cola Company

the Daily Collegian is
Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives for Fall 2003

All Majors and Classes Welcome to Apply
(current freshmen strongly encouraged to apply)

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement for more information

Devils trump Bruins

By TOM CANAVAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Martin Brodeur rebounded from a rare bad performance with his second shutout of this postseason as the New Jersey Devils eliminated the Boston Bruins with a 3-0 victory in Game 5 Thursday night.

John Madden scored a goal and set up two by Jamie Langenbrunner as the Devils made amends for their embarrassing first-round exit last year. Brodeur made 28 saves in recording his 15th career playoff shutout.

Devils	3
Bruins	0

Jeff Hackett had 28 saves for the Bruins, eliminated from the playoffs in the first round for the second straight year.

Brodeur's shutout came just two nights after the Bruins chased him to the bench, scoring five times on 24 shots in two-plus periods of a 5-1 victory in Game 4.

Boston was its own enemy in Game 5. It put a lot of pressure on Brodeur in the opening minutes, but never generated much offense after picking up five straight penalties in the first two periods. The first of those infractions led to Madden's first-period goal.

Madden, who limited Bruins superstar Joe Thornton to just one goal in the series, put New Jersey ahead with a power-play goal at 8:31. He set up Langenbrunner's insurance goal — a backhander in close at 7:41 of the third period — with a nice backhand pass.

Langenbrunner's fifth goal of the series went into an empty net with 52 seconds to play.

Despite dominating the start of the game, the Bruins fell behind 1-0 after P.J. Axelsson picked up a penalty for closing his hand on the puck in the Devils' zone.

Continued from page 10

Atlantic 10 Women's Lacrosse

2003 STANDINGS
(through games of April 15)

	Conference W	L	Pct	Overall W	L	Pct
St. Bonaventure	3	0	1.000	9	0	1.000
Temple	3	0	1.000	7	5	.583
Massachusetts	1	0	.750	7	5	.583
Duquesne	1	2	.600	9	4	.692
Richmond	2	2	.500	7	6	.538
La Salle	2	3	.400	2	10	.166
George Washington	1	4	.200	8	8	.500
Saint Joseph's	0	5	.000	3	9	.250

A-10 Baseball

2003 STANDINGS
(4/16)

	Conference W	L	T	Pct	Overall W	L	T	Pct
East
Rhode Island	8	4		.667	14	5		.800
Massachusetts	6	3		.667	11	10		.524
Temple	5	4		.556	11	10		.524
St. Bonaventure	4	4		.500	14	10		.583
Saint Joseph's	5	5		.455	11	14		.440
Fordham	1	8		.111	8	17		.320
West
Richmond	9	2	0	.818	21	8	0	.724
Duquesne	9	3	0	.750	17	16	0	.515
Xavier	7	4	0	.636	14	15	1	.609
La Salle	5	6	0	.455	12	14	0	.462
George Washington	3	7	0	.300	12	17	0	.414
Dayton	1	10	0	.091	7	25	0	.219

Atlantic 10 Softball

2003 STANDINGS
(thru games of April 15)

	Conference W	L	T	Pct.	Overall W	L	T	Pct.
Massachusetts	6	0	0	1.000	23	11	0	.676
Temple	7	1	0	.875	17	10	0	.531
Saint Joseph's	6	2	0	.750	14	7	0	.667
St. Bonaventure	4	2	0	.667	14	10	0	.583
Fordham	4	4	0	.500	25	13	0	.658
La Salle	3	5	0	.375	9	17	0	.346
Dayton	3	5	0	.375	16	15	0	.516
Rhode Island	2	7	0	.300	12	17	0	.415
George Washington	0	10	0	.000	2	23	0	.080

Men's Lacrosse Division I

No.	Name	Record	Points	Previous
1	Johns Hopkins	(9) 7-1	189	1
2	Princeton	7-2	183	2
3	Georgetown	(1) 8-0	181	3
4	Virginia	7-2	170	6
5	Maryland	7-2	166	5
6	Massachusetts	9-1	144	7
7	Syracuse	7-3	140	4
8	Rutgers	9-2	136	10
9	Cornell	7-3	104	11
10	UMBC	6-3	108	17T
11	Towson	8-4	92	9
12	North Carolina	5-5	88	8
13	Duke	7-5	77	12
14	Ohio State	6-2	72	14
15	Hofstra	6-4	54	16
16	Loyola	5-4	42	13
17	Army	6-5	33	nr/-
18	Penn State	4-5	26	nr/9
19	Notre Dame	7-4	20	nr/-
20	Yale	7-5	19	19

Men's Lacrosse ECAC

2003 Standings

Team	Conference W	L	Pct.	GF	GA	Overall W	L	Pct.	GF	GA
Georgetown	3	0	1.000	27	19	8	0	1.000	85	51
Rutgers	2	0	1.000	25	19	9	2	.818	118	83
Massachusetts	2	1	.667	31	28	9	1	.900	134	73
Penn State	2	2	.500	35	37	4	5	.444	98	89
UMBC	1	3	.250	38	43	6	3	.667	100	82
Navy	0	4	.000	24	32	4	6	.400	81	74

An Atlantic 10 weekend

FILE/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Kristin St. Hilaire readies for a shot near the goal. St. Hilaire and the Minutewomen battle Duquesne today.

Continued from page 10

opposing defenders.

"We need to keep an eye on her, she is a really strong girl with a hard shot...she is the definite leader of their offensive end," Bolduc said.

UMass will be putting defensive-minded Kelli Kurtz on Chevez. Most of this season Bolduc has relied on Kurtz to defend some of the most talented players in the nation.

"She is one of the better players on our defense, we put her against some strong players during the season," Bolduc said.

The Bonnies have played a lesser schedule than that of the Minutewomen, but have pulled out some impressive victories. This weekend is equally as important for the Bonnies, as they square off against Temple after the Maroon and White.

For all three teams this weekend represents a huge power struggle for top conference positioning going into the tournament. Whichever squad comes out on top of this weekend will be on top of the Atlantic 10 standings going into the last leg of the season.

Bolduc is excited about the next few games as she feels her team has proven to be among the elite squads in the conference.

"They like to be the hunted, we are no longer the hunter and we want to maintain that position," Bolduc said.

Coach fired

Continued from page 10

assistance of his son.

A concerned Lane approached trustees, only to be told it was an internal issue "and that (Robert) Wickenheiser could be accountable if the conclusions...were erroneous," the report said.

Monti said Lane had been forced to operate "in an environment with a president who was out of control."

Trustees chairman William Swan said the trustees were surprised to learn through the investigation just how involved the president had been in the basketball program.

"His enthusiasm for basketball finally caught up with him," he said.

The committee said it found no direct evidence indicating that van Breda Kolff knowingly allowed Terrell to play while ineligible. "However, the committee believes that van Breda Kolff was clearly a strong advocate for Terrell's eligibility during the period when the young man's eligibility was at issue in April through May 2002," according to the report.

UMass Weekend Schedule

TIME HOME VISITORS

Friday, Apr 18

Sport	Opp./Event	Location	Time
Women's Tennis	at A-10s	College Park, Md.	TBA
Women's Track	at Connecticut	Storrs, Conn.	3:30 PM
Women's Lacrosse	at Duquesne	Pittsburgh, Pa.	7:00 PM

Saturday, Apr 19

Sport	Opp./Event	Location	Time
Baseball	vs Rhode Island	Amherst, Mass.	12:00 PM
Baseball	vs Rhode Island	Amherst, Mass.	2:30 PM
Softball	at Dayton	Dayton, Ohio	3:00 PM
Softball	at Dayton	Dayton, Ohio	5:00 PM
Women's Tennis	at A-10s	College Park, Md.	TBA
Men's Track	at Connecticut	Storrs, Conn.	10:00 AM
Women's Crew	at Columbia	New Rochelle, N.Y.	1:00 PM
Men's Lacrosse	vs Georgetown	Amherst, Mass.	1:00 PM

Sunday, Apr 20

Sport	Opp./Event	Location	Time
Baseball	vs Rhode Island	Amherst, Mass.	12:00 PM
Women's Lacrosse	at St Bonaventure	St. Bonaventure, N.Y.	12:00 PM

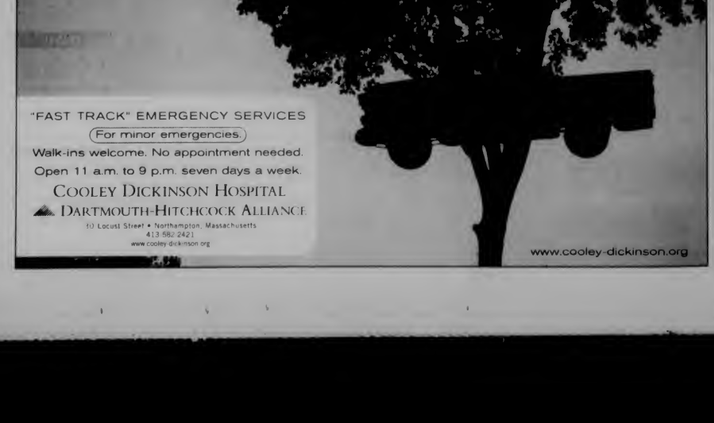
UMass Summer Session 2003

Over 200 credit courses in more than 40 academic departments–evenings, daytime, weekends, and online.

Summer Session I: June 2–July 10

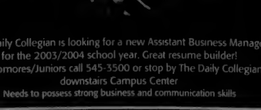
Summer Session II: July 14–August 20

And one-, two-, and three-week courses.



For a free catalog: call 545-2414 or e-mail contined@contined.umass.edu.

www.umass.edu/contined



Division of Continuing Education

UMassAmherst

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/18/03 - Thursday 4/24/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
NOLES (PG) 1:05 4:15 7:30 10:35*
MALIBU'S MOST WANTED (PG13) 1:30 4:55 7:40 10:05*
BULLETPROOF MONK (PG13) 1:15 4:10 7:00 9:30*
ANGER MANAGEMENT (PG13) 1:10 1:35 4:00 4:35 7:25 7:50 9:50 10:30*
PHONE BOOTH (R) 1:55 4:50 7:45 9:45
A MAN APART (R) 1:25 4:25 7:15 9:40
WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 1:50 4:30 7:25 10:15
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:10 9:55
THE CORE (PG13) 1:00 4:05 7:05 10:00
BASIC (R) 10:25
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:20
Coming 4/25/03
IDENTITY
THE REAL CANCUN CONFIDENCE
Senior Show 4/24/03
- HEAD OF STATE
* no passes/superpasses
• NO PASSES/NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

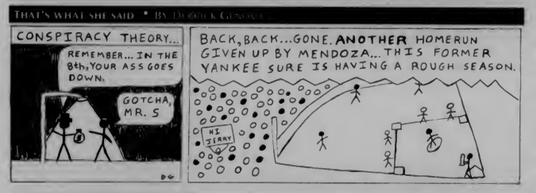
Interested in Business?

The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the 2003/2004 school year. Great resume builder! Sophomores/Juniors call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center
Needs to possess strong business and communication skills

www.EngravePhotos.com
We laser engrave your favorite photographs and wordson black marble!
Four Gift Sets:
(3"x3" $25)
(6"x6" $55)
(9"x9" $85)
(12"x12" $115)
Visit our website or call
(860)-742-6440
Samuel Press 44 Depot Road Coventry, CT 06238

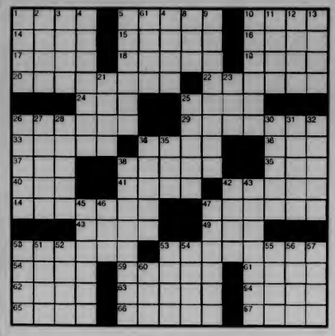
LESLIE HOOPER • BY KIMBERLY D. KRUCZKOWSKI

CONVERSATIONS IN THE DARK • BY LES



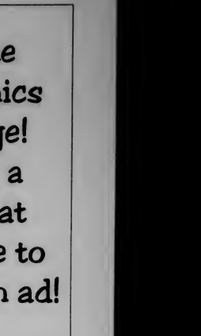
JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • BY MARK WEAVER

CONVERSATIONS IN THE DARK • BY LES



THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • BY DEREK GEORGE

CONVERSATIONS IN THE DARK • BY LES



ACROSS
1 Cyberspace fan
5 Type of statesman
10 Geologic feature
14 Yield territory
15 Abdul or Zaïre
16 Bleated whiskeys
17 Fails to keep up
18 Doctorate exams
19 Get down
20 Unusual
22 Fine cigar
24 Freud, to himself
25 Magnum or film
26 Playing marbles
29 Wing part
33 Fixed potatoes
34 Calzada cookies
36 Gladiator's hello
37 Jurist — Fortas
38 Low voices
39 Thousand slangily
40 Garland — Wood
41 Head hazards
42 Kudu cousin
44 Gumshoes, sometimes
47 Storm warnings
48 Four Corners state
49 "Mamma —"
50 Help pay
53 Digs up
58 Hulk wearer
59 College
61 Beery or Webster
62 Chimney
63 Wynonna's mom
64 Lira successor
65 Water the houseplants
66 Columbium: port
67 Attracted

DOWN
1 West Coast sch.
2 Musical chairs goal
3 Uptight
4 Loft
5 Geologic times
6 Zhivago's beloved
7 Twofold
8 House addition
9 Too much haste
10 Foulard kin
11 The Mammoth Hunters' heroine
12 Coal deposit
13 In Madrid
21 Like summer tea
23 Santa — Cal.
25 Finzy hairdos
26 Separate
27 Eva or Zsa Zsa
(Abba tune)

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

12-04-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

28 Fight locale
30 Silent's master
31 Happening
32 Tall stalks
34 Look embarrassed
35 LL.D. holder
38 Decking out
42 Lamb's pen name
43 Found out
45 Replanted
46 Fat letter
47 Aviator
Lamarr
50 Eccentric
51 Whodunit name
52 Sahy'
53 Put — (hassled)
54 Fictional captain
55 Excursion
56 Cottontail
57 Exhibition
60 Ms. West

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
No matter what you do somebody hates you

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Change your routine, do something different, spice up your life!

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Your wardrobe consists of only one color, people are starting to notice.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Do something to relax, put on some Grateful Dead and chill.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Go with your instincts, don't second guess yourself, it never works.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
When in doubt, just deny it. They can't prove anything.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't drink the water, fish mate in it.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Say something nice about yourself, you deserve it.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Your soulmate will walk by you today, and you won't even notice.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Don't be that kid who smells like playdough, no one likes that.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
We all know SPIRE sucks so stop complaining about it.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Hehehehe, just laugh about it. it's really not that bad.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I gave up Catholicism for Lent."
- Biz

The Comics Page! It's a great place to put an ad!

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

FRIDAY
- High: 31
- Low:12

SATURDAY
- High: 30
- Low: 15

SUNDAY
- High: 32
- Low: 7

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- New England Clam Chowder
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells
- Greek Style Tofu (vegetarian)
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- New England Clam Chowder
- Salmon with Miso Glaze
- Baked Salmon
- Veal Madeline
- Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan-Hicks
COPY EDITOR
Ferron Salniker
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION STAFF
Shannon Farrington / Sarah Lloyd

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WIN BACKSTAGE AND VIP Tickets to 2003 Civic Tour Sign up at UmassElement.com

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6601 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

ASPEN CHASE Newly remodeled 1 Bedroom, 1 Bath. All utilities included: heat, hot water, electric, basic cable and high speed internet! Located on bus route! Minutes to campus and town! Call or stop by to reserve an apartment! 256-0471

ALPINE COMMONS 4 Bedroom, 2 Baths, Fully appliances kitchen. Private Balconies. All utilities included heat, hot water, electric, high speed internet, basic cable and phone. On bus route, minutes from campus! Call or stop by to reserve an apartment! 256-0741

Sunderland lodge 1 bedroom Apt. on bus route $740/month includes utilities 665-6954

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug., or Sept First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlimohrealty.com 253-7879

Hobart Circle 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlimohrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Honda Civic DX 140K Great Condition Sound System $2800 OBO 413-262-8203

95 Geo Prism Purple 95K 5 Speed good condition $3000 OBO 413-665-8222

COMPUTERS

Lap Top $99 Pentium Two $99 We pay cash for laptops 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Summer FUN Life-TECH Ventures Live-in positions at residential summer camp in Charlton, MA. Available to anyone who honestly likes being with children. Call 800-443-8375 funtechventures.org

Moving Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for trips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS: Pennsylvania children's sleep-away camp. If you love children we have positions for Directors, Ass't Dir's, and Counselors for Tennis, Golf, Drama, Camping /Nature, High & Low Ropes, Gymnastics, Sports, Sailing, Water-skiing, Ceramics, Jewelry, Guitar, Aerobics, Self-Defense, Video, Piano, and Nurse (RN) Dates 6/19-8/16/03 On Campus Interviews arranged Call 1-800-279-8319 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

EMPLOYMENT

4/22/03 is the last day to contact the Legal Services Office about a Fall internship! Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal field required- training is provided. Contact Legal Services today 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Collegiate Entrepreneurs Inc. Looking for experience painters for full time summer work great pay. Fun atmosphere Call Jenna 66820 - Norton, Attleboro, Mansfield MA area only

Rent us your ears! $5 for half and hour just for listening 545-6932 or rwinters@student.umass.edu

Activate Best Summer Job in Town Shop late, work outdoors, cool people, cool boss. Great Issues! "protect our air and water "fight corporate polluters "defend public health "promote renewable energy Earn $4,000-5,000 this summer Call today, Start from now 413-594-9830

Technical Writer for Policy Analysis Consulting/Software firm. Resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fred@REMI.com

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors- Town of Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in elementary education is highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. old. $ range for both positions $8.19-9.48/hr; 35-40 hrs per week, June 30- Aug. 15 Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept. 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

WSI/Lifeguards The Town of Amherst, Department of Leisure Services and Supplemental Education (LSSE) Aquatics Program is now accepting WSI applications for summer 2003 season. All Applicants must possess current WSI and Lifeguard certifications. Previous experience preferred, $8.19-9.48 hr. Application deadline: 4/21. Applications are available from the Town Hall Human Resources Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Opportunity Employer

Economic / Business Development Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-1985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

For Sale Blue Couch and Chair 256-3166

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini FM06O Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS

Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

MISCELLANEOUS

Do you still swallow pills? Spray nutrients right into your mouth! www.25815811.myvitamist.com

www.advantagenutrition.com

MOTORCYCLE/SCOOTER/MOPED

2001 Suzuki GSXR600 Fast Powerful Motorcycle that will turn peoples' heads, and get your blood flowing 4500 miles, Black and Yellow Yoshimura Exhaust. Asking $6500 Call Marc 5086331172

ROOM FOR RENT

Reasonable 10 minutes to UMass. Large Quiet Comfortable furnished. For Male Grad/Professor 6/1 – 9/1 Full option. 413-549-1578

Two furnished rooms available $375.00, utilities included. Free cable, no lease. Call 253-3670

ROOMMATE WANTED

For Fall Semester on Main St. $340 plus utilities per month 256-4257

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING. Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

4 bedroom route 9 Hadley 584-2987

69 Townhouse Sublet June1st – August31st Room for 4 $950 per month or BO Call 549-0798

Puffton Sublet from June 1st. August 31st 3beds 2baths 1140 per month Call Mark 253-1479

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info@Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WANTED TO RENT

Furnished Summer Rental or House share Male, non-smoker, no pets Will pay up to $500.00 508-240-5069

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSWEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 18, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Explosion at Garber

Rivals GU, UM ready to battle

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Students heading home for Easter weekend today will miss a real treat tomorrow at Garber Field, as the Massachusetts lacrosse team takes on Georgetown at 1 p.m.

Any doubters of the entertainment factor of tomorrow's game may direct their concerns to Mr. Tom Fallon, who pulls no punches when it comes to the Hoyas.

"I hate Georgetown," said Fallon, who participated in game action for the first time in nearly a month and a half when he entered UMass' 11-6 win over Harvard on Wednesday. "I can't stand them. It's the worst team out there. You always think about UMass-Georgetown every year, and we couldn't hate each other any more."

UMass coach Greg Cannella, however, is a little more diplomatic when it comes to Georgetown.

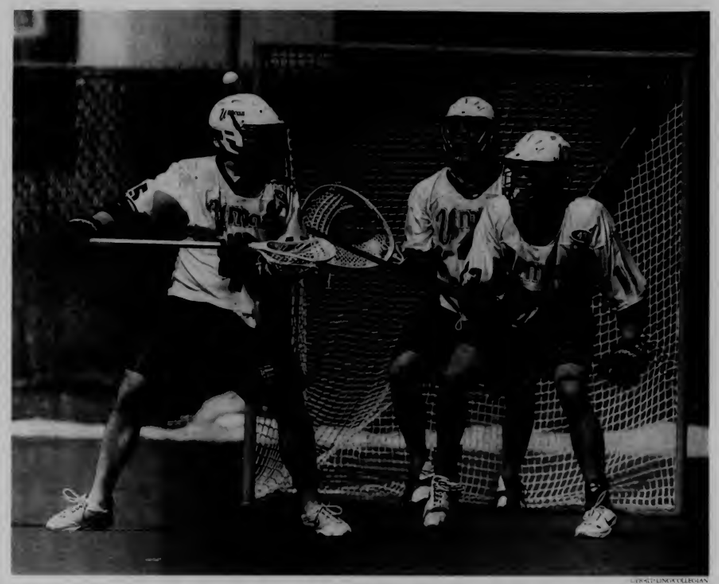
"Every game we play is the biggest game of the year," Cannella said, "whether it's Harvard on Wednesday, or Georgetown, or Syracuse next week, the next game is always the biggest game of the year for us."

The Hoyas are ranked No. 5 in the U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll, and received a first place vote this week. They are 8-0 this year, with wins coming against No. 10 Maryland-Baltimore County and No. 15 Duke. Georgetown also handed an 11-9 defeat to Penn State, which gave the Minutemen their only loss this year.

The formidable Georgetown attack is led by senior Mike Hammer (10 goals, 14 assists) who notched a goal and four assists in the Hoyas' 14-5 win over Loyola last Saturday.

The 6-foot-4 Fallon will once again spearhead the defense, and will likely be charged with keeping Hammer in check. In Fallon's absence, though, sophomore Matt Garcia has been impressive as the interim defensive leader. Garcia has grabbed at least one ground ball in nine games this season, including four against Brown on March 15, an 18-6 UMass win.

Of course, the game isn't likely to be devoid of scoring either, with intriguing matchups on both sides of the ball. Countering Hammer will be senior Kevin Leveille, who scored four goals against Harvard on Wednesday. But Georgetown's Kyle Sweeney, a 2003 Tewaaraton Trophy finalist, has clashed with Leveille for some exciting battles in the last few years.



Last year, the Minutemen upset the Hoyas – also ranked No. 3 at the time – to win the ECAC title. Leveille's four goals and 25 saves by goaltender Bill Schell, led the Minutemen to the 16-13 upset.

The Hoyas will come into UMass with a new starting goaltender, after the graduation of Scott Schroeder, who made eight saves in 24 shots in last year's meeting.

This year, manning the cage for the Blue and Gray is sophomore Rich D'Andrea. The Belle Mead, N.J. native owns a 6.31 GAA, and has stopped 67 of 117 shots faced.

Maroon and White midfielder Chris Fiore isn't too quick to pinpoint goaltending as a weakness for the Hoyas, though.

"I definitely think it will [make a difference] but I'm sure their backup goalie's just as good," Fiore said.

Sophomore Ryan Connolly (45) and junior Chris Gervat (13) use their heads to find the ball in front of goalie Bill Schell. Defense will be of utmost importance tomorrow, when the Minutemen take on the No. 3 Georgetown Hoyas at Garber Field.

Crane takes flight

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Mike Crane is making a pretty solid case for himself.

The sophomore right-hander, vying to become the ace of UMass coach Mike Stone's young corps of arms, went the distance against Holy Cross, allowing two earned runs on nine hits while striking out four as the Minutemen downed the Crusaders 13-5.

"Mike Crane is an effective pitcher," Stone said. "He locates his pitches well, has pretty good velocity and has command over all his stuff. He's been pitching well since Florida and he knows how to get college hitters out."

Holy Cross (8-17, 5-5 Patriot League) got to Crane early, taking a 2-0 lead after two innings. However, the Maroon and White offense came to life in the top of the third, as senior designated hitter Chris Morgan and junior second baseman Cullan Maumus both drove in runs.

The Minutemen (12-10, 6-3 Atlantic 10) scored again in in the fifth, sixth and seventh innings to up their advantage to 6-2. Senior first baseman Jeff Altieri and junior shortstop Mike Athas both smacked RBI doubles while sophomore centerfielder Jason Twomley drove home a run with a single.

After Holy Cross recorded a single run in the bottom of the seventh, the Minutemen put the game out of reach with three runs in the eighth and four more in the ninth. Athas drove in two with a single in the ninth, while Maumus, Morgan, senior catcher Tom Ellerbrook and junior third baseman Matt Reynolds all drove in runs in the latter innings.

"We win ballgames when we get guys on and consistently drive them in," Stone said. "When we're disci-

Continued on page 7

Junior Eric Chown (pictured) has provided valuable work this season, though sophomore Mike Crane is quickly earning the title of staff ace for the Minutemen. Chown's services may be called for this weekend against Rhode Island.

Formidable foes in store

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has its biggest weekend of the season coming up. The Minutewomen will face Atlantic 10 foes, Duquesne and St. Bonaventure, two of the more talented squads in the conference.

The Maroon and White's first challenge will be against Duquesne, which until yesterday was riding a five-game winning streak. UMass coach Carrie Bolduc is looking at the game as a measuring stick for the undefeated St. Bonaventure squad that slipped by the Lady Dukes, 14-12.

"This game definitely puts a ring in our ears about St. Bonnies," Bolduc said.

Duquesne's offense has been off and on all season as they have been relying on their efficient defensive unit, Bolduc also highlights the Lady Dukes' ability to shine down the stretch.

"They are definitely a second half team...we will have to focus on the first half to get ahead," Bolduc said. "We haven't lost a game when we're ahead at the half."

The Minutewomen have one of the strongest defensive units in the A-10 and will be looking to contain Duquesne's athletic offensive front. The Lady Dukes have four players that have been consistently scoring goals and have shown the ability to turn it on at any time.

"They have a nice moving motion, they really move the ball well," Bolduc said.

Leading the Duquesne attack are Ginger Flocco, Kelly Mulford, Laura App and Becca West. Flocco is currently leading all scorers with 40 goals on the season and has been the Lady Dukes' game-breaker this season.

The Maroon and White has been helped by the presence of goalie Cyndi Doyle. Doyle has been posting a good amount of saves and has been a wall behind an already dominant UMass defense.

"Doyle knows what to expect from Duquesne...St. Bonaventure will bring a different threat," Bolduc said.

St. Bonaventure poses an interesting challenge to the Maroon and White. The Bonnies were usually on the bottom of the A-10 until this season. Currently St. Bonaventure is one of only two undefeated teams in the country.

Coach Bolduc looks for the very young St. Bonaventure team to be similar to the talented Syracuse team for whom she played, after transferring from Temple.

"They are comparable to my Syracuse team, we were a young team and we had fun. We had nothing to lose," Bolduc said.

The playing surface will also be an adventure, as the Minutewomen have not played on natural grass this year.

"This will be our first grass game of the season which is a concern, we will practice on the field before we play to get a feel for it," Bolduc said.

St. Bonaventure exhibits a talented offense led by Kelly Chever. Chever has been able to put the ball in the goal, but has been causing more damage with her passing. She has accumulated most of her team's assists with 18 overall and has been a thorn in the sides of most

Continued on page 8

St. Bonaventure fires van Breda Kolff

By Carolyn Thompson
Associated Press

OLEAN, N.Y. (AP) – St. Bonaventure fired basketball coach Jan van Breda Kolff and accepted athletic director Gothard Lane's resignation Thursday, 1 1/2 months after the team boycotted games because it was punished for using an ineligible player.

The school also accepted the resignation of assistant coach Kort Wickenheiser, effective immediately.

The moves followed the release of an investigative committee's report on the men's basketball program which outlined "an over-involved president preoccupied with the success of the men's basketball program; a men's basketball coaching staff in constant conflict, real or perceived, with athletic department administrators; and an SBU men's basketball program in turmoil."

Van Breda Kolff declined to comment Thursday, saying he was waiting to hear from St. Bonaventure. "Nobody's given me any formal notification," he said.

Van Breda Kolff, Lane and Wickenheiser were placed on administrative leave in March, shortly after the Atlantic 10 sanctioned the team for using center Jamil Terrell. Terrell was declared ineligible for violating NCAA junior college transfer guidelines.

University president Robert Wickenheiser, the father of Kort, resigned at the demand of the board of trustees on March 9 after taking full responsibility for approving Terrell's transfer.

In the fallout, the team was stripped of six conference victories and barred from the postseason. St. Bonaventure players voted to boycott their final two games in protest, a move that cost the school more than $120,000 in fines.

In the report on the men's basketball program released Thursday, officials placed the heaviest blame on Robert Wickenheiser and found three violations of NCAA rules.

In listing those violations, the committee faulted Lane for barring the university's NCAA compliance officer, Barbara Questa, from interacting with the coaching staff and taking on compliance responsibilities himself.

The move "resulted in a flawed compliance system that did not insure that members of the men's basketball staff were following NCAA rules," the report said.

The other two violations involved the approval of Terrell's eligibility and the intervention of the Wickenheisers in allowing Terrell to receive a "W" for a withdrawal from a Spanish class past the deadline. The change kept Terrell's grade point average high enough to avoid academic probation.

"The issue is not the grade change," the university's interim president, the Rev. Dominic Monti, explained. "The issue is that not every kid has access to the president to get the grade change."

All of those tenninated were interviewed by the committee at length along with more than a dozen others, the committee said.

Terrell, who transferred last year after two seasons at Coastal Georgia Community College in Brunswick, Ga., was ruled ineligible because he didn't have an associate's degree. He earned a certificate in welding at his former school.

Committee chairman Jack McGinley said Terrell had done nothing improper. "He's a fine young man and that needs to be said," McGinley said.

The report detailed a series of events that began with a determination by Questa that Terrell was ineligible to compete at St. Bonaventure. Ultimately, Robert Wickenheiser overruled the finding, which was relayed by Lane, with the

Continued on page 8

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 121

Fencing team proves its worth

The team talks of the challenging road to the top

The University of Massachusetts fencing team practices one of the three different fencing styles. The team recently became the co-champions at the first ever National Collegiate Club Fencing Championships.

By Barbara Lotto
Collegian Staff

It is a sport where you won't find more than a couple dozen people in the audience at meets. Participants dressed in white body suits spring forward and back with precise motions: shuffling, lunging, prancing and jabbing. Their facial features can't be distinguished through their wire-mesh masks. And they yield weapons – three-foot-long swords.

The University of Massachusetts Fencing Team may not attract the largest crowds or provide the most attractive uniforms compared to other sports on campus, but it makes up for it in its successful, competitive reputation.

To continue their rewarding year, the UMass men's and women's fencing teams finished respectively as co-champions and runners-up at this years first-ever National Collegiate Club Fencing Championships held at the University of Florida in Gainesville. They also claimed the title of the Top Overall Six-Weapon Team.

The UMass men share the National Championship title with Northwestern University. The women missed out on the top spot to the host University of Florida team.

There are about 50 members on the UMass team, which Head Coach Brad Baker considers fairly large compared to other schools. He said there were only 18 fencers on the team when he was a member himself four years ago, so membership has increased dramatically since then.

"Back then UMass was very bad," Baker said. He explained that was the second or third year in a row that both the men's and women's teams lost to everyone except for Boston University.

"Yes, it's fun to go and fence, but it's even more fun if you go and fence and win," Baker said.

Baker attributes the rapid growth of the team to a successful year in which many members stayed with the sport.

"The nice thing about having 50 people [on the team] is that we're constantly developing new fencers," he said. "It's been growing a lot, and it also gets reflected in the quality. If you have more people to practice against, you're going to get better."

Getting to the Top

Reaching such high marks at the National Championships "definitely helped to raise awareness of the team on campus," Baker said. The team also raises awareness of the sport by providing fencing demonstrations for various events on campus.

The team had enough money to cover the trip to Florida initially because it had been fundraising since the beginning of the year, said fencer Kyle MacQuarrie, a senior biochemistry and psychology double major. The team continues to hold a variety of fundraisers as a precautionary move "so the team wouldn't be in the red in the future." The trip cost the team approximately $8,500.

Unlike many other sports like basketball, football, gymnastics or swimming, fencing is an activity for people of all ages. MacQuarrie has witnessed first-hand that there is no "peak" age for the sport. He has recently competed against people ranging in age from 11 to 50.

"It's not going to be, 'You're out of college and now the best you can do is pick up games at the local Y...'" Baker said. "You really can compete at the national level for decades after any other sport is done."

This is partly due to the fact that the sport is not all about athletics. There is a huge mental component to the game.

"You need to have the physical skills, but what really separates the good fencers from the great fencers is the mental game," Baker said. "When you get to a certain level everybody can do the physical thing, but it's really deciding what you want to be doing that's going to make the difference in who wins bouts."

The Logistics of Fencing

The three weapons and styles of fencing – sabre, epee and foil – differ in ways that accommodate distinctive strengths, weaknesses and abilities of the players. But Baker made it clear that anyone can fence any style.

"Each of the different weapons tends to have a different stereotypical build," Baker said. "You can be very good at any of them without having any of the stereotypical builds and you can have the stereotypical build of one weapon and do very well with another weapon."

Retracting cords travel up the fencers' backs and sleeves to attach their weapons to stationary objects on the floor, called reels. When a sword comes in contact with a fencer's metal jacket (called a lame), a light and beeping signal is triggered on a connected box on the floor to indicate a touch.

Fencing and its Followers

When asked how Baker thought the general public perceived the sport of fencing, he replied with the words "swashbucklers" and "theatrical swordplay." He said the sport is much more popular in Europe, especially France, where there is an hour-long fencing show televised weekly.

"The U.S. is getting better. We just recently really started getting international results," Baker said, as he told of two young American fencers who made history within the last few years. One,

Continued on page 3

A member of the UMass fencing team practices his skills.

Proposed casino plan a bad idea according to gambling analyst

By Jesse Hirsch
Collegian Staff

As Massachusetts faces an unprecedented $5.3 billion budget deficit for the upcoming year, one of the solutions touted by Governor Mitt Romney and many Beacon Hill legislators is the legalization of slot machine parlors across the state.

Robert Goodman, author of the gambling analysis book "The Luck Business" and former director of the U.S. Gambling Research Institute said that he thinks the risks of legalizing gambling outweigh the benefits. Goodman, who is also a Hampshire College professor, has analyzed extensive research on the effects of gambling in many states.

"Massachusetts is now going through what many other states have already faced," said Goodman. "Whenever a city or state has economic problems, very often politicians turn to gambling as a way to bail them out. Go back 70 years to Las Vegas and Nevada and you see gambling coming in during the Great Depression."

Advocates for legalized gambling in Massachusetts have drafted a proposal for a five-year trial run involving four slot machine parlors across the state, each with a projected annual revenue of $50 million. Professor Goodman warned that this is only a part of the whole picture.

"In Massachusetts, as in many other states, all you're hearing is about the revenues coming in, and how that would help with the budget. But no one has done a cost-benefit analysis, which would counter the revenues with the expenses," Goodman said. "You would never go to the IRS at the end of the year and say 'This is how much money I made' without putting in your expenses. But this is exactly what this state is doing; it's a fool's gamble."

He then went on to explain what these expenses are.

"First there is the toll these slot parlors would take on the lottery system, which we've found can be up to a 50% annual cut in revenues. But even larger than that is the cost of gambling addiction."

Goodman was careful to make the distinction between the harm a gambling addict causes himself and his family and the larger economic impact they have on their community.

"Typically a problem gambler runs out of money, chases his losses, borrows money, doesn't pay it back, then will turn to white-collar crime such as workplace embezzlement and credit card fraud. When you tally the outstanding debts, costs to other people, and the criminal justice costs of finding and prosecuting these people, we found that a very low estimate for what these problem gamblers cost a state annually is about $13,000."

The question, then, is what the cost could be to Massachusetts if slot machine parlors are legalized.

"When gambling is legalized in a state, the percentage increase of gambling addicts is roughly 3-5%," Goodman said. "Let's estimate low and say Massachusetts would see an increase of 1%. With an adult population of about 4,000,000, this is 400,000 people. If these addicts cost the state even just $10,000 a year, that's an annual cost of four hundred million dollars! Do the math."

With projected revenues from the slot machine proposal tallying at about $200,000,000 a year, the costs and benefits would seem to be at odds, according to Goodman.

Some people have questioned whether such a limited form of legalized gambling would even be successful.

State Rep. Stephen Kulik, D-Worthington, recently stated, "I would question how viable it would be for companies to come in and invest the capital to create these video slot parlors, if they only have five years."

Goodman called this suggestion nonsense.

"Considering how many 'limited' proposals I've seen in the various states we researched, this is one of the biggest misconceptions people have. Consistently, the states agree to pass something like this, where there are a limited number of slot machines for a limited time period. But it never remains this way."

"Once the states start seeing revenues coming in, they quickly become dependent on this income. Then the operators go to the state and say 'Look, we're making good money, we should do this, that, and the other thing,' and the states invariably expand the form of legalized gambling," Goodman explained. "In Delaware, parlors limited to 1,000 slot machines each soon increased to 2,500. In Iowa, riverboat tourist cruises with supposedly only 40% slot machines are now permanently docked casinos. The list goes on and on, and there isn't a casino company that wouldn't jump at the opportunity to be involved."

In Massachusetts, where one or two slot machine parlors are proposed on the Western side of the state, the proposal includes housing some slot machines at race tracks as well as creating 4 parlors exclusively for slot machines. These slot parlors would have no alcohol, food, or other frills associated with the lucrative casinos Foxwoods and Mohegan Sun.

But Goodman sees this as short-lived.

"The gaming lobby is consistently the most powerful lobbying power in state politics once they get their foot in the door. It would only be a matter of time before all these limitations are abandoned."

The state House of Representatives plans to debate a range of legalized gambling proposals today in the legislature. The outcome is still in question, but many see legalized gambling in Massachusetts as a foregone conclusion.

"In all probability, there will some form of legalized gambling in [the upcoming year's] state budget," Senator Mike Knapik, R-Westfield, said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

EMBEDDED ARE WAR JOURNALISTS OBJECTIVE?
PAGE 4

A SEAMLESS BLEND
NORTH MISSISSIPPI ALL STARS SHAKE UP NORTHAMPTON
PAGE 5

G-DOWN'D
MINUTEMEN KNOCK OFF PREVIOUSLY UNDEFEATED HOYAS
PAGE 10

Bush celebrates success of the War in Iraq

By Jennifer Loven
Associated Press

CRAWFORD, Texas (AP) – President Bush, basking in the success of the war in Iraq and a long getaway at his beloved central Texas ranch, returns to Washington ready to promote his embattled tax cut plan and other domestic priorities.

On Sunday, speaking to reporters after attending Easter services at Fort Hood, an Army post a short helicopter ride from the Prairie Chapel Ranch, Bush looked ahead to a non-war agenda.

"I will continue doing what I have been doing ... working on our economy and working to modernize the Medicare system," he said.

"Then I will continue to work to make the world a more peaceful place," he added, without offering specifics. "The United States is a powerful country, and one of the things we ought to do is use our power to make the world more peaceful and more free."

The president offered optimistic outlooks for a wide range of thorny foreign policy matters facing his administration – from anti-U.S. demonstrations in postwar Iraq, concerns that Syria is helping fugitive former senior Iraqi officials and a dangerous continuing nuclear standoff with North Korea.

"It's a glorious day," Bush declared on Christianity's highest holiday.

He had remained out of sight since Wednesday, when he arrived here from a quick stop in St. Louis to talk about the Iraq war and push his proposed tax cuts. He was joined in celebrating Easter by his wife, parents, twin daughters and mother-in-law.

Other family members, a few unidentified friends and national security adviser and confidant Condoleezza Rice were also among those welcomed to the ranch, where the president spent his weekend as he usually does here: exercising, chopping cedar, doing "home projects, a little fishing."

"Nothing better than fishing with your dad, and Barney," his dog, he said.

At Fort Hood, which sent many of its troops to Iraq, Bush met briefly with two former prisoners of war rescued in Iraq a week earlier.

"I am particularly grateful that these two men were with us today. I thank God for their lives," he said outside the chapel, flanked by Chief Warrant Officers David S. Williams and Ronald D. Young Jr., helicopter pilots who had returned to the base only hours earlier from Germany.

In remarks on major foreign policy concerns, Bush said:

– Syria seems to be heeding American

Continued on page 3

President Bush and first lady Laura Bush pose with Chief Warrant Officer Ronald D. Young Jr., left, and Chief Warrant Officer David S. Williams, right, both former POW's, after attending Easter church services at the 4th Infantry Division Memorial Chapel, Sunday in Fort Hood, Texas.

police log

SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 2003

12:24 a.m. University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) forces responsible for liquor law violations near the Berkshire Dining Commons in Southwest Circle. The parties were advised to leave campus and were issued camera citation documents.

2:09 a.m. A traffic stop on Lot 7 on Massachusetts Avenue resulted in the arrest of Stewart Greene, 18, of 24 Hemlock St. in Roxbury, Mass. Greene was charged with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license and was issued a citation to appear.

3:11 a.m. A vandalized mailbox at 4 Butterfield Terrace in Coolidge Tower on Massachusetts Avenue was reported.

4:46 a.m. A disorderly person was reported in Worthington Tower. Jason Sanborn, 24, of 1040 N. Pleasant St. in Amherst, was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

10:11 a.m. A theft was reported in Baker Hall on Commonwealth Drive. The Amherst Police Department (APD) reported that a bicycle and computer were stolen.

5:40 p.m. The UMPD arrested a warrant in Coolidge Tower. Edward Baum Gaudner Metellus, 25, of 75 Norway Ave. in Framingham, Mass. Metellus was arrested on charges of trespassing.

10:45 p.m. A traffic stop on Southwest Mall resulted in the arrest of Angel J. Fuentes, 19, of 415 Halstead Avenue in Mamaroneck, N.Y. Fuentes was charged with operating a motor vehicle under the age of 21.

Warrant carried out in Coolidge dormitory

Numerous incidents of theft and vandalism reported

compiled by Dan Lamothe

SUNDAY, APRIL 13

1:25 a.m.: One window was broken in Mackimmie Hall in a disturbance that was reported.

2:10 a.m.: A disturbance was reported in Coolidge Tower. A responding officer reported that it was a verbal dispute.

3:14 a.m.: A domestic disturbance was reported in Coolidge Tower. Eric Anthony Frias, 18, of 16 Delano St. in Dartmouth, Mass., was arrested and charged with assault and battery.

11:03 p.m.: A purse was reported missing from Patterson Hall.

MONDAY, APRIL 14

1:31 a.m.: Police responded to vandalism in lot 50 near Hampshire DC. Matthew T. Sullivan, 22, of 136 Sea St. in Hyannis, Mass., was arrested and charged with destruction of property valued at more than $250 and malicious disorderly conduct.

1:41 a.m.: A report of people shooting off fireworks on the east side of Baker Hall was made.

4:48 a.m.: The ice cream vending machine on the 12th floor of John Adams Tower was broken into.

8:05 a.m.: A traffic stop on University Drive resulted in the arrest of Baum Gaudner Metellus for the second time in a week. Metellus was not to be allowed on campus again and was charged with trespassing.

10:23 a.m.: A caller reported that she had an altercation with a member of a group that set up an anti-abortion demonstration on the Student Union lawn outside of Earthfoods market.

3:56 p.m.: A bicycle was reported stolen from Field Hall some time between April 13 and April 14.

4:17 p.m.: A rock was reported thrown through a window in Fernald Hall some time over the weekend.

5:26 p.m.: An oscilloscope was reported stolen from the Merrill Science Center.

5:53 p.m.: An overhead projector was reported stolen from Goodell Library.

5:55 p.m.: A Brown and Sharpe caliper in a red starlet box was reported stolen from the Lederle Research Tower.

TUESDAY, APRIL 15

3:23 a.m.: An officer noted that a driver's side mirror on an automobile in lot 22 on University Drive was damaged.

7:48 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Cashin Hall. A request was made for a resident who passed out, but who was alert and conscious at the time of the call.

8:17 a.m.: Automatic Laundry reported that there was damage done to the UCard system in the basement of Hamlin Hall on N. Pleasant Street. Wires were cut in the rear of the laundry machines, causing $500 in damage.

9:54 a.m.: Six items were reported stolen from Tobin Hall, including two Olympus BH2 cameras and a Zeiss Neofluar camera.

10:17 a.m.: Theft of a toner cartridge for a network printer was reported in Hasbrouck Laboratory. The incident occurred sometime between April 10 and April 14.

2:33 p.m.: A bicyclist was reported hit by car on N. Pleasant Street. Both the Amherst Police Department (APD) and AFD responded. The bicyclist sustained minor injuries and APD handled the incident.

3:05 p.m.: Parts of a desktop computer were reported stolen from Tobin Hall.

4:55 p.m.: A report of a mulch fire on the south side of South College was reported.

11:26 p.m.: Police investigated a noise complaint and arrested Daniel McDonald, 18, of 1649 N. Brookfield Rd. in Oakham, Mass. McDonald was arrested for possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16

12:22 a.m.: Police investigated three suspicious males near Grayson Hall doing something with fire. After investigation, the officer confirmed that they were having an outdoor cookout.

3:28 p.m.: AFD responded to a fire alarm in Van Meter Hall. The alarm reportedly sounded because of cookies burning in the basement. AFD remained on the scene to vent out the basement.

11:10 p.m.: Fifty wooden crosses that were a part of an anti-abortion protest outside of the Student Union were smashed.

THURSDAY, APRIL 17

12:07 a.m.: Four suspicious white males were reported to be walking around between the second and the third floor of Field and Grayson Hall. All four were off campus students who did not belong in the buildings.

12:49 a.m.: An officer checked on an intoxicated person and placed them into protective custody.

1:35 a.m.: A report of a group shooting off fireworks on the west side of Gorman Hall was made.

2:15 a.m.: Housing Services reported that someone was trying to gain access to the roof of Van Meter Hall.

10:54 a.m.: The University Store reported that someone bought a computer with a bad check.

1:22 p.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Pierpont Hall. A caller asked for assistance with a male who passed out in the second floor men's bathroom.

2:52 p.m.: A bike was reported stolen from the bike rack at the Student Union some time the day before.

5:43 p.m.: A Nikon lens valued at $3800 was reported stolen from Morrill Science Center III.

8:41 p.m.: Police responded to liquor law violations in lot 50 on Kennedy Road and arrested Nicholas E. Ames, 20, of 90 Ivy St. in Brookline, Mass. Ames was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21 and possession of a false Registry of Motor Vehicles document.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Sean Costello Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Brandon McNutt Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marry Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Like it Cheap & Easy?

Spending $100 at Retail gets you...

Grand Theft Auto: Vice City (PS2) $49.99
Caddyshack DVD $19.95
King of Torts by John Grisham $27.95

Spending $100 at Half.com gets you MORE!

Grand Theft Auto: Vice City (PS2) $24.99
Tom Clancy's Ghost Recon (Xbox) $29.99
Prey by Michael Crichton $1.89
Jackass DVD $12.58
Pearl Jam: Ten $2.20
Caddyshack DVD $10.88
Coldplay: A Rush of Blood... $8.29
The Jester by James Patterson $7.85

$5 off $20 purchase*
Enter promo code "UMASS1" in your shopping cart
Coupon Expires 5/25/03

half.com by ebay

*First time buyers

Fencing team takes home Championship

Continued from page 1

a recent college graduate from New York rose to be the best fencer in the world, and the other, a sophomore at Yale, placed second in the world in women's sabre.

When asked what kind of an audience one might find at regular fencing meets, Baker responded with a smirk, "At most of them, there isn't one. You'll get parents, you'll get interested alums who are still in the Boston area, you'll get fencers from the various schools, but it's not really a spectator sport." He said the championship audience was much the same.

COMPLICATIONS

Tyler Jacobson, the president of the team and the women's foil captain, said it was expected there would be some mistakes in running such a large tournament for the first time, but it was far more than the team had expected. "There were complications that resulted in a delay in the start times. The refs didn't show up on time. And they had massive problems with how they tallied the results from the day before."

Besides facing complications during competition, Jacobson said the team had problems with its flights, had to cram 28 people into two rental vans once in Florida, and came back to Massachusetts where the snow was steadily falling. But the team was able to enjoy some down time in Florida before it headed back home to the cold and dreary weather. It joined the Smith College fencers for a pool party after the competition.

REALIZING THEIR POTENTIAL

"I think that we had very high expectations going into it but the ability of fencing was even better than had been expected. The team fenced amazingly and really united," Jacobson said.

MacQuarrie also reflected on his performance. "It was a culminating fencing experience for me," he said. "It was my last competition so it was a big deal."

MacQuarrie said it wasn't long before the UMass fencers realized they belonged to the dominant team in the competition.

"It's an uphill battle the entire way," he said, "and it was nice to see that we were the uphill battle for other people this time around."

Baker said that almost all of the fencers on the team learned to fence when they came to UMass, so upperclassmen tend to have significantly more experience than the freshman or sophomores on the team. But the good news for the team is that virtually all members will continue to fence until they graduate.

WHAT NOW?

The team will take a big hit when seven seniors from the team graduate this year, most of which are starters. Baker expects to lose about the same number of members next year. This is a drastic increase from the last two years when the team said farewell to a total of three fencers.

Despite a recent ankle injury that put her out of practice and old torn ligaments in her wrist as a result of seven years participating in the sport, Jacobson commented on her future fencing plans with reassurance. "I plan to keep doing it," she said. "I'll always fence."

MacQuarrie said he will be taking two years off before grad school while he hunts around for lab jobs. He also plans to continue fencing after graduation in the Boston area.

The National Collegiate Club Fencing Championships is a two-day event for club schools, or schools where the fencing team is a Registered Student Organization (RSO). It is the top intercollegiate competition for non-varsity (NCAA) teams, according to a recent press release.

Earlier this year, the UMass Fencers took first place at the 2003 New England Fencing Championships.

The team is done competing for the season, but will keep practicing until academic finals are over. The fencers enthusiastically anticipate competing in next year's National Championships, to be held much closer to home at the University of New Hampshire.

Baker is eager to continue coaching the team again for his fourth year in a row. He fenced on behalf of the UMass team as a graduate student in the 1998-1999 season. Prior to that, he served on the varsity team for four years at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Bush celebrates success of war

Continued from page 1

demands for cooperation against Saddam Hussein's defunct regime in neighboring Iraq. Lowering administration rhetoric that had led to speculation that Syria could become the next U.S. military target, he said:

"There's some positive signs. They're getting the message that they should not harbor Baath Party officials, high-ranking Iraqi officials."

– Saddam, if still alive, should "not pop his head up" and said anti-U.S. demonstrations led by religious leaders in Iraq do not worry him. "They couldn't express their opinions before we came. Now they can," Bush said. "I've always said democracy is going to be hard."

– Diplomatic pressure has a "good chance" of succeeding in persuading North Korea to end its nuclear weapons-development programs during upcoming multinational talks. China, Japan and South Korea have joined the United States in opposition, and the president cited that unanimity of purpose – if not of strategy – as reason for optimism.

Bush's late-afternoon return to Washington on Monday leaves his public schedule clear for the rest of the day and the morning's annual Easter Egg Roll on the White House lawn without its traditional presidential host.

Instead, Lynne Cheney, wife of Vice President Dick Cheney, was tapped to greet about 12,000 people – all members of military families due to security concerns – invited to the event.

Later this week, Bush is due to leave Washington again – this time for Ohio, according to a senior Republican official there. It's part of a White House plan to give the president a heavier travel schedule so he can refocus on domestic priorities and visit politically strategic states in advance of the 2004 elections.

Flying High

An Associate Professor of the Geoscience Department tests out a prototype stratospheric balloon that is designed to follow an air mass. Attached to the balloon is a payload recovery glider that is currently under development.

www.dailycollegian.com

Ucard
U Can Get Credit Too!
Swipe your Ucard to purchase any vended Coca-Cola product, and you are automatically entered to WIN $100, $50, $25, or $10 credit on Your Ucard!
Megan Adams won $100!
GO UMASS !!!

Rental Office
1040 N.Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413.549.0145
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving All Of Your Rental Needs
www.pufftonvillage.com

General Electric
Price Waterhouse Coopers
NHL Corporation
MBNA Financial
State Street Bank

Q: What do these companies have in common?
A: Former Collegian Accounting Clerks

The Collegian is now accepting applications for Accounting Clerk
Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, with your resume for more information.

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967

police log

SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 2003

12:24 a.m.: University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) forces responded to liquor law violations near the Berkshire Dining Common on Southwest Circle. The parties were advised to leave campus and were mailed campus trespass documents.

2:09 a.m.: A traffic stop in lot 71 on Massachusetts Avenue resulted in the arrest of Shaun F. Greene, 19, of 2A Herman St. in Roxbury, Mass. Greene was charged with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license and with a motor vehicle lights violation.

2:11 a.m.: A smashed mirror in a bathroom in Coolidge Tower on Massachusetts Avenue was reported.

2:56 a.m.: A domestic disturbance was reported in Washington Tower. Buntheoun Yath, 24, of 1040 N. Pleasant St. in Amherst, was arrested and charged with assault and battery.

10:35 a.m.: A fire was reported in Brown Hall on Eastman Lane. The Amherst Fire Department (AFD) reported that a bookcase and counter fire were extinguished.

3:40 p.m.: The UMPD carried out a warrant in Coolidge Tower, arrested Baum Gaudner Metellus, 23, of 32 Norway Ave. in Trenton, N.J. Metellus was arrested for undisclosed reasons.

8:51 p.m.: A traffic stop in Southwest Mall resulted in the arrest of Jorge L. Tajardo, 19, of 415 Halstead Avenue in Mamaroneck, N.Y. Tajardo was charged possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Warrant carried out in Coolidge dormitory

Numerous incidents of theft and vandalism reported

compiled by Dan Lamothe

SUNDAY, APRIL 13

1:25 a.m.: One window was broken in Mackimnie Hall in a disturbance that was reported.

2:10 a.m.: A disturbance was reported in Coolidge Tower. A responding officer reported that it was a verbal dispute.

3:14 a.m.: A domestic disturbance was reported in Coolidge Tower. Eric Anthony Frias, 18, of 16 Delano St. in Darmouth, Mass., was arrested and charged with assault and battery.

11:03 p.m.: A purse was reported missing from Patterson Hall.

MONDAY, APRIL 14

1:51 a.m.: Police responded to vandalism in lot 50 near Hampshire DC. Matthew T. Sullivan, 22, of 136 Sea St. in Hyannis, Mass., was arrested and charged with destruction of property valued at more than $250 and malicious disorderly conduct.

1:41 a.m.: A report of people shooting off fireworks on the east side of Baker Hall was made.

4:48 a.m.: The ice cream vending machine on the 12th floor of John Adams Tower was broken into.

8:05 a.m.: A traffic stop on University Drive resulted in the arrest of Baum Gaudner Metellus for the second time in a week. Metellus was not to be allowed on campus again and was charged with trespassing.

10:23 a.m.: A caller reported that she had an altercation with a member of a group that set up an anti-abortion demonstration on the Student Union lawn outside of Earthfoods market.

3:58 p.m.: A bicycle was reported stolen from Field Hall some time between April 13 and April 14.

4:17 p.m.: A rock was reported thrown through a window in Fernald Hall some time over the weekend.

5:28 p.m.: An oscilloscope was reported stolen from the Morrill Science Center.

5:53 p.m.: An overhead projector was reported stolen from Goodell Library.

5:55 p.m.: A Brown and Sharpe caliper in a red starlet box was reported stolen from the Lederle Research Tower.

TUESDAY, APRIL 15

3:23 a.m.: An officer noted that a driver's side mirror on an automobile in lot 22 on University Drive was damaged.

7:48 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Cashin Hall. A request was made for a resident who passed out, but who was alert and conscious at the time of the call.

8:17 a.m.: Automatic Laundry reported that there was damage done to the UCard system in the basement of Hamlin Hall on N. Pleasant Street. Wires were cut in the rear of the laundry machines, causing $500 in damage.

9:54 a.m.: Six items were reported stolen from Tobin Hall, including two Olympus BH2 cameras and a Zeiss Neofluar camera.

10:17 a.m.: Theft of a toner cartridge for a network printer was reported in Hasbrouck Laboratory. The incident occurred sometime between April 10 and April 14.

2:33 p.m.: A bicyclist was reported hit by car on N. Pleasant Street. Both the Amherst Police Department (APD) and AFD responded. The bicyclist sustained minor injuries and APD handled the incident.

3:05 p.m.: Parts of a desktop computer were reported stolen from Tobin Hall.

4:55 p.m.: A report of a mulch fire on the south side of South College was reported.

11:26 p.m.: Police investigated a noise complaint and arrested Daniel McDonald, 18, of 1649 N. Brookfield Rd. in Oakham, Mass. McDonald was arrested for possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16

12:22 a.m.: Police investigated three suspicious males near Grayson Hall doing something with fire. After investigation, the officer confirmed that they were having an outdoor cookout.

3:28 p.m.: AFD responded to a fire alarm in Van Meter Hall. The alarm reportedly sounded because of cookies burning in the basement. AFD remained on the scene to vent out the basement.

11:10 p.m.: Fifty wooden crosses that were a part of an anti-abortion protest outside of the Student Union were smashed.

THURSDAY, APRIL 17

12:07 a.m.: Four suspicious white males were reported to be walking around between the second and the third floor of Field and Grayson Hall. All four were off campus students who did not belong in the buildings.

12:49 a.m.: An officer checked on an intoxicated person and placed them into protective custody.

1:35 a.m.: A report of a group shooting off fireworks on the west side of Gorman Hall was made.

2:15 a.m.: Housing Services reported that someone was trying to gain access to the roof of Van Meter Hall.

10:54 a.m.: The University Store reported that someone bought a computer with a bad check.

1:22 p.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Pierpont Hall. A caller asked for assistance with a male who passed out in the second floor men's bathroom.

2:52 p.m.: A bike was reported stolen from the bike rack at the Student Union some time the day before.

5:43 p.m.: A Nikon lens valued at $3800 was reported stolen from Morrill Science Center III.

8:41 p.m.: Police responded to liquor law violations in lot 50 on Kennedy Road and arrested Nicholas E. Ames, 20, of 90 Ivy St. in Brookline, Mass Ames was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21 and possession of a false Registry of Motor Vehicles document.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. It became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fri Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Sean Costello Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Brandon McNutt Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Like it Cheap & Easy?

Spending $100 at Retail gets you...

Grand Theft Auto: Vice City (PS2) $49.99
Caddyshack DVD $19.95
King of Torts by John Grisham $27.95

$5 off $20 purchase*
Enter promo code "UMASS1" in your shopping cart
Coupon Expires 5/25/03

Spending $100 at Half.com gets you MORE!

Grand Theft Auto: Vice City (PS2) $24.99
Tom Clancy's Ghost Recon (Xbox) $29.99
Prey by Michael Crichton $1.89
Jackass DVD $12.58
Pearl Jam: Ten $2.20
Caddyshack DVD $10.88
Coldplay: A Rush of Blood... $8.29
The Jester by James Patterson $7.85

half.com™ by ebay

Copyright 2003 Half.com, Inc. Half.com and the Half.com logo are service marks of Half.com, Inc. All other trademarks and service marks are the property of their respective owners. All prices are as of 4/9/03 and are subject to change. Quantities, prices and availability are not guaranteed and will vary due to supply and demand. *First-time buyers only. Limited time offer; excludes shipping and handling; offer subject to change or termination without prior notice a recent college graduate from New York rose to be the best fencer in the world, and the other, a sophomore at Yale, placed second in the world in women's sabre.

Fencing team takes home Championship

Continued from page 1

When asked what kind of an audience one might find at regular fencing meets, Baker responded with a smirk, "At most of them, there isn't one. You'll get parents, you'll get interested alums who are still in the Boston area, you'll get fencers from the various schools, but it's not really a spectator sport." He said the championship audience was much the same.

COMPLICATIONS

Tyler Jacobson, the president of the team and the women's foil captain, said it was expected there would be some mistakes in running such a large tournament for the first time, but it was far more than the team had expected. "There were complications that resulted in a delay in the start times. The refs didn't show up on time. And they had massive problems with how they tallied the results from the day before."

Besides facing complications during competition, Jacobson said the team had problems with its flights, had to cram 28 people into two rental vans once in Florida, and came back to Massachusetts where the snow was steadily falling. But the team was able to enjoy some down time in Florida before it headed back home to the cold and dreary weather. It joined the Smith College fencers for a pool party after the competition.

REALIZING THEIR POTENTIAL

"I think that we had very high expectations going into it but the ability of fencing was even better than had been expected. The team fenced amazingly and really united," Jacobson said.

MacQuarrie also reflected on his performance. "It was a culminating fencing experience for me," he said. "It was my last competition so it was a big deal."

MacQuarrie said it wasn't long before the UMass fencers realized they belonged to the dominant team in the competition.

"It's an uphill battle the entire way," he said, "and it was nice to see that we were the uphill battle for other people this time around."

Baker said that almost all of the fencers on the team learned to fence when they came to UMass, so upperclassmen tend to have significantly more experience than the freshman or sophomores on the team. But the good news for the team is that virtually all members will continue to fence until they graduate.

WHAT NOW?

The team will take a big hit when seven seniors from the team graduate this year, most of which are starters. Baker expects to lose about the same number of members next year. This is a drastic increase from the last two years when the team said farewell to a total of three fencers.

Despite a recent ankle injury that put her out of practice and old torn ligaments in her wrist as a result of seven years participating in the sport, Jacobson commented on her future fencing plans with reassurance. "I plan to keep doing it," she said. "I'll always fence."

MacQuarrie said he will be taking two years off before grad school while he hunts around for lab jobs. He also plans to continue fencing after graduation in the Boston area.

The National Collegiate Club Fencing Championships is a two-day event for club schools, or schools where the fencing team is a Registered Student Organization (RSO). It is the top intercollegiate competition for non-varsity (NCAA) teams, according to a recent press release.

Earlier this year, the UMass Fencers took first place at the 2003 New England Fencing Championships.

The team is done competing for the season, but will keep practicing until academic finals are over. The fencers enthusiastically anticipate competing in next year's National Championships, to be held much closer to home at the University of New Hampshire.

Baker is eager to continue coaching the team again for his fourth year in a row. He fenced on behalf of the UMass team as a graduate student in the 1998-1999 season. Prior to that, he served on the varsity team for four years at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Bush celebrates success of war

Continued from page 1

demands for cooperation against Saddam Hussein's defunct regime in neighboring Iraq. Lowering administration rhetoric that had led to speculation that Syria could become the next U.S. military target, he said:

– There's some positive signs. They're getting the message that they should not harbor Baath Party officials, high-ranking Iraqi officials."

– Saddam, if still alive, should "not pop his head up" and said anti-U.S. demonstrations led by religious leaders in Iraq do not worry him. "They couldn't express their opinions before we came. Now they can," Bush said. "I've always said democracy is going to be hard."

– Diplomatic pressure has a "good chance" of succeeding in persuading North Korea to end its nuclear weapons-development programs during upcoming multinational talks. China, Japan and South Korea have joined the United States in opposition, and the president cited that unanimity of purpose – if not of strategy – as reason for optimism.

Bush's late-afternoon return to Washington on Monday leaves his public schedule clear for the rest of the day and the morning's annual Easter Egg Roll on the White House lawn without its traditional presidential host.

Instead, Lynne Cheney, wife of Vice President Dick Cheney, was tapped to greet about 12,000 people – all members of military families due to security concerns – invited to the event.

Later this week, Bush is due to leave Washington again – this time for Ohio, according to a senior Republican official there. It's part of a White House plan to give the president a heavier travel schedule so he can refocus on domestic priorities and visit politically strategic states in advance of the 2004 elections.

Flying High

An Associate Professor of the Geoscience Department tests out a prototype stratospheric balloon that is designed to follow an air mass. Attached to the balloon is a payload recovery glider that is currrently under development.

www.dailycollegian.com

Ucard
U Can Get Credit Too!
Swipe your Ucard to purchase any vended Coca-Cola product, and you are automatically entered to WIN $100, $50, $25, or $10 credit on Your Ucard!
Megan Adams won $100!
GO UMASS !!!

Rental Office
1040 N.Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413.549.0145
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving All Of Your Rental Needs
www.pufftonvillage.com

General Electric
Price Waterhouse Coopers
NHL Corporation
MBNA Financial
State Street Bank

Q: What do these companies have in common?
A: Former Collegian Accounting Clerks

The Collegian is now accepting applications for Accounting Clerk
Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, with your resume for more information.

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Post-game festivities: Trying to maintain order and discipline

An students, who have been at UMass for a while, know about the potential for riots on this campus.

Some riots happen for the most mundane reasons, such as the melee that occurred in April 2001 when, on a Friday night around 3 a.m., Southwest lost power. A security desk from Coolidge Tower was lit up as a bonfire and later a real building fire forced the evacuation of Washington Tower for nearly two hours.

Most riots though can be traced to sports. In only the past five years there have been numerous riots about the Red Sox, (and in some cases just simple demonstration against the Yankees), as well as the well-known post-Super Bowl parts that followed the Patriots' Super Bowl victory in February 2002.

With the riots comes a sizable amount of vandalism along with the occasional arrest due to possession of illegal drugs or physical assault. Aside from the cleanup that maintenance people are forced to undertake, the campus as a whole escapes relatively unscathed.

Students should be thankful that they are able to get away with what they do without usually incurring any sort of restitution. As proved at another New England university a week ago, that is not always the case.

Following their loss in the national championship in the NCAA Hockey Tournament, students at the University of New Hampshire took their rage to the streets of Durham, and 87 were arrested. School and town officials have stated that the punishments will vary on the severity of the crime. UNH is not ruling out the possibility of the suspension of some students who are found guilty of the most heinous crimes.

The riots here in Amherst seem pretty tame compared to the scene that took place in Durham on April 12. According to eyewitness reports, students began to fill the streets of the small Granite State town late in the third period of the game when the University of Minnesota had secured victory. Over approximately the next hour crowds grew and tensions escalated until all hell broke lose.

Cars throughout downtown Durham were turned over. A bonfire was started on the lawns of one of UNH's fraternity houses. Police had to fire numerous shots of choking gas to finally disperse the enraged students. Police faced a barrage of rocks, bottles, beer cans, and almost anything else that students could throw at the authorities.

"These kids were throwing bottles at the officers' heads, throwing cans and bottles at the horses carrying mounted police," proclaimed Durham Deputy Police Chief Rene Kelley. "I'm at a loss myself...officers were talking about broken glass hitting their faces." At least one officer had to be taken to a local hospital, and was later released.

It should also be noted that similar riots occurred in Minneapolis following the Golden Gophers victory in the hockey game.

While the riot that occurred at UNH was more hostile than most UMass demonstrations, students should take note of the consequences that a number of Wildcats fans will be facing. The Minuteman hockey team could make the NCAA tournament next year. Do UMass students really want to develop a police record due to the way they express their emotions following a sporting event, win or lose? We think not.

Information from The Manchester Union-Leader was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

The objectivity of embedded media

Allison Leshefsky

They are on the front lines witnessing Iraqi resistance. They are riding in tanks equipped with heavy artillery as they fight sleep deprivation and homesickness. They are embedded reporters with U.S. military units, reporting live from the battlefield using modern technology such as satellite telephones. They are military agents being used to fulfill government propaganda that secures public opinion in the home.

More than 600 journalists, some of whom make up the Pentagon's news media pool, were deployed into military action after attending boot camp in the weeks leading up to the war. They are now stationed with U.S. forces in and around Iraq as they eat and sleep alongside soldiers in an attempt to gather live footage.

The conditions of embedding journalists alongside U.S. troops in the battlefield are spelled out in the Pentagon's ground rules, which prohibit the reporting of military strategy, rules of engagement, and the effectiveness of various enemy tactics. Other rules prevent journalists from interviewing Iraqi fighters as well as interviewing U.S. soldiers off the record.

When in danger, embedded journalists rely on the soldiers for protection. Under such close-knit circumstances, journalists develop comfortable relationships with the troops they are traveling with. As a result, their role as an impartial eyewitness is changed to that of an ally as they join forces with those whom they are supposed to remain objective.

Ellen Goodman, columnist for The Boston Globe believes that "War, without gore, is glory – a myth that marches to the next front." As a growing number of Iraqi civilians were injured and killed and the U.S. encountered strong unexpected resistance, the U.S. media overseas continued to be sympathetic toward the coalition and minimize critical reporting. Embedded journalists also referred to as "in-bed" journalists, have edited the war to produce various human interest stories such as aide for U.S. troops and education on weaponry.

In some of these reports, journalists have used the word "we" to refer to the U.S. military and "enemy" referring to Iraqis. During a time of war in which breaking news is constant, reports such as these are lost in a televised cloud of smoke as the war continues to progress at a rapid pace.

It is the responsibility of journalists to provide a democracy with a trustworthy source based on facts gathered independently of powerful institutions. During a time of war, objectivity is weakened as reporters overwhelmingly rely on official government and military sources, which ultimately produce a distorted image of the world that is skewed toward the powerful. Objectivity has proven nearly impossible as embeds have become cozy with their units, allowing themselves to be manipulated through propaganda resulting in broadcasts of patriotism and nationalism.

Robert Fisk, a columnist for The Independent, a British media source, gives a short list of propaganda that viewers can watch out for on their screens:

1. Reporters who wear items of American or British military costume – helmets, camouflage jackets, weapons, etc.
2. Reporters who say "we" when they are referring to the US or British military unit in which they are "embedded."
3. Those who use the words "collateral damage" instead of "dead civilians."
4. Those who commence answering questions with the words: "Well, of course, because of military security I can't divulge..." Those who, reporting from the Iraqi side, insist on referring to the Iraqi population as "his" (i.e. Saddam's) people.
5. Journalists in Baghdad who refer to "what the Americans describe as Saddam Hussein's human rights abuses" – rather than the plain and simple torture we all know Saddam practices.
6. Journalists reporting from either side who use the god-awful and overwhelmingly rely on official government and military sources, which ultimately produce a distorted image of the world that is skewed toward the powerful. Objectivity has proven nearly impossible as embeds have become cozy with their units, allowing themselves to be manipulated through propaganda resulting in

Some 12 journalists have already died in Iraq in a short period of time. How unfortunate that in the end, the messenger gets shot.

Allison Leshefsky is a Collegian Columnist.

SPIRE: a failing system

Eric Martignetti

It's not easy to lose faith in humanity. But Thursday, I did.

I rushed out of my class, which ended at 12:30, and speed walked to the earnest computer terminal. My SPIRE enrollment appointment began at noon, so I knew that other wily spire users had outpaced me by now. I reached the computer at 12:45. Eager to register for the required courses I need to graduate, I quickly clicked on the Internet Explorer logo, typed in the spire address, and entered my convoluted user ID (the same numbers I use to play the lottery) and password. I expected that nice sunflower to appear on my monitor, but instead received a dreaded red message that "the application server is down."

Maybe it's my computer, I thought to myself. So, I switched terminals. After a smooth transition, I reentered my name and password. Again, the website returned a response as clueless as Iraqi information minister Mohammad Saeed Al-Sahhaf (the one who thought Iraq was winning).

For the next 30 minutes (no exaggeration) I continued to type the same inane eight digits and my password. Despite fears of carpal tunnel syndrome, I continued trying, but to no avail. I called my friend because I wondered if I was doing something wrong or if mine was the only uncooperative computer. He too could not log on.

Then, I had to make a decision. Do I go to lunch or wait it out? I said to myself: how incompetent can the Office of Inept Technology be. Instead of going home, I opted for the barely-digestible, corrugated cardboard chicken tenders from the Blue Wall. As I force-fed the ketchup-coated chicken down my throat, I continued typing (embedding grease and breading crumbs in between the number keys), hoping, and praying. Apparently, I underestimated OIT's ineptitude.

"I said to myself: how incompetent can the Office of Inept Technology be."

My professors always stress preparation. All of them harped on registering early to ensure you get the classes you want, especially if you need those classes to graduate. Perhaps that is what irked me the most. I was fully prepared. I had a sheet of paper on which I jotted down course numbers and meeting times. If I had been able to log on, the entire process would have taken no more than five minutes. I hurled a pen at the wall in frustration. I looked skyward on this Holy Thursday and implored God's assistance. But no force it seemed could prevent SPIRE from spiraling downward.

I called the OIT office and got the machine. One of my coworkers called the Bursar's Office. They too were conveniently closed due to SPIRE's failure. How pathetic is that! When the system fails, these people are not only incompetent but also cowardly. They couldn't even answer the phone. They knew irate students would bombard them, so they turned off the hearing aid. When impersonal computers and telephones don't work, the common sense thing to do is to have a human backup. Just as humans are imperfect, so too is a system that relies wholly on machines.

Someone could have answered the pone and at least feigned competence. Someone could have talked to me and at least pretended to care. Instead, the university was overwrought with apathy.

Perhaps the most frustrating part of the entire process is that no one planned for a breakdown. Everyone knew that registration day for many seniors was beginning. Everyone knew the website would be high-traffic. But when the system failed, those responsible for fixing it were entirely ill prepared. They assumed SPIRE would work. There was no plan of action to follow. There was no risk management here. There were no preventive measures in place to ensure that SPIRE wouldn't crash. There were no intervening measures to ensure quick restoration should the system fail (If there were intervening measures, they were much too slow).

I continued typing, fruitlessly.

The test of any good system is how it performs when its people need it most. A good system handles pressure and performs in the clutch. Seniors who are graduating most urgently need to register for classes. SPIRE broke down when it mattered the most. SPIRE failed when people needed it to succeed.

Sometimes, we get so far ahead of ourselves with technology that we can't keep up. As soon as we master phone registration, SPIRE comes along. As soon as we learn to use the latest CD burner, a new DVD burner emerges. As soon as we purchase a computer, it becomes obsolete.

Technology is great. It has made all of our lives better. But nobody's perfect, not even Mr. Hi Tech.

Eric Martignetti is a UMass student.

Submit a letter or opinion

Letters to the Editor:

Asian American experience lacking on campus

To the Editor:

This is in response to Jamie Loo's editorial that appeared last Thursday. I'm so glad she brought up this important film. I too, being Asian American, was very hyped about the movie "Better Luck Tomorrow." In fact, many of my friends have been promoting this movie with menacing passion – links on AIM profiles and Xanga sites, plastering the city with ads, email forwards upon email forwards, announcements in class and constant speculation and talk.

What's most surprising is that none of them have even seen it yet! So what is the big deal then? One answer: representation. White folk can never understand what it's like to be a part of a society where its own media does not even reflect the diversity of your community's own experiences.

That is why "Better Luck Tomorrow" is so hyped within the Asian American community. But this letter isn't about "Better Luck Tomorrow," it's about Asian American studies at UMass, which is very vulnerable at this point. Sunaina Maira, the one and only faculty of the Asian American studies program (hereforth referred to as "the program"), is leaving. I have known professor Maira for more than a year now, and it is obvious that she is overwhelmed with the responsibility as not only a professor, but also as director of the program, advisor to several students, and organizer of events. She takes on a field of study that requires seven faculty to teach at UC Berkeley or Davis. How can an administration, or anyone for that matter, expect only one professor to direct, teach, advise, and organize for an academic field as vast as majors like English or Sociology?

I bet a lot of you are wondering why Asian American studies is so important – enough for me to compare it to traditional majors like English or Sociology. Well, the answer is the same reason for all the hype behind "Better Luck Tomorrow": representation. White folk can also never understand what it's like to be taught in an education system that never acknowledges any significant study in the deeply rooted history and experiences of Asian America. Nothing on the lives of those Japanese Americans in the 100th battalion and 442nd regiment who fought so bravely for the U.S. in World War II while 120,000 of their family members were herded into racetracks and fairgrounds converted into internment camps. Nothing on the irony of white women appropriating henna or the bindi. For them, bindis and henna are considered cool, but when an Indian woman wears henna or the bindi, she gets harassed, and sometimes becomes the target of hate-crimes, from groups such as the Dot Busters. I could go on, but it's not my job to educate UMass students on Asian American studies; it is the job of the administration to ensure that Asian American studies classes are provided. They fail blatantly.

I am not the first to demand Asian American studies on the UMass campus – as I bet many of you are assuming. In 1997, there was a student takeover of Goodell, which resulted in many compromised gains. One plan that came out of the takeover was to establish the Asian American studies program. While many were in hoping to hire at least two full-time faculty, the administration only hired one – Sunaina Maira. Since then, she has been the only faculty of the program, despite constant requests of many, for a new hire.

If professor Maira is not replaced with a new director of the program, it is very likely that the program will simply disappear as soon as next semester. However, if only one professor is hired to replace her, the cycle will be repeated, and a couple years down the line the program will be threatened again because Maira's replacement will also be overwhelmed, and leave for a more nurturing campus. I stand with many others to demand two tenure-track hires in different disciplines; both should be full-time Asian American studies faculty. In addition, we should demand a physical space to house the program, such as an office.

Like I've mentioned from the beginning, we just want to be represented within our own culture and society. Since our administration prides itself on diversity, multiculturalism, and social justice, I don't see any reason why it wouldn't want to meet these demands for better representation.

Felix Poon
UMass student

Free to decide

To the Editor:

Okay...I have a bone to pick.

First off, let me say that I respect UMass for it's for its activism and I respect people who are motivated to act, but I don't respect one thing. That one thing is the Republican Club staging a pro-life rally (and by rally I mean one guy with a sign around his neck and a bunch or white sticks in the mud) aimed to tell women that they have no right to make their own decisions.

When I saw the picture in The Collegian, I searched for an article but I couldn't find it. Does no one think that this is quite a random and inappropriate time to organize such an event? We are still at war, we are still arguing over whether we should be at war, we are still working on finding a balance between the people in this country who are at each other's throats – and now this? A mini rally staged by the Republican Club of all groups to tell me, a woman, that they don't think I should have the right to make my own decisions? In a country where the very reason they are able to do protests like this is based on the right to have choices?

How can a group of people (many of them men) hold the face of my body and my future in their hands? You might as well call pro-life pro-ignorance. I understand not supporting the death of children, but I don't understand how these people can think that that is what abortion is. It's the abortion of a fetus, an egg that has been fertilized by mistake...a child that otherwise would have been born into an environment not ready to give them even half of what they deserve.

Abortion is a choice, an option, and a hard, painful decision. It's not a form of birth control, it's not for fun. I know people who have been there and that pain never goes away. Ever. But that doesn't mean it wasn't the right choice for them to make. Would you rather women have these babies and struggle to feed them and stay in school while attempting to avoid falling way below the poverty line? Do you know how many children in this world are not given enough of what they need?

I understand there are other options, adoption for instance. I tremendously respect any woman that does it, I truly do. I think that takes a strong soul and I really respect that. But that is their choice. Many women don't have the liberty of being that strong or making that decision, but it's not even close to fair to assume that those women are monsters for going through with an abortion. It's their body! How can you not respect that?

Women make important decisions every day – some of them have been voted into office to make choices for our whole county, we have women heading troops in our army, we have women who are in control of corporations and you [men] still think you have rank over them because of a decision you believe?

To those of you who are pro-life and especially the men, I have to say that I cannot respect your inability to consider all the circumstances that effect such a choice and I have absolutely no respect for such an inappropriately-timed rally aimed to tell women that you think you have the right to make their decisions for them.

Rachael Pucillo
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

North Mississippi All Stars share an old school shakedown in Northampton

By Matthew Despres
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Where Muddy Waters roamed before and R.L. Burnside preaches from still, the blues remain a road of humility where there's no getting ahead – only getting by.

The North Mississippi All Stars, however, don't want to hear it. Although they mix rhythms as dirty as the mud at the banks of a Southern delta, it's delivered at a high-fever pitch that fuels the loyal following behind their world boogie caravan. Touring in support of the recently released "Solaris," the All Stars set up camp at Pearl Street on Wednesday for an old school shakedown emphasizing music as the message.

Since the release of 2000's "Shake Hands With Shorty," the band has matured into its medium, playing now with a crafty swagger. The kids are all right, and they know it. Bassist Chris Chew communicated mightily from the shadows of the clubroom's small stage,

Continued on page 6

Superstar spotting: Hunting for your favorite wrestler

Corner to corner
Emilie Duggan-Hicks

It's the bass pounding through the cement floor of the arena; the chilled air as you make your way to your seat; the pulsating lights, the pyrotechnics, the music. The anticipation starts to build as the start time of the show draws near, and the euphoria you feel as the minutes tick by is incomparable to anything you've felt before. The crowd starts to chant and cheer as the crew makes their way up unstable chain-link ladders to the rafters above, where they will man the spotlights and try to predict which lights will need work through the show.

Whether it is a concert or a major sporting event, the expectation is all the same. You have waited months, or sometimes years, for this show to come to your town. You prepared long and hard, coming to the arena with a painted face and hand-made signs, all because you're going to see someone you enjoy watching. The excitement makes the 12 hours standing in line to get tickets worth it. Knowing that you're in the same arena as your idol is enough for some people to go home and die happy, but nothing beats meeting your favorite star.

Nothing turns a grown man or woman into a little child faster than the sight of their favorite superstar. It doesn't matter what the socio-economic background is, or the education, race or creed; put a person within two feet of a celebrity they worship, and they will be reduced to a babbling idiot in a matter of seconds.

Because I have met so many celebrities, and because I have maintained relationships with a few of them, I often have people come up to me and ask, "What did I do wrong?" They recount their experience and I just shake my head and wonder how they could expect anything other than the response they got. This is a wrestling column, so I will focus on meeting World Wrestling Entertainment (WWE) superstars. But much of what I will tell you can be applied to any other celebrity as well.

The cardinal rule of meeting your favorite wrestler is: do not interrupt them when they're eating. Professional wrestlers get very little downtime to actually enjoy a meal, so if you see one in a restaurant and you want to get their autograph, wait. Wait until they've finished eating and paid their check and are about to leave. While it's still not the best time to ask them, it's far better than when they're about to dig into a juicy steak.

"If this means you have to wait, so be it. It's you after all who is looking for the favor, be it an autograph or just a few words," Lance Storm, a WWE superstar, reported on stormwrestling.com.

"You'll be surprised how much nicer we will seem if you extend us this courtesy," Lance continued. "I've almost never turned down a request from someone who sat patiently waiting for me to finish my meal before disturbing me."

Second thing to remember, staying in the same hotel as a professional wrestler – whether it be by strategic planning (otherwise known as stalking) or by accident (it does happen) – is not an open invitation to call their room, knock on their door or pace the hallway of their floor hoping they'll make an appearance. If you are in their hotel, the only place it's acceptable to ask for a picture or an autograph is in the lobby, and even that's pushing it.

Whatever you do, don't follow them in the elevator. The lobby can loosely be considered public property. The elevator is where you draw the line.

If you do ask for a picture or an autograph, make sure that the wrestler actually says yes before you start snapping pictures. If they say yes to an autograph, make sure you actually have a writing utensil and something to write on. Contrary to popular belief, celebrities do not have Sharpie markers surgically attached to their hands. Nothing is more irksome than having someone ask you to sign something and then have them have to go in search of paper and a pen.

For the most part this is common sense. Basic graciousness you should have been taught from the moment you could breathe. But you'd be surprised at how many people forget the littlest rules of decency and politeness. Then they have the gall to wonder why they were brushed off or spoken too with less than polite words.

It's not rocket science. It's common courtesy.

Emilie Duggan-Hicks is a Collegian Columnist.

Sounds of Yo La Tengo's 'Summer Sun' rise slowly, but then shine

No code
Matthew Despres

It's easy to lose sight of yourself when staring into Yo La Tengo's "Summer Sun." As a bright piece of undefined melody and rhythm, it's a cloud of rolling percussion, chirping guitars and come-closer vocals that swings, depending on how you choose to hear it, both freely and with a touch of imaginative reserve.

I loosely abridged, here's the story: it's an album that smirks as you set off to wrestle with the idea of exactly how – and how not – to address it.

Three years removed from the equally soft-spoken "And Then Nothing Turned Itself Inside Out," the trio – Georgia Hubley, Ira Kaplan and James McNew – rolls back onto sedate ground for its latest. For years the Hoboken natives stood at the fore of those about to rock, conjuring fussy noises and chaotic chatter well beyond the point where others had stopped at the song itself. Two albums and countless steps removed from that now, the band seems to be tracking inward; the movement found on "Summer Sun" is subliminal, occurring almost entirely under the surface of the 13 moody workouts that take their sweet time to unwind.

There's a danger inherent in making a move like that. It's not the fear of critical discourse; opinions are just that and largely worth less than the paper they're printed on. It likely doesn't concern the popular vote either: fans of the band will still find there's more than enough of the good stuff to pass around. Sweetness courses through the album, and that's a rare quality in these times. The vulnerability here, then, is the life of "Summer Sun" as a work in and of itself. Refreshingly devoid of any obvious singles or extraneous parts, it's very much a whole in need of a suitable environment. Spun in the proper light, "Summer Sun" is a newfound treasure. It's cast into a shadow, however, and there's a risk of listening to it wash away.

Which brings this summation to a first, and necessary, disclosure. My initial experience with the album came on a long walk through one of the Valley's first genuinely perfect days. The gentle welcome mat of "Beach Party Tonight" shut out the sounds of Amherst, and the casual motions of "Little Eyes" and "Season of the Shark" undercut the harshly shaded sidewalks of Fearing Street. There was a prescient quality around the two of them meeting; minutes and miles were being scored on the fly as the sounds revolved around and back into each other. Now this is music, I thought. The fresh improvisation of a second life.

The more I listened and the more I walked, the more I understood: Hubley's voice is the blanket that "Summer Sun" is most content to settle on. It floats through the minimal drawl of "Today Is the Day," coating the slurred guitars out and around the gentle ebb and flow of McNew's bass. It conducts the mischievously titled "Winter A-Go-Go" through a number of casual turns, and as a bit player, coats the upper register of "Moonrock Mambo" while Don Cheadle is hastily name-dropped underneath.

And I thought again: the marginal moments of "Summer Sun" come in the absence of her voice, the breaths between takes when she steps back to choose her next step. "Georgia vs. Yo La Tengo" may have been saved had Hubley cast herself in the title role. Instead, it's one of the few moments of defeat on the album, aimlessly led by a plodding piano riff and ultimately lost to a haze of wavering feedback.

Continued on page 6

'NBA Live' finally lives up to its name with superior graphics and challenges

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

The newest version of "NBA Live," the most popular video game basketball franchise, seamlessly integrates smooth game control.

It only took them eight years, but the sports division of Electronic Arts has finally released a pro basketball game worthy of the title "NBA Live."

Ever since the series' debut on Super Nintendo and Sega Genesis in 1995, sports gamers everywhere have been foaming at the mouth for the heir apparent to one of the best pro hoop games ever made.

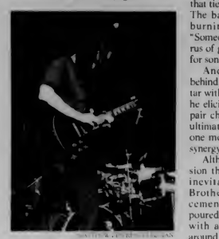
"NBA Live 2003"
Playstation 2
Xbox
Publisher
Electronic Arts
Developer
Electronic Arts Sports
Rating
E for Everyone

But instead of capitalizing on super smooth, ahead of its time game control, a revolutionary isometric view and the introduction of a likeable game soundtrack, their follow up titles made EA Sports look like it was becoming complacent.

The game play did not move forward with the technology – even as Sony's Playstation and Nintendo 64 were introduced – and EA seemed to fall back on a myriad of new options and game modes.

But with "NBA Live 2003" for Xbox and Playstation 2, EA Sports gets it right.

The newest version of the most popular video game basketball franchise in history seamlessly integrates smooth game control, with a lion's share of user options.



For the first time since 1995, the game control won't make you throw your game system through a plate glass window. And for that, gamers have the new EA Sports Freestyle Control to thank.

The Control takes advantage of the dual joystick feature on both the Xbox and Playstation 2 controllers. It is designed to give total power to the user. By design, the gamer is supposed to be

Continued on page 6

Band members of North Mississippi All Stars seamlessly blend together and give quality show

Continued from page 5

Guitarist Luther Dickinson

conducting the Brothers Dickinson (guitarist Luther and drummer Cody; both sing) and guitarist Duwayne Burnside without ever imposing. Settled in together, they kicked through electrified versions of "Shake 'em on Down" and a grinding "Mud," songs that greased the wheels for the halestorm tempo change that anchored "Sugartown" and the bee-sting licks that tied together "Lord Have Mercy." The band was also fluid as a slow-burning unit, tuning down for "Someday Baby" and joining as a chorus of grinning, gravelly voices looking for some salvation on "K.C. Jones."

And, when Cody slid out from behind his kit and traded up for a guitar with surprising proficiency mid-set, he elicited a smile from Luther as the pair chased each other's notes down, ultimately catching up for more than one moment of good-natured, sibling synergy.

Although the band strayed on occasion through ground previously and inevitably crossed by the Allman Brothers (the years only further cement the foundation that band poured) and sometimes pulsed along with a sameness that was shaped around their trademark, high-stepping backbeat, the All Stars are far from taking a cakewalk into complacency. In fact, if you believe Luther's most public sermon as of late, then it's all just a part of the plan.

"The first records were building blocks," Luther says. "We were on a three-record plan, and we always knew that number three would be the 'big one.' In the end, we took everything we can do – Hill Country blues, gospel, psychedelic pop and everything else ... and we don't feel bashful about it at all."

The multi-tiered pool of influence they're proud to pull from – we're talking Fred McDowell on up to Jon Spencer via 60s turnstiles like Cream – keeps them both reverent and open to experimentation.

All of which boil down to a potent brew that spurred on, before the show even began, the following conversation held a half-step from the bar between two men who, an hour later, would be unable to keep the dancing fools inside themselves still:

"Have you seen these guys before?"

"No man, this is the first."

"Oh, just wait. They're like ... just, yeah, check it out. They're seamless."

Just about, and even more humbling – still getting better.

• • •

Openers Electric Blue and the Kozmik Truth ran the table as a playfully tight five-piece, casting out funked-up originals and covers that jumped from The Meters to a bluegrass, double-time retelling of The Allman Brothers "Statesboro Blues." Judging from audience reaction – particularly toward singer Callie K., whose warm pipes filled the room on an unusually cold night – a good time was had by all.

New hoops game lives up to its name

Continued from page 5

able to string together different moves as opposed to just hitting a spin button or a crossover button.

The Control has been implemented in other EA Sports titles such as FIFA Soccer 2003 and NHL 2003 but received mixed reviews. The movement of a puck while skating or a soccer ball while running seemed to be too clumsy or random to fully capture.

But basketball is a perfect fit. While controlling a player's movement with the left stick, a user can use the right stick to pull off a stutter step, spin, crossover, hesitation dribble or any one of a number of moves.

There are very few moves the user cannot do, and there are a host of player-specific maneuvers. The best thing is that the defender will react to each action. Allen Iverson can make a defender fall down with a crossover; Jason Kidd can turn a player around with a ball fake and so on.

And the moves fit seamlessly with the simpler parts of game play like shooting and passing. The game is also more responsive than many of its predecessors. It's much easier to catch and shoot, and there are much fewer of the random pass interceptions that marred the 2002 version.

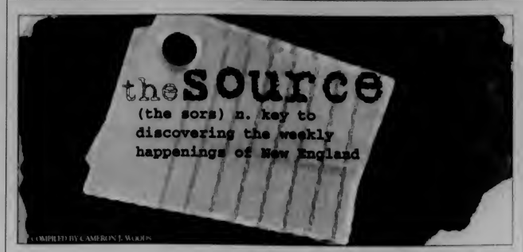
And the dunks: ridiculous. It's actually possible to drive to the hole and finish strong in this game – as opposed to randomly pulling up for a jump shot just because somebody is blocking your direct path to the basket.

In Layman's terms, the game is just fun to play. It's a good thing too, because there are a host of options to explore, and it will take some major game time to explore them all.

The most impressive game mode is the franchise team, which allows you to pick an organization and lead it through decades of game play. In this mode the user is the player, coach and general manager.

Before the season starts, you have the option of a fantasy draft – which drops all the NBA players into one pool – or proceeding with the present rosters. During the season, you'll play games and fight for a playoff spot while you wheel and deal with the computer teams to shape your roster for a title run.

The real gem of this mode is the offseason when you have to negotiate with free agents, restructure contracts and draft players onto your team.



The hardest level of "NBA Live 2003" proves to be quite challenging for its audience.

There is also a great one-on-one mode, a create player feature and a full roster of legendary NBA players. With all the options and great game play, it's hard to pick out one thing that puts this game over the top and into possible legendary status.

It's easy to marvel at the super realistic graphics, the sharp announcing and the overall game play, but the most satisfying feature might be the difficulty. The hardest level on this game is actually hard. You can go five-year spans in a franchise without ever getting a sniff of the title – especially if you don't have a dominant team.

And the computer won't feel bad for you either. Your opponent hitting a buzzer beater in game seven will seem like the rule rather than the exception after playing this game for awhile.

But who can blame EA for making it that way. You can't make a game this good, then go and make it easy.

AMHERST – The Film Club of the Amherst Cinema Center celebrates its First Anniversary Thursday, May 1, 8 p.m. in the main meeting room of the Jones Library with a showing of the German Expressionist silent film "Pandora's Box" featuring live musical accompaniment by renown cellist Gideon Freudmann.

Freudmann, known for his bold forays into uncharted musical territory, will be playing his electric cello. He is heralded as creating rich, lush, evocative textures that have never been tapped in the classical repertoire. He also has recorded several CDs, teaches improvisation workshops and tours throughout the country. He played to a sold out house last Fall when he performed a live soundtrack for "Metropolis." Advance reservations are strongly recommended.

"Pandora's Box" stars the legendary Louise Brooks as a woman of the night during the time of Jack the Ripper. Director G.W. Pabst uses Brooks's luminous and sexually charged magnetism in the film.

The anniversary celebration is also a membership drive for the Film Club. The $15 donation makes you a member and provides an entire year's worth of monthly Film Club screenings. Family memberships for two adults and children are available for a $25 donation. A $5 donation is requested from current members for this special event.

To make reservations and for more information, call the Amherst Cinema Center at 413-256-1991.

On the Net:
http://www.amherstcinemacenter.org.

BOSTON – The Museum of Fine Arts Film Program will present The 19th Annual Boston Gay and Lesbian Film/Video Festival May 1-18. For the 12th consecutive year, the MFA hosts this festival, which includes comedies, documentaries and shorts, with plenty of romance. Highlights include the Italian lesbian thriller "Gasoline" and the formally innovative British drama "AKA" as well as "Suddenly," an adventurous road movie from Argentina and "Gypsy 83," a heart-warming drama about a pair of unlikely best friends obsessed with 70s music, starring Sara Rue. Also featured are "Fine Dead Girls," Croatia's 2003 Oscar submission, and several documentaries dealing with confrontations between culture, politics and homosexuality ("Ke Kulana He Mahu," "I Exist," "The Devil in the Holy Water" and "Brother Outsider").

Also highlighted are our opening night films: "9 Dead Gay Guys," a dark British comedy, Thursday, May 1 at 8 p.m. for Men's Opening Night with director Ky Mo Lab; "Radical Harmonies," a history of lesbian music, Friday, May 2, at 8 p.m. for Women's Opening Night with director Dee Mosbacher and performances by musical guests.

"9 Dead Gay Guys" (U.K., 2002, 85 min.) is a comedy that embraces the Monty Python tradition of offending everyone and takes place in a cartoonish, good-natured universe of what appears to be a hetero-free London. Kenny and Byron are two very cute lads from Ireland who moved to London to hit the big time, but instead end up giving gay guys sex in exchange for cash, just to make ends meet – or so it seems. When their clients start dropping dead under mysterious circumstances, the two decide to hunt for the killer, who can be identified only by the tiny size of his member. "9 Dead Gay Guys" is a comedy that leaves no stereotype untouched. Tickets are $12 for members and students and $15 for general admission. For further information, call the MFA at 617-369-3687.

AMHERST – The University of Massachusetts Art Department is hosting a bus trip to New York on Saturday, April 26. The New York bus trip to the Metropolitan Museum of Art will be with UMass Art Historian, Walter Denny. The bus departs Hagis Mall 6:15 a.m., arrives in New York at 10 a.m. and returns at 10 p.m. Cost is $25 per person. Open to all. Attendance at the museum is not required.

HOLYOKE – The Holyoke Civic Symphony welcomes Leonid Makarov, a junior at Westfield High School and winner of the 2003 Student Concerto Competition, in a performance of the first movement of Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C Major on Sunday, May 4 at 3 p.m. in the Forum at the Holyoke Community College.

The program will conclude with Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor. This finale to the Symphony's 36th season is another selection from the People's Choice ballots. Conductor David Kidwell will hold a pre-performance talk about the music one-half hour prior to the concert. Both the concert and the talk are free and open to the public.

Formed in 1966 as part of Holyoke Community College, the Holyoke Civic Symphony is a non-profit organization dedicated to providing a variety of opportunities for community members to perform and hear symphonic works. HCS is supported in part by a grant from the Massachusetts Cultural Council.

For more information, call 413-256-1760.

On the Net:
http://www.narhams.org/holyoke.

A 'No Code' glance at 'Summer Sun'

Continued from page 5

Which leads me to a second, necessary and final disclosure. My previous exposure to Yo La Tengo was marginal at best – bits and pieces of the band buried on old mix-tapes made by forgotten hands. The odd track or two obscured by conversation during car rides to nowhere in particular. "Summer Sun," then, is a unique threshold – a document unto itself without a history, written by a band without a reputation tainted by expectation. And I like what I hear.

As a final gesture, the band puts forth "Take Care," an eloquent cover of Big Star that completes the puzzle. It's the kind of heartbreaker most songwriters grow up wanting to write and never really get around to. And again, Hubley colors up to and through the lines here, throwing words out altogether after a time and simply emitting a harmony as bright as the sun itself. Beautiful.

My prescription, as dubious a term as that may be, is this: find a warm day, take a walk and let "Summer Sun" make its case. What it ultimately convinces you of will be personal, like any album/audience exchange, and is likely to change, as many times as there are minutes for it to play out. It wants to speak, though, so let it holler. Caught at the right time, it will be music to your ears.

(Yo La Tengo plays tomorrow night at The Academy of Music in Northampton. Portastatic opens. Doors open at 8 p.m.)

Matthew Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

Applications for section editors (Arts and Living, Ed/Op, News, Photo and Sports) are due in Dan Lamothe's mailbox in the Collegian newsroom by Friday at noon. Applications for night editor and/or copy editor position(s) should go in Nikolas Markantonatos's mailbox.

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students 545-1995

jostens RING DAY
University Store at the Campus Center
The Choice For Your Class Ring!
Wednesday, April 23rd 10am-4pm
Thursday, April 24th 10am-4pm
If you can't make the Ring Sale, Call Jostens at 800-854-7464 shop.jostens.com

NOTICE TO THE UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY
POSTER PRESENTATIONS and RESEARCH PROJECTS
by Undergraduate Nursing Students in all programs
101 Campus Center
April 30, 2003
9 AM to 12 NOON
University of Massachusetts
School of Nursing

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Coming 4/25/03
Senior Show 4/24/03 - HEAD OF STATE
*no passes/supersavers
NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Movie times available at cinemark.com

Styles by Deborah
Featuring Foil Highlights & Designer Haircuts for Students
Complementary consultation with every visit
$10 off Foils with a Style Haircut with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03
$5 off Clipper Cuts with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03

Collegian Book Source

PUBLISHERS WEEKLY BESTSELLERS

HARDCOVER FICTION

NONFICTION GENERAL

MASS MARKET PAPERBACKS

TRADE PAPERBACKS

Historic cookbooks provide glimpse into past

By JAMIE STENGLE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS (AP) - Carefully turning the yellowed pages of old cookbooks, written by settlers a century or more ago, conjures up a time when lard was a common ingredient, puddings were all the rage and directions for measurements might read "a teacup full."

The value of recipes in old cookbooks isn't always culinary; they often lack accurate measurements and fail to give cooking directions. Just ask Cammie Vitale Shuman, a former cooking teacher, cookbook editor and part-time caterer, who attempted a muffin recipe from one of the books.

"They came out as hard as lead," she recalls. "The older the cookbook, the less likely you are to have satisfaction from the recipes in them."

The books have historical value for Vitale Shuman, curator of Southern Methodist University's collection of about 275 cookbooks from the 1870s to 1935.

"We want to have cookbooks here that help us unravel the cultural history of Western people," she says about the cookbooks, which yield tremendous information about the fiber of local communities.

"They were done by charitable and church organizations, and we assume that many of them were done to finance the programs that those church and civic and charitable organizations had in their local community," she says.

After the Civil War, there was a growth in the range of women's clubs and community organizations, as seen in the sponsorship of cookbooks, says Crista DeLuzio, assistant history professor at SMU.

"Women are drawing on their traditional functions, but using that to claim a larger space in the public sphere," says DeLuzio, who plans to use the growing collection in her classes.

The cookbook collection is part of SMU's DeGolyer Library of rare books, specializing in Western Americana. It was started less than two years ago. Most of the books, which range in value from several hundred dollars to less than $10, were found by scanning eBay and other Internet vendors. The library is, of course, always looking for donations.

Many of the books contain interesting asides, including advertisements that provide insight into the lifestyles of another time.

In an 1876 cookbook from Des Moines, a man identified only as Dr. Aborn held himself out to Iowa readers as an "oculist, aurist, catarrh, throat & lung physician ... and specialist for chronic diseases generally." The ad helpfully pointed out that Des Moines was "accessible by railroad to the five or six adjoining states."

Recipes in the old books feature delicacies such as pork cake. "The Texas Cook Book," believed to be the first cookbook in the state, offers a cough syrup formula featuring 20 grains of opium. The library has two facsimiles of that 1883 book from the Ladies' Association of the First Presbyterian Church in Houston and would like an original.

The home remedies show that women were also expected to cure ills.

"Up until the 1920s or so if you went to a hospital, you went there to die," says Susan Mitchell Sommers, history professor at Saint Vincent College in Latrobe, Penn. "Medical doctors were few and far between."

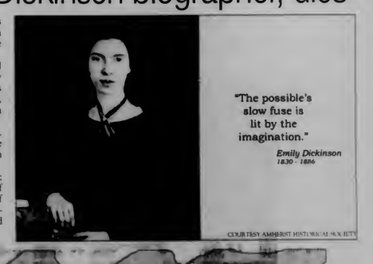
Sommers said drug use was common in the 19th century and many people grew items such as opium poppies in their gardens for remedies.

Most of the older cookbooks didn't find it necessary to give cooking instructions. "Choice Receipts," published in 1873 to help pay for the building of a girl's school in Walla Walla in what is now Washington state, gives the following recipe for pound cake: one pound of sugar, three-quarters of a pound of butter, 10 eggs, one pound of flour and some grated nutmeg.

"They assumed that the cooks knew their way around the kitchen," Vitale Shuman says. "There's nothing really that passes for directions in these things."

Most recipes were handed down through families or friends, and precise instructions for the heat weren't included in the early cookbooks because they were working with wood or coal burning stoves, in which heat was difficult to control. Ingredients were often limited to locally available items.

Wild plums, pecan trees and hickory nuts were popular in recipes in northeast and East and Central Texas in the early cookbooks.



The later books in the collection tend to have better directions and use standard measurements. A recipe for fig pudding from a 1931 book from Paris, Texas, gives measurements in cups and pounds and even gives a boiling time. But it also calls for "butter the size of an egg."

Puddings were extremely popular fare in the books, and recipes for sweets often made up half or more of the offerings. There are also oddities: Some books from landlocked states call for use of oysters.

Jusell Martin, director of the DeGolyer Library, said the books could be used in the teaching of several subjects, including women's studies, advertising and history.

"They're a nice mirror of the times in which they were produced," he says.

Former professor, Emily Dickinson biographer, dies

"The possible's slow fuse is lit by the imagination."
Emily Dickinson
1830 - 1886

COURTESY AMHERST HISTORICAL SOCIETY

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) – Richard B. Sewall, a longtime Yale University English professor and biographer of Emily Dickinson, has died. He was 95.

Sewall died at his Newton home on Wednesday, said his son, Richard.

Sewall's 1974 biography "The Life of Emily Dickinson," won the National Book Award for biography and dispelled several myths about the reclusive poet, including that she was too fragile for the real world and was left heartbroken by lost love.

"Almost nothing about Emily Dickinson is simple and clear-cut," he wrote.

Sewall, who retired in 1976 after 42 years at Yale, was one of Yale's most popular professors and even had an annual teaching award at the university named in his honor.

For the past several years, Sewall lived with a son and daughter-in-law in Newton, where he received letters and telephone calls from students, many of whom he hadn't taught in 50 years.

Sewall was born in Albany, N.Y. He graduated from Williams College and earned a doctorate from Yale in 1933.

Sewall is survived by three sons; Richard of Newton; Stephen of Glenview, Ill., and David of Woodbury, Conn.; and five grandchildren. A funeral service was held on Friday.

The Element is Coming
Thursday
April 24@ The Campus Pond
food|prizes|fun|
HONDA
UMASS ELEMENT
www.umasselement.com
Brought to you by: Honda USA, The Daily Collegian, Chunky's Movie Pub, WalMart The U.S. National Guard, UMass Skydiving Club, United Auto Group Fair Honda, Campus Design and Copy, Competitive Edge Ski and Bike, UMass Catering Services.

Self introduced as KU's new coach night.

Continued from page 10

Self apparently made a good impression.

"He's cool. I like him," sophomore point guard Aaron Miles said. "He said he is a different coach than Roy Williams, but he is a good coach."

HENDERSON SET TO SIGN WITH ATLANTIC LEAGUE TEAM

Rickey Henderson will soon put on a new jersey in New Jersey.

Hoping to play again in the major leagues but still searching for a spot, the 44-year-old Henderson will sign this week with a team in the independent Atlantic League, his agent said Monday.

Henderson narrowed his choice to three clubs based in New Jersey – the Newark Bears, Camden Riversharks and Somerset Patriots.

Baseball's career leader in runs, stolen bases and walks wants to start playing as soon as possible, agent Jeff Borris said. The Atlantic League begins its regular season May 1, the earliest among independents.

Henderson spent last season with the Boston Red Sox, hitting .223 with five home runs and 16 RBIs in 72 games. He continued to draw walks, however, and had a higher on-base percentage (.360) than regular Red Sox leadoff man Johnny Damon (.336).

Widely considered the greatest leadoff man ever, Henderson has 3,040 lifetime hits since making his major league debut in 1979.

Henderson has scored 2,288 runs, and his eight steals last season increased his total to 1,403. He also holds records for walks (2,179) and leadoff home runs (80).

FERRELL RACES IN MARATHON

BOSTON (AP) – Comedian Will Ferrell, known for his antics on "Saturday Night Live," ran with his wife and achieved two goals: He finished in under four hours, and he beat the guy dressed as Elvis.

After saying at the start that he just wanted to finish, Ferrell did better than that with a time of 3 hours, 56 minutes, 12 seconds. The guy dressed as Elvis Presley – actually, a friend of Ferrell's named Bob Babbitt – came in at 4:28:53.

"It's truly an amazing event. Along with the history and everything, it's a bit of a blur," Ferrell said. "Heartbreak Hill felt like a lovely summer day...and then you get hit over the head with a hammer."

A magnet for star-struck fans at the start in Hopkinton, including many teenagers, Ferrell declined requests to do his President Bush impersonation.

"It got retired," he said.

No jokes along the route either, reported 1968 marathon winner Amby Burfoot, who ran near the comedian. Burfoot finished in 4:03:37.

"He was completely serious," said Burfoot, who runs every fifth anniversary of his victory. "His coach had him on a short tether. They had something left at the end. It's great to see celebrities come into the race and treat it seriously."

Apparently that means the funnyman didn't oblige the sign "Take it off, Will," held by a spectator at Wellesley College. Ferrell had a streaking scene in his movie "Old School."

FAN CHARGED WITH ASSAULT

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) – A 24-year-old man accused of throwing a cell phone that hit Texas right fielder Carl Everett in the back of the head during a game faces a charge of assault with a deadly weapon.

Juan-Carlos Covarrubias-Serrano, of Palo Alto, was arrested during the Rangers' 12-2 loss to the Oakland Athletics on Saturday after fans pointed him out to authorities, and after Everett alerted stadium security.

The phone was thrown from the second deck of the Coliseum, said David Rinetti, the A's vice president of stadium operations. Covarrubias-Serrano was intoxicated, Rinetti said, and will be arraigned on Tuesday.

– Associated Press

UMass downs Hoyas

Continued from page 10

Jeff Zywicki, who somehow managed to put an awkward, point-blank shot past D'Andrea to make it 10-7.

"[Morris had] a great assist to Jeff, and Jeff made a fantastic play finishing the ball there," Cannella said.

But the Hoyas were not ready to go away. Vincenti answered just 34 seconds later, and again it was up to the defense to keep the advantage at two or greater. After surviving another onslaught on behalf of the third-ranked team in the country, UMass got another finishing opportunity, and Zywicki capitalized with his fourth score of the game and 35th of the season, to put his team up 11-8.

Georgetown had just one more opportunity, and Schell thwarted the Hoyas for the eighth and final time of the quarter, as he deflected the break-in shot with his stick, and the home squad took possession for the final two-plus minutes of action.

"I kind of felt like that was the sealer," Schell said. "I didn't stop playing and I was still ready to do more."

And after Neil Lundberg and his mates ran out the clock with an excellent display of keep away, the Minutemen did for the second year in a row what no team had previously been able to do – knock off an undefeated Georgetown squad.

GRAIG LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Junior Jeff Zywicki scored four goals in Saturday's 11-8 win over the No. 3 Hoyas and was named ECAC Co-Offensive Player of the Week.

ELISE AMENDOLA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Robert Cheruiyot of Kenya raises his arms as he crosses the finish line at the 107th running of the Boston Marathon yesterday.

Cheruiyot wins Marathon

By JIMMY GOLEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) – Robert Cheruiyot needed a photo finish to win his marathon debut. In his second race, he made sure that wasn't necessary.

Cheruiyot won the Boston Marathon by 23 seconds on Monday to give Kenya its 12th victory in 13 years. Russia's Svetlana Zakharova won the women's race to prevent a second consecutive Kenyan sweep.

Cheruiyot (pronounced cheh-REE'-yot) finished in 2 hours, 10 minutes, 11 seconds to earn $80,000, an olive wreath and a bowl of beef-stew. It was just his second career marathon, having won his debut in Milan in December.

In Milan he finished with the same time as two others but was declared the winner by an edge. This time, he wasn't challenged over the final five miles to win by more than two city blocks.

"I was ready to face anything," said Cheruiyot, who felt like he had a chance to win at about 15 1/2 miles.

"I said, 'OK, I'll win this.'"

Cheruiyot is the eighth Kenyan to win Boston since his country began its domination in 1991. Kenyans swept the first five spots in the race, with Benjamin Kimutai second and Martin Lel third.

Russian Fedor Ryzhov was the first non-Kenyan, in sixth, and defending champion Rodgers Rop was seventh. Eddy Hellebuyck was the first American, finishing in 2:17:18 for 10th place.

"It's disappointing," Hellebuyck said. "I'm representing the U.S. and I'm 42 years old. Where is everybody?"

Zakharova finished in 2:25:20 to beat fellow Russian Lyubov Denisova by 91 seconds. Her biggest challenge was staying on the course when the television truck turned away before the Back Bay finish line; she is the first Russian to win since 1993.

American Marla Runyan was fifth – the best finish for a U.S. runner since 1993. Runyan, who is legally blind, trailed a bicyclist who provided her with her times at the checkpoints and guided her to her water bottles.

She traded positions with defending champion Margaret Okayo of Kenya and the two Russians until Zakharova pulled ahead at the 13.1-mile mark. Kenya's Joyce Chepchumba was third and Okayo, who set the women's course record of 2:20:43 last year, finished fourth.

Rop was in a pack of a dozen that trailed leader Vincent Kipsos through much of the early race before Kipsos dropped out by Mile 14. Nine Kenyans ran together at the 15-mile mark before some began falling away from the pack.

South African Ernst Van Dyk earned his third consecutive victory in the men's wheelchair race, finishing in 1:28:32 without a competitor in sight. Christina Ripp of Savoy, Ill., who finished second last year, won the women's wheelchair race in 1:54:57.

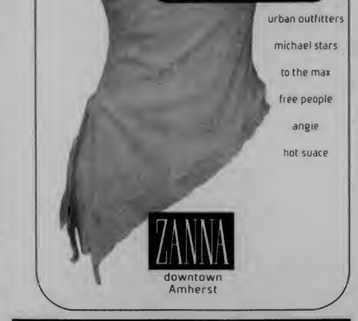
A field of 20,260 left the starting line at noon after the traditional serenade of "Young at Heart" by 95-year-old Johnny "The Elder" Kelley, who started a record 61 races, winning twice. An F-15 flyover followed the national anthem to give the Patriots Day race a patriotic flavor.

Bartenders Have More Spirit! Why not be a bartender?

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA

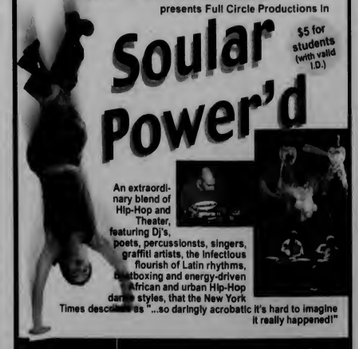
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
BACON 'N' CHEESE SKINS $4.48
FRIED SHRIMP TEMPURA $3.63
SWEET POTATO FRIES $3.38
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
UCMP Welcome Here
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
51 N. Pleasant Street
www.judiesrestaurant.com 253-3491



A gig you can bank on.

Local supermarket branches are seeking:
Bankers
(Selling products, providing customer service, and processing transactions)
Call 1-877-INAISLE to apply today.



Where there's a Citizens Bank supermarket branch, there's a unique opportunity for you to market your sales skills on the floor. How? Simply by approaching in-aisle shoppers to tell our great products and services. With variable schedules including evening and weekend hours and great benefits for full-time and part-time employees, it's as easy as freshly-baked pie.

CITIZENS BANK
Not your typical bank ®
www.citizensbank.com/employment
Citizens Bank is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer committed to building a diverse workforce. M/F/D/V

GET TOPS.
urban outfitters
michael stars
to the max
free people angie
hot suace
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

New WORLD Theater
presents Full Circle Productions In
Soular Power'd
$5 for students (with valid I.D.)

An extraordinary blend of Hip-Hop and Theater, featuring Dj's, poets, percussionsts, singers, graffiti artists, the infectious flourish of Latin rhythms, beatboxing and energy-driven African and urban Hip-Hop dance styles, that the New York Times describes as "...so daringly acrobatic it's hard to imagine it really happened!"
Tickets $15-general public, $8-low income/senior, $5-students
Call FAC Box Office @413.545.2511
Thur. & Fri. April 24 & 25
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium

PETER PAN BUS TICKETS
COPIES & FAXES
UPS PACKAGE SHIPPING
$2.00 OFF ANY ROUND TRIP BUS TICKET PURCHASED IN APRIL WITH THIS AD
$_2$O
COPY CENTER
on campus in101 Herter Hall

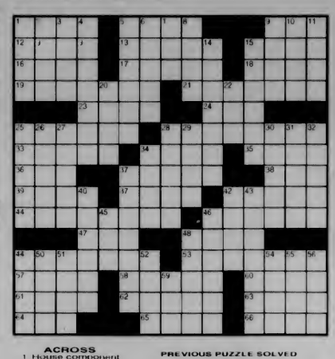
STUDENT TRAVEL
web fares
and NOT just online
London.....$258
Paris.....$256
Madrid.....$298
Rio de Janeiro..$486
Fare is roundtrip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
ISIC www.statravel.com STA TRAVEL
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • BY ELIZABETH GORMAN

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

THE TORQUES • BY KRIS FRUTIGER



THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • BY DERRICK GENDOS

THE TORQUES • BY KRIS FRUTIGER

ACROSS
1 House component
5 Virile type
9 Montreal's prov
12 Gluck or Opera
13 Mr. Spock's forte
15 — lu
16 Repast
17 Something else
18 Pact letters
19 Carry a canoe
21 Formal wear
23 Quiet
24 "I been robbed!"
25 Diminish
28 Vatican sight
30 Oblige
34 Mocking comment
35 London district
36 Timberwolves' org
37 Rolls up
38 Deckhand, slangily
39 Ricky Ricardo
41 Lawyer, briefly
42 Stop, to Popeye
44 Wash
46 Cramp gases
47 Outcome
48 Input vehicle
49 Devotion
53 Views
57 — for one's money
58 Petroleum abriquet
60 Therefore
61 Jitties
62 Feed the pilot
63 Epic
64 Cluck of disapproval
65 Shriveled from heat
66 Hecpie aunt

DOWN
1 Stair alternative
2 Butter substitute
3 Gen. Bradley's name
4 "The — Falcon"
5 Motto
6 Family tree, to some
7 Kid's
8 Food plan
9 Campus area
10 Golden Rule word
11 They're easily bruised
14 Sea voyages
15 Times a prayer rug
20 Figure skating jump
22 Caesar's 16
25 Darnell or Hunt
26 Place in concrete
27 Sidewalk construction
28 Origin
29 Skillfully
30 Smidgens
31 Deep leisure
32 Major artery
34 Cleans a fish
37 Jammies
40 Yankees
42 Vile agents
43 Least humble
45 Nothing at all
46 Change genetically
48 In a torment
49 Keep on going
50 Galena and bauxite
51 Exclamation of disgust
52 — St. Laurent
54 Seafood entree
55 Quiche ingredients
56 Laundry need
59 Percent ending

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

12-16-02 © 2002 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

TUESDAY
- High: 56
- Low:41

WEDNESDAY
- High: 51
- Low: 33

THURSDAY
- High: 51
- Low: 33

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Yankee Corn Chowder
- BBQ Beef Sandwich
- Plain Roast Beef
- Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Yankee Corn Chowder
- Chicken Pot Pie
- Boston Scrod
- Plain Baked Cod
- Native American Stew (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matthew F.Sacco
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR
Eric Soderstrom
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Gerry Auger / Sarah Lloyd

HOROSCOPES

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your faith has disowned you. Unless you don't have one.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Your favorite icon hates you. They think your obsession is sick.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
You will look into the lunch lady's eyes and embrace your feelings.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
From now on your life will be lived in a Girls Gone Wild video.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
For finals, throw your previous tests in a juicer and drink them.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Don't you hate pants?

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
It's not St. Patrick's day today. Why are you drinking green coffee?

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Today will be the best day of your life. It's all downhill from here.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Take a shower today. I know you weren't planning on it.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Wednesday is a Monday schedule, but you won't remember.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You've already forgotten to sign up for classes. Good job buddy.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Kraft Mac is slowly invading your brain. Easy Mac is the devil.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I know you're out there. I can feel you now. I know that you're afraid... afraid of us. You're afraid of change. I don't know the future. I didn't come here to tell you how this is going to end. I came here to tell how it's going to begin. I'm going to hang up this phone, and then show these people what you don't want them to see. I'm going to show them a world without you. A world without rules or controls, borders or boundaries. A world where anything is possible. Where we go from there is a choice I leave to you."
- Neo

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WIN BACKSTAGE AND VIP Tickets to 2003 Civic Tour Sign up at UmassElement.com

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups: Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

ASPEN CHASE Newly remodeled 1 Bedroom, 1 Bath. All utilities included: heat, hot water, electric, basic cable and high speed internet! Located on bus route! Minutes to campus and town! Call or stop by to reserve an apartment! 256-0471

ALPINE COMMONS 4 Bedroom, 2 Baths, Fully applianced kitchen. Private Balconies. All utilities included: heat, hot water, electric, high speed internet, basic cable and phone. On bus route, minutes from campus! Call or stop by to reserve an apartment! 256-0741

Sunderland lodge 1 bedroom Apt on bus route $740/month includes utilities 665-6954

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin July, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-2600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlimitedrealty.com 253-7879

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlimitedrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Honda Civic DX 140K Great Condition Sound System $2800 OBO 413-262-8203

95 Geo Prism Purple 95K 5 Speed good condition $3000 OBO 413-665-3022

COMPUTERS

Lap Top $99 Pentium Two $99 We pay cash for laptops 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Summer teenage bicycling trips, USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, www.bicycle-trips.com

Summer FUN Life-TECH Ventures Live-in positions at residential summer camp in Charlton, MA. Available to anyone who honestly likes being with children. Call 800-433-8375 naturesclassroom.org

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS: Pennsylvania children's sleep-away camp. If you love children we have positions for Directors, Asst Dir's, and Counselors for Tennis, Golf, Drama, Camping/Nature, High & Low Ropes, Gymnastics, Sports, Sailing, Water-skiing, Ceramics, Jewelry, Guitar, Aerobics, Self-Defense, Video, Piano, and Nurse (RN). Dates 6/19-8/16?3. On Campus Interviews arranged. Call 1-800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

4/22?3 is the last day to contact the Legal Services Office about a Fall internship! Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal field required- training is provided. Contact Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Rent us your ears! $5 for half and hour just for listening 545-0817 or rsmtner@student.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Collegiate Entrepeneurs Inc. Looking for experience painters for full time summer work great pay. Fun atmosphere Call Jenna 64820 – Norton, Attleboro, Mansfield MA area only

Technical Writer for Policy Analysis Consulting/Software firm. Resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or Fred@REMI.com

Economic / Business Development Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Includes some phone sales. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com.

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

EMPLOYMENT

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic software / consulting firm. Computer programming and MS Office plus. Full-time position beginning in May. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

FOR SALE

DJ Equipment for sale. 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX60 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

MISCELLANEOUS

Do you still swallow pills? Spray nutrients right into your mouth! www.2581581.myvitamist.com www.advantagenutrition-plus.com

MOTORCYCLE FOR SALE

2001 Suzuki GSXR600 Fast Powerful Motorcycle that will turn peoples' heads, and get your blood flowing 4500 miles, Black and Yellow Yoshimura Exhaust. Asking $6500 Call Matt 5086131172

ROOM FOR RENT

Reasonable 10 minutes to UMass. Large Quiet Comfortable furnished. For Male Grad/Professor 6/1 – 9/1 Full option. 413-549-1578

Two furnished rooms available $375.00, utilities included. Free cable, no lease. Call 253-3670

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contrnception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-9992

SUMMER SUBLET

4 bedroom route 9 Hadley 584-2987

69 Townhouse Sublet June1st – August 31st Room for 4. $950 per month or BO Call 549-0798

Puffton Sublet from June 1st- August 31st 4beds 2baths 1140/per month Call Mark 253-1479

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean only $250 round trip! Europe $189 one way! Other world wide destinations cheap. Book on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Spring Break with STS, America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

G-Town goes down

UMass jumps to No. 4 with win

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team does a drill in practice where one man has the ball, and the rest of the players use any means necessary to take it away.

It's called the survival drill, and fans were treated to a public exhibition of it on Saturday, as the Minutemen held off each and every Georgetown rally in their 11-8 at Garber Field.

The drill came in handy, as the Minutemen spent the last two minutes, 30 seconds holding the ball in their offensive zone, highlighted by the stubborn work of Neil Lundberg, who had defenders chasing and abusing him behind the net for nearly a minute.

UMass	11
Georgetown	8

Jeff Zywicki scored four goals in the effort, and Bill Schell stopped 14 of Georgetown's 22 shots on net to hand the No. 3 Hoyas their first loss of the season, dropping them to 8-1 overall (3-1 Eastern College Athletic Conference).

The Minutemen, who jumped to No. 4 in the nation with the win, improve to 11-1 on the season (3-1 ECAC).

"The emotions are huge right now," said Zywicki, a box lacrosse veteran from Napean, Ontario. "We're feeling real good. We came out strong, we played strong the whole game, and then we finished them off."

Freshman Steven Byrnes, who looked a little over-exuberant in a failed scoring chance against Harvard last Wednesday, scored the game-winner 29 seconds into the fourth quarter.

"That was big," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "[Byrnes] against Harvard, he runs in there and he's tired, and he shoots, the goalie makes a save, and we yell at him. Today, he didn't want to shoot that, no one picked him up. Fortunately he took a better shot, he wasn't as tired, and he scored."

The Hoyas came close on a number of occasions, bringing it to 10-8 with 7:05 remaining when Mike Hammer found Phil Vincenti cutting to the net for a quick stick past Schell. Georgetown would not score another goal.

Vincenti scored two goals in the game, as did Hammer and Neal Goldman.

It was Zywicki who broke the Hoyas' back. With 2:49 remaining, he broke into the zone, got to within 10 feet of the goal, put on a quick fake, and popped it over the head of Georgetown goaltender Rich D'Andrea. The goal was the 11th for the Minutemen, and more than Schell and the UMass defense would need.

"Billy is awesome," Zywicki said of the sophomore netminder. "Any time I'm in the midfield, watching the defense, I'm just hoping they'll shoot the ball, because I know he'll come up with it. I have every confidence in him, our whole team does. We're so glad to have him on our team."

The game was physical throughout, with a total of 11 penalties called. Eight of those went against the Minutemen, but they expected to frequently be a man down coming in.

"We foul," Cannella said. "We call it controlled aggression. We try to be under control but really aggressive and physical. We'll take the calls that we're aggressive on, as long as we're playing smart."

The Minutemen set the pace, with six goals in the first half to GU's two. Zywicki scored once, and freshman Sean Morris added two to send the Maroon and White on its way.

GERALD LYNCH/COLLEGIAN

Junior Neil Lundberg tallied an assist as the UMass men's lacrosse team handed No. 3 Georgetown its first loss of the season. The Minutemen, who entered the game at No. 6 in the nation, moved up to No. 4 with the win.

Two-goal lead toughest to hold

By MATT BRADY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Having the lead in a sporting event is something that can be both a relief and a worry. A one-goal lead is nerve-wracking for a squad, so it often plays to its top intensity level. A large lead can help a team relax, so it can remain energetic and fresh for the remainder of the game. But right in between those leads is what is regarded as the most challenging margin for a coach – a two-goal advantage.

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team held a two-goal edge over Georgetown on five different occasions on Saturday, with three of those instances coming in the back-and-forth final quarter of play. The Minutemen increased their lead to three goals four of those times.

"I thought every goal we scored today was a big goal for us, because it kept us in the lead," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "We were never behind in the game, so every time we kept scoring, it helped us relax on defense."

After Neal Goldman scored less than five minutes into the first quarter to cut the Hoyas' deficit to 2-1, the visitors never got that close again, en route to their first loss of the 2003 season, the last Division I college lacrosse team to lose its undefeated stature.

For the second straight week, the Minutemen were overpowered in faceoffs, with the Maroon and White winning just 5-of-22. But for the second straight game, senior midfielder Chris Fiore used a timely groundball to jumpstart his team. The opening faceoff of the second quarter was clearly knocked forward by Hoya specialist Andy Como, but Fiore anticipated the movement, picked up the ball and went all the way in for the score, just 13 seconds in to the frame, to give UMass its first three-goal lead at 4-1.

The Maroon and White seemed to control the game for the majority of the next two quarters, but a Phil Vincenti goal at 14:37 of the fourth cut the Georgetown deficit to 8-6. Insert freshman longpole Steven Byrnes.

After Corso encroached on the ensuing faceoff, Byrnes took the ball just inside the offensive zone. The offensive-minded rookie was left with room to maneuver, and cut to the net, bouncing a shot past goalie Rich D'Andrea, a mere six seconds after the Hoyas had increased their advantage.

"In my whole life, that was my biggest goal," Byrnes said. "I feel it was big because the team was starting to roll then, it was going into the fourth quarter. That was a big time to get a goal and we needed that momentum to push us through the fourth."

"That was definitely huge, it was big," attackman Sean Morris said of his classmate's goal. "Byrnes might have more points than me now. It was a huge goal."

Georgetown countered with another tally just over a minute later, and this time it was the defense's turn to preserve the two-goal advantage. Goalie Bill Schell and his defensive mates faced a barrage of Hoya shots (16 in the fourth quarter) but time and time again kept the ball out of the cage.

Then, after gaining possession and bringing the ball into the offensive zone, the Minutemen were ready to burn some of the clock. But Morris saw an opportunity, and fed

Continued on page 8

Beanball drops Sosa

PITTSBURGH (AP) – Chicago Cubs star Sammy Sosa had only a couple of small cuts Sunday despite what he called his scariest moment on a baseball field, being slammed in the side of the head by a pitch.

Sosa had no time to react as Pirates reliever Salomon Torres' fastball struck him on his left temple, breaking Sosa's batting helmet and leaving him shaken but apparently OK.

Sosa left the game after the scary beaning in the fourth inning of the Pirates' 8-2 victory, only three innings after Sosa tied Eddie Murray for 17th place in career home runs by hitting his 504th homer.

SELF INTRODUCED AS KANSAS' NEW COACH

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) – Bill Self was introduced Monday as the new basketball coach at Kansas, which lost Roy Williams to North Carolina shortly after losing the NCAA championship game.

Self's first college coaching job was as Larry Brown's assistant at Kansas in 1985, and he called his new post "the most prestigious act in all of college basketball."

About 300 people were at Hadl Auditorium on campus for the news conference, greeting Self and chancellor Robert Hemenway with a standing ovation as they entered.

"I stand before you very, very happy," said Self, who left Illinois after three seasons. "But I stand before you with mixed emotions. ...

"It was difficult because I'm leaving behind an unbelievable situation and I'm leaving behind some great players."

Hemenway said his school's search focused only on Self, who won two Big Ten regular-season titles and one conference tournament with the Illini. His record there was 78-24, and he led the team to the NCAA tournament each year, reaching the final eight in 2001.

With the Jayhawks, he replaces the beloved Williams, who departed a week ago for his alma mater. Williams led Kansas to nine conference titles and four Final Fours in 15 seasons, going 418-101. He lost in the national title game twice.

"You've had a remarkable coach here for the last 15 years," Self said. "He's a tough act to follow, but Larry Brown was a tough act to follow, and Ted Owens was a tough act to follow."

The 40-year-old Self met with Kansas' players – including three starters from the 81-78 loss to Syracuse in the NCAA title game April 7 – for more than an hour Sunday

Continued on page 8

MIKE LONG/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chicago Cubs outfielder Sammy Sosa recoils as a fastball from Pittsburgh Pirates' Salomon Torres shatters his helmet in the fourth inning of Sunday's game. Sosa left the game.

Texans secretive about second-ever NFL Draft

By MARK BABINECK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON (AP) – Houston Texans general manager Charley Casserly dispelled any mystery about the expansion team's first draft pick. Quarterback David Carr was already house hunting by the time Houston formally chose him at No. 1 in 2002.

This time around, the Texans own the No. 3 overall pick and have everyone guessing. What they decide to do could be the key to how things unfold next weekend.

"It's a different draft. There's no question about that," Casserly said.

If Houston keeps its pick, the most likely possibilities are Miami receiver Andre Johnson and Arizona State defensive end Terrell Suggs. Suggs acknowledges his stock dropped after a poor predraft workout he attributes to simply having a bad day.

The team also has hosted Kansas State cornerback Terence Newman and Utah offensive lineman Jordan Gross, both of whom could still be available if the Texans trade down a bit.

Or perhaps Houston will trade for Cincinnati's top overall pick and snare Michigan State receiver Charles Rogers, who also visited the team this month. But if the Texans don't move up, the Detroit Lions are a virtual lock to take the home-state product at No. 2.

"To make it simple, if we stay at 3, we're going to get a starter," Casserly said. "If we trade back we're going to get a player who will start for us and something else.

"We're looking at a lot of options, and we have for a long time. We're still debating a lot of issues."

Despite the horror show put on by the Texans' offense last season – Carr's record 76 sacks at the forefront – Johnson and Rogers say they're eager to come aboard and improve things.

"David Carr is a great player and great quarterback," Johnson said. "I've talked to him a few times. He said if I had any questions at all to give him a call. He's hoping I can be here with him. I'd like to be here a long time, and maybe we could start something great."

Rogers made it clear he'd be just as happy to come to Houston as he would be to stay close to home.

"People who know football know I'm the best player in the draft," Rogers said. "I make good plays. I make great catches. I run fast. I can stretch the field. I can get open. I'm all of the above. I feel like I'm the total package."

There are other intriguing names. Suggs could step in and fill a pass-rushing void left by Jeff Posey, who signed with Buffalo after leading Houston with eight sacks. Newman could make cornerback Marcus Coleman expendable, opening up salary-cap space.

Or the Texans could take Gross so he could help keep Carr upright a little more often.

"If the Texans decide to trade (down), it's still an option. And if they don't, it's still an option," said the 6-foot-5, 306-pound Gross, who sees himself drafted anywhere from No. 3 to the low teens. "On draft day, I'll definitely be sitting on the edge of my seat for about two hours waiting to see what will happen."

Lost in the first-round speculation is the Texans' opportunity to add much-needed depth across the roster. Houston surprisingly boasted the NFL's 16th-ranked defense last year, but had precious little depth, a weakness masked by the unit's lack of injuries.

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 122

Fire ignites on UMass campus

GERALD LYNCH/COLLEGIAN

The New Massachusetts Foundry Building caught fire last night at appoximately 8 p.m. No one was injured in the two alarm blaze. However, the blaze did attract attention from onlookers, and was visible from off campus.

No one injured in the two-alarm explosion

By JAMIE LOO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

An explosive fire broke out on campus last night, sending up billows of gaseous smoke that could be seen from off campus.

Amherst Assistant Fire Chief Michael Zlogar said they received the phone call around 8 p.m. that a building behind Morrill Science Center was on fire.

"There were two significant explosions which we believe were caused by the acetylene and oxygen tanks," Zlogar said.

The building's official name is the New Massachusetts Foundry Building. However, according to campus maps, it's still known as the Conservation Building. Deputy Chief Patrick Archibald said that, at over 100-years-old, it is one of the oldest buildings on campus. Justin Clark, a student monitor, said the building is used primarily for welding projects. Some of the chemicals inside included acetylene, propane, oxygen and argon, a non-flammable chemical. Acetylene is a gaseous compound composed of carbon and hydrogen, and is often used in welding and organic synthesis.

The two-alarm fire brought in the UMass student fire department, along with units from Amherst, Hadley, Belchertown and Northampton. Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Joanne Vanin, said, "no one was hurt." There were no students inside the building and the last class in the Foundry was out at 4:15 p.m. Tuesday. None of the firefighters were injured, but the University is still taking extra precautions.

Continued on page 3

GERALD LYNCH/COLLEGIAN

Firefighters responded to a fire just off N. Pleasant St. last night.

Carr to present final Exec choices

By KRISTIN SHREWSBURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tonight the Student Government Association Senate will be questioning the final three Executive Cabinet candidates as well as revisiting a tabled motion that would make each Senator represent 350 constituents instead of the current 250.

President Dave Carr will be presenting his final three chosen Executive Cabinet members before the Senate for their approval. A position that was once removed, the Secretary of Diversity, will be a new addition to next year's team of leaders.

The position was unfilled this past year due to a lack of interest in the position. Other positions being appointed tonight are Secretary of Finance as well as Secretary of the Registrar.

Carr has chosen Justin Provincher as his appointed Secretary of Finance, Russell Plato as Secretary of Diversity and Carla Moy as Secretary of the Registrar. Carr explained that he is prepared for personal issues to arise in the questioning of his three appointed positions.

"There are probably going to be people with personal issues," Carr said. "But I wouldn't appoint anyone that I didn't think was the best for the job."

Speaker Dan Saunders also commented on the issue, explaining that he felt it should be interesting to see what the senators and candidates have to say. Saunders further explained that he feels that senators do have a right to question who they place in the Executive Cabinet positions.

The decision to reenact the Secretary of Diversity position has also caused questions, and Saunders noted that he hoped senators would look at the importance of the position. The position was last held under the Presidency of John Sheehan during the 2001-2002 school term.

"I hope that people recognize the importance of this position," Saunders said. "I know it might be difficult to work it back into the mix, but I'm confident there won't be any problems."

Other issues on tonight's agenda include a motion requesting that each senator would represent 350 constituents rather than the current 250. According to Saunders, the motion, which was previously tabled, would result in a change in the current Senate's seat apportionment. The Senate's size would decrease from the current 90 seats to roughly 63 to 65 seats.

The University Policy Committee is also expected to bring forth further motions. However, the committee was unable to meet due to the long weekend. The committee will be meeting today at 12 p.m. in the SGA office in the Student Union.

Today, members of the SGA will also be meeting prior to the Senate to review a potential applicant for the position of Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs. The search committee is bringing forth a final applicant for a question and answer period in the Campus Center.

"Today there's an open meeting from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m. for the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs," Carr said.

Carr explained that the meeting was open to students and provides an opportunity to ask questions surrounding the future of Campus Activities and other student organizations.

With less than four meetings left in the 2003 spring semester, senators will also be addressing the Student Activities Trust Fund Budget that will be presented by Chair of Ways and Means committee Brian Thompson on April 30. The official vote will take place at the May 7 senate meeting.

Elections for the position of Senate Speaker and Associate Speaker will take place on the last senate meeting of the semester on May 14. The two positions are open to all students.

Tonight's senate meeting will take place in room 101 of the Campus Center at 7 p.m. and is open to the public.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPORTS PAGE 14
COMICS PAGE 13
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 13

PRO-LIFE PROTEST?
ABORTION PROTEST FIRES UP EDOP
PAGE 4

'THE BLACK KEYS'
BAND REACHES A GRUFF MATURITY
PAGE 6

TENNIS RUNNERS UP
WOMEN PLACE SECOND AT A-10 TOURNAMENT.
PAGE 14

New budget expected to slash higher-ed by 20 percent

By STEVE LEBLANC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) – A spartan budget plan set to be unveiled Wednesday by House leaders will slash higher education by 20 percent and cut overall spending by $360 million more than Gov. Mitt Romney's budget.

The austere plan will also have a bottom line $300 million under the House budget approved for the current year, according to a spokesman for House Speaker Thomas Finneran.

House lawmakers, determined not to be outdone by Romney, have crafted a budget that cuts a wide swath through state government, dramatically reducing spending while adopting some of Romney's ideas and avoiding new taxes.

House leaders have already outlined some of the budget's highlights. They met Romney halfway on a plan to boost state workers' health care premiums, outlined a plan to help hospitals cover the cost of treating the uninsured and recommended a small increase in spending on trial courts, while touting other judicial reforms.

Finneran added more pieces to the puzzle on Wednesday, recommending a legislative package designed to boost jobs in technology- based industries.

"The only way we can find a cure to our current situation is to get the economy back on track," said Finneran, D-Boston.

The question of new taxes continued to dog lawmakers. Both Finneran and House Ways and Means Chairman John Rogers, D-Norwood, have pledged that there would be no tax hikes in the budget plan.

Critics say House leaders want to produce a budget with cuts that are so drastic it will prompt calls for higher taxes. Some groups, including the Massachusetts Taxpayers Association, have been running ads calling for new revenue sources.

House Democrats say they have no secret tax package.

"There is no grand plan of that sort," said Rep. Peter Larkin, D-Pittsfield, vice chairman of ways and means. "We are going to have an honest budget with real numbers attached to real programs."

The budget cuts about $170 million from higher education, according to Finneran spokesman Charles Rasmussen.

House leaders are also reluctant to abolish the office of University of Massachusetts President William Bulger, according to Larkin. Romney had recommended closing the office.

Highlights of Finneran's job growth package include: investing $100 million in a fund to boost the infrastructure needed to support technology-based companies; reauthorize the investment tax credit at three percent to encourage young businesses; and consolidate all economic development functions into one secretariat on Beacon Hill.

Business leaders, including Richard Lord, president of Associated Industries of Massachusetts, applauded the proposal.

Romney, keeping up the anti-tax drumbeat, met Tuesday with a hand-picked group of small business owners opposed to higher taxes.

The governor said if lawmakers adopted his restructuring plans, they could avoid some of the deepest cuts. He also said he believed House and Senate leaders when they said they would not use higher taxes to balance the budget.

"I don't want to see deep cuts to local aid, to schools to municipal police and fire departments, and reform is the only way to keep that from happening," he said. "I don't think you're going to see the speaker or the senate president encouraging higher taxes either. I don't think I'm alone in that fight."

Parts of Romney's budget plan have met with deep skepticism from House Democrats, including a call to incorporate the Boston Municipal Court into the state district court system, and a proposal to merge the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority with the state highway department.

Lawmakers could save $300 million even before making any service cuts if they approved a slate of government reforms, according to Steve Adams, president of the Pioneer Institute, a conservative think tank.

AP FILE PHOTO

House leaders revealed a budget yesterday which involved cuts to higher education, and a $360 million cut in spending to the already proposed deductions in Gov. Romney's budget.

'Save UMass' campaign is back

By EUGENE TETLOW
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

A rally in the Campus Center on April 28 and a trip to the State House the following day are planned as part of the "Save UMass" campaign, an initiative set against increasing budget cuts at the University of Massachusetts.

Last year, the campaign was recognized across the state as being at the forefront of the fight against budget cuts. In celebration of the campaign, thousands of UMass students attended a rally in Boston protesting the million dollars in cuts.

Momentum has recently begun to build again, as more students are becoming involved once again in the protest. Public meetings have been taking place in which campaign members have talked about the need to fight the budget cuts in order to preserve the reputation of the University, and flyers have sprung up around campus.

Joanna Aven, a speaker for "Save UMass," who was not involved in last year's campaign, said she joined this year's campaign because she would like to raise awareness for the campaign.

"I hope to get more undergraduates involved and aware as to what is going on this year, so we can continue to be proud of the school we attend," Aven said.

Aven became aware of the campaign after taking a class with sociology teacher Dan Clawson. Clawson was actively involved in last year's "Save UMass" campaign, and has recently started helping to organize this year's protest. He realizes the campaign is behind schedule, but says they will be meeting from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. tonight to catch up.

"We hope to make up for lost time and begin to get the word out so that students turn up for the Monday action on campus and the rally in Boston on Tuesday," Clawson said.

For students currently attending the University, the threats are evident. Michael

Continued on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN COMMUNITY BULLETIN

WEDNESDAY APRIL 23

Wednesday, April 23

UMASS – A lecture entitled "Degree of Podzolization in the Soils of Franklin County, Massachusetts" will be held at 4 p.m. in Stockbridge Hall, Room 114.

SMITH COLLEGE – Meditation sessions will take place from 4:15 to 5:15 p.m. in Wright Hall Common Room.

AMHERST COLLEGE – The Charles Hamilton Houston Forum Fund and Dept. of Law, Jurisprudence and Social Thought sponsors the "Limits of Law" lecture series from 4:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. in Fayerweather 113. Admission is free. For more information, call 542-2380.

UMASS – An event entitled "Making Art - Making a Living: Art and the Law" will take place from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Attorneys will address legal matters such as contracts, copyright, government regulations and other issues for artists.

UMASS – "Breakout Night" will be held from 5 to 8 p.m. in the Stonewall Center in Crampton Hall. Admission is free. Pizza served for early arrivals. For more information call 545-4824.

Thursday, April 24

UMASS – The thesis exhibition of Michael O'Bannon will be on display in the Augusta Savage Gallery room 101 of the New Africa House. The exhibition runs April 24 to 30. Gallery hours are Monday and Tuesday from 1 to 7 p.m. and Wednesday through Friday from 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is free. For more information, call 545-5177.

THURSDAY APRIL 24

UMASS – The University of Massachusetts hosts "Take Your Children to Work Day at UMass Amherst" from 8:30 a.m. to 10 a.m. in the Mullins Center. Members of the campus community are invited to bring a child between the ages of 8 and 16 to participate in this one-day event that highlights career opportunities and what the adults in their lives do during the day.

UMASS – The O.B. Harrison Lecture on "Shakespeare in the Twenty-First Century" will be held at 4 p.m. in Memorial Hall. Admission is free for the public. For more information, call 577-3600.

AMHERST COLLEGE – A lecture entitled "Criminal Justice, Cultural Justice: The Limits of Liberalism and the Pragmatics of Difference in the New South Africa" will be held at 4:30 p.m. in the Cole Assembly Room, Converse Hall.

UMASS – Hillel will present "A composition of the Jewish Exodus from Egypt and Former Soviet Union" at 7:30 p.m. at the Hillel House. Come hear music and readings reflecting the experience and try Russian and Jewish foods.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The First Ever Five College Dance Party from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m. will be held in Chapin Auditorium. The event features DJ Clinton Sparks and DJ Menace. Admission by college ID only, free of charge.

Friday, April 25

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The 80th Glascock Intercollegiate Poetry Competition will be held at 5 p.m. in the Stimson Room at the Library. The English Department sponsors this event. Admission is free.

FRIDAY APRIL 25

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The May Pageant will take place at 3:30 p.m. at the Skinner Green. Celebrate spring with a traditional May Pole dance, acappella singing, vendors and more. Admission is free.

UMASS – Services will be held at 6 p.m. Reform, Conservative & Kehilai Hillel Haazinu (Orthodox) Reform and Conservative Services will be learner's services with explanations of the prayers. A dinner will be held at 7:15 p.m. at the Hillel House. The meal is free to UMass students not on a Univ. Meal Plan.

SMITH COLLEGE – An event entitled "Quadstock presents: Hip Hop Elements" will be held at 7 p.m. at Unity House. There will be a Spoken Word poetry competition. Admission is free.

UMASS – The Registered Student Organization Samba will host "Carnival...Out of Season" tonight at 9 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Food and drinks are available.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – "Groove Nation-rock, reggae, funk, house" will be held at 10 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium. The event is free and open to the public of all ages. $1 beers are served with an ID.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The Chocolate Factory Pajama Party will be held at 11 p.m. at the Betsy Shabazz Cultural Center. Admission is $2-$4 depending on the time of arrival and appropriate pajama attire.

Saturday, April 26

AMHERST COLLEGE – The "Keepers of the Word Storytelling Festival" will take place at 10 a.m. in the Keefe Campus Center Frontroom. Admission is $7 for adults and free for Amherst College students with a valid ID. For more information, call 542-2619.

SATURDAY APRIL 26

UMASS – Contemplative Shabbat Morning Service & Lunch
11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Hillel House. To help plan and lead or for more info contact Susan at 549-1710 or snoser@external.umass.edu.

UMASS – The 68th Annual Baystate Livestock Classic will be held from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Hadley Farm, 111 North Maple St., Hadley. Admission is free.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The 56th Annual Undergraduate Psychology Research Conference will be held from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in Reese. Admission is free.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A poetry reading will take place at 10:30 a.m. in the Stimson Room at the Library. The English Department sponsors this reading.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Hip Hop Elements" will take place at 7 p.m. at the Graham Auditorium, Hilyer, Brown Fine Arts Center. Admission is free.

Sunday, April 27

UMASS – Holocaust Commemoration at Hatikvah Holocaust Center,
10 a.m. to 12 p.m., at the Holocaust Center in Longmeadow, followed by lunch in town. Meet with a Holocaust survivor. Carpools from Amherst and Northampton available. Sponsored by GAP. For more info contact Rachel at 584-3911.

SUNDAY APRIL 27

UMASS – The film "Paragrah 175" will be shown at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center, Room 803. The film documents the persecution of homosexuals in Nazi Germany. Seven of the nine survivors share their stories. The film is free and open to the public. For more information call 549-1710, ext. 206.

SMITH COLLEGE – The film "Tipping the Velvet" will be shown at 3 p.m. in the Wright Hall Auditorium. General admission is $10, $5 for students.

Monday, April 28

UMASS – The MFA thesis show of Terry Cappucci is being shown in the Herter East Gallery in 125A Herter Hall. The exhibition runs from April 28 to May 2. Gallery hours are Monday-Friday 11-4 and Saturday and Sunday 1-4. For more information, call 545-0976.

UMASS – The MFA thesis show of Bounma Chanthavong is being shown in the Herter West Gallery in 125A Herter Hall. For more information, call 545-0976.

MONDAY APRIL 28

UMASS – "Flag Display," an event that is a display of lawn flags in seven different colors, each color symbolizing a different group that was annihilated during the Holocaust. The display will be on the lawn by the Campus Pond. Admission is free and open to the public. For more information, call 549-1710, ext. 206.

UMASS – An exhibition entitled "Today's Woman by Leah Moffie and Work by Cheryl Lichwell" is being shown in the Student Union Gallery, Southside of the Student Union. The exhibition runs April 28 to May 2. Gallery hours are Monday-Thursday 10-5 and Friday 10-3. For more information, call 545-0792.

UMASS – "Litany of Martyrs" will take place from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. on the Campus Center Concourse. Students, faculty and staff will read the names of Jews and non-Jews who died during the Holocaust. For more information, call 549-1710, ext. 206.

UMASS – A Teach-In on the Non-Traditional Approaches to HIV/AIDS education will be held from 12:30 p.m. to 2 p.m. in room 904 of the Campus Center.

-Compiled by Amy O'Neill and Courtney Charles

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-3699 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Sean Costello Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Brandon McNutt Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

COLLEGE GRAD

YOU'VE WORKED HARD FOR FOUR YEARS!

You deserve...

a little fun, Play some great games on the Chrysler and Jeep® Web sites.

jeep.com The Game Zone – design your own Jeep® vehicle (Jeep® Lifestyle tab) chrysler.com Produce your own music video! (Just for Fun tab)

a little cash, Get an additional $400 College Grad Bonus Cash*

above and beyond all existing incentives on new Chrysler or Jeep® vehicles.

Plus get an Essential Care Plan at NO EXTRA CHARGE and some hot wheels!

Chrysler PT Cruiser | Chrysler Sebring Coupe | Jeep® Wrangler Rubicon | Jeep® Liberty Renegade

Jeep is a registered trademark of DaimlerChrysler Corporation. *This program provides a $400 bonus cash allowance for recent graduates, select college seniors and doctoral program enrollees on the purchase or lease of eligible 2002, 2003 and 2004 Chrysler or Jeep vehicles. Must take retail delivery by 7/31/03. Please see your dealer for eligibility requirements and program details. Plan provides 10 lube, oil, and filter changes on vehicles purchased or leased through Chrysler Financial. Plan services must be used within five years of vehicle purchase or lease inception. See dealer for details. Residency restrictions apply. Offer expires 5/31/03.

CHRYSLER DRIVE & LOVE

ONLY IN A Jeep

CHRYSLER FINANCIAL
A member of the DaimlerChrysler Services Group

Two-alarm fire explodes behind Morrill building

GERALD LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Explosions rocked a welding building on campus last night.

Continued from page 1

"They [art department faculty and staff] have been working on a class list to confirm we know where all the students are," Zkgar said.

According to Zkgar, the entire roof and the second floor collapsed. The fire was contained by 9:19 p.m. but was still smoldering. The Foundry shares the same transformer as the Marshall Annex and Skinner, so electricity was temporarily shut down.

The cause of the fire is being investigated by the state fire marshall, a detective from the UMPD and two detectives from Amherst. Barbara Pitoniak, from the UMass News Office, said there was no estimate on the amount of damage done.

"The whole building was an inferno," said Brian Fusonie, a graduate student. Fusonie was inside Morrill II when the fire started. Fusonie said he saw the first explosion and that the inside of Morrill smelled like smoke fumes.

"From within the flames there was this bright white light," Fusonie said. "And the flames just spurted out the roof."

The flames and smoke could also be seen a good distance away and attracted many onlookers.

"You could see it from out a second-floor window," said Megan Venator, a student who lives on Nutting Street.

Ed Wong, who was walking by the library, said he could see the fire from there.

"They responded very quickly. Up on any elevated surface on campus you could see it," Wong said.

This is the third fire to take place on campus this year. On March 8 a fire at the Physical Plant caused heavy smoke and closed the building temporarily. In early February, an electrical fire in North Village destroyed two apartment units. Another fire started on February 12 in Van Meter dormitory when a student tossed a cigarette butt into a trashcan. Katya Yerozolimsky, 21, died in an off campus fire on Sand Hill Road on April 7.

'Southwest Week' to host Naughty by Nature

KATHRYN CORAZZELLI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Southwest Area Government will put on its annual spring event, Southwest Week, from May 5 to May 9. The week will include numerous activities for students, including a performance later in the week by hip-hop group Naughty by Nature.

The week will begin on Monday, May 5 with comedian Robert Kelly, who will be performing for students in the Fine Arts Center from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m.

From 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. on Tuesday, May 6, a carnival will be held in the horseshoe. The radio station, Laser 99.3, will provide music while students have the chance to participate in numerous contests. These competitions include a rock climbing wall, an inflatable obstacle course, a break dancing competition, a wings-eating competition and a dunk tank. Winners of the games will walk away with prizes such as T-shirts, magnets and key chains.

Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) will have tables set up around the carnival to advertise their activities. The Southwest Area Government will also have a table in conjunction with the Everywoman's Center, Health Services and Tapestry, which is located in downtown Amherst. The table will provide information for students on safe sex and dating violence awareness.

On Wednesday, May 7, a Dining Commons-sponsored barbeque will be held while a battle of the bands will take place from 4 p.m. to 7:15 p.m.

From 7:30 to 11:30 p.m., students will be able to watch the movie Goonies, followed by Van Wilder.

Thursday night, May 8, will begin at 8:00 p.m. with a performance by the winner of the battle of the bands, Naughty by Nature, whose hits include the early '90s "O.P.P." and "Hip Hop Hooray," will perform directly after in the Southwest horseshoe.

The week-long event will end on Friday, May 9, with an outdoor dance party featuring DJ Heaven from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Hawaiian leis will be given to everyone who attends.

Aimee Falardeau, Governor of the Southwest Area Government, said that this year's Southwest Week has the potential to be one of the best years yet. Last year's event was cut short to four days because of rain, eliminating the carnival. Also, there was no comedian last year.

"We think the turnout should be exceptional, as long as the weather cooperates," Falardeau said.

Josh Gmeiner, a second year resident of Patterson, said he thinks this year will be better than last year, and that he is most excited for the performance by Naughty by Nature.

"I think it's really cool that they were able to get a band like Naughty by Nature," Gmeiner said. "It will be a really fun show."

The week's activities are free for all students.

'Save UMass' campaign is back

Continued from page 1

Hatmaker, a freshman at the University, has become involved with the campaign to keep tuition fees low and to retain the value of a degree from this school.

"[I became involved because I wanted to] ensure that I and my fellow students are not wasting our time and money by being at UMass," Hatmaker said.

It is not only Massachusetts' students who are concerned by the proposed cuts. Umniya Ahmed, an International Exchange Student from England, also sees the importance of preserving the reputation of UMass.

"I decided to come to this university because of the positive reputation that this school has internationally," Ahmed said. "The proposed budget cuts may not only have a negative impact on the international reputation of this school, but also on my future career prospects, as prospective employers are increasingly focusing both on the nature of the degree as well as the status of the institution that the degree was obtained from."

Over 200 faculty members have agreed to allow their students to attend next week's protests on the condition that those who do catch up with any work missed. Several teachers have gone as far as canceling classes so their students can attend the rallies.

For those interested in learning more about this year's "Save UMass" campaign, tonight's meeting will be held in room 804-808 in the Campus Center. There will also be a stall open in the Campus Center throughout the week, where students can purchase tickets for next Tuesday's rally in Boston for $5. The cost includes transportation

DAILYCOLLEGIAN DOT COM. READ IT. LOVE IT.

News meeting Today @ 5 p.m.

From the students who brought you Haigis Hoopla...

NEW BALANCE SOCCERFEST

SUNDAY, APRIL 27TH 8:00 AM – DUSK

"We're putting the Show Down, so you Show Up"

Men's Soccer Showdown

@ 12:30 PM

UMASS, 2002 Atlantic 10 Champions,
VS.
UNC, 2001 National Champions

UMass students FREE with student ID

Visit the New Balance FanZone:

Velcro Wall Fenway Fantasy Park Giveaways
Cool Prizes KidSports Bounce House
Entertainment Food Vendors Skills Competitions

ALL DAY LONG, FREE ADMISSION

SPECIAL THANKS TO:

new balance
The Coca-Cola Company
KAPLAN
UMASS FOOD SERVICES

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Individual venues should address disorderly conduct concerns

Last week a fan ran onto the field at Chicago's Comiskey Park and attacked an umpire in right field. The attack marked the second time in one year that a game participant was attacked by a fan during a game at the ballpark.

Last year it was Kansas City Royals assistant coach Tom Gamboa who was attacked by a pair of fans while standing in the first base coach's box.

Both incidents were seemingly random, as neither Gamboa nor the umpire had done anything to instigate an attack. After the most recent incident, columnists and sportswriters around the country ascribed that fans need not take the games so seriously.

But we at The Collegian don't believe it's a matter of taking sports too seriously or not. It is more an issue of safety and common sense at these arenas.

Yesterday White Sox Chairman Jerry Reinsdorf insisted that disorderly patrons are not simply a problem within his organization. He told the Associated Press, "This is not a White Sox problem, it's a problem at all facilities across the country that has to be addressed."

In a way, Reinsdorf is correct. Despite the fact that the most recent attacks have occurred in Chicago, it is a widespread issue.

We've seen fans try to interfere with a player in the penalty box at a Toronto Maple Leafs game. We've seen a nude fan try to scale the glass at Boston's FleetCenter and we've seen a fan sprint onto the field during a Cleveland Browns game.

But Reinsdorf seems to be passing the buck to the larger authority when it is he, and the officials within his organization, who needs to take responsibility for the incidents inside their individual venue.

Every arena and ballpark is different. The same thing that happens in New York may not happen in Montreal. And the same thing in Montreal may not happen in Denver. That means there is no available universal answer to this problem.

Yes, each professional league can demand that security be beefed up at games, and that the sale of alcohol be curbed. But each venue has its own personality.

For instance, fans sitting down the first base line at Comiskey Park have much easier access to the field than fans in the same area of Pacific Bell Park in San Francisco. In New York, when the Red Sox come to town to play the Yankees, there is a much higher chance for an incident than if they were hosting, say, the Royals.

Each organization needs to tap the demographics of its fans and the structure of the ballpark. It's no coincidence that both incidents at Comiskey occurred down the right field line. It's easy access.

If Reinsdorf and his officials had learned their lesson the first time and placed uniformed security officers at the stadium's "red zones," the most recent incident probably could have been avoided.

Apparently repeating the same mistakes are also not Mr. Reinsdorf's problem.

Information from the Associated Press and ESPN.com was used in this editorial

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Ordinary life, Bay State style

Regan McKendry

One learns many things growing up in Massachusetts. The best Halloween parts in the country takes place in Salem, the Constitution is more than just a sheet of paper and the Red Sox will somehow, in some way, break your heart, year after year after year. We're also reminded that not only do we live in Massachusetts we live in Taxachusetts.

The Bay State has long been synonymous with taxes along with a laundry list full of restrictive regulations, some dating back to the days of our Puritan forefathers. Massachusetts is the land of rules and government intervention, no matter what Mitt Romney claims to be changing. Sometimes this is good, sometimes bad, but nevertheless, it is Massachusetts.

In my travels across the country, I got firsthand knowledge of how different some states are. I think it'd be impossible to find two states that follow exactly the same regulations. This makes for some fun exceptions to what one may consider the norm.

Let's start with auto insurance. Massachusetts is one of the few states in the country that sets auto insurance rates, the other being New Jersey. Insurance companies can't try to offer a better rate of discount to win customers over because the government dictates what the rates will be. So for those of us in Mass. and NJ, we are unable to receive a visit from the nice-talking gecko.

Speaking of the Garden State, itself and Oregon don't allow you to pump your own gas. Full service stations still exist here, yet they abound in these two states. In Oregon, state law requires that gas may only be dispensed by a professional. I can only imagine what the training regimen must be like.

The land of beavers and ducks lacks a meals tax, meaning that a nice $4.99 dinner can be bought with a $5 bill, and is one of the five without a sales tax. The other members on the list are Alaska, Delaware, New Hampshire and Montana. Paying five percent in Massachusetts isn't so bad, especially when compared to states like Tennessee (9.25 percent) and Washington (8.99 percent).

Those two states, though, have no income tax. That's right, your paycheck comes back to you with more money in it, though there's one less refund coming your was in the spring. Oregon? Their income tax rate is through the roof, almost constantly seeming to increase. Again, in the Commonwealth it definitely exists, but it's not extreme.

One need only to look to our neighbors to the north in the Granite State to realize the differences that can exist between two states that on a map are so aligned, yet in life are polar opposites.

Massachusetts is balanced. Five percent is the rate for both meals and shopping (excluding clothing, which the Bay State is one of only a handful of states that recognizes clothes as a necessity). We have our property taxes (and sky-high property values) and our income tax. Up until last decade you couldn't open a store before noon on Sundays, and you still can't welcome people into a liquor store on the Lord's day. The officials on Beacon Hill have more programs in place than who knows what to make sure that the poor, underprivileged and even the average citizen is protected from the bad guys.

New Hampshire's state motto is "live free or die," and boy do they mean it. Sure, there's an eight percent tax on meals, but there's no sales tax and no income tax. Property taxes are insane, but only if you live in rich town. You can get out much cheaper living in the poor neighborhoods. Just hope you don't have children, as the money for public education is solely derived from local property taxes.

If you buy a used car in New Hampshire, make sure you're positive about what you're doing. Unless you have some sort of warranty, once you drive the car off the lot, any problems with it that you may have inherited are yours to deal with. The words "lemon law" don't apply. As far as booze goes, one only needs to drive along I-93 or I-95 to find the mother load. Where most states would have a rest area, New Hampshire has a giant barn filled with the three essentials: cigarettes, lottery tickets and alcohol. What else is missing?

Certainly, Massachusetts has numerous taxes, rules and regulations, but I don't think we're the worst. In my opinion, our friends to the west in the Empire State get hit the worst. At least we don't live in Canada, where things are even worse (try paying both a federal and provincial sales tax that can add up to 15-17 percent).

Massachusetts is still a great place to live. Just head over the border to do your shopping and if you have a big weekend planned, make sure to hit Liquors 44 up Saturday night before they close.

Regan McKendry is a Collegian Columnist.

Commercial hype lies

Jesse Greenspan

Commercials have gone beyond hyping their products on TV to make them look good, and have resorted to outright lies instead.

McDonald's talks about farm-fresh eggs, Olive Garden claims to be the best Italian food around and Texaco pretends it cares about the environment. With deceit so commonplace, it would be a lot easier if commercials just told the truth. They might sound something like this:

McDonald's – There's not much to say. You know what you're getting yourself into – fat. Hopefully you at least like the taste.

Coors – Yes, we supported apartheid South Africa and yes, we are one of the most racist companies in the United States. And no, our beer doesn't really taste that good. But Doctor Dre is in one of our commercials, and that counts for something, right?

Domino's – It's four in the morning. You would rather get some "good" pizza, but let's face it, nothing else is open, and there is no chance you're moving from that couch. Pick up the phone and call. The pizza might taste like greasy cardboard, but your stomach needs something and you're certainly not going to get off the couch to get it yourself.

Olive Garden – When Uncle Tony comes over from Italy, we take him to the best Italian food around. When we want free bread sticks and big portions, we head to Olive Garden.

Texaco – (A hypnotist's voice comes on.) You are getting sleepy. You think war in Iraq is a wonderful thing. You think Iran should be next. You think that Venezuela is getting too uppity as well. You think the Arctic Wildlife Refuge would look better with a few oil rigs in it. Hail Bush!

Gatorade – An electrolyte is really just a fancy word for salt. And Gatorade is a fancy word for sugar water.

Ground Round – We offer the nastiest food imaginable at relatively high prices. Go somewhere else and save your money.

Abercrombie and Fitch – Are you a preppy white boy? Do like spending $40 for a T-shirt and $70 for a pair of pants? The quality might be "Marshall's" but the price says "Armani."

Starbucks – There's a Starbucks here, a Starbucks there; There's a Starbucks everywhere. Knick-knack, paddywhack, go and buy a scone;

And take a quart of coffee home.

Herbal Essences – You probably won't have an orgasm in the shower (at least because of the shampoo), but your hair will smell a lot nicer.

ValueJet – Please fly us. We swear it's safe. We don't even use duct tape to fix mechanical failures anymore.

DeBeers Diamonds – Are you a politician? A successful lawyer? An investment banker? If so, then you need just one more thing to make your world complete – a trophy wife. Buy a big old diamond from us, and soon you'll have a gorgeous, unquestioning and submissive wife to call your own.

Warning: she may be using you for your money.

Busch Beer – Supermodels won't just pop out of the woods if you drink Busch, but if you drink enough, any girl might look like one.

Jordan's Furniture – We have wicked pissah Massachusetts accents and you can't undahstand a word we say or an idear we have. So drive your cah over and buy some furniture.

Unfortunately, commercials probably won't be going to the truth anytime soon. Maybe it's because lies seem to sell a little bit better.

Jesse Greenspan is a Collegian Columnist.

Makes the world go round

Julia Maguire

If there is anything that is universal, other than mathematics, it's music. I've always known that to be true in some abstract way, but recently I saw that it's just fact, no matter how cheesy it sounds.

Last week Jack Johnson and Ben Harper came to Brisbane, Australia, and I had the privilege to see them. Now, I've been to enough concerts to know that if you want to be close to the stage, you might have a stressful evening.

Anyone who knows the music of Jack and Ben would think that there shouldn't be any trouble, but someone expecting it to be one big peaceful sing along would be unpleasantly surprised.

My experience with Australians thus far had been very amiable and pleasant. I never ceased to be pleased with hearing "no worries," even after spilling a drink on someone's shoes. But put those same people in a crowd and be prepared to just be full of worries. We're talking worries galore. I think that there is a certain need for concert etiquette, a mutual understanding between concertgoers that everyone wants to be near the front, but that since it's not physically possible, pushing won't make it so. Apparently, not many Ben and Jack fans share my feelings on that matter.

There are distinct possibilities that you will make instant friends or instant enemies at a concert. Those you band together with to maintain the little amount of space you've staked out are your new best friends. Your new enemies are those who think wedging an elbow or their hip into the small space between you and your neighbor will be enough to part the crowd. In the process, they displace the entire area from the spot they have been ruthlessly defending.

It's not rare to see cases like these come to blows, or at the very least, a litany of four letter words unleashed. The irony is that it's not unlikely for that enemy to eventually become a friend when another bold fan attempts to tear through the crowd, and they see how dire it is to actually keep them back where there is room to spare.

These are all situations I've dealt with, and this show was no different. I also had to handle some new gems. I became very close, literally, to the guy standing in front of me. I also was told that I resembled a Tyrannosaurus Rex on account of my arms being pinned to my sides so tightly that my hands appeared to be coming out of my armpits. I graciously traded spots with my friend who was too short to look over the crowd, and consequently lost my prime location in favor of having a very disoriented girl who was facing the wrong way for most of the night think that my shoulder was the perfect place for her elbow. A security guard also asked the whole crowd to take one step back so a girl could get back to her spot in the front that she had left 20 minutes before.

Initially, the crowd bonded over the injustice and no one budged, but we eventually had to give way and this girl had her front row spot back while we all readjusted to compensate for the space we had just lost.

Now, it wasn't all bad because the music made up for it. Something I always love about concerts is when the performers stop singing and let the crowd take over for a few bars. I can't imagine what it's like for American musicians to play in a foreign venue and still have the entire crowd follow note for note. This crowd was no different. Jack and Ben returned the favor by playing the crowd pleasers, plus the added bonus of playing one song together. At one point, Ben asked the crowd if they were thirsty, and had the security guards bring out boxes of water and hand them out to the crowd. It was a nice way of saying "thank you" to his fans. And rest assured, I got plenty of pictures. I bought a T-shirt and spent a futile 20 minutes searching for the friends that had gotten separated. I went to bed with ringing ears and woke up the next morning with a sore back. It was everything that comes along with a concert and it just wouldn't have been the same without them.

It is comforting to know that the concert-going experience is the same anywhere you go.

Julia Maguire is a Collegian Columnist. She is on exchange in Australia.

GOING ON EXCHANGE NEXT SEMESTER?
WANT TO WRITE ABOUT IT?

APPLY TO BE ONE OF OUR INTERNATIONAL COLUMNISTS!
COME TO THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT
AND TALK TO JAMIE OR REGAN

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's phone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed to the Editor." Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed to the "Editor." Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed to the "Editor." All submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to us.

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-3699

A campus disgrace

Elizabeth Carter

Inalienable rights; we hear so much about them these days. Whether in the context of a war for liberation or in reference to the controversial Patriot Act, it seems that recently this dignified idea is constantly being reiterated. Without a doubt, the idea that certain rights should never be infringed upon is a sentiment that should never sway. Yet, within the context of these supposed "rights" that are guaranteed to all, there is no guideline of exactly how we are to use these rights. For example, freedom of speech – to most that sounds like a wonderful thing, for people should indefinitely be allowed to freely speak their mind on all subjects without fear or persecution.

Yet, when giving one the right to say whatever one wants, no consideration is taken that what one wants to say may be quite deleterious to others. For with the unconstrained ability to voice one's opinion in a public forum comes the ability to take the powerful words that freedom has allotted you, and to use those words to harm others. With these inalienable freedoms comes the assumption that people will be good enough and wise enough not to abuse them. Sadly, many a time, this is simply not the case. As we saw very coarsely demonstrated on our campus just this past week, freedom of speech is often a far different beast from that of wisdom and tact.

For those of you who do not know what I am making a reference to, I am speaking of the pro-life demonstrations that took place all last week. Regardless of my views on the subject of abortion, I personally believe that the manner in which the demonstration was executed was utterly deplorable. Crosses for dead children, the words painted on the sidewalk "Abortion is Genocide," slogans such as "A woman who has an abortion isn't a woman who's become un-pregnant, she's a woman who murdered her child" were enough to make me sick. Formerly, I was led to believe that the idea of a demonstration wasn't to offend those that you were demonstrating to, but to use the demonstration as a forum to open people's minds to a different point of view.

> "Formerly I was led to believe that the idea of a demonstration wasn't to offend those that you were demonstrating to, but to use the demonstration as a forum to open people's minds to a different point of view."

The only success that the pro-life demonstration had this past week was making people think that the Republican Club is a band of bigots who hate women and have an axe to grind with anyone who doesn't agree with their somewhat uncompromising views. Instead of trying to open people's eyes to the fact that there are alternate methods to abortion, the demonstration successfully alienated anyone who walked by, male or female. Instead of offering pamphlets for centers for planned motherhood, they screamed "murder" and "genocide." Instead of making it known that there are methods such as adoption and planned parenthood, they simply struck out against any woman who has ever felt trapped and cornered into having an abortion. For those are the real circumstances under which abortions happen. The ignorance displayed by the Republican Club was at an all-time high last week on campus. Personally, I believe that all members of the Republican Club should be ashamed of themselves for the poor and disgraceful manner in which their "pro-life" demonstration was conducted.

What was touted last week on campus was cruelly shrouded in a cloak of moral "self riotousness," for that was exactly what the demonstration turned out to be, a blatant act of cruelty. The idea for a pro-life demonstration was surely conceived in the worthy sentiments of saving lives of unwitting children who have not yet been born. Yet, what it turned into was a finger-pointing, name-calling amalgamation. How serious can one can take a person who is telling you to be moral and to "do the right thing" while at the same time they're condemning anyone who goes against their beliefs? To me it does not seem very moral or just to so quickly judge and label anyone who goes against your beliefs. Actually, that sounds more like ignorance and stereotyping. I am not saying that being pro-life is wrong; actually its quite an admirable outlook and I applaud anyone, male or female, who has ever been put in the position where they had to actually back up their pro-life ideals. But simply because you think abortion is wrong should not give you the right to lash out at anyone who thinks it is not. Demonstrations should be conducted in a manner that is educational for all who encounter them, not in a manner which offends and hurts anyone/everyone who comes in contact with it. I personally witnessed men and women on campus alike walking by the demonstration uttering beneath their breath the disgust they felt that this had to go on at our campus.

The thing I believe that the Republican Club disregarded last week is the fact that abortions are not planned. People don't just get pregnant and have abortions for the fun of them; they are the heart-wrenching choice that some women choose to make. I feel almost as if "Kick 'em while there down!" should have been written on the sidewalk, for that seemed to have been one of the prevailing themes of the protest. To be honest, I don't have a stance on all of this. I'm not anti-abortion and I'm not pro-abortion either. Quite frankly, I don't believe anyone really ever becomes pro-abortion, not unless they are faced with that choice, but I do support the right to choose. For that is one of the most important liberties living in this country has allotted us: the right to make choices about ourselves for ourselves. It's fine that the Republican Club has no problem disregarding personal liberties. However, if they are going to I must openly ask them to do it in a more respectful, educational manner next time. If you are going to impose your ideas on campus instead of launching cruel tactless offensives, why not try teaching and showing some respect for your fellow students.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian Columnist.

Choice to be "pro-life" shouldn't be a crime

Lisa Mclaughlin

Earlier last week, when I was walking to the Student Union to grab coffee and a bagel from the People's Market, something caught my eye. Gracing the lawn were more than 100 white wooden crosses. Curious, I decided to see what this display represented. When everything came more into focus, I saw a sign that stated, "Abortion kills 160 babies every hour." Looking down, sidewalk chalk screamed, "Choose life." This surprised me, because during the two years I have gone to this school, I have never seen any right-wing demonstrations on campus. In fact, I didn't think the right wing existed here.

I approached a gentleman who was standing by the display alongside other students, both male and female. I told him that it encouraged me to see fellow pro-life students, because I know that people with a view similar to mine are very much in the minority on this campus. We do not have much of a chance to let our voices be heard, because we are so afraid of the violent negative reactions we may receive. I asked if the small graveyard was sponsored by an RSO on campus or merely a gathering of UMass students who are pro-life. He informed me that this event was sponsored by the UMass Republican Club.

On Thursday afternoon, as I was walking by the Student Union once again, I saw a very different scene. Most, if not all, the wooden crosses were broken apart, many of the pieces left in a nearby trash barrel. The signs that once stood were impaled or knocked over. Instead of the students standing around ready to answer questions or discussing the issue, there was a single Republican Club member with his mouth gagged, holding a sign saying something to the effect of, "This is what happens when you exercise your First Amendment rights on the UMass campus." I was appalled at the entire scene and saddened. Even if I may not agree with people who are pro-choice, I certainly would not want their efforts to be destroyed in a similar situation by a few immature, close-minded, violent people.

I then decided to head up to the Republican Club office in the Student Union to find out what happened and how the members felt about what took place. Before reaching the door, I raised an eyebrow at a sign that said, "If you have to leave and you are the only person in the office, please lock the door as members of the Republican Club have received threats of violence." Upon entrance, I was greeted by President Christopher Carlozzi and member Matt Peterson, who were both happy to speak with me on the matter.

> "Before reaching the door, I raised an eyebrow at a sign that said, 'If you have to leave and you are the only person in the office, please lock the door as members of the Republican Club have received threats of violence.'"

"It was nearing the end of the week, and we felt that everything was going peacefully so far. Club members were outside answering questions and discussing the issue with those who approached them," said Carlozzi. "First amendment rights are for everybody, not just the majority. That is what makes this country so great; the fact that I can listen to someone who I completely disagree with, and know that I have the right to voice my opinion as well. We at the Republican Club feel that the only way to win an argument is by outthinking your opponent – not by reacting with violence and trying to destroy different ideas and the debate of those ideas."

The incident is believed to have occurred on Wednesday night, between 8:45 and 11:15 p.m. Carlozzi and Peterson said that they understand this was an isolated incident, and that they do not feel the actions of the vandals represent the sentiments of the UMass liberal left community as a whole.

I am not a Republican, but I am pro-life and a member of the female population. Even if the same events that occurred last week happened in regards to a pro-choice demonstration, I would still be writing this article because I strongly feel that anybody exercising their First Amendment rights should not have to fear those rights being threatened or violated. I realize that publishing this puts me at risk of getting into arguments with my friends, or receiving a lower grade in my women's studies class. But that's nothing. I fortunately do not live in a country where I will be terrorized for having a certain opinion. Let's keep it that way.

Lisa McLaughlin is a UMass student.

Everything I want to be

Stephanie O'Shea

Ladies and gentlemen, we are one month away from that glorious time of year known as summer, that lavish season marked by weekly paychecks, dinner off the grill and standing in front of the air conditioner with our T-shirts lifted over the vent. I will be turning 21 in June, and hence, into an out-of-control spectacle at fine establishments all over the Northeast region. Encoding my social security number onto a bubble sheet inside of an airplane hangar during finals week, however, will mark the end of my junior year and will signal the beginning of the sweaty, armpitted process of strategically planning how I am going to feed, clothe and immunize myself starting in May 2004.

Growing up, my dream was to rule the world, and I mean that. I never wanted to be a veterinarian. I always wanted to be successful and influential, with nice things and people bringing me coffee. My Lego sessions were monopolized by musings of how I would personify the correct way to operate. I did not dream about my future wedding, save for the decision that I am going to fly my family and friends down to a tropical island for a ceremony on the beach. I do, however, have my funeral all planned out. If I do my job right, there will be tears and antidepressants everywhere. In between these two events, the adult version of myself will be feeding her attention and achievement addictions by wreaking havoc all across this great land.

Who you are is who you are plus who you want to be. Come inside my 15 feet by 15 feet shrine to decadence and you will find a young lady in gray lounge pants spreading her love equally between misbehaving and poindextering it out big time for the approval of the Isenberg School of Management. I signed up for a life saturated with group projects and works cited pages, because an educated mind and a sharpened edge are needed to fulfill my grandiose plans for the future.

Become my friend now, because I will be famous later. My personality will accept no less. Being a Jane six-pack is for suckers. People achieve celebrity status in a spectrum of ways, ranging from possessing a marketable singing voice to committing a heinous crime. My shtick will be that I am a lady of the people who knows what she wants and steps it up a notch with her special brew of obnoxiousness. The actual reason behind my diva strut across the stage as a guest on Late Night with Conan O'Brien will be my phenomenal work in the business world. Fasten your seatbelts and open your wallets, because I will be the bringer of the next big product or idea that is going to make the Jones' crap their pants.

I foresee still having a strong relationship with Microsoft Word in my adulthood, because I am in love with the idea of entertaining people with free samples of what goes on in my brain. Everyone needs a little Stephanie O'Shea instant gratification now and then, or so I would like to believe. I strive to make my online journal the first stop for procrastinators, and before it became a complete waste of thirty minutes, I dreamt of showcasing my existence on MTV's "The Real World." I am the product of an extroverted household, and my speaking voice is a few decibels louder than is socially acceptable. My family is always trying to impress itself with humor or an insightful comment. I write this column because the profile limit on AOL Instant Messenger is 1024 characters (including markup), and because I want you to want me. I need you to need me. High five, even if you think that I am dispensing drivel, because it still means that your retinas are spending time on my Times New Roman.

If you read between the lines, my game plan does not consist of a timeline of events as much as it does a philosophy on how to conduct myself. I am not working towards a bachelor's degree for the sole purpose of being able to afford a home near a city with an international airport, nor do I stay up late contriving written performances for the sole purpose of bettering my resume. Nothing is worth doing if one's heart is not in it. I am not too worried about the effects that the poor economy will have on the job market when I graduate, because they will apply to every applicant. My biggest obstacle will be my personal unwillingness to give up wearing skate shoes and T-shirts at all times.

Stephanie O'Shea is a Collegian Columnist.

Arrested for no reason

Nick Ames

Several of my loyal readers pointed out to me yesterday that they had seen my name in the sometimes scary, sometimes hilarious police log. It's true; on Thursday, April 17, I was arrested in front of Kennedy Tower for possession of liquor while under the age of 21 and possession of a false Registry of Motor Vehicles document. I have no problem being honest and I am not ashamed of what happened. I would like, however, to take you on a little odyssey into my experience with the law. Some of you will be able to empathize with my ordeal, having been arrested too, while others can use this tale as a caution against trying to pull a fast one on the University of Massachusetts Police Department's new group of cadets.

It was a beautiful Thursday evening, ripe for drink and debauchery. I mean, let's face it: warm weather + boys + girls + college = craziness. Having accompanied a friend to a local liquor store, I returned to his building to help him carry his purchases to his room. Little did I know that decision was the beginning of the end. As we approached Kennedy, laden with beer, we attempted to join the train of people pouring through the doors with their various alcoholic beverages. I guess there must have been something about me that screamed, "Not 21," because my friend and I soon found ourselves surrounded by the University's finest. I have to admit, they were impressive. Before I even knew what was happening, all possible routes of escape had been strategically blocked off by an eager young cadet. Not wanting to be outdone by my friend, who was actually 21, I pulled out my best false identification and handed it over. What an idiot I was. These were no package store owners with bad vision and no scanner; these were police with access to my real identity. Realizing this fact about halfway through my identification check, I told them the gig was up and that surprise, surprise, I was not of legal drinking age. Under the hilarious pretense that I was immune from any serious trouble, I expected a simple confiscation of the liquor I was carrying and my false document, along with a verbal reprimand to "stay out of trouble, young man."

> "Not even my best Zack Morris skills could get me out of this jam."

Yes, I am still an idiot. Suddenly, my face was pressed against the glass of good old Kennedy, much to the alarm of some poor girl visiting the ice cream vending machine. My legs have never been spread wider apart, and as the cold metal of the handcuffs closed tightly around my wrists, I knew something was wrong. Not even my best Zack Morris skills could get me out of this jam. I seriously contemplated running, but luckily the idea of trying to escape from six young men with my hands tied behind my back seemed a little too preposterous. Shortly thereafter, a police cruiser arrived on the scene and the crowd of onlookers dispersed as I was escorted to the waiting vehicle. The irony of the backseat of police cars is that they have seatbelts. How are you supposed to buckle yourself in when you are handcuffed? Needless to say, a sharp turn caused me to fall over onto my side, where I remained for the rest of the short ride to the police station. In the holding cell, I was photographed many times, including a close-up of my tattoo for future identification worries. When I had to go to the bathroom, I had to piss with the door open with two officers making sure I didn't pull a Trainspotting and escape through the toilet. Needless to say, my piss anxiety caused it to be an eternity before anything flowed.

To make a long story short, what I did was not a crime. I am 20-years-old. I can be drafted, I can vote, blah, blah, blah. The point is that I wasn't drunk driving; I was making responsible decisions, deciding to drink in a friend's room and call a designated driver when things got hectic. As one of the cadets was kind enough to inform me when I asked how many times this happened in a night, he coolly replied, "it's like shooting fish in a barrel." Well guys, if it's that prevalent then what the hell is the point. Save your time and go after the people who rob poor Domino's delivery men. Don't pretend that this isn't UMass, a place where anything can and will happen.

Nick Ames is a Collegian Columnist.

'Anti-America this' and 'anti-America that'

Tara LeBlanc

Stop! OK, now it is fine to go, but watch out for the car in front. Damn it, I am going to be late for work. What are you beeping at me for? It is not like I caused this traffic jam. I have only moved 10 feet in the past minute, what the hell is all of this commotion? You might be thinking that these are some of the familiar thoughts of Boston commuters who have to travel the roadways that are under construction due to the never-ending Big Dig. However, these are just a few of the many thoughts of the commuters who travel in cities like Los Angeles, Washington D.C., New York City and our very own Boston, where anti-war protests are frequently being held as a result of the war on Iraq.

My brother, who works at State Street Bank in Quincy, called me the other afternoon and told me how pissed off and awful that morning had been because of "ignorant people" who were standing in the middle of the street chanting 'anti-America this' and 'anti-America that,' causing him to be several minutes late for work. I know my brother very well, and if he had it his way, he would round up all of the protestors and send them off to Iraq so they could fight in the same war that they are rallying against. My thoughts are not as harsh, especially since I am opposed to the war, unlike my brother.

Despite my position on the war, I am also against the anti-war protests. Yes, I do believe that the protestors across the nation have similar views that Bush has sent the American troops to Iraq for possibly the wrong reasons. Two of these popular reasons that are being protested against are: Bush is being greedy and only wants oil, and Iraq does not have major weapons of mass destruction the U.S. should be concerned with. These thoughts are valid and ones that I can relate to, but what I do not understand is how the protestors can think that rallying along the streets in mass numbers while being videotaped by all the major news stations can show any form of encouragement and support for the young men and women who are fulfilling their duty in Iraq. Now, I am sure that many of the men and women who are currently serving us are not in support of Bush's decision, but to see their fellow Americans stand against them as they hear and feel bullets pass by their heads must be dispiriting. It seems to me that these protestors have not even tried to imagine the hardships that our soldiers in Iraq are facing. I think that if they sat down and really thought about the emotions, the worries and the struggles, many would change their voice of demonstration.

To get a better understanding of how the anti-war protests can affect a soldier, I asked my uncle who had fought with the U.S. Navy during the Vietnam War. Struggling to put the emotions he had into words, he told me that the anti-war protesting was very strenuous on his mind and emotions, because there he was fighting overseas for his life and the lives of all American citizens, and back in the U.S. there were thousands of unappreciative people calling him and others "baby killers." With this information it was not surprising to hear that he was opposed to the war in Iraq. He does not agree with Bush's reasons for sending the troops overseas and he believes that North Korea is a greater potential threat to the U.S. than Iraq.

What I would like from all anti-war protestors is to step back from their demonstrations and put down their posters and stop chanting for a few minutes. I want them to dismiss the negative feelings that they have for Bush and the war from their minds and to think only about the American soldiers and to ask themselves this question: "Is protesting against the war really helping the American soldiers?" It is evident that the war has not stopped because of the protests; for our brothers and sisters are still fighting in the sand dunes of Iraq. Instead of crowding the streets and chanting 'anti-America this' and 'anti-America that;' cheer "God Bless Our Soldiers." I will guarantee that those beeping and stuck in the traffic jams the protests cause will be less flustered and more supportive of the rallying.

Tara LeBlanc is a UMass student.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Wondering why women can't rock?

This might be a touchy subject for some people, but you know what... I don't care.

Has anyone ever noticed that every single successful rock band has been composed of all men? Now, when I say successful, I mean a rock band that has been taken seriously by the public and one that has lasted decades upon decades.

Rock bands like The Bangles and The Go-Go's were successful, but you know what? They really weren't. They were viewed as sex objects and had to start climbing at an even lower rung on the ladder of rock success than most male bands. They've come out with a few cute hits, but they weren't something you could bang your head and play air guitar to in your bedroom. These two female bands did not last long at all, and the band members went on to have solo careers that didn't last very long either.

Rockin' Out

Samara Marblestone

The same goes for new female rockers. The Donnas. I personally cannot take them seriously. Every single song on their debut album has a sexual ring to it. For example, their hit single is called "Take it Off." The name of their debut album is "Spend the Night." You don't see male rockers have songs and album titles with an obvious sexual meaning, do you? Why do women have to resort to being sexual just to get noticed?

Also, female rockers are always thin and beautiful, and they have to be in order to be successful. Male rockers could look like anything from a Greek God to something you scrape off the bottom of your Converse All-Stars, and still be successful and taken seriously.

What about Hole?

They were three-fourths female, but they were not taken very seriously either. Lead vocalist Courtney Love was viewed (and still is viewed) as a grungy, dirty, sexual, naughty, screwed-up chick. Was Hole somewhat successful because of their music or because of Love's racy image?

Who knows. But I have a better answer for you.

I have a theory. No, don't put down the newspaper just yet. Hear me out.

Male rock bands may not be more successful than female rockers because of their music. I'll admit that I am a fan of male rockers over female ones, but that's not the point.

Alright, brace yourselves kids. This does not hold true for every dude or every chick, but this is a generalization. I'll just say it.

It seems like male rock listeners will buy an album based on the music and female rock listeners will do the same – but they will also buy the album because they find the band attractive and sexually appealing.

Boys will not do that as much.

For example, guys do not buy albums by female rock groups unless they like the music. Girls will not buy

Continued on page 9

The Black Keys handle new material with a gruff maturity

By Matthew Despres
Collegian Staff

The home of The Black Keys is a broke-down palace built around the muddy waters of rhythm and blues, and as a matter of tradition, the band knows it can't live there alone.

The yellowed pages of the genre are haunted by old souls and the inevitable comparisons that come with stepping in dirtied tracks; it takes a deep and unique kind of hurt to shout them out as your own. Drummer Patrick Carney and singer/guitarist Dan Auerbach do a fine job of it on "Thickfreakness," however, scarring over their wounds with agitated guitars, deep pocket drumming and swollen vocals. It's a triple-shot of worry, fixed on nothing but healing through the sound of itself.

So what, exactly, is the fuss these cats from Akron, Ohio are raising that's led them to believe they can stake out a piece of the Delta for themselves? For starters, they knock the evolution trick down cold on their first pass, handling the new material with a gruff maturity that defies their young age. Though it still chugs through the "medium fidelity" screen of Carney's basement tape production, their sound has grown thicker and more resilient since 2002's "The Big Come-Up," and it's not just the fuzz-box that's doing the talking – the strength is in the songs.

The skip-shot riffing on "Set You Free" sets the table for the album's graceful mood swings; the smooth shifts in tempo throughout are ushered in by Carney's uptight and quite alright tinie-keeping. And before Auerbach gets the chance to broil his solo on "Hard Row" in a wave of feedback, the duo has already dropped the bottom out of the song's chorus, turning the boogie-romp into an eclipsing duet between a singer and his guitar.

"Thickfreakness" is full of such snapback emotions, and songs like "If You See Me" motion to split the difference between them, emphasizing the terse dialogue between Auerbach's slurred leads and Carney's anxious backbeat. The songs here – and the small moments in them that speak to their wholes – are still sad and blue, just deeper at times, and refreshingly unafraid to sound like they're having a hell of a time.

It's progression without much of an option – if you've got the hurt in you, there's a time and a place where it's going to have to come out. But there's a history lesson here as well, and rather than hide their influences in thinly veiled phrasings, the duo draw a roadmap in the dust they kick up: through the overgrown shuffle of Junior Kimbrough's "Everywhere I Go" to the unapologetic strong arm that is Richard Berry's quest for love ("Have Love Will Travel"), Carney and Auerbach are as comfortable making room in other people's shoes as they are walking in their own.

Which leads back to Kimbrough. It's the shuffle they dig out of his song, that soul-searching groove that went and lost its cool somewhere down the line that's being rediscovered all over "Thickfreakness." With all due respect, Carney and Auerbach aren't content to wail away behind the 12-bars of the blues forever. They're hell-bent on shaking the mold around and do – loudly, keeping in their conscious mind the notion that you can uproot the boy but never take away his home. In other words, the familiar sound of the blues is always just a half step and heartbreak away.

With decades of roots to mind and 38 minutes of their own ground to forge, The Black Keys high-step on the countrified, finger-picked plains of "Hurt Like Mine" down through to "I Cry Alone," something of a Delta lullaby for the brokenhearted. Crawling like a heavy whisper, it tucks the album away with a parting shot of bittersweet truth: "One day, one day I let her go / It hurt, it hurt so you'll never know / One day I had to let her go, it hurt bad you cannot know, one day ... I let her go." And you thought you were the only one.

The old blues and new school of "Thickfreakness" fight to a well-deserved draw. It's the cross-pollination of ideas and instinct that have earned Carney and Auerbach the right to play long into the night and, if they so choose, straight on 'til morning.

Dave Matthews to crash the Mullins Center

The Mullins Center will be hosting "An Acoustic Evening with Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds" to benefit the Tiger Kloof School in South Africa on May 5.

Dave Matthews last performed at the Mullins Center, with his band, in 1996. The singer will be joined for the acoustic show by world-renowned guitarist Tim Reynolds.

The show is a benefit concert for the Tiger Kloof School, an educational facility in South Africa that provides its students with a Christian education and plays a vital role in the process of social integration in the region.

Reynolds and Matthews have toured together before in support of charities, including Amnesty International and the National Resources Defense Council. They have also promoted human rights and have worked to stop world hunger.

Tickets go on sale Saturday at 10 a.m. at the Mullins Center box office, all Ticketmaster locations, Ticketmaster charge-by-phone at 413-733-2500, www.ticketmaster.com and all Filene's Locations. Ticket prices are $49.50 for all seats, and there is a two-ticket limit per credit card/household. For more information, visit www.mullinscenter.com or call the Mullins Center box office at 545-0505.

-Lizzy Nielsen

Dave Matthews will perform at the Mullins Center on May 5. The show will benefit the Tiger Kloof School in South Africa.

'Straight Edge' movement sees renewed youth interest

By Martha Irvine
Associated Press

